Illeivable, A debt or duty that cannot, or ought not to be levied; as nihil set upon a debt is a mark for ille- viable.

Illiterate. If an illiterate man be to seal a deed, he is not bound to do it, if none be present to read it, if re- quired; and reading a deed false, will make it void. 2 Rep. 3, 11. A man may plead non est factum to a deed read false; as where a release of an annuity was read to an illiterate person, as a release of the arrears only, &c. agreed to be released. Moor 148. If there is a time li- mited for a person to seal a writing, in such case illiteracy shall be no excuse, because he might provide a skilful man to instruct him; but when he is obliged to seal it upon request, &c. there he shall have convenient time to be in- structed. 2 Nels. Abr. 946.

If a man for great age cannot see to read, and seals an obligation upon false reading, he shall avoid it. 11 Rep. 28. Resolved, though he was lettered; for now he has all his intelligence by hearing. Imbargo, (Span. in Lat. Navium detentio) Is a stop, stay, or arrest upon ships or merchandise, by publick au- thority. Stat. 18 Car. 2. c. 5. This arrest of shipping is commonly of the ships of foreigners in time of war and difference with states to whom they are belonging; but by an ancient statute, foreign merchants in this kingdom are to have forty days notice to sell their effects and depart, on any difference with a foreign nation. 27 Ed. 3. c. 17. The King may grant imbargoes on ships, or employ the ships of his subjects, in time of danger, for the service and defence of the nation; but a warrant to stay a single ship, on a private account is no legal imbargo. Moor 892. Carib. 297. Prohibiting commerce in the time of war; or of plague, pestilence, &c. is a kind of imbargo on shipping.

Imbasting of money, (from adultero to corrupt or mingle) Signifies to mix species with an alloy below the standard of sterling; which the King by his prerogative may do, and yet keep it up to the same value as before: Imbasting of it, is when 'tis raised to a higher rate, by proclamation, 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 192.

Imbezile, To steal, pilfer, or purloin; or where a per- son entrusted with goods, wastes and diminishes them. The word imbezile is mentioned in several statutes, particularly relating to workers of wool, &c. as the stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 1. 14 Car. 2. c. 31. and 1 Ann. By the former of which, imbezillers of wool, yarn, or other materials for making of cloth, are to make satisfaction, or be whipped and put in the stocks; and by the latter they are to for- feit double damages, and be committed to the house of correction till paid, &c. By a late statute, persons that imbezil or illegally dispose of any woollen, linen, suttan, cotton, or iron materials; or gloves, leather, shoes, &c. they are intrusted to work up, shall forfeit double the value, or be sent to the house of correction, and there whipped, and kept to hard labour fourteen days; and for a second offence, forfeit four times the value, &c. And buyers and receivers are liable to the same penalties. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 8. If any servant imbezils, purloins, or makes away his master's goods, to 40 s. value, it is made felony without benefit of clergy, by 12 Ann. c. 7.

Imbeziling the King's armour or stores is felony, by 31 El. c. 4. As to naval stores the benefit of clergy is taken away by 22 Car. 2. c. 5. Other inferior imbezilements and misdemeanors, that fall under this denomination, are punished by statute, 1 Geo. 1. c. 25. with fine and im- prisonment.

Imbeziling the publick money. If by high officers, the usual method is by impeachment in parliament.—As Common law the offender is subject to a discretionary fine and imprisonment. Black. Com. 4 V. 121, 122.

Impalate, Is to put in a pound, by the laws of Hen. 1. c. 9.

Impanel, (Impanellare Juratis) Signifies the writing and entering into a parchment schedule by the sheriff, of the names of a jury summoned to appear for the performance of such publick service as juries are employed in. Impanulare was sometimes a privilege granted that a person should not be impanelled or returned upon a jury.

Non ponatur nec impanuletur in aliquibus juratis, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 657. See Panel, and Kennel's Glossary.

Impar lance, (Interlocutio, vel licentia interloquendi) Is derived from the Fr. parler, to speak, and in the Common law is taken for a petition in court of a day to consider, or advise what answer the defendant shall make to the action of the plaintiff; being a continuance of the cause till another day, or a larger time given by the court.

Impar lance is either
General or Special.

A general impar lance is set down and entered in general terms, without any special clause, thus; and now at this day to wit, on Thursday next after the Oſtave of St. Hilary, in the same terms, until which day the aforesaid C. D. the defendant had licence to impar lance to the bill aforesaid, and then to answer, &c.

Special impar lance, is where the party desires a farther day to answer, adding also these words; Saving all advantages, as well to the jurisdiction of the court, as to the writ and declaration, &c. Kitch. 200. This impar lance is had on the declaration of the plaintiff; and special impar lance is of use where the defendant is to plead some matters which cannot be pleaded after a general impar lance. 5 Rep. 75.

Impar lance is generally to the next term; and if the plaintiff amend his declaration after delivered or filed, the defendant may impar lance to the next term afterwards, if the plaintiff do not pay costs; but if he pay costs, which are accepted, the defendant cannot impar lance. 2 Lill. Abr. 35. Also if the plaintiff declares against the defendant, but doth not proceed in three terms after; the defendant may impar lance to the next term. Ibid.

Causes of impar lance, &c.

The not delivering a declaration in time is sometimes the cause of impar lance of course: and where the defendant's case requires a special plea, and the matter which is to be pleaded is difficult; the court will, upon motion, grant the defendant an impar lance, and longer time to put in his plea, than otherwise by the rules of the court he ought to have: if the plaintiff keeps any deed, or other thing from the defendant, whereby he is to make his defence, impar lance may be granted till the plaintiff delivers it to him, or brings it into court, and a convenient time after to plead. Hill. 22 Car. 1 B. R.

In criminal proceedings.

An impar lance being prayed on a defendant's appearing to answer an information, it was said impar lance was formerly from day to day, but now from one term to another, on the crown side; and it was ruled that the defendant should have the same time to impar lance that the process would have taken up, if he had stood out till the attachment or capias; for when he comes in upon that, he must plead instantly. 1 Salk. 367. Mod. Cases 243. And if process had been continued, he might have been brought in the same term upon an attachment; and then there could be no impar lance, but he ought to plead instantly. 2 Nels. Abr. 947.

Where impar lances are not allowed.

There are many cases wherein impar lances are not allowed; no impar lance is granted in an habeas replegiando; or in an assise, unless on good cause shewn: nor shall there be an impar lance in an action of special clamum fregit; though it is allowed in general actions of trespass. Hill. 9 W. 3. 3 Salk. 186. Where an attorney, or other privileged person of the court, sues another, the defendant cannot impar lance, but must plead presently: if the plaintiff sues out a special original, wherein the cause of action is expressed, and the defendant is taken on a special capias, he shall not have an impar lance, but shall plead as soon as the rules are out. 2 Lill. 35, 36.

Of pleading afterwards.

As to pleadings on impar lances; a plea to the jurisdiction, may not be pleaded after general impar lance. Raym. 34 After impar lance, the defendant cannot plead in abatement; if he doth, and the plaintiff tenders an issue, whereupon the defendant demurs, and the plaintiff joins in demurrer, such plea is not peremptory; because the plaintiff ought not to have joined in demurrer, but to have moved the court, that the defendant might be compelled to plead in chief. Allen 65. Tho' a defendant may not plead in abatement after a general impar lance; yet if it appear by the record that the plaintiff hath brought his action before he had any cause, the court ex officio will abate the writ. 2 Lev. 197.

What may not be done after impar lance, and where the want of it is error, &c.

The defendant cannot have oyer of a deed in a common case, after impar lance: and a tender after impar lance, is naught. 2 Lev. 190. Lutw. 238. If it appears upon the record, that an impar lance was due, and denied, it is error; but then such error must appear on the record. 3 Salk. 168. It has been held, that if the defendant doth not appear on a dies datus, the plaintiff shall not have judgment by default, as he may on impar lance; because the dies datus is not so strong against him as an impar lance; and therefore the plaintiff must take process against the defendant for not appearing at the time. Moor 79. 2 Nels. 947.

Modern practice as to impar lances, &c.

By late orders of court, where a defendant is arrested by process out of B. R. in which the cause of action is specially expressed; or a copy of process is delivered, and the plaintiff hath declared; the defendant shall not have liberty of impar lance, without leave first granted, but shall plead within the time allowed a defendant prosecuted by original writ. Ord. Hill. 2 Geo. 2. And upon all processes returnable the first, or second return of any term, the declaration shall be delivered with notice to plead in eight days after delivery, where the defendant lives above twenty miles from London, &c. without any impar lance; and on default of pleading, the plaintiff may sign judgment. Ord. Cur. Trin. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. Vide New. Abr. tit. Pleading, and 14 Vin. Abr. tit. Impar lance.

Imparsonce, A parson imparsonce, persona imparsonata, is he that is indicted, and in possession of a benefice, Dyer, fol. 40. num. 72. says a dean and chapter are parsons imparsonces of a benefice appropriate unto them. Cowell.

Impeachment, (from the Lat. impetere) Is the accusation and prosecution of a person for treason, or other crimes and misdemeanors. Any member of the House of Commons may not only impeach any one of their own body, but also any Lord of parliament, &c. And thereupon

upon articles are exhibited on behalf of the Commons, and managers appointed to make good their charge and accusation; which being done in the proper judicature, sentence is passed, &c. And it is observed, that the same evidence is required in an impeachment in parliament, as in the ordinary courts of justice: but not in bills of attainder. State Trials, Vol. 1. 676. Vol. 4. 311. An impeachment before the Lords by the Commons of Great Britain, in parliament, is a prosecution of the known and established law, and hath been frequently put in practice; being a presentment to the most high and supreme court of criminal jurisdiction, by the most solemn grand inquest of the whole kingdom. (1 Hal. P. C. 150.) A commoner cannot however be impeached before the Lords for any capital offence, but only for high misdemeanors: (Rot. Parl. 4 Ed. 3. n. 2 & 6. 2 Brad. Hist. 190. Selden Judic. in Parl. ch. 1.) A Peer may be impeached for any crime. The articles of impeachment are a kind of bills of indictment, found by the House of Commons, and afterwards tried by the Lords; who are in cases of misdemeanors considered not only as their own peers, but as the peers of the whole nation. This is a custom derived to us from the constitution of the antient Germans; who in their great councils sometimes tried capital accusations relating to the publick: "Licet apud concilium accusare quoque, et discrimen capitis intendere." Tacit. de mor. Germ. 12. See on this subject. Black. Com. 4 V. 256, 257, 258. And Montesquieu's L'Esprit des Loix. l. 11. c. 6. vol. 1. of the quarto edition, 208, 210. particularly fol. 217; 218.

No pardon under the Great Seal, can be pleaded to an impeachment by the Commons in parliament. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2.

Impeachment of Waste, (Impeditio vasti, from the Fr. empêchement, i. e. impedimentum) Signifies a restraint from committing of waste upon lands or tenements; or a demand of recompence for waste done by a tenant who hath but a particular estate in the land granted: but he that hath a lease to hold without impeachment of waste, hath by that such an interest given him in the land, &c. that he may make waste without being impeached for it; that is, without being questioned, or any demand of recompence for the waste done. 11 Rep. 82. Bills in equity are often filed, as a preventive remedy, to obtain injunctions to stay waste, which are readily granted where proper cases are made out, for courts of equity to ground their injunctions on. See Waste.

Impechiare, (French empêcher, Latin impetere.) To impeach, to accuse and prosecute, for felony, or treason,—Et promisit Regi Navarra quod nunquam cum impechiaret pro morte dicti Caroli de Hispania. Hen. de Knighton, sub anno 1256. Spelman and Sommer tell us, that it is derived from the Lat. impetere, which is to accuse, or in jus vocare, from whence impetitus signifies an accusation, viz. sine impetitione vasti, is without impeaching or accusing him of waste. See Impeachment.

Impeditatus, Impediati canes, Dogs lawed and disabled from doing mischief in the forests, and purlieus of them.—Omnes canes infra forestam solebant esse impediati aut amputati sinistro ortello. Cowell. See Expeditate.

Impedens, A defendant, or deforciant. Cowell.

Impediments in Law, Persons under impediments are those within age, under coverture, non compos mentis, in prison, beyond sea, &c. who, by a saving in our laws, have time to claim, and prosecute their rights, after the impediments removed, in case of fines levied, &c. 1 R. 3. c. 7. 4 H. 7. c. 24. See stat. Limitations 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. And 4 Ann. c. 16. s. 19.

Impetitio, Accusation or impeachment: As, sine impetitione vasti, or, sine impedimento vasti, i. e. without impeachment of waste, the party shall not be questioned or accused for any waste. Cowell.

Impetratio, (Impetratio) Signifies an obtaining any thing by request and prayer: And in our statutes it is a pre-obtaining of church benefices in England from the court of Rome, which belong to the gift and disposition of the King, and other lay patrons of this realm; the penalty whereof was the same with provisors. 25 Ed. 3. 38 Ed. 4. c. 1.

Impierment, Is used for impairing or prejudicing; as to the impierment and diminution of their good names, &c. 23 Hen. 8. c. 9.

Implead, To sue or prosecute by course of law; from the Fr. plaider.

Implements, (from the Lat. impleo, to fill up) Things necessary in any trade or mystery, without which the work cannot be performed; also the furniture of an house, as all household goods, implements, &c. And implements of household are tables, presses, cupboards, bedsteads, wainscot, and the like: In this sense, we find this word often in gifts and conveyances of moveables. Terms de Ley.

Implication, Is where the law doth imply something that is not declared between parties in their deeds and agreement: And when our law, giveth any thing to a man, it giveth implicitly, whatsoever is necessary for the enjoying the same.

Of omissions helped by implication, &c.

The want of words in some cases may be helped by implication; and so one word or thing, or one estate given, shall be implied by another: There is an implication in wills and devises of lands, whereby estates are gained; as if a husband devotes the goods in his house to his wife, and that after her decease his son shall have them, and his house; though the house be not devised to the wife by express words, yet it has been held, that she hath an estate for life in it by implication, because no other person could then have it, the son and heir being excluded, who was to have nothing till after her decease. 1 Entr. 223. But where it may be reasonably intended, that the deviser meant as well the one, as the other, in such case his intention shall never be construed in prejudice to the heir at law: For instance; A man devised part of his lands to his wife for life, and that the same and all the rest of his lands should remain to his youngest son, and the heirs of his body, after the death of the wife; here was no express devise of the rest of the lands to his wife, and she shall not have them by implication, because the eldest son and heir at law was not excluded, who shall have them during the life of the wife, till the devise to the youngest son takes effect, for they shall descend to the heir in the mean time. Moor 123. Tho' Croke, (who reports the same case,) says, it was adjudged the wife should have the whole. Cro. Elix. 15.

Of estates raised by implication.

Estates for life, and estates-tail, may be raised by implication in wills; a testator had three sons, the eldest son dying, leaving his wife with child, to whom the father devised an annuity in ventre sa mere, and if his middle son died before he had any issue of his body, remainder over, &c. And it was resolved, that such son had an estate-tail by implication. Moor 127. It is said, a fee-simple estate shall not arise by implication in a will; tho' there is a perpetual charge imposed by the deviser, on the devisee, &c. Bridgm. 103. Also it hath been adjudged, that where a particular estate is devised by will expressly, a contrary intent shall not be implied by any subsequent clause. And implication is either necessary, or possible; and where-ever an estate is raised by that means in a will, it must be by a necessary implication; for the devisee must necessarily have the thing devised, and no other person can have it. 1 Salk. 236. 2 Nelf. Abr. 494.

No implication shall be allowed against an express estate, limited by express words, to drown the same. Salk. 266. There are conditions and covenants, implied by law, in deed and grants: And implication will sometimes help law proceedings, and supply defects. See Intendment and Use. And Black. Com. 2 V. 381.

Rules, &c. concerning implication.

It is a general rule, that where an estate is to be raised by implication, it must be a necessary and inevitable implication, and such as that the words can have no other construction whatsoever. Arg. Cases in Chan. in Lord Talbot's time, 9 Mich. 1733 in the case of Lord Glenorby v. Desjoville.

An implication cannot be intended by deed, unless there are apt words, but otherwise in a will. Brownl. 153. Mich. 15 Jac. Nevill v. Nevill.

An implied intent must not, without clear expression, alter the equitable general law. Arg. Hill. 28 & 29 Car. 2. 1 Chan. Cases 297. in the case of Ford Lord Grey v. Lady Grey & al.

An estate by implication was never thought of in a deed, nor in a will but in case of necessity, 4 Mod. 156. Mich. 4 W. & M. B. R. Davis v. Speed.

No implication shall be allowed against an express estate limited by express words. 1 Salk. 226. Hill. 5 W. & M. B. R. Goodright v. Cornish.

An express estate for life cannot be enlarged by implication, but by express words it may; per Wright K. and 2 Ch. J. and 1 J. Mich. 1703. 2 Vern. 449. Danfield v. Popham. See Tail, Will.

Importation, (Importatio) Is where goods and merchandize are brought into this kingdom from other nations. 12 Car. c. 4.

Impossibility. A thing which is impossible in law, is all one with a thing impossible in nature: And if any thing in a bond or deed is impossible to be done, such deed, &c. is void. 21 Car. 1. B. R. Yet where the condition of a bond becomes impossible by the act of God, in such case, it is held the obligor ought to do all in his power towards a performance: As when a man is bound to enfeoff the obligee and his heirs, and the obligee dies, the obligor must enfeoff his heir. 2 Co. Rep. 74. See Black. Com. 2 V. 156.

Impost, (from the Lat. impono) Signifieth the tax received by the Prince, for such merchandize as are brought into any haven within his dominions from foreign nations. 31 Eliz. 5. It may in some sort be distinguished from custom, because custom is rather that profit the Prince maketh of wares shipped out; yet they are frequently confounded. Cowell.

Impostors (Religious) Those who falsely pretend an extraordinary commission from heaven; or terrify and abuse the people with false denunciations of judgments. They are punishable by the Temporal courts with fine, imprisonment, and infamous corporal punishment. 1 Hawk. P. C. 7.

Impotence, is a canonical disability to avoid marriage in the Spiritual Court. The marriage is not void à initio, but voidable only by sentence of separation, but to be actually made during the life of the parties. See Black. Com. 1 V. 434, 435.

Impotentia, property ratione. A qualified property may subsist with relation to animals feræ naturæ, ratione impotentia, on account of their own inability. As when hawks, herons, or other birds build in my trees, or conies or other creatures make their nests or burrows in my land, and have young ones there; I have a qualified property in those young ones, till such time as they can fly or run away, and then my property expires, Carta de forest. (9 Hen. 3. c. 13.) but, till then, it is in some cases trespass, and in others felony, for a stranger to take them away 7 Rep. 17. Lamb. Eiren. 274. Black. Com. 2 V. 394.

Impressing Seamen. As this is a subject of great consequence, and the power much disputed, we shall give the sentiments of an eminent author thereon, without a comment.

The power of impressing men for the sea service by the King's commission, has been a matter of some dispute, and submitted to with great reluctance; though it hath very clearly and learnedly been shewn by Sir Michael Foster, (Rep. 154. Broadfoot's case) that the practice of impressing, and granting powers to the Admiralty for that purpose, is of very antient date, and hath been uniformly continued by a regular series of precedents to the present time: Whence he concludes it to be part of the Common law. The difficulty arises from hence, that no statute has expressly declared this power to be in the crown, though many of them very strongly imply it. The stat. 2 Ric. 2. c. 4. Speaks of mariners being arrested and retained for the King's service, as of a thing well known, and practised without dispute; and provides a remedy against their running away. By a later statute, (2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 16.) if any waterman, who uses the river Thames, shall hide himself during the execution of any commission of pressing for the King's service, he is liable to heavy penalties. By another, (5 Eliz. c. 5.) no fisherman shall be taken by the Queen's commission to serve as a mariner; but the commission shall be first brought to two justices of the peace, inhabiting near the sea-coast where the mariners are to be taken, to the intent, that the justices may chuse out, and return such a number of able bodied men, as in the commission are contained, to serve her Majesty. And, by others, (7 & 8 W. 3. c. 21. 2 Ann. c. 6. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 19. 13 Geo. 2. c. 17, &c.) especial protections are allowed to seamen in particular circumstances, to prevent them from being impressed. All which do most evidently imply a power of impressing to reside some where; and, if any where, it must from the spirit of our constitution, as well as from the frequent mention of the King's commission, reside in the crown alone. Black. Com. 1 V. 418, 419.

The same author observes, that this method of impressing is only defensible from public necessity, to which all private considerations must give way. 1 V. 419. For further satisfaction on this important subject, we refer the reader to Camberbatch's Rep. 245, and to Foss. Rep. 154, &c. Where the subject is very fully and learnedly treated.

Imprest-Money, (from the preposition In, and Fr. prest, paratus) Is money paid on insisting soldiers.

Impretabilis, Signifies invaluable, in which sense it is often mentioned in Matt. Paris.

Imprimery, (Fr.) A print, or impression; and the art of printing, also a printing-house, are called imprimery. Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 33.

Imprii, Are those who side with, or take the part of another, either in his defence, or otherwise.—Omnes homines & Imprii Domini Ludovici, &c. Matt. Westm.—Nos erimus Imprii Regis, &c. Matt. Paris. 127.

Imprisonment, (imprisonamentum) Is the restraint of a man's liberty under the custody of another; and extends not only to a gaol, but to a house, stocks, or where a man is held in the street, &c. for in all these cases the party so restrained is said to be a prisoner, so long as he hath not his liberty freely to go about his business, as at other times. 1 Inst. 253.

None shall be imprisoned but by the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. M. C. 9 H. 3. c. 2. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 4.

Imprisonment according to law, or the custom of England; or by process, and course of law. 2 Inst. 46, 50, 282. And no person is to be imprisoned, but as the law directs either by command and order of a court of record, or by lawful warrant, or the King's writ; by which one may be lawfully detained to answer the law. 2 Inst. 46. 3 Inst. 209.

At Common law, a man could not be imprisoned in any case, unless he were guilty of some force or violence; for which his body was subject to imprisonment, as one of the highest executions of the law: but imprisonment is inflicted by statute in many cases. 3 Rep. 11. Though see Magna Chart. 9 H. 3. c. 29. Whenever the Common law, or any statute gives power to imprison, there it is lawful and justifiable; but he who doth it in pursuance of a statute, must be sure exactly to follow the statute in the order and manner of doing thereof. Dyer 204. 13 E. 1.

A justice of peace may cause offenders to be imprisoned, and may himself require any man to give security of the peace or good behaviour, where he hath cause, and if he refuse may imprison him. Bro. Tresf. 177. If a warrant of commitment be for imprisoning a man until farther order, &c. it has been held ill; for it should be till the party party is delivered by due course of law. 1 Roll. Rep. 337. It is the same when a person is imprisoned on a warrant, without shewing any cause for which he is committed: and where a person was committed to prison by warrant from a Secretary of State, without assigning any cause, &c. it was adjudged, that he ought to be discharged for that reason; but then another warrant was returned of the same Secretary, in which the first warrant was recited, and that upon farther examination, he commanded the gaoler to detain him safely, for suspicion of high treason; and it was said this was no cause to detain him, because this second warrant referred to the first, which was no warrant at all; besides, there was no special cause of suspicion alledged, nor for what species of treason. Palm. 558. 1 Roll. Rep. 219.

In the case of John Wilkes, Esq.; it was resolved, that a member of parliament is intitled to the privilege of being free from arrests in all cases, except treason, felony, and actual breach of the peace; therefore ought to be discharged from imprisonment without bail. Vid. Willf. par. 2. 159. And see the opinion of the court of Common Pleas, with respect to imprisonment, under general warrants from the Secretary of State. Ibid. from fo. 151 to 160. And from fo. 275 to 292.

In all actions, quare vi & armis, if judgment be given against the defendant, he shall be fined and imprisoned, because to every fine, imprisonment is incident: and therefore where the defendant is fined for a contempt to any court of record, he may be imprisoned till the fine is paid. 8 Rep. 60. But with respect to imprisoning for the fine, in actions of trespass, the captivitas pro fine is taken away, and other provisions in lieu thereof made, (viz. by plaintiff paying it, and being allowed in costs.) per 5 W. & M. c. 12. See further as to imprisonment, *Black. Impropriation, Is properly so called when a benefice ecclesiastical is in the hands of a layman; and appropriation, when in the hands of a bishop, college, or religious house, though sometimes they are confounded. There are computed to be in England 3845 impropriations; and on the dissolution of monasteries they were granted to lay persons by the King's patents, &c. 31 H. 8. c. 13. *Vide Appropriation, and Black. Inception. The same person is patron and incumbent, and he devises the next avoidance; it was objected, that by his death the church is void, and then the presentation is a chese en action, and not grantable, and the devise takes not effect till after the death of devisor, and therefore void; but held a good devise, because it has inception in his life. *Roll. Uncertainty, Is that which opposeth certainty, where a thing is so ambiguously set down, that one cannot tell how to understand it: and this is said to be the mother of contention. The questions of uncertainty arise sometimes on matter of record; as writs, counts, pleas, verdicts, &c. and sometimes on deeds or writings, or upon contracts, &c. 5 Rep. 221. Plowd. 25.

In law proceedings, uncertainty will make them void; for all proceedings at law are to be certain and affirmative, that the defendant may be at a certainty as to what he should answer, &c. Plowd. 84. If the count and verdict in an appeal be uncertain, there can be no judgment given thereon; and it is the same on an indictment. 3 Mod. 121.

Uncertainty in deeds renders them void; but sometimes a term for years granted by lease, may be made certain by reference to a certainty; and uncertainty may be reduced to certainty, by matter est post factum, implication, &c. Plowd. 6. 273. 6 Rep. 20. If there are two men of one name, and a devise of lands, &c. is to one of that name, without any distinction, it will be void for uncertainty; tho' perhaps an averment may make it good. 2 Bullf. 180. Uncertainty in declarations of uses of fines of lands, &c. is rejected in law; for otherwise there would be no certain inheritances. 9 Rep.

Incest. In the year 1650, when the ruling powers found it for their interest to put on the semblance of a very extraordinary strictness and purity of morals, incest and wilful adultery were made capital crimes. But at the restoration, when men, from an abhorrence of the hypocrisy of the late times, fell into a contrary extreme, of licentiousness, it was not thought proper to renew a law of such unfashionable rigour. And these offences have been ever since left to the feeble coercion of the Spiritual Court, according to the rules of the Canon law. Black. Com. 4 V. 64. See Lewdness.

Enchantment. There were formerly two severe statutes against this imaginary offence, vim. 33 Mss. 8. c. 8. & 1 Jac. 1. c. 12. But now, in wiser times, a statute hath been made, vim. (9 Geo. 2. c. 5.) on more rational grounds, vim. that no prosecution shall, for the future, be carried on against any person for conjuratio, witchcraft, sorcery, or enchantments. But, the misdemeanor of persons pretending to use witchcraft, tell fortunes, or discover stolen goods by skill in the occult sciences, is still deservedly punished with a year's imprisonment, and standing four times in the pillory.

Kind of Candle, is the manner of selling goods by merchants; which is done thus: First, Notice is to be given upon the Exchange, or other publick place, of the time of sale; and in the mean time, the goods to be sold are divided into lots, printed papers of which, and the conditions of sale, are also forthwith published; and when the goods are exposed to sale, a small piece of wax-candle, about an inch long, is burning, and the last bidder when the candle goes out, is intitled to the lot or parcel so exposed. If any difference happens in adjusting to whom a lot belongs, where several bid together, the lot is to be put up again; and the last bidder is bound to stand to the bargain, and take the lot, whether good or bad. In these cases, the goods are set up at such a price; and none shall bid less than a certain sum, more than another hath before, &c. Merc. Dig.

Incident, (incident) Is a thing necessarily depending upon, appertaining to, or following another that is more worthy or principal. A court-baron is inseparably incident to a manor; and a court of plea-pleaders to a fair; these are so inherent to their principals, that by the grant of one the other is granted; and they cannot be extinct by release, or saved by exception, but in special cases. Kitch. 36. 1 Inst. 151. Rent is incident to a reversion; timber trees are incident to the freehold, and also decays and charters, and a way to lands; fealty is incident to tenures; distress to rent and antientment, &c. 1 Inst. 151. Tenant for life or years, hath incident to his estate, crovers of wood. 1 Inst. 41. And there are certain incidents to estates-tail; as to be disseizable of waste, to suffer a recovery, &c. 1 Inst. 224. 10 Rep. 38. 39. Incidents are needful to the bens off of that to which they are incident; and the law is tender of them. Hob. 39. 40.

If a man, either by grant or prescription, has a right to a wreck thrown on another's land, of consequence he has a right to a way over the same land to take it; and the very possession of the wreck is in him before seizure. 6 Mod. 149. Pasch. 3 Ann. B. R. Aven'. See 14 Vin. Abr. tit. Incidents.

Incorporation, (power of) The King's consent is absolutely necessary to the erection of any corporation, either impliedly or expressly given. The King's implied consent is to be found in corporations which exist by force of the Common law, to which our former Kings are supposed to have given their concurrence; Common-law being nothing else but custom, arising from the universal agreement of the whole community. The King's consent is also presumed as to all corporations by prescription, such as the city of London, and many others, which have existed time out of memory; and therefore are looked upon in law to be well created. The methods by which the King's consent is expressly given, are either by act of parliament or by charter. But the immediate creative act is usually performed by the King alone, in virtue of his royal prerogative, i. e. by charter. See 2 Inst. 330. 10 Rep. 29. 30. 1 Rd. Abr. 512, 513. 8 Rep. 114. Black. Com. 1 V. 472. 3.

Incorporeal Hereditaments. An incorporeal hereditament is a right issuing out of a thing corporeal, (whether real or personal) or concerning, or annexed to, or exercisable within the same. Co. Litt. 19. 20. It is not the thing corporeal itself, but something collateral thereto, as a rent issuing out of lands, &c. or an office belonging to jewels, &c. Or, according to the legicians, corporeal hereditaments are the substantia, which may be always seen, always handled: incorporeal hereditaments are but a sort of accidents, which inhere in and are supported by that substance; and may belong or not belong to it, without any visible alteration therein. Their existence is merely in idea and abstracted contemplation; tho' their effects and profits may be frequently objects of our bodily senses. N. B. The profits produced and the thing or hereditament which produces them, are very different. Black. Com. 2 V. 20.

Incrementum, Increase or improvement; to which was opposed decrementum or abatement. — Raddendo antiquam firmam & de incremento xi s. Paroch. Antiqu. 164. And we read de d. A. B. quoddam incrementum terra mea apud, &c. where it is meant a parcel of ground inclosed out of a common, or improved.

Incroachment, (Fr. atcroachment, i. e. a grasping of a thing) Signifies an unlawful gaining upon the right or possession of another man. As where a man sets his hedge or wall too far into the ground of his neighbour, that lies next to him, he is said to make incroachment upon him: and a writ is said to be incroached, when the lord by distress or otherwise compels his tenant to pay more than he owes; and so of services, &c. 9 Rep. 33. And sometimes this word is applied to power; for the Spencers, father and son, it is said incroached unto them royal power and authority, anno 1 Ed. 3. And the Admirals and their deputies did incroach to themselves divers jurisdictions, &c. 15 R. 2. c. 3.

Incumbent, (from the Lat. incumbere, to mind diligently) Is a clerk who is resident on his benefice with cure; and is so called, because he does or ought to bend all his study to the discharge of the cure of the church to which he belongs. Co. Litt. 119. Where an incumbent is put out without due process, he shall be at large to sue for his remedy at what time he pleareth, &c. Stat. 4 H. 4. cap. 22. See Black. Com. 1 V. 392. and tit. Church.

Incumbent, See Mortgage, Purchase, and 14 Vin. Abr. tit. Incumbent.

Incurmentum, The incurring or being subject to a penalty, fine or amercement: so incurri aliquid is to be liable to another's legal censur or punishment. — Statutum de rebus capitalibus Dominis vel Regi incurrantur. Willelm. c. 37.

Indebitatus Assumpsit, Is used in declarations and law proceedings, where one is indebted unto another in any certain sum; and the law creates it: it is also an action thereupon. And it has been held, that action upon an indebitatus assumpsit lies in no case, but where debt will lie for the same thing. 1 Salk. 23. See Assumpsit.

Indecimable, (indecimabilis) That is not tithable, or by law ought not to pay tithes. 2 Inst. 490.

Indefeasible, or Indefeasible, Is what cannot be defeated or made void: as a good and indefeasible estate, &c.

Indefeasible Right to the Throne. The doctrine of hereditary right does by no means imply an indefeasible right to the throne. It is unquestionably in the breast of the supreme legislative authority of this kingdom, the King and both Houses of Parliament, to defeat this hereditary right; and, by particular entails, limitations and provisions, to exclude the immediate heir, and vest the inheritance in any one else. This is strictly consonant to our laws and constitution; as may be gathered from the expression so frequently used in our Statute Book, of "The King's Majesty, his heirs, and successors." In which we may observe, that as the word, "heirs," necessarily implies an inheritance or hereditary right, generally subsisting in the royal person; so the word "successors", distinctly taken, must imply that this inheritance may sometimes be broken through; or, that there may be a successor, without being the heir of the King. Black. Com. 1 V. 195. It is a doctrine founded in reason and the nature of things, which doth not require a comment.

Indefensus, A word signifying one that is impleaded, and refuseth to make answer: Et prædictus J. nihil sinit dicere contra factam dicti Richardi, nec voluit ponere se inquisitionem aliquam; consideratum est quod tanquam indefensus sit in misericordia, &c. Mich. 50 H. 3. Rot. 4.

Indemnity. On the appropriation of a church to any college, &c. when the archdeacon loses for ever his induction money, the recompence he receives yearly out of the church so appropriate, as 12 d. or 2 s. more or less, as a pension agreed at the time of the appropriating, is called indemnity. MS. in Bibl. Cotton. p. 84. There is an indemnity from penalties, of persons who have neglected to read the morning and evening prayers, according to the Book of Common Prayer, and to subscribe the declaration, &c. See Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 6. and other indemnities by various acts.

Indenture, (indentura) Is a writing containing some contract, agreement or conveyance between two or more persons, being indented in the top answerable to another part, which hath the same contents. Co. Litt. 229. If a deed or writing begins, This indenture, &c. and is not indented, it is no indenture; but it may work as a deed poll: but if the deed is actually indented, and there are no words importing an indenture, it is nevertheless an indenture in law. Wood's Inst. 223. Cro. Eliz. 472. A deed of bargain and sale of freehold lands, &c. must be by indenture, enrolled, &c. Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 16. Words in indentures, though of one party only, are binding to both parties. Cro. Eliz. 222, 657. But the indenting is now considered as of no consequence. 'Tis a general name given to a variety of deeds, beginning with the words, This indenture, &c.

Inducitavit, Is a writ or prohibition that lies for a patron of a church, whose clerk is sued in the Spiritual Court by another clerk for tithes, which amount to a fourth part of the profits of the advowson; then the suit belongs to the King's courts, by the Stat. Westm. 2. c. 5. And the patron of the defendant, being like to be prejudiced in his church and advowson, if the plaintiff recovers in the Spiritual Court, hath this means to remove it to the King's court. Reg. Orig. 35. Old Nat. Br. 31. This writ may be also purchased by the parson sued; and is directed as well unto the judge of the court, as unto the party plaintiff, that they do not proceed, &c. But it is not to be had before the defendant is libelled against in the Spiritual Court, the copy of which ought to be produced in Chancery, before the inducitavit is granted: and this writ must be brought before judgment given in the Spiritual Court; for after judgment there, the inducitavit is void. New Nat. Br. 66, 101. The writ inducitavit doth not lie of a less part of the tithes, &c. than a fourth part of the church; if they are not so much, this being surmised by the other party, a consultation shall be had. Ibid. The patron of the clerk, who is prohibited by the inducitavit, may have his writ of right of the advowson of dismes, &c. See Black. Com. 3 V. 91.

Indictis, (indictatus) When any one is accused by bill preferred to jurors at the King's suit, for some offence, either criminal or penal, he is said to be indicted thereof. Corwell.

Indictio, The same with indictment. Nonnunquam enim sunt accusationes de foresta, & indictmentes vulgariter sic appellatae. Du Fresne.

Indiction, (indictio, ab indicendo) Was the space of fifteen years, by which computation charters and publick writings were dated at Rome; likewise antiently in England, which we find not only in the charters of King Edgar, but of King Hen. 3. And by this account of time, which began at the dismission of the Nicene Council, every year still increased one till it came to fifteen; and then returned again, making the first, second indiction, &c. dat. apud Chippenham, 18 die Aprilis, indictione nona, anno Dom. 1266.

Indictment, (indictamentum, from the Fr. enditer, i. e. deserre nomen alicujus indicare) Is a bill or declaration of complaint drawn up in form of law, exhibited for some offence criminal or penal, and preferred to a grand jury; upon whose oath it is found to be true, before a judge or others, having power to punish or certify the offence. Terms de Ley. Lambard says, An indictment is an accusation, at the suit of the King, by the oaths of twelve men of the same county, wherein the offence was committed, mitted, returned to inquire of all offences in general in the county, determinable by the court into which they are returned, and their finding a bill brought before them to be true: but when such accusation is found by a grand jury, without any bill brought before them, and afterwards reduced to a formed indictment, it is called a presentment; and when it is found by jurors returned to inquire of that particular offence only, which is indicted, it is properly called an inquisition. Lamb. lib. 4. cap. 5. By Pulton, an indictment is an inquisition taken and made by twelve men, at the least, thereunto sworn, whereby they find and present, that such a person, of such a place, in such a county, and of such a degree, hath committed such a treason, felony, trespass, or other offence, against the peace of the King, his crown and dignity. Pult. 169. An indictment by Lord Chief Justice Hale, is only a plain, brief, and certain narrative of an offence, committed by any person, and of those necessary circumstances, that concur, to ascertain the fact and its nature; there is great strictness required in indictments, where life is in question; therefore very nice exceptions are allowed. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 168, 169.

Why called a bill of indictment.

A bill of indictment is said to be an accusation for this reason; because the jury that enquireth of the offence, doth not receive it, until the party that offereth the bill appearing subscribes his name, and offers his oath for the truth of it: But it differs from an accusation in this, that the preferrer of the bill is not tied to the proof of it, upon any penalty, except there appear conspiracy. Staundf. P. C. lib. 2. cap. 23.

But if any one prefer an indictment to the grand jury for any criminal offence, without probable cause, and the bill is not found, or the party is acquitted, action lies for a malicious prosecution.

Of the preferring and finding of the bill, and of the grand jury, &c.

Although a bill of indictment may be preferred to a grand jury upon oath, they are not bound to find the bill, if they find cause to the contrary; and tho' a bill of indictment be brought unto them without oath made, they may find the bill if they see cause: but it is not usual to prefer a bill unto them before oath be first made in court, that the evidence they are to give unto the grand inquest to prove the bill is true. Pafch. 23 Car. B. R. 2 Lill. Abr. 44. The grand jury are to find the whole in a bill, or reject it, and not find specially for part, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 210. According to the Common law, every indictment must be found by twelve men at the least, every one of whom ought to be of the same county, and returned by the sheriff, or other proper officer, without the nomination of any other, and to be freemen, not under any attainder of felony, nor outlaws, &c. And any one under prosecution for a crime, before he is indicted, may except against or challenge any of the persons returned on the grand jury; as being outlawed, returned at the instance of the prosecutor, or not returned by the proper officer, &c. 2 Hawk. 215. By statute, no indictment shall be made but by inquest of lawful men returned by sheriffs, &c. 11 H. 4. cap. 2. And if a person not returned by the sheriff on a grand jury, procures his name to be read among those of others who were actually returned, whereupon he is sworn of the jury; he may be indicted for it and fined, and the indictment found by such a jury shall be void. Stat. 11 Hen. 4. cap. 9. 12 Rep. 98. 3 Inst. 33.

Of the power of sheriffs, justices of the peace, &c.

Sheriffs had formerly power to take indictments; which they did by roll indicted, one part whereof remained with the inquest. 13 Ed. 1. and 1 Ed. 3. Justices of peace have no power relating to indictments for crimes, but what is given them by act of parliament: And it is said justices of peace in sessions, cannot on an indictment, try and determine the offence in one and the same sessions in which the offenders are indicted. Hill. 11 Car. Cro. Car. 430, 448. And indictments before justices of peace, &c. may be removed into the court of B. R. by certiorari: But an indictment removed by certiorari into B. R. may be sent back again into the county or place whence removed, if there be cause to do it. Mich. 22 Car.

Of appeals, &c.

Before the statute 3 H. 7. c. 1. it was the common practice not to try any man upon an indictment of murder, before the year and day were passed, to bring an appeal, lest that suit should be prevented: And appeals are to be generally preferred to indictments. 3 H. 7. 2 Hawk. 214. As an appeal is ever the suit of the party; so an indictment is always at the suit of the King. 1 Inst. 126. And till the statute 1 Ed. 6. if a man had been indicted and convicted of felony, &c. and the King had died before judgment, no judgment could be given, because it was at the suit of the King; and the authority of the judges who should give the judgment was determined by his death: but by that statute judgment may be given in the time of another King. 7 Rep. 29.

An indictment is not at the suit of the party, nor is he interested.

An indictment is the King's suit; for which reason the party who prosecutes, is a good witness to prove it: And no damages can be given to the party grieved upon an indictment, or other criminal prosecution, unless particularly grounded on some statute; but the court of B. R. by the King's Privy Seal may give to the prosecutor a third part of the fine assessed for any offence; and the fine to the King may be mitigated, in regard to the defendant's making satisfaction to a prosecutor for costs of prosecution, and damages sustained by the injury received. 2 Hawk. 210.

Of proceeding by indictment.

No man may be put upon his trial for a capital offence, except on an appeal or indictment, or something equivalent thereto. H. P. C. 210. And all indictments ought to be brought for offences committed against the Common law, or against some statute; and not for every slight misdemeanor. Trin. 23 Car. B. R. 2 Lill. 44. Where a statute appoints a penalty to be recovered by bill, plaint, or information, it cannot be by indictment, but as directed to be recovered: An indictment will not lie where another remedy is provided by statute. Cro. Jac. 643. 3 Salk. 187.

Where an indictment will lie, and for what offence, &c. and where not.

Indictments are for the benefit of the Commonwealth, and the publick good; and to be preferred for criminal, not civil matters: they may be of high treason, petit treason, felony, trespass, and in all sorts of pleas of the crown; but not of injuries of a private nature, which do not concern the King, and the publick. 1 Inst. 126, 303. 4 Rep. 44. An indictment lies against one for assaulting and knocking another on the highway, being a breach of the peace. Hill. 22 Car. It lies for cheating a person at play, with false dice, or any other cheating: but it is not indictable for one man to make a fool of another, in the case of cheats getting money, &c. tho' action may be brought. 2 Lill. 44. 1 Salk. 479. Except in the cases specified in the act of 30 Geo. 2. c. 24. commonly called the statute of False Presenters.

Indictment will not lie for a private nuisance, wherein action on the case only lies; and where a person is indicted for trespass, which is not indictable at law, but for which action should be had; or if a man be indicted for scandalous words, as calling another rogue, &c. such indictments are not good; for private injuries are to be redressed by private actions. 2 Lill. Abr. 42. But where a person is beaten, he may proceed for this trespass by indictment, or information, as well as action. Pafch. 24 Car.

Car. B. R. And where in an action on the case, a defendant justifies for words, as calling the plaintiff thief, &c. if on the trial it be found for the defendant, indictment may be brought forthwith to try the plaintiff for the felony. Mich. 22 Car. B. R. a Lill. 44. By Hals Chief Justice: If a civil action of trover be brought for goods taken, after recovery the party may be indicted for trespass or felony, for the same taking: But if the first prosecution had been criminal, as an indictment for trespass, &c. and the crime appears to be felony; there you cannot have verdict or judgment on the indictment for trespass till the felony is tried, it being the inferior offence. Mod. Caf. 77. 'Tis said that trover lies not for goods stolen, until the offender is convicted, &c. on indictment of felony. 1 Hals's Hist. P. C. 546. A parson may be indicted for preaching against the government of the church, the civil and ecclesiastical government being so incorporated together, that one cannot subsist without the other; and both center in the King; wherefore to speak against the church, is within the statute 13 Car. 2. Sid. 69. 3 Nels. Abr. 959. And a parson was indicted for pronouncing absolution to persons condemned for treason, at the place of execution, without shewing any repentance. 5 Mod. 363. Also a parson hath been indicted, and fined, &c. for drinking healths to the memory of traitors. 3 Mod. Rep. 52.

Of the certainty required in indictments.

Indictments ought to be more certain than common pleadings in law, because they are more penal, and to be answered with more precision. Hill. 23 Car. B. R. They must be precise and certain in every point, and charge some offence in particular, and not a person as an offender in general, or set down goods, &c. stolen, without expressing what goods; and it ought to be laid positively, not by way of recital, &c. or be supplied by implication. Cro. Jac. 19. 2 Hawk. P. C. 225, 226. Indictments must set forth the Christian name, surname, and addition of the place of residence of the offender; the certainty of the time when the offence was done, as the day, year, &c. and the town or place where; the nature of the offence, whether treason, felony, &c. and the value of the thing by which it is committed, &c. And in indictment of murder, the length and depth of the wound is to be expressed: the value of things stolen is to be specified, that it may appear whether grand or petit larceny; and of the thing that does the felony, which is forfeited to the King; and the dimensions of a wound must be expressed, that it may be judged whether mortal. 1 Hen. cap. 5. 2 Inst. 318. H. P. C. 264. West's Symb. Sect. 70. In treason, according to our old books, the indictment must say proditorie, and conclude contra ligeantiam suam debitum; in murder, it is to say murdravit; and if the killing was by shooting, or with the hand, &c. it must say percussit; in burglary, burglariter, or bargalariter; in rape, rapuit; in felony, felonice; in larceny, felonice cepit; maihem, mayhemavit, &c. And in all these cases, and in trespasses, the indictment ought to be vi & armis, and conclude contra pacem, which are words to shew an offence generally: and if the offence is created by statute, it must conclude contra formam statuti, &c. 4 Rep. 39, 48. 5 Rep. 121. H. P. C. 206. These words the law hath appropriated for the description of offences, and none other will supply them. [Now law proceedings are in English, similar words in that tongue, must be used.]

Of faults in indictments, what shall be fatal, and what not.

The omission of vi & armis & contra pacem, is helped by statute 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. False Latin in the former course of proceedings, did not hurt an indictment, if by any intendment it could be made good; but if any word was not Latin, or allowed by law as a word of art; or if it had been insensible in a material point, the indictment was insufficient. 5 Rep. 121. 2 Cro. 108. 3 Cro. 465. An indictment should not be set aside for a false concord between the substantive and adjective, &c. the expressions being significant to make the sense appear.

5 Co. Rep. 121. But an indictment against two or more, laying the fact in the singular number, as if against one, hath been held insufficient for the incertainty. 2 Hawk. 238. A misnomer of the defendant's surname, will not abate the indictment, as it will in case of the name of baptism; and if there be a mistake in spelling, if it sounds like the true name, it is good. 1 Hen. 5. A person may be indicted for felony against an unknown person; and when the name of one killed is unknown, or goods are stolen from a person that cannot be known, it is sufficient to say in the indictment that one unknown was killed by the person indicted, or that he stole the goods of one unknown. Wood's Inst. 624. But tho' an indictment may be good for stealing the goods cujusdam ignoti, of a person unknown, yet a property must be proved in some body at the trial; otherwise it shall be presumed to be in the prisoner, by his pleading Not guilty. Mod. Caf. in L. & E. 249. Where a person injured is known, his name ought to be put into the indictment. 2 Hawk. 232.

Of the day or time.

If an indictment be generally of offences at several times, without laying any one of them on a certain day; as if it be laid between such a day and such a day, it hath been adjudged that the indictment is void: But a mistake in not laying an offence on the very same day, on which it is afterwards proved upon the trial, is not material upon evidence. 2 Hawk. 236. And it is said, the crown is not bound to set forth the very day, when treason, &c. was committed: Evidence may be given of a treasonable conspiracy, &c. at any time before or after the time alledged in the indictment; where it is laid on such a day and divers other days as well before as after, because the time is only a circumstance, and of form some day must be alledged; but it is not material. 1 Salk. 188.

Of the venue or place.

If no town or place be named where the fact was done, the indictment shall be void; tho' a mistake of the place in laying the offence, is of no signification on the evidence, if the fact is proved at some other place in the same county. H. P. C. 264. 1 Hen. 5. cap. 5. Indictments for facts committed, ought to be laid in the county where done; and the town or parish in which committed to be set forth, &c. And if, upon Not guilty pleaded, to an indictment, it shall appear that the offence was done in a county different from that in which the indictment was found, the defendant shall be acquitted. H. P. C. 203. Kel. 15. At Common law, if a man had died in one county, of a wound received in another, he could not regularly be indicted in either county, the offence not being compleat in either; and no jury could inquire of what happened out of the limits of their own county: but by the statute 3 Ed. 6. cap. 24. the offence is to be indicted and tried by jurors of the county where the death happens. 2 Hawk. 220. It has been held, if a person steals goods in one county, and carries them into another, he may be indicted in the other county: And if a person steals my goods from another, who had stolen them before, he may be indicted as having stolen them from me, because in judgment of law, the possession as well as property always continued in me. 2 Hawk. 99. If there be an accessory in one county, to a felony committed in another, the accessory may be indicted and tried in the same county wherein he was accessory. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 24.

Of joint and several offences, &c.

Husband and wife may commit a trespass, felony, &c. and be indicted together; so for keeping a bawdy-house, tho' the house be the husband's. Hob. 95. 1 Salk. 382. Tho' as to felony, 'tis said the wife can't be guilty of it, in company with her husband, the law presuming her to be under his coercion.

If an offence wholly arises from any joint act that is criminal of several defendants, they may be all charged in one indictment, jointly and severally, or jointly only; and and some of the defendants may be convicted, and others acquitted; for the law looks on the charge as several against each, tho' the words of it purport a joint charge against all: In other cases, the offences of several persons must be laid several, because the offence of one cannot be the offence of another; and every man ought to answer severally for his own crime. 2 Hawk. 240. A person cannot be indicted barely of suspicion of felony; but of the crime itself: And three offences may be joined in an indictment, and the party convicted of one offence, though he is found Not guilty of the others. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 561, 610. (On penal statutes, several things shall not be joined in the indictment, &c. except it be in respect of some one thing, to which all of them have relation. 2 Hawk. 243.

Of indictments upon statutes, pursuing, and reciting of the same, &c.

When an indictment is drawn upon a statute, it ought to pursue the words of it, if a private act; but it is otherwise on a general statute: It is best not to recite a publick statute; the recital is not necessary, for the judges are bound ex officio to take notice of all publick statutes, and misrecitals are fatal; so that it is the surest way only to conclude generally Contra formam statuti, &c. 4 Rep. 48. 'Tho' there be no necessity to recite a public statute in an indictment, yet if the prosecutor take upon him to do it, and materially vary from the substantial part of the purview of the statute, and conclude Contra formam statuti prædicti, he vitiates the indictment. - Plowd. 79, 83. Cro. Eliz. 236. But many mis-recitals may be saved by a general conclusion Contra formam statuti, without adding prædicti, &c. And mistakes may be helped by the constant course of precedents upon such statutes. 2 Hawk. 247. An indictment is to bring the fact making an offence, within all the material words of the statute, or the words, Contra formam statuti, will not make it good. Ibid. 249. If a word of substance be omitted in the indictment, the whole indictment is naught; but it is otherwise where a word of form is omitted, or there is an omission of a synonymous word, where the sense is the same, &c. Ibid. 246. Judgment shall not be given by statute, upon an indictment which doth not conclude Contra formam statuti: And judgment by statute shall never be given on an indictment at Common law, as every indictment which doth not thus conclude shall be taken to be. Ibid. But where persons are indicted on the statute of stabbing, and the evidence is not sufficient to bring them within the statute; they may be found guilty of general manslaughter at Common law, and the words Contra formam statuti, be rejected as useless: In other cases the same has been also adjudged; tho' formerly it was held, that an indictment grounded on a statute, which would not maintain it, could not in any case be maintained as an indictment at Common law. Ibid.

Of amendments, &c.

Indictments may be amended the same term wherein brought into court, and not after: But criminal prosecutions are not within the benefit of the statutes of amendments; so that no amendment can be made to an indictment, &c. but such only as is allowed by the Common law. 2 Lill. 45. 2 Hawk. 244. The body of a bill of indictment removed into B. R. may not be amended, except from London where a tenor only of the record is removed; tho' the caption of an indictment from any place may, on motion, be amended by the clerk of the assizes, &c. so as to make it agree with the original record. Ibid. And captions of indictments ought to set forth the court in which, and the jurors by whom, and also the time and place, at which the indictment was found; and that the jurors were of the county, city, &c. Also they must shew that the indictment was taken before such a court as had jurisdiction over the offence indicted. 2 Hawk. 253. While the jury who found a bill of indictment is before the court, it may be amended by their consent in matter of form, the name, or addition of the party, &c. Kel. 37. Clerks of the assize and of the peace, &c. drawing defective bills of indictment, shall draw new bills without fee, and take but 2 s. for drawing any indictment against a felon, &c. on pain of forfeiting 5 l. Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. cap. 23. If one material part of an indictment is repugnant to, or inconsistent with another, the whole is void; but where the sense is plain, the court will dispense with a small impropriety in the expression. Ibid. 228, 229. And many objections to indictments, are over-ruled. 5 Rep. 120. Where an indictment is void for insufficiency; or if the trial is in a wrong county, another indictment may be drawn for the same offence, whereby the insufficiency may be cured; and the indictment may be laid in another county, ('tis said) tho' judgment be given. 4 Rep. 40. H. P. C. 244. By the Common law, the court may quash any indictment for insufficiency, as will make the judgment thereon erroneous: But the court may refuse to quash an indictment preferred for the publick good, tho' it be not a good indictment, and put the party to traverse, or plead to it. Mich. 22 Car. B. R. Also the court will grant time for the King's counsel to maintain an indictment, if they desire it.

Judges are not bound ex debito justitiæ to quash an indictment; but may oblige the defendant either to plead or demur to it; and where indictments are not good, the parties indicted may avoid them by pleading. 2 Lill. 42. 2 Hawk. 258. The court doth not usually quash indictments for forgery, perjury, and nufances, notwithstanding the indictments are faulty; and it is against the course of the court to quash an indictment for extortion. 2 Lill. 41. 5 Mod. 31. If an indictment be good in part, tho' the other part of it is naught, the court will not quash it; for if an offence sufficient to maintain the indictment be well laid, it is good enough, although other facts are ill laid. Latch. 173. Popb. 208. 1 Salk. 384. One that is convicted upon an erroneous indictment, cannot after he conviction move to have the indictment quashed; but must bring his writ of error to reverse the judgment given against him upon the indictment. Mich. 22 Car. B. R. An indictment is quashed for the insufficiency in it; or because no good judgment can be given upon it: But if judgment be given upon an erroneous indictment, it is good against the party till reversed by writ of error. 2 Lill. 43. If the party indicted is outlawed upon the indictment, the court will not quash the indictment, tho' erroneous; but will force the party outlawed to bring his writ of error to reverse the outlawry. Mich. 24 Car. B. R. The stat. 7 W. 3. cap. 3. ordains, 'That no indictment for treason, &c. or any process thereon, shall be quashed, on motion of the prisoner, or his counsel, for mis-writing, false Latin, &c. unless exception be made before evidence given in court; nor shall any such defect, &c. after conviction, be cause to arrest judgment; though any judgment given upon such indictment may be reversed on a writ of error, &c. By the statute of Hen. 5. indictments shall abate for omissions, by the exception of the party; and if no advantage be taken by exception, but he appears and pleads, he loses the benefit of the law. 2 Inst. 670.

Counts in an indictment, cannot be struck out; (but may in an information :) for the court cannot strike out that, which the grand jury have found. Vide Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annot. 203.

Of pleading, and of process against a person indicted.

A person indicted of felony, &c. may plead generally misnomer, or wrongful addition; a formal acquittal or conviction; a pardon, or other special plea; or the general issue; or may plead any plea in abatement of the indictment, &c. 2 Hawk. 259. One indicted for felony may have counsel assigned him to speak for him in matter of law only. 2 Hill. 44. And all persons indicted for high treason, shall have a copy of the indictment before trial, to advise with counsel, &c. And such indictments are to be found in three years after the offence committed, except it be against the King's person. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 3. which is extended to trials on impeachments by 30 Geo. 2. c. 30. Persons indicted of treason must be by the oaths of two witnesses; but in other cases one witness is enough. After a person is indicted for felony, the sheriff is commanded to attach his body by a capias; and on return of a non est inventus, a second capias shall be granted, and the sheriff is to seize the offender's chattels, &c. And if

On that writ a non est inventus is returned, an exigent shall be awarded, and the chattels be forfeited, &c. 25 Ed. 3. ff. 5. c. 2.

Of not surrendering.

If an innocent person be indicted of felony, and will not suffer himself to be arrested by the officer who has a warrant for it, he may be killed by the officer, if he cannot otherwise be taken; for there is a charge against him upon record, to which at his peril he is bound to answer. Fitz. Coron. 179, 261.

Of being twice indicted.

A person may be indicted twice at the same time, where he hath committed two felonies, and if he hath his clergy for one, he may be hanged for the other. And if there is an indictment and inquisition against one for the same offence, one found by the coroner's inquest, and another by the grand jury, he may be tried on both at the same time: But if he be tried and acquitted upon the one, it may be pleaded in bar on trial for the other. Kel. 30, 108. 1 Salk. 382.

Of trial in another county.

An indictment being found in the proper county, may (in some cases) be heard and determined in any other county, by special commission. 3 Iust. 27.

In general, all offences must be enquired into, as well as tried, in the county where the fact is committed. Black. Com. 4 V. 301.

In the two last rebellions, acts passed empowering the crown to try the traitors in any county.

Of appearance after conviction.

When a person is convicted upon an indictment for trespass or misdemeanor, he is to appear in court, on judgment pronounced; and the court having set a fine upon him, will commit him in execution, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 41. Forms of Indictments, see Murder, Felony, Burglary, &c. For Indictments for Perjury, see Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 11.

Indorsement, (Indorsamentum) Signifies any thing written on the backside of a deed; and receipts for consideration money, and the sealing and delivery, &c. on the back of deeds, are called Indorsements. West. Symb. par. 2. sect. 157. On sealing of a bond any thing may be indorsed or subscribed upon the back thereof, as part of the condition, and the indorsement and that shall stand together. Moor 679. There is also an indorsement of bills or notes, of what part thereof is paid, and when, &c. And in another sense it is a writing a man's name only on the backside of bills of exchange, &c. which passing from one man to another, all the indorsers are answerable as well as the drawer. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. See Black. Com. 2 V. 468-9. Forging of notes, acceptances, &c. felony without clergy. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. 7 Geo. 2. c. 22.

Indowment, Of a church, &c. See Endowment.

Inducement, Is what is alledged as a motive or incitement to a thing; and in law is used specially in several cases, viz. there is inducement to actions, to a traverse in pleadings, a fact or offence committed, &c. Inducements to actions need not have so much certainty as in other cases: A general indebitatus is not sufficient, where it is the ground of the action; but where it is but the inducement to the action, as in consideration of forbearing a debt till such a day, (for that the parties are agreed upon the debt) this being but a collateral promise, is good without shewing how due. Cro. Jac. 548. 2 Mod. 70. A man ought to induce his traverse when he denies the title of another, because he should not deny it till he shew some colourable title in himself; for if the title traversed be found naught, and no colour of right appears for him who traversed, there can be no judgment given: but an inducement cannot be traversed, because that would be a traverse after a traverse, and quitting a man's own pretence of title, and falling upon another. Cro. 265, 266. 3 Salk. 357. An inducement to a traverse must be such matter as is good and justifiable in law. Cro. Eliz. 829. There is an inducement to a justification, when what is alledged against it is not to the substance of the plea, &c. Cro. Jac. 138. Moor 847. 2 Nels. Abr. 986.

Induction, (Inductio, i. e. a leading into) Is the giving a parson possession of his church: And after the Bishop hath granted institution, he issues out his mandate to the Archdeacon to induct the clerk, who thereupon either does it personally, or usually commissions some neighbouring clergyman for that purpose; which is compared to livery and seisin, as it is a putting the minister in actual possession of the church, and of the glebe lands, which are the temporalities of it. This induction is done in the following manner: One of the clergymen commissioned takes the parson to be inducted by the hand, lays it on the key of the church, and pronounces these words: By virtue of this commission, I induct you into the real and actual possession of the rectory of, &c. with all its appurtenances. Then he opens the church door, and puts the parson into possession thereof, who commonly tolls a bell, &c. and thereby shews and gives notice to the people that he hath taken corporal possession of the said church: If the key of the church door cannot be had, the clerk to be inducted may lay his hand on the ring of the door, the latch of the church-gate, on the church-wall, &c. and either of these are sufficient: Also induction may be made by delivery of a clod, or turf of the glebe, &c. Countr. Parf. Campan. 21, 22. Ordinarily the Bishop is to direct his mandate to the Archdeacon, as being the person who ought to induct or give possession unto the clerks instituted to any churches within his Archdeaconry: But 'tis said, the Bishop may direct his mandate to any other clergyman to make induction. 38 Ed. 3. cap. 3. And by prescription, others as well as Archdeacons may make inductions. Parf. Counsel. 8.

An induction made by the patron of the church, is void; but Bishops and Archdeacons may induct a clerk to the benefices of which they are patrons, by prescription, &c. 11 Hen. 4. 7. The Dean and Chapter of Cathedral Churches are to induct prebends; tho' it hath been held, if the Bishop doth induct a prebend, it may be good at the Common law. 11 Hen. 4. 7. 11 Hen. 6. In some places a prebend shall be in possession, without any induction; as at Westminster, where the King makes collation by his letters patent. If the King grants one of his free chapels, the grantee shall be put in possession by the sheriff of the county, and not by the bishop: And no induction is necessary to a donative, where the patron by donation in writing puts the clerk into possession, without presentation, &c. 11 Hen. 4. 7. If the authority of the person who made the mandate for induction, determines by death or removal, before the clerk is inducted, the induction afterwards will be void; as where before it is executed, a new bishop is consecrated, &c. But if the archbishop, during the vacancy of a see, as guardian of the spiritualities, issue a mandate to induct a clerk to a church, it is good tho' not executed before there is a new bishop. 2 Lev. 299. 1 Ventr. 309. Induction is a temporal act; and if the archdeacon refuse to induct a parson, or to grant a commission to others to do it, action of the case lies against him, on which damages shall be recovered; he may likewise be compelled, by sentence in the ecclesiastical court, to induct the clerk, and shall answer the contempt. 12 Rep. 128.

It is induction makes the parson compleat intumbent, and fixes the freehold in him; and a church is full by induction, which cannot be avoided but by quare impedit at Common law. 4 Rep. 79. Plowd. 529. Hob. 15. A bishop sued in the court of audience, to repeal an institution, after induction had, and a prohibition was granted; because an institution is not examinable in the Spiritual Court after induction, but then a quare impedit lies. Moor 860. 'Tis not the admission and institution, but induction to a second benefice, which makes the first void, in case of pluralities, &c. Moor 12. See Black. Com. 1 V. 391. 2 V. 312. 4 V. 106.

Indulgences. According to the doctrine of the Romish church, all the good works of the Saints, over and above those which were necessary towards their own justification, together with the infinite merits of Jesus Christ, are deposited in one inexhaustible treasury. The keys of this were committed to St. Peter, and to his successors the Popes, who may open it at pleasure, and by transferring a portion of this superabundant merit to any particular person, for a sum of money, may convey to him either the pardon of his own sins, or a release for any one in whom he is interested, from the pains of purgatory. Such indulgences were first invented in the eleventh century by Urban II. Robertson's Hist. Emp. Char. V. 2 V. 79, &c. which vide. Also see the stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21. f. 27. And see the statutes against Papists, &c. A collection of which may be seen in British Liberties.

In esse. Is any thing in being; and the learned make this distinction between things in esse and in posse; as, a thing that is not, but may be, they say is in posse, or in potentia; but what is apparent and visible, they alledge is in esse, viz. that it has a real being, whereas the other is casual, and but a possibility. A child, before he is born or conceived, is a thing in posse; after he is born, he is said to be in esse, or actual being. The words in esse are mentioned in the statute 21 Jac. 1. cap. 2. And where there must be persons in esse, to take by grants, &c. See Grants and Wills.

Inewardus. (Inwardus.) A guard, a watchman, one set to keep watch and ward.—In Limunare Iest in Bresen- nei habet Rex consuetudinem scil. 11 caretas, & 11 sticas Anguillarum pro uno inewardo, & de uno ingo de Northblynge xii denarios out unum inewardum & de Dena xviii denarios, & de Garra unum inewardum. Lib. Domesday Chenth. Quando Rex venatui instabat de unuqua; domo per consuetudinem ibat unus homo ad stabillationem in silva. Alii homines non habentes integras majuras inveniebant inewardos, ad aulam quando redierant in civitate.—Lib. Domesday. Herefordshire.

Infalifatus. This word occurs only in Ralph de Hengham, Summa parva, cap. 3. Vir commissi feloniam ob quam fuit suspensus, utlagatus, vel alio modo morti damnatus, vel demembratus, vel apud Dover infalifatus, vel apud Southampton submersus, vel apud Winton demembratus, vel decapitatus, ut apud Northampton; vel in mari superundatus, sicut in aliis partibus portuum.—Mr. Selden, in his notes on that author, says, "It appears that several customs of places made in those days capital punishments several. But what is infalifatus? In regard of its being a custom used in a port-town, I suppose it was made out of the French word salize, which is sine sand by the water side, or a bank of the sea. In this sand or bank it seems their execution at Dover was." The elaborate Du Fresne condemns this derivation and this sense of the word, but yet gives no better. Therefore, (till we have more authority) we may conclude that infalifatus did imply some capital punishment inflicted on the sands or sea-shore: perhaps infalifatio was exposing the malefactor to be laid bound upon the sands, till the next full tide carried him away; of which custom, there is some dark tradition. The penalty took name from the Norman falese, falefia, which signified not only the sands, but rather the rocks and cliffs adjoining or impeding on the sea-shore. Cowell. See the like use of falefia in Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 165. b.

Infamy. Which extends to forgery, perjury, gross cheats, &c. disables a man to be a witness, or juror; but a pardon of crimes restores a person's credit to make him a good evidence. 2 Hawk. P. C. 432, 433. Judgment of the pillory makes infamy by the Common law; but by the Civil and Canon law, if the cause for which the person was convicted was not infamous, it infers no infamy. 3 Lev. 426.

Infangthef, Infangenetheof. (From the Saxon Fang or Fangen, i. e. capere, and Theof, Fur) Signifies a privilege or liberty granted unto lords of certain manors, to judge any thief taken within their sec. Bract. lib. 3. c. 35. In some ancient charters, it appears that the thief should be taken in the lordship, and with the goods stolen, otherwise the lord had not jurisdiction to try him in his court; tho' by the laws of King Edward the Confessor, he was not restrained to his own people or tenants, but might try any man who was thus taken in his manor: 'tis true afterwards, the word infangthef signified Latro captus in terra alicujus seistus de aliquo Latrocinio, de suis propriis huminibus. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 15. The franchises of infangthef and outfangthef, to be heard and determined in court-barrons, are antiquated, and long since gone. 2 Inst. 31. The word is sometimes preceded by an H.

Infant. (Infans) In our law is a person under twenty-one years of age, whose acts are in many cases either void, or voidable. Co. on Lit. lib. 1. cap. 21. and lib. 2. cap. 28. An infant of eight years of age or above, may commit homicide, and be hanged for it, viz. if it may appear by hiding the person, by excusing, or by any other act, that he had knowledge of good and evil, and of the danger of the offence, for here malitia supplebit etatem. 1 Hal. Hist. 27. Yet Co. upon Litt. sect. 405. saith; That an infant shall not be punished till the age of fourteen, which, says he, is the age of discretion. Cowell. But in fact, whether an infant under the age of fourteen, shall or shall not be answerable for criminal acts, depends on the degree of judgment he possesseth. See the End of Div. I.

We shall consider this subject under the following divisions:

- I. The several ages distinguished by law for various purposes.
- II. Who are minors, and how far the law regards infants in ventre sa mere.
- III. Of the trial of infancy.
- IV. Of what offices and trusts an infant is capable.
- V. What things he is capable of doing for his own advantage, and of his acts as good, void, or voidable, &c.

- I. The several ages distinguished by law for various purposes.

From the observations made on the daily actions of infants, as to their arriving at discretion, the laws and customs of every country, have fixed upon particular periods, on which they are presumed capable of acting, with reason and discretion; in our law the full age of man or woman is twenty-one years. 3 New Abr. 118.

Therefore, if one under the age of twenty-one years makes his will, and thereby devises his lands, and after attains the age of twenty-one years, and dies, without making a new publication thereof, this devise is void. Dyer 143. Raym. 84. 1 Sid. 162.

But tho' a person under the age of twenty-one, cannot dispose of his lands, yet it is said, that one under that age may, (pursuant to the stat. of 12 Car. 2. cap. 24.) dispose of the custody of his infant child, and that such disposition draws after it the land, &c. as incident to the custody. Vaugh. 178.

Also it seems agreed, that an infant male at fourteen, and female at twelve, may dispose of their personal estate at those ages: For herein the Common law has appointed no time, being a matter cognizable in the Spiritual Court, which herein proceeds according to the Civil law, by which law infants at those ages are presumed to have sufficient discretion to make such disposition; therefore their testaments in these cases are not to be set aside, or controlled in Chancery, or the temporal courts. 2 Mod. 315. 2 Jones 210. Comb. 59. 1 Vern. 469. Preced. Chan. 316.

The age of consent to a marriage in an infant male is fourteen, and in a female twelve; but they may marry before, before, and if they agree thereto when they attain these ages, the marriage is good; but they cannot disagree before then; and if one of them be above the age of consent, and the other under such age, the party so above the age may as well disagree as the other; for both must be bound, or neither. Co. Litt. 33, 78, 79. 2 Inft. 434. 3 Inft. 88, 89. 6 Co. 22. 7 Co. 43. 1 Roll. Abr. 340, 341.

But tho' the party above age, may as well disagree as the other, yet it is said that the party cannot do it before the other arrives at the proper age: Also it is said to have been adjudged, that if a man marries a woman that is within the age of twelve years, and after the woman at eleven years of age disagrees to the marriage, and after the husband takes another wife, and hath issue by her, that this is a baltard; for the first marriage continues notwithstanding the disagreement of the woman; for the cannot disagree within the age of twelve years, and so her disagreement is void. Co. Lit. 79. 1 Roll. Abr. 341.

If a man marries a woman who is within the age of twelve years, and after the feme covert within the age of consent disagrees to the marriage, and after the age of twelve years marries another, the first marriage is absolutely dissolved, so that he may take another wife; for tho' the disagreement within the age of consent was not sufficient, yet her taking another husband after the age of consent affirms the disagreement, and so the marriage avoided ab initio. 1 Roll. Abr. 341.

Vide the case of Mr. Fitzgerrard, Lord Decius, and Mr. Villers, 3 New Abr. 119, 120. Vide also, 1 Inft. 33. 1 Roll. Abr. 340. Dyer 369. Moor 575. 1 Roll. Abr. 341. 1 Inft. 79. 7 Co. Keen's case. 6 Co. Ambrose's George's case. 7 H. 6. 11. 6 Co. 22.

As the age of fourteen, is the age of consent to a marriage in an infant male; so by law he hath several other ages assigned him, for several purposes, viz. at the age of twelve, to take the oath of allegiance in the tourn or leet; at fourteen, to be out of ward of guardian in socage, to chuse a guardian, and this is also accounted his age of discretion; fifteen to have had aid pur fair Fitz Chevalier. Co. Lit. 98. b. Hob. 225.

The authority of a guardian in socage, ceases at the age of fourteen, at which age the infant may call his guardian to an account, and may chuse a new guardian. Lit. sect. 103. Co. Lit. 75. 2 Inft. 135.

One within the age of twenty-one years may do homage, but not fealty; because, in doing of fealty he ought to be sworn, which an infant cannot be. Co. Lit. 65. b. 2 Inft. 11.

An infant at the age of seventeen, may be a procurator or executor; and in this both the Civil and Common law agree. 5 Co. 29. b. Off. Ex. 307. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 17.

Infancy is a good cause of refusal of a clerk; also by the statutes 13 Eliz. cap. 12. and 13 Ed. 14 Car. 2. none is to be admitted a deacon, unless he be twenty-three at least, nor a priest, unless he be twenty-four. Comb. Incumb. 142, 214. Gibb. Cod. 168. 3 Mod. 67.

By the custom of gavel-kind, an infant at the age of fifteen, is reckoned at full age to sell his lands; and this seems to have been taken from the Civil law, which reckons fourteen the etas pubertatis; for they reckoned that tho' the infant had ended his years of guardianship at fourteen, yet he might not have completed his account with his guardian till the age of fifteen, and that was esteemed to be the age when he was completely out of guardianship; therefore at this age he was allowed to sell the lands descended to him: But in this the customs of England differ from the Civil law; for the Civil law does not allow of his dispositions till the age of twenty-five; therefore this must have been allowed by the old Saxon law, because they thought that much time was lost, if the infant could only use his own without being able to dispose of it in a way of traffick, or in marriage, till twenty-five; therefore they allowed the infant to sell, (but under great limitations and restrictions,) that he might not be defrauded; and by this means they thought there was sufficient provision made for the necessity of commerce, which in the small divided shares was absolutely necessary. Lamb. 624, 625. and see Gavel-kind.

Also by custom in some places, an infant seized of lands in socage, may at the age of fifteen years, make a lease for years, which shall bind him after he comes of age; for the custom makes fifteen his full age to that purpose. Co. Lit. 45. b.

Also by the custom of London, an infant unmarried, and above the age of fourteen, tho' under twenty-one, may bind himself apprentice to a freeman of London by indenture, with proper covenants; which covenants, by the custom of London, shall be as binding as if he were of full age. Moor 134. 2 Bulj. 192. 2 Roll. Rep. 305. Palm. 361. 1 Mod. 271.

As to capital offences, in which the law is the same with regard to the male and female sex, the age of fourteen is the common standard, at which both males and females are, by our law, obnoxious to capital punishments; for this being the etas pubertatis, or age of discretion, the law presumes them at those years to be doli capaces, and capable of discerning between good and evil; therefore subjects them to capital punishments as much as if they were of full age. F. N. B. 202. Co. Lit. 247. b. Dalt. cap. 95. and 104. 1 Ed. 1 Ed. P. C. 25. 1 Hawk. P. C. 2. Sed vide Post this Division.

But tho' the age of fourteen, be the etas pubertatis, before which our laws do not presume the party to be doli capax, and therefore that a party indicted for a capital offence committed before these years is to be found Not guilty, yet this general rule hath the following temperaments.

1. That if the party be above twelve, tho' under 14, and appears to be doli capax, and could discern between good and evil at the time of the offence committed, he may be convicted, and undergo judgment and execution of death, tho' he hath not attained the age of fourteen; but herein, according to the nature of the offence and circumstances of the case, the judge may, or may not, in discretion relieve him, before or after judgment, in order to obtain the King's pardon. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 26.

2. If an infant be above seven, and under twelve years, and commit a capital offence, prima facie he is to be judged Not guilty, and to be found so; because he is supposed not of discretion to judge between good and evil: Yet if it appear, by strong and pregnant evidence and circumstances, that he had discretion to judge between good and evil, judgment of death may be given against him; for malitia supplet etatem; but herein the circumstances must be inquired of by the jury, and the infant is not to be convicted upon his confession: Also herein, my Lord Hale says, that it is prudence after conviction to respite judgment, or at least execution; but that if he be convicted the judge cannot discharge, but only relieve him from judgment, and leave him in custody till the King's pleasure be known. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 27. See Post this Div.

3. If an infant within age be infra annos infantia, viz. seven years old, he cannot be guilty of felony, whatever circumstances proving discretion may appear; for ex presumptione juris he cannot have discretion, and no averment shall be received against that presumption. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 27, 28. Flow. 19.

Vide the case of William York a boy of ten years of age, convicted of murder at the Summer assizes for Bury, in 1748. before Willis Ch. J. Foster's Crown Law, fol. 70, &c. In this case, it appeared from all the circumstances, that the party was doli capax, and the evidence of the fact, being his own repeated confessions, &c. he was very justly convicted.

II. Who are minors, and how far the law regards infants in ventre sa mere.

The privilege of infancy does not extend to the King; for the political rules of government have thought it necessary, that he who is to govern the whole kingdom, should never be considered as a minor, incapable of governing governing himself and his affairs. Co. Lit. 43. Dyer 209. b.

Therefore if the King within age, make any lease or grant, he is bound presently, and cannot avoid them, either during his minority, or when he comes of full age. Plow. 213. a. 5 Co. 27. 7 Co. 12. So, if the King aliens land which he had by descent from his mother, he shall not defeat it, by reason that he was within age at the time of the alienation; for his body politic, which is annexed to his body natural, takes away the imbecility of the natural body, and draws it, and all the effects thereof, to itself; quia magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum, v. Plowd. 213. 14.

So if the King consent to an act of parliament during his minority, yet he cannot after avoid this act: because the King, as King, cannot be a minor; for as King he is a body politic. Co. Litt. 43. 1 Roll. Abr. 728.

Also the acts of a mayor and commonalty, shall not be avoided, by reason of the nonage of the mayor. Cro. Car. 557. 5 Co. 27.

Altho' a Duke, Earl, or the like, be but a minor, or not above ten years of age, in the custody and in the family of another nobleman, who may and doth retain chaplains, yet he may qualify chaplains to hold two benefices with cure, as if he was of full age. 4 Co. 119. Comp. Incumb. 22.

An infant in gavelkind shall have his age, and all other privileges of the infant at Common law; because tho' he hath the privilege of alienation at fifteen, yet that doth not take from him any privilege he had before at Common law. 1 Roll. Abr. 144.

A bastard being impleaded shall have his age; for the dilatory plea must be determined before the pleas in chief can come on; so that the plea of infancy will stay the suit, before it can be inquired, whether he is or is not a bastard. Co. Lit. 244. b.

An infant in ventre sa mere, or in the mother's womb, is supposed in law, to be born for many purposes. It is capable of having a legacy, or, a surrender of a copyhold estate made to it. It may have a guardian assigned to it; and it is enabled to have an estate limited to its use, and to take afterwards by such limitation, as if it were then actually born; and in this point the Civil law agrees with ours, v. Black. Com. 1 V. 130.

A child in ventre sa mere, may be appointed executor; also if there are two or more at a birth, they shall be joint executors, or joint legatees of the thing bequeathed; for the Civil law, for the benefit of the infant, reputes a child in his mother's womb in the same condition as if it were born. Godolph. Orph. Leg. 102.

If there be bastard eigne and mulier puisne, and the bastard enters, and dies seised, his issue shall inherit the lands, and exclude the mulier for ever; but in this case if the bastard had died leaving issue in ventre sa mere, and the mulier had entered, and then a son is born, yet he cannot enter upon the mulier: Herein our law differs from the Civil law; for our law requires an immediate descent, which cannot be before the person is in esse; also by our law the freehold cannot be in abeyance. Co. Lit. 244.

It appears to have been a matter of much controversy, whether a devise of lands to an infant in ventre sa mere be good, because not in being to take at the time of the death of the deviser; and since, as some say, by the devise the person is to take immediately after the death of the deviser, the freehold cannot be put in abeyance by the act of the parties; but others hold, that such devise is good, tho' the infant be not in esse at the death of the deviser, and that the freehold shall not be in abeyance, but shall descend to the heir at law in the mean time. 11 Hen. 6. 13. Bro. Devise 32. Moor 177, 637. 2 Bulf. 273. Cro. Eliz. 423. 1 Lev. 135. 1 Sid. 153. Raym. 163. 1 Keb. 85. 1 Salk. 231. 2 Mod. 9.

However all the books agree, that a devise to an infant when he shall be born, or when God shall give him birth, is good, as an executory devise, and that the freehold shall descend to the heir at law in the mean time. 1 Sid. 153. 1 Lev. 135. Raym. 163. S. C. Snow and Cutler. It may be devised to trustees.

So it is clear, that if land be devised for life, the remainder to a posthumous child, that this is a good contingent remainder; because there is a person in being to take the particular estate; and if the contingent remainder vests during the continuance of the particular estate, or eo instante that it determines, it is sufficient. Moor 637. Church and Wiat. 3 Lev. 408. 4 Mod. 359. 1 Salk. 227. Carth. 309. Reeve and Long; and see 10 Ed. 11 W. 3. cap. 16. and Remainders.

Also it seems agreed, that a man may surrender copyhold lands immediately to the use of an infant in ventre sa mere; for a surrender is a thing executory, and nothing vests before admittance; and therefore if there be a person to take at the time of the admittance, it is sufficient, and not like a grant at Common law, which putting the estate out of the grantor must be void, if there be no-body to take. 1 Roll. Rep. 109, 138. 2 Bulf. 273. Co. Copyh. 9. and see Moor 637.

If an usurpation be had on one in ventre sa mere; at the next turn after his birth, he shall be relieved on the statute of Westm. 2. cap. 5. Hob. 240.

III. Of the trial of infancy.

Infancy is to be tried by inspection of the court, or by jury: And herein it is laid down as a rule in some books, that wheresoever it is alledged upon the pleading, that the party was and yet is under age, there it shall be tried by inspection; but where the infant is of full age at the time of the plea, there it shall be tried per pais.

Lev. 142. 1 Sid. 321. 1 Keb. 796. Cro. Jac. 59, 581.

But as to judicial acts, or acts done by an infant in a court of record, and which he is allowed to avoid, the trial thereof must be by inspection; therefore if an infant levies a fine, he must reverse it by writ of error; and this must be brought during his minority, that the court may by inspection determine the age of the infant; but the judges, as by adjuncta, may in such cases inform themselves by witnesses, church books, &c. Co. Lit. 380. Moor 76. 2 Roll. Abr. 15. 2 Inf. 483. 2 Bulf. 320. 12 Co. 122.

If an infant brings a writ of error to reverse a fine for his non-age, and, after inspection and proof of infancy by witnesses, dies before the fine is reversed, his heir may reverse it; because the court having recorded the non-age of the conusor, ought to vacate his contract when he appeared to be under a disability at the time he entered into it. Co. Lit. 380. Moor 884. Keckwick's case.

An infant acknowledged a fine, and the conuzees omitting to have the fine ingrossed till he came of age, in order to prevent the infant from bringing a writ of error; yet the court upon view of the conuzance produced by the infant, and upon his prayer to be inspected, and his age examined, recorded his non-age, to give him the benefit of his writ of error, which he must otherwise lose, his non-age determining before the next term. Moor 189. Ed. vide Cro. Jac. 230. 1.

So if an infant suffer a common recovery by appearing in person, this must be reversed during his minority by inspection of judges.

But it is said, that if an infant suffers a recovery, in which he appears by attorney, he may reverse it after his full age, as it may be discovered whether he was within age when the recovery was suffered; because it may be tried per pais whether the warrant of attorney was made by him when he was an infant. 1 Sid. 321. 1 Lev. 142.

It is said, that in all cases where the party pleads that he was within age at B. and alledges a place, that there the trial may be well enough where it is alledged; where no place is alledged, there in personal actions where the writ is brought, and in real actions where the right of the land depends upon infancy, there the trial is to be where the land lies, and if not, where the action is brought. Skin. 10, 11. Cro. Eliz. 818. S. P.

IV. Of what offices and trusts an infant is capable.

As to what offices and trusts an infant is capable; he seems capable of such offices as do not concern the administration of justice, but only require skill and diligence; and there it seems he may either exercise himself when of the age of discretion, or they may be exercised by deputy, such as the offices of park-keeper, forester, gaoler, &c. Plow. 379, 381. 9 Co. 48, 97. See Offices.

But it is said, that an infant is not capable of the stewardship of a manor, or of the stewardship of the courts of a bishop; because by intendment of law he hath not sufficient knowledge, experience and judgment to use the office, and also because he cannot make a deputy. Co. Lit. 3. b. 1 Rol. Abr. 731. 2 Rol. Abr. 153. March 41, 43. Cro. Eliz. 636. Cro. Car. 556.

An infant cannot be an attorney, bailiff, factor or receiver. F. N. B. 118. 1 Rol. Abr. 117. Co. Lit. 172. Cro. Eliz. 637. An infant cannot exercise an office in a corporation. Rep. Temp. Hard. per Annaly, 8, 9.

If an infant, being master of a ship at St. Christopher's beyond sea, by contract with another, undertakes to carry certain goods from St. Christopher's to England, and there to deliver them; but does not afterwards deliver them according to agreement, but wastes and consumes them, he may be sued for the goods in the court of Admiralty, though he be an infant; for this suit is but in nature of a detinue, or trover and conversion at the Common law. 1 Rol. Abr. 530. Furnes and Smith, and a prohibition denied to the court of Admiralty.

If an infant keeps a common inn, an action on the case upon the custom of inns will not lie against him. 1 Rol. Abr. 2. Carth. 161. cited.

So if an infant draws a bill of exchange, yet he shall not be liable on the custom of merchants, but he may plead infancy in the same manner that he may to any other contract of his. Carth. 160. Williams v. Harrison. Adjudged on demurrer.

An infant cannot be a juror; and it is said by Hobart, that by the wisdom of the Common law a person under forty-two, could not be on a trial de etate probanda, because he then tried a matter which might have happened before he was twenty-one. Hob. 325.

An infant, or one under the age of twenty-one years, cannot be elected a member of the House of Commons; nor can any Lord of parliament sit there until he be of the full age of twenty-one years. 2 Inst. 47.

V. What things an infant is capable of doing for his own advantage, and of his acts as good, void, or voidable.

An infant is capable of inheriting, for the law presumes him capable of property; also an infant may purchase, because it is intended for his benefit, and the freehold is in him till he disagree thereto, because an agreement is presumed, it being for his benefit, and because the freehold cannot be in the grantor contrary to his own act, nor can be in abeyance, for then a stranger would not know against whom to demand his right; and if at his full age the infant agrees to the purchase, he cannot afterwards avoid it; but if he dies during his minority, his heirs may avoid it; for they shall not be bound by the contracts of a person who wanted capacity to contract. Co. Lit. 2, 8. 2 Inst. 203.

If an infant take a lease for years rendering rent; if he enter upon the land he shall be charged with an action during his minority, because the purchase is intended for his benefit; but he may waive the term, and not enter, and if more rent be reserved upon the lease than the land is worth, he may avoid it. 2 Bull. 69. If an infant make a lease for years, with remainder over, rendering rent, and at full age, accepts the rent of the tenant for years, this shall be an assent to him in remainder, so that he shall not oust him after. Plowd. 546.

If an infant be lord of a manor, he may grant copyholds notwithstanding his non-age; for these estates do not take their perfection from the interest or ability of the lord to grant, but from the custom of the manor, by which they have been demised, and are demisable time out of mind. 4 Co. 23. b. Co. Copyholder 79, 107. Noy 41. 8 Co. 65.

An infant may present to a church; and here it is said, that this must be done by himself, of whatsoever age he be, and cannot be done by his guardian, for the guardian can make no advantage thereof, consequently has nothing therein whereby he can give an account, therefore the infant himself shall present. Co. Lit. 17. b. 89. a. 29 Ed. 3. 5. 3 Inst. 156. An infant lessor in ejectment, must give security for costs; because the infant himself is not liable. Wilf. Rep. par. 1. p. 130.

Contracts for necessities.

Here we must observe, that, (strictly speaking,) all contracts made by infants, are either void or voidable, because a contract is the act of the understanding, which during their state of infancy they are presumed to want; yet civil societies have so far supplied that defect, and taken care of them, as to allow them to contract for their benefit and advantage, with power, in most cases, to recede from, and vacate it when it may prove prejudicial to them; but in this contract for necessities they are absolutely bound, and this likewise is in benignity to infants, for if they were not allowed to bind themselves for necessities, nobody would trust them, in which case they would be in worse circumstances, than persons of full age. 10 H. 6. 14. 18 Ed. 4. 2. 1 Rol. Abr. 729.

Therefore it is clearly agreed, that an infant may bind himself to pay for his necessary meat, drink, apparel, physick, and such other necessities, and likewise for his good teaching and instruction, whereby he may profit himself afterwards. Co. Lit. 172. a. Ec. With respect to schooling, &c. it must be in cases, where the credit was given, bonâ fide, to the infant. Vide infra.

As to necessities, &c.

It must appear that the things were actually necessary, and of reasonable prices, and suitable to the infant's degree and estate, which regularly must be left to the jury; but if the jury find that the things were necessities, and of reasonable price, it shall be presumed they had evidence for what they thus find; and they need not find particularly what the necessities were, nor of what price each thing was; also if the plaintiff declares for other things, as well as necessities, or alleges too high a price for those things that are necessary, the jury may consider of those things that were really necessities, and of their intrinsic value, and proportion their damages accordingly. Cro. Jac. 360. 2 Rol. Rep. 144. Poph. 51. Palm. 361. Gouls. 168. Godb. 219. 1 Leon. 14.

If an infant promises another, that if he will find him meat, drink and washing, and pay for his schooling, that he will pay 7 l. yearly; an action upon the case lies upon this promise; for learning is as necessary as other things, and though it is not mentioned what learning this was, yet it shall be intended what was fit for him, till it be shewn to the contrary on the other part; and though he to whom the promise was made does not instruct him, but pays another for it, the promise of re-payment thereof is good; and it appears that the learning, meat, drink and washing, could not be afforded for a less sum than 7 l. 1 Rol. Abr. 729. Palm. 528. 1 Jon. 182. S. C. Pickering v. Guning, adjudged on motion in arrest of judgment.

Assumpsit, for labour and medicines in curing the defendant of a distemper, &c. who pleaded infra etatem viginti & unius annorum; the plaintiff replied, it was for necessities generally; and upon a demurrer to this replication it was objected, that the plaintiff had not assigned in certain how, or in what manner, the medicines were necessary; but it was adjudged, that the replication in this general form was good. Carth. 110. Huggins and Wylman.

• If an infant be a mercer, and hath a shop in a town, and there buys and sells, and contracts to pay a certain sum to J. S. for wares sold to him by J. S. to re-sell, yet he is not chargeable upon this contract, for this trading is not immediately necessary ad vitum & vestitum; and if this were allowed, infants might be infinitely prejudiced, and buy and sell, and live by the loss. 1 Roll. Abr. 729. Cro. Jac. 494. 2 Roll. Rep. 45. S. C. adjudged between Hill and Wottingham.

• And as the contract of an infant for wares, for the necessary carrying on his trade, whereby he subsists, shall not bind him; so neither shall he be liable for money which he borrows to lay out for necessities; therefore the lender must, at his peril, lay it out for him, or see that it is laid out in necessities. 5 Mod. 368. Salk. 386-7.

As in debt upon a single bill, the defendant pleaded that he was within age; the plaintiff replied, that it was for necessities, viz. 10*l.* for cloaths, and 15*l.* money lent pro & erga his necessary support at the university; the defendant rejoined, that the money was lent him to spend at pleasure; oblique hoc, that it was lent him for necessities; and issue hereupon was found for the plaintiff, who had judgment in C. B. but was reversed in B. R. on a writ of error; for the issue only being, whether this money was lent the infant for necessities, not whether it was laid out in necessities, it cannot bind the infant which ever way it is found; for it might have been borrowed for necessities, and laid out in a tavern; and the law will not intrust the infant with application and laying of it out. 1 Salk. 386. Earl v. Peals. See Infra.

So if one lends money to an infant, who actually lays it out in necessities, yet this will not bind the infant, nor subject him to an action; for it is upon the lending that the contract must arise, and after that time there could be no contract raised to bind the infant, because after that he might waste the money, and the infant's applying it afterwards for necessities, will not by matter ex post facto, in-titile the plaintiff to an action. 1 Salk. 279.

Altho' an infant shall be liable for his necessities, yet if he enters into an obligation with a penalty for payment thereof, this shall not bind him; for the entering into a penalty can be of no advantage to the infant. Cro. El. 920. Moor 679. pl. 929. Co. Lit. 172. 1 Roll. Abr. 729. See vide infra.

It is also said, that an infant cannot either by parol contract, or a deed, bind himself, even for necessities, in a sum certain, and that should an infant promise to give an unreasonable price for necessities, that would not bind him; and that therefore it may be said, that the contract of an infant for necessities, quatenus a contract, does not bind him any more than his bond would; but only since an infant must live as well as a man, the law gives a reasonable price to those who furnish him with necessities. Cases in Law and Equity 85.

Yet it hath been adjudged, that if an infant contracts for necessities, and enters into a single bill for payment, that this shall bind him, and that an action of debt will lie on such obligation. 1 Lev. 86. Ruffel and Lee, adjudged. 1 Kab. 382, 416, 423. S. C. Co. Lit. 172. S. P.

So an infant may bind himself in an assumpsit for payment of necessities, and an action upon the case, lies against him upon the promise for this, but in nature of an action of debt; therefore where debt lies, an action on the case lies against him. 1 Roll. Abr. 729. Noy 85. Latch 157, and see Buff. 188. 1 Roll. Rep. 382.

Also it seems clear, that if an infant becomes indebted for necessities, and the party takes a bond from the infant, that this shall not drown the simple contract, because the bond has no force. Cro. Eliz. 920.

But it is agreed, that an infimus computasset will not lie against an infant, tho' it be for necessities; for he not having discretion, is not to be liable to false accounts. Co. Lit. 172. Lamb. 169. Noy 87.

If an infant comes to a stranger, who instructs him in learning, and boards him, there is an implied contract in law, that the party should be paid as much as his board and schooling are worth; but if the infant at the time of his going thither was under the age of discretion, or if he were placed there upon a special agreement with some of the child's friends, the party that boards him has no remedy against the infant, but must resort to them with whom he agreed for the infant's board, &c. Allen 94. Duncomb and Tickeridge.

Judicial acts, or acts done in a court of record.

As to judicial acts, and acts done by an infant in a court of record, they regularly bind the infant and his representatives, with the following savings and exceptions; as if an infant levies a fine, tho' the judges ought not to admit the acknowledgment of one under that disability; yet having once recorded his agreement as the judgment of the court, it shall for ever bind him and his representatives, unless he reverses it by writ of error, which must be brought by him during his minority, that the court by inspection may determine his age. Co. Lit. 380. Moor 76. 2 Roll. Abr. 15. 2 Inst. 483. 2 Bulf. 320. 12 Ca. 122. Yelv. 115. 3 Mod. 229.

So if an infant levies a fine, he is enabled by law to declare the uses thereof, and if he reverseth not the fine during his nonage, the declaration of uses will stand good for ever, for tho' that be a matter in pais, and all such acts an infant may avoid at any time after his full age, if he do not consent; yet being made in pursuance of the fine levied, which fine must stand good for ever, (unless reversed in the manner as has been mentioned,) so will the declaration of uses too. 2 Co. 58. a. 10 Co. 42. Moor 22. Dals. 47. 2 Leon. 159. Goulf. 13. 1 Jones 390. Winch 103.

If there be tenant for life, the remainder to an infant in fee, and they two join in a fine, the infant may bring a writ of error, and reverse the fine as to himself; but it shall stand good as to the tenant for life; for the disability of the infant shall not render the contract of the tenant for life, who was of full age, ineffectual. 1 Leon. 115, 317. 2 Sid. 55. 2 Jones 182.

If an infant brings a writ of error to reverse a fine for his nonage, and his nonage, after inspection, is recorded by the court, but before the fine reversed he levies another fine to another, the second fine shall hinder him from reversing the first; because the second having intirely barred him of any right to the land, must also deprive him of all remedies which would restore him to the land. 1 Roll. Abr. 788. See Moor 74.

As to recoveries suffered by infants, when these were improved into a common way of conveyance, it was thought reasonable that those, whom the law had judged incapable to act for their own interest, should not be bound by the judgment given in recoveries, tho' it was the solemn act of the court; for where the defendant gives way to the judgment, it is as much his voluntary act and conveyance, as if he had transferred the land by livery, or any other act in pais; therefore if an infant suffers a recovery, he may reverse it, as he may a fine, by writ of error, during his minority: And this was, formerly taken to be law, as well where the infant appeared by guardian, as by his attorney, or in person: But now the distinction turns upon this point, that if an infant suffers a recovery in person, it is erroneous, and he may reverse it by writ of error; but even in this case the writ of error must be brought during his minority, that his infancy may be tried by the inspection of the court; for at his full age, it becomes obligatory and unavoidable; but in cases of necessity the court has admitted the infant to appear by guardian, and to suffer a recovery, or come in as a vouchee; but this too, is seldom allowed by the court, unless upon emergences, when it tends to the improvement of the infant's affairs, or when lands of equal value have been settled on him, and when he has had the King's Privy Seal for that purpose; and those recoveries have been allowed and supported by the judges, and the infant could not set them aside; besides, if such recoveries be to the prejudice of the infant, he has his remedy for it against his guardian, and may reimburse himself out of his pocket to whom the law had committed the care of him. 1 *Roll. Partition by writ De partitione facienda binds infants, because by judgment in a court of justice, to which no partiality can be imputed. Co. Lit. 171. b.

If an infant acknowledge a recognizance or statute, it is only voidable; and the infant at his peril must avoid them by audita querela, as he must a fine or recovery by writ of error during his minority; for such conveyances or other acts of record become obligatory and unavoidable, if they be not set aside before the infant comes of age; the reason is, because these contracts being entered into under the inspection of the judge, (who is supposed to do right,) the infant cannot against them aver his disability, but must reverse them by a judgment of a Superior Court, who by inspection, has the same means to determine whether the inferior jurisdiction has done right, that first received the contract. Moor pl. 206. 2 Inst. 483, 673. Co. Lit. 380. Kelw. 10. Reg. 149. 10 Co. 43. a.

If an infant bargain and sell his land by deed indented and inrolled, yet he may plead non-age; for notwithstanding the statute 27 Hen. 8. cap. 16. makes the inrolment in a court of record necessary to complete the conveyance; yet the bargainee claims by the deed as at Common law, which was, and therefore is, still defeasible by non-age. 2 Inst. 673.

Acts in pais.

Infants are regularly allowed to rescind and break through all contracts in pais made during minority, except only for schooling and necessities, be they never so much to their advantage; and the reason hereof is, the indulgence the law has thought fit to give infants, who are supposed to want judgment and discretion in their contracts and transactions with others, and the care it takes of them in preventing their being imposed upon, or over-reached by persons of more years and experience. 39 Ed. 3. 20. b. 1 Rol. Abr. 729. Co. Lit. 172, 381.

And for the better security and protection of infants herein, the law has made some of their contracts absolutely void; i. e. all such in which there is no apparent benefit, or semblance of benefit, to the infant; but as to those from which the infant may receive benefit, and which were entered into with more solemnity, they are only voidable; that is, the law allows them when they come of age, and are capable of considering over again what they have done, either to ratify and affirm such contracts, or to break through and avoid them. Cro. Car. 502. 1 Jones 405. 3 Mod. 310.

Hence an infant may purchase, because it is intended for his benefit, and at his full age he may either agree, or disagree, to the same. Co. Lit. 2, 8. 2 Vern. 203.

Also the feoffment of an infant is not void, but only voidable, not only because he is allowed to contract for his benefit, but because that there ought to be some act of notoriety to restore the possession to him, equal to that which transferred it from him. Co. Lit. 380. Dyer 104. 2 Rol. Abr. 572. 4 Co. 125. a.

Therefore if an infant make a feoffment and livery in person, he shall have no assise, &c. but must avoid it by entry; for it is to be presumed in favour of such solemnity, that the assembly of the pais then present would have prevented it, if they had perceived his non-age, and therefore the feoffment shall continue till defeated by entry, which is an act of equal notoriety. 8 Co. 42. Bro. tit. Disseisin 63.

But if the infant had made a letter of attorney to deliver seisin, he might have an assise, &c. because the letter of attorney, (like all other acts or agreements made by an infant to his prejudice,) must be void; therefore whoever claims under it, or by virtue of its authority, must be a wrong-doer. 2 Rol. Abr. 2. Noy 130. Palm. 237.

Also as to the acts of infants being void or voidable, there is a diversity between an actual delivery of the thing contracted for, and a bare agreement to deliver it only; that the first is voidable, but the last absolutely void; as if an infant deliver a horse, or a sum of money, with his own hands, this is only voidable, and to be recovered back in an action of account. Perk. sect. 12; 19. 3 Rol. Abr. 730. 2 Rol. Rep. 408. Latch 10.

But if an infant agrees to give a horse, and does not deliver the horse with his hand, and the donee take the horse by force of the gift, the infant shall have an action of trespass; for the grant was merely void. Perk. sect. 12, 19. 1 Mod. 137.

In trespass quare vi & armis insultum fecit, & totum crinem capitis ipsius Annæ abscindit, the defendant as to all the trespass præter injuriam crinis pleads Not guilty, and as to that, pleads that the plaintiff was of the age of sixteen years, and for a certain sum of money licentiam: the defendant duas uncias crinis dictæ Annæ detondere & abscindere; and upon demurrer to this plea the court held, that the contract was absolutely void, and consequently the trespere unlawful, and gave judgment accordingly for the plaintiff. Mich. 26 Car. 2. Anna Seabrogham per Guardianum v. Stuartson. 3 Keb. 369. S. C.

And as an infant is not bound by his contract to deliver a thing; so if one deliver goods to an infant upon a contract, &c. knowing him to be an infant, he shall not be chargeable in trover and conversion, or any other action for them; for the infant is not capable of any contract, but for necessities; therefore such delivery is a gift to the infant: But if an infant without any contract wilfully takes away the goods of another, trover lies against him; also it is said, that if he take the goods under pretence that he is of full age, trover lies; because it is a wilful and fraudulent trespass. 1 Sid. 129. 1 Lev. 169. 1 Keb. 905, 913.

Also it seems that if an infant, being above the age of discretion, be guilty of any fraud in affirming himself to be of full age, or if by combination with his guardian, &c. he make any contract or agreement with an intent afterwards to elude it, by reason of his privilege of infancy, that a court of equity will decree it good against him according to the circumstances of the fraud; but in what cases in particular a court of equity will thus exert itself is not easy to determine. Vide 1 Vern. 132. 2 Vern. 224-5.

Also notwithstanding the disability of an infant to contract, by the 7 Ann. cap. 19. it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for any person under the age of twenty years, by the direction of the High court of Chancery, or the court of Exchequer, signified by an order made upon hearing all parties concerned, to convey and assure any lands, &c. mortgaged in such manner as shall by order be directed, to any other person; and such conveyance shall be good and effectual in law."

And, "That every such infant being only trustee or mortgagee as aforesaid, shall be compellable, by such order to make such conveyance."

How an infant is to bind himself by a contract to serve in the plantations, 4 Geo. 1. c. 11. sect. 5.

All gifts, grants, &c. of an infant, which do not take effect by delivery of his hand are void; and if made to take effect by delivery of his own hand, are voidable by himself, and his heirs, and those which shall have his estate. And privies in blood, (as the heir general or special,) may avoid a conveyance made by their ancestor during his infancy. But privies in estate, such as the donor of an estate tail where the tenant in tail dies without issue; or privies in law, as the lord by escheat where there is no heir, shall not avoid a conveyance made by an infant. If a man within age, seised in right of his wife, makes a feoffment and dies, his heir cannot enter and avoid it, because no right descends to him; for the baron, if he had lived, could have entered only in right of his wife. And no person shall take advantage of the infancy of his ancestor, but he who hath a right descending to him from that ancestor; tho' the heir may take the benefit of a condition, notwithstanding no right descended to him from his ancestors. 8 Rep. 42, 3, 4. and see 3 Rep. 35.

If husband and wife are both within age, and they by indenture join in a feoffment, and the husband dies, the wife wife may enter and avoid the deed, or have a dum fuit infra aetatem. 1 Inst. 337. Tho' if there be two jointenants within age, and one of them makes a feoffment in fee of the moiety during his infancy, and dies, the survivor cannot enter; but the heir of the feoffor may enter into the moiety, &c. 8 Rep. 43. If an infant exchanges lands with another, and the other enters, the infant may have assise. 18 Ed. 4. 2. And where an infant leases for years, he may affirm the lease, or bring trespass against the lessee for the occupation. 18 Ed. 4. Bro. Trespas 338. A lease made by an infant reserving rent is voidable; but if there be no rendering rent, it is absolutely void. Latch 199. If an infant make a lease paying rent, and after his coming of age he accepts the rent, the voidable lease is made good; and an infant's lease in ejectment is good. 2 Lill. Abr. 55. 3 Salk. 196. An infant cannot surrender a future interest, by taking a new lease; his surrender by deed and by acceptance of a second lease, are void, except there be an increase of the term; or a decrease of the rent; for where no benefit comes to him, his acts are merely void. Cro. Car. 502. If an infant surrenders a lease for years to him in reversion, this is void, and cannot be made good by any agreement at full age. Roll. Abr. 728.

An infant confessed judgment in an action of debt brought against him; and it was held, audita querela did not lie upon this judgment, though it would on a statute or recognizance; but the party ought to bring a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber, by virtue of the statute 27 Eliz. Moor 460. See 3 Salk. 196. 1 Inst. 233, 380. Moor 189. Where an infant may levy a fine, he may declare the uses of it also by deed: and the infant's declaration of uses shall be good and binding to the infant and his heirs, so long as the fine continues unreversed. Hob. 224. 2 Leon. 193. 2 Rep. 58. 10 Rep. 42. It was formerly held that an infant appearing by guardian, could not suffer a common recovery. 10 Rep. 42. Tho' it hath since been allowed in many cases, and by all the Judges, that an infant may suffer a common recovery by guardian, and he shall not avoid it; for by indentment he shall have recompence in value; and if it is not for the good of the infant, he may have recompence over against his guardian. 2 Danv. Abr. 772.

And infants are not bound by nonclaim,

&c. on fines levied by others, within five years, by the Stat. 13 Ed. 1. Nonclaim shall not bind an infant, nor any negligence, &c. be imputed to him; except in some particular cases, viz. in case of a fine where the time begins in the life of the ancestor; or of an appeal of death of his ancestor, where he brings not his appeal within a year and a day, &c. 1 Inst. 246, 380. Wood's Inst. 3. See ante.

An infant is much favoured by the law; therefore it gives him many privileges above others: if an infant make default in a real action, he shall not lose his land as another man shall do; one who is an infant shall not be amerced, nor find pledges like one of full age; and if he be bail, he may be discharged by audita querela, &c. 1 Inst. 272.

But an infant may be disseised of his lands: and a warranty that descendeth upon an infant, may bar him of his entry; so a remitter upon him; contra of a descent: and if an infant hath franchises or liberties, and do abuse, or disuse them, he shall forfeit them as a man of full age may. 1 Inst. 3, 133. 1 And. 311. Bro. 48.

A promise of a person when at full age, for consideration during infancy, shall be binding, and assumpsit lieth. 2 Lev. 144. 2 Leon. 215. A person gave a note, a few days after of age, for things had during his infancy; on extraordinary circumstances, equity set it aside: tho' 't is true, if an infant takes up goods, or borrows money, and after he comes to age, gives his note or promise for the money, that is good at law: but to prevent the ruin of infants, it may be convenient to give relief. Barnardist. 4, 6. If an infant delivers money with his own hand, it is voidable, and to be recovered by action of account. The infant sells goods to another; he may make the sale void, or have debt, &c. for the money. Hob. 77. 18 Ed. 4. 2. If a trespass be done to an infant, and he submits to an award, it is said the award shall not be binding to him. 2 Danv. 770. An infant is not bound by his consent not to bring a writ of error; for tho' the judgment binds him, yet it binds but as a judgment reversible. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annals, 104. Agreements, &c. made by an infant, although he be within a day of his full age, shall not bind him. Plowd. 364. but vide the next tit. Where an infant enters into bond, pretending to be of full age, though he may avoid it by pleading his infancy, yet he may be indicted for a cheat. Wood's Inst. 585. Infants when of Age. An infant has been adjudged of age the day before his birth-day, for the law will not make a fraction of a day; therefore where a person was born the third of September, and the second of September 21 years after, he made his will, it was held good; and that he was then of age to devise his lands. 1 *Ld. See the case of a witness who was of the Genton religion, being admitted an evidence in equity.

Infinity of Actions. The lord of the soil may have a special action against him who shall dig soil in the King's highway: but one subject may not have his action against another for common nufances; for if he might, then every man would have it, and so the actions would be infinite, &c. 2 *Co. Information for the King, (informatio pro Rege). We shall treat of this subject under the following heads, viz.

I. Of informations generally, and the antiquity of the practice.

II. In what cases an information will lie.

III. Of filing an information.

IV. How it is to be laid; the proceedings, and provisions by statute law, &c.

I. Of informations generally, and the antiquity of the practice.

An information is, in many respects, the same as what, for a common person, we call a declaration. It ought to be certain, that the party may perfectly know what he is to answer to, and the court what they are to give judgment on. Vide Flowd. 329.

It is not always exhibited directly by the King or his attorney, but sometimes by another, qui sequitur tam pro Domino Rege quam pro seipso, upon the breach of some penal law or statute, wherein a penalty is given to the party that will sue for the same, and may be either by action of debt or information. Cowell.

An information may be defined, an accusation or complaint exhibited against a person for some criminal offence, either immediately against the King, or against a private person, which from its enormity or dangerous tendency, the publick good requires should be retrained and punished, and differs principally from an indictment in this, that an indictment is an accusation found by the oath of twelve men, whereas an information is only the allegation of the officer who exhibits it. 3 New Abr. 164.

Informations are either at the suit of the King, or at the suit of the King and party, which is called an information qui tam, because the informer prosecutes tam pro Domino Rege quam pro seipso; but these informations will not lie on any statute, which prohibits a thing, as being an immediate offence against the publick good in general, under a certain penalty, unless the whole or part of such penalty be expressly given to him who will sue for it, because otherwise it goes to the King, and nothing can be demanded by the party. 2 Hawk. P. C. 265.

The King shall put no one to answer for a wrong done principally to another, without indictment or presentment; though of common right, informations, or actions in the nature thereof, may be brought for offences against statutes, whether mentioned or not in such statutes, where other methods of proceeding are not particularly appointed. Ibid. 260. And wherever a matter concerns the publick government, and no particular person is entitled to an action, there an information will lie. 1 Salk. 374. Vide 5 Geo. 1. c. 4. Wood's Inst. 630.

This difference between informations and indictments has made some men conceive, that this kind of proceeding was utterly unlawful, as being not only contrary to the original frame and nature of our laws, but also contrary to Magna Charta, and several other statutes, which require that no man shall be put to answer, &c. but upon indictment or presentment. 3 New Abr. 165. See Sir Francis Winnington's argument, 5 Mod. 456. and 1 Show. 106, &c.

But tho', as my Lord Hale observes, in all criminal cases the most regular and safe way, and most consonant to the statute of Magna Charta, &c. is by presentment or indictment of twelve sworn men, yet he admits that for crimes inferior to capital ones, the proceedings may be by information; and this from the long and frequent practice, is now said to be established as part of the law of the land; therefore at this day the following kinds of informations may be exhibited, wherever the nature of the offence deserves such a proceeding. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 8.

1st, For an offence principally, and more immediately against the King, an information may be exhibited in the name of the Attorney-General, and such information may be filed without any application or leave of the court, and the party shall be obliged to answer the same; also the statute, 4 & 5 H. 3. (which requires a recognizance for payment of costs from persons exhibiting and prosecuting informations;) does not extend to informations filed by the King's Attorney General, and it is said, that the court will not quash such information on motion, but will oblige the party to demur or plead thereto. 2 Hawk. P. C. 260.

C. 260. and see Carth. 465-6. that no such information can be brought on a penal statute. 1 Salk. 372.

2dly, On application, and leave of the court, grounded on motion and affidavit of some misdemeanor, which if true, doth from its evil tendency merit such prosecution, the court allows of the filing of an information in the name of the Master of the Crown-office; and of such kind of informations there are numberless precedents in the Crown-office. 2 Hawk. P. C. 261. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. c. 20. But B. R. (generally speaking) will not grant an information, where there is a civil suit depending, except the offence appears very clearly. Vide Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annaly, 241.

3dly, Where by many penal statutes the prosecution upon them is by the acts themselves limited to be by bill, plaint, information or indictment, there, without doubt, the prosecution may be by information as well as by any other of these methods; also of common right such an information, or an action in the nature thereof, may be brought for offences against statutes, whether they be mentioned by such statutes or not, unless other methods of proceeding be particularly appointed, by which all others are impliedly excluded. But for this see Actions qui tam, or Actions on penal Statutes.

4thly, Informations in nature of a quo warranto may be, and frequently are exhibited, with leave of the court, for usurping privileges, franchises, &c. which in some respects is a civil suit, as it is used as a proper means to try a right, tho' it punishes the misdemeanor, such as the usurpation, &c. Yet the court of B. R. will not grant an information, on private usurpation of franchises, but the proper remedy is to apply to the Attorney General. Vide Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annaly, 261.

II. In what cases an information will lie.

Here we shall lay down what hath been collected by Serjeant Hawkins, and is, as he says, every day's practice, agreeable to numberless precedents, viz. either in the name of the King's Attorney General, or of the Master of the Crown-office, to exhibit informations for batteries, cheats, seducing a young man or woman from their parents, in order to marry them against their consent, or for any other wicked purpose, spiriting away a child to the plantations, rescuing persons from legal arrests, perjuries, and subornations thereof, forgeries, conspiracies, (whether to accuse an innocent person, or to impoverish a certain set of lawful traders, &c. or to procure a verdict to be unlawfully given, by causing persons bribed for that purpose to be sworn on a rales,) and other such like crimes, done principally to a private person, as well as for offences done principally to the King; as for libels, seditious words, riots, false news, extortions, nuisances, (as in not repairing highways, or obstructing them, or stopping a common river, &c.) contempts, as in departing from the parliament without the King's licence, disobeying his writs, uttering money without his authority, escaping from legal imprisonment on a prosecution for contempt, neglecting to keep watch and ward, abusing the King's commission to the apprehension of the subject, making a return to a mandamus of matters known to be false, and in general any other offences against the publick good, or against the first and obvious principles of justice and common honesty. 3 New Abr. 166. 2 Hawk. P. C. 260. and several authorities there cited. Words reflecting on the publick government are punishable at the suit of the King by information. Carth. 14, 15. The King v. Darby.

An information was exhibited by the Attorney General for conspiring to destroy the King's revenue of the excise; that the defendants and others ignot, &c. illicite, factiose, & seditiose consultaverunt & conspiraverunt ad destruend' & depauperand' fermarios excise predict', &c. and many other facts were laid in the information tending to destroying the excisemen, depauperating them, destroying the King's revenue of excise, pulling down the excise-house, raising a tumult amongst the poor people, &c. But the jury that were to try the issue were unwilling to find this matter, tho' expressly proved, fearing it might be construed no less than treason, and so would only find that such and such of the defendants illicite, factiose, & seditiose se assablaerunt, & illicite, factiose & seditiose consultaverunt, & conspiraverunt ad depauperand' fermarios Dom' Regis excise predict', prout predict' attornat' gen' Dom' Regis, &c. & quoad totam aliam materiam in informatione contentam, find them Not guilty, and find 7. 8. Not guilty of the whole. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that here is no offence found. The court unanimously concurred, that judgment ought to be given for the King, though as to the offence found there was some variety of opinion: Twisden held, that vi & armis was not necessary, and that they were found guilty of an unlawful assembly, and in that the Ld. Ch. Just. concurred; as also that the intention of defrauding and depriving the King of his said rent is implicitly found within the modo & forma prout, &c. for so shall the machinantes, &c. be applied. Twisden and Keeling concurred, that for a conspiracy alone, without any prosecution, information lay; and they all agreed, that the King's revenue being concerned did highly aggravate the offence; 2 Hen. 4. 7. and 8 Hen. 5. 6. were cited, that for maintenance of that a monk should be able to contract, and probi homines de Dale should be a corporation. Lord Chief Justice cited Old Magna Charta, where there is a statute against such as should undervalue lands in the King's hands. So judgment was given for the King. 1 Lev. 125. 1 Sid. 174. 1 Keb. 650. Hil. 15 & 16 Car. 2. in B. R. Rex. v. Starling, and other brewers in London.

A coroner having sworn the jury to inquire of the death of one supposed a fole de se, and finding the evidence very strong, took off some of the inquest; and tho' it was said, that this coroner was a weak silly man, yet Holt said there was no reason why an information should not be against him. 12 Mod. 493. Pasch. 13 W. 3. *The King v. An information was granted against one for counterfeiting or pretending himself to be bewitched by a poor woman who was thereupon indicted for witchcraft, and acquitted, and the whole discovered to be a cheat. 12 Mod. 556. Mich. 13 W. 3. B. R. Hathaway's case.

Information against an attorney for examining persons on oath, upon an arbitration, without putting the same in writing. So, against a justice of peace, for committing a man, for not paying one shilling as a fee, for discharging his warrant. Wilf. Rep. par. 1. fo. 7.

So, for the following libellous words in a letter, viz. I am sure you will not be persuaded from doing justice, by any little arts of your town-clerk, whose consummate malice and wickedness against me and my family, will make him do any thing, be it ever so vile." Ib. 22.

So, against an overseer of the poor, for procuring a soldier, to marry a poor woman, chargeable to the parish. Ib. 41.

So, against one for practising as an attorney, while he was under-sheriff. Ib. 93.

So, for exercising the office of Master, of the Cooper's Company. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annaly, 106.

So, against a justice of peace, for convicting a person unheard, and sending him to the house of correction. Ib. 124.

So, against judges of an inferior court, for misbehaviour. Ib. 135.

So, to try the truth of the return of a mandamus. Ib. 184.

An information was filed against a gaoler for suffering one taken upon an exen. capiend. to go at large. 12 Mod. 434. Mich. 13 W. 3. Ann'. An information was filed against certain persons for that they, as enemies, &c. to the government, hired a boat during a war with France, in order to go thither, intending to aid and assist the King's enemies, though they did not actually go thither, but only intended it. Skin. 637. Pasch. 8 W. 3. *B. Information for a scandalous narrative licensed by the defendant, Speaker of the house of Commons, being Dangerfield's Narrative, reflecting on a nobleman, (the E. of Peterborough); the defendant pleaded, that he did it by order of the House of Commons, and demanded judgment if this court will take consufance of it. The Attorney General demurred, and afterwards the defendant pleaded the common plea, quod non vult contendere cum Domino Rege, and was fined 10,000*l.* Comb. 18. Pasch. 2 Jac. 2. B. R. *The King v. Leave was given to file an information against the defendant, by whom the plaintiff's wife was inveigled away, and who procured merchants and tradesmen to sell goods to her, in order to saddle the husband with the debt, he agreeing with the sellers to deliver the goods back again. 12 Mod. 454. Pasch. 13 W. 3. Pocock v. Thornicroft.

Leave was moved for to file an information against the defendant for these words spoke of a justice of peace, viz. He is an old rogue for sending his warrant for me. Holt Ch. J. said, that he deserved to be bound to his good behaviour, tho' it be not proper for that justice to do it, but rather to get one of his brothers to do it for him; and leave was denied; the court desiring them to go by way of indictment if they would. 12 Mod. 514. Pasch. 13 W. 3. The King v. Lee.

The court was moved for an information against a churchwarden, for refusing to collect money on a brief for fire, according to the act, 4 Ann. c. 14. and the case of informations granted for not burying in woollen was cited. Sed per curiam; That is of a publick nature, and wherein the revenue is concerned: and besides, in this case there is a penalty given, and a method for obtaining it. So no rule was made. Stran. 1130. East. 13 Geo. 2. Rex v. Ford.

The court was moved for an information against one Gresvener, for refusing to serve the office of one of the sheriffs of London.—It appearing that he was a Protestant Dissenter, the court said, it was a doubtful question, and a matter of very great consequence; and they would not interpose to have that matter tried in a criminal way, when the city had another, and that a civil way of obliging persons to serve that office. Vide Will. Rep. par. 1. 18.

N. B. The doctrine is now settled, in the case of the Chamberlain of London and Allen Evans, Esq; on error, in the House of Lords, upon the opinion of the judges, eleven to one, that a dissenter is not liable to serve.

An information may be brought for offences and misdemeanors by the Common law; as for batteries, conspiracies, seducing persons, nuisances, contempts, libelling, seditious words, abusing the King's commission to the oppression of the subject, &c. And in many cases by statute, wherein the offender is liable to a fine, or other penalty. Finch 340. Show. 109. For words spoke of a deceased King, which advance pernicious doctrine and evil tenets, and have an influence on the present government, &c. an information lies, on which the offender may be fined, and also corporally punished. 2 Ld. Raym. 879. If the marshal of B. R. misdemeanors himself in his office, he who is prejudiced by it may prefer an information against him in that court, where he shall be fined and ordered to make satisfaction. Hill. 23 Car. B. R.

If a person exhibits his information only for vexation, the defendant may bring information against the informer, upon the Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 5. 2 Bulst. 18.

III. Of filing an information.

* It seems to be an established practice, not to admit the filing of an information, (except those exhibited in the name of his Majesty's Attorney General,) without first making a rule on the persons complained of, to show cause to the contrary; which rule is never granted but upon motion made in open court, and grounded upon affidavit of some misdemeanor, which, if true, doth either for its enormity or dangerous tendency, or other such like circumstances, seem proper for the most publick prosecution; and if the person, on whom such rule is made, having been personally served with it, do not at the day given him for that purpose, give the court good satisfaction by affidavit, that there is no reasonable cause for the prosecution, the court generally grants the information; and sometimes, upon special circumstances, will grant it against those who cannot be personally served with such rule; as if they purposely absent themselves, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 262.

But if he shew good cause to the contrary, as that he has been indicted for the same cause, and acquitted, or that the intent is to try a civil right, which has not been yet determined, or that the complaint is trifling, or vexatious, &c. or where the motion is for an information in the nature of a quo warranto, if he can shew that his right hath been already determined on a mandamus, or that it hath been acquiesced in many years, or that it depends upon the right of his voters, which hath not been tried, or that it doth not concern the publick, but is wholly of a private nature, the court will not grant the information without some particular circumstances, the judgment whereof lies in discretion. Ibid.

IV. How it is to be laid, the proceedings, and provisions by Statute law, &c.

Regularly, the same certainty that is required in an indictment, is required in an information; but it has been held not to be necessary, to repeat the words dat cur' hic intelligi & informari in the beginning of every distinct clause, if the want of them may be supplied by a natural, and easy construction. See tit. Indictment. 1 Salk. 375. Raym. 34. 2 Haw. P. C. 261.

In an information against Roberts the ferryman over the river Mercy, which parts Anglesey from Carnarvonshire in Wales, it was laid generally, viz. That this was an ancient ferry time out of mind, and that 1*d.* was the usual rate for the passage of a man and horie, 7*d.* for 20 cattle, 2*d.* for 20 sheep, &c. that Roberts being the common ferryman, between the 7th Septembris Anno 2. and the day of exhibiting this information, unjustly, oppressively, & deceptively cepit & extorsit de diversis legibus & subditis Domini Regis ignotis to the Attorney General, passing that way, diversas demeriorum summas exceden' antiquam ratam & pretium pro passagio & transportatione suis & averiorum suorum videlicet, pro passagio & transportatione cujuslibet personæ cum equo suo 2 d. & pro quibuslibet 20 catallis 2 s. & sic secund' ratam predict' pro majori vel minori numero averiorum, &c. The defendant was found guilty, and it was moved in arrest of judgment, that the information was too general and uncertain, because it did not allege that any particular person, or any certain number of cattle, were ferried over within the time laid in the information; neither did it mention any particular person from whom the extorted rates were taken, which it ought to do, that the single offence might certainly appear to the court; after great deliberation, the whole court was of that opinion; and per Holt Chief Justice, In every such information a single offence ought to be laid and ascertained, because every extortion from every particular person is a separate and distinct offence; therefore they ought not to be accumulated under a general charge, as in this case, because each offence requires a separate and distinct punishment, according to the quantity of the offence; and it is not possible for the court to proportion the fine or other punishment, unless it is singly and certainly laid. Carth. 226. The King v. Roberts.

An information upon a penal statute must be sued in one of the superior courts, and cannot be brought in any inferior court, because the King's Attorney cannot be there to acknowledge or deny, as he can in a superior court. Cro. Jac. 538. All informations on penal statutes, brought by an informer, where a sum certain is given to the prosecutor, must be brought in the proper county where the offence was committed; and within a year after the same; but a party grieved, who is not a common informer, is not obliged to bring his information in the proper county, but may inform in what county he pleases. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 3. Cro. Eliz. 645. And the King may exhibit an information in two, or three years, and be good; tho' it will

will be naught in an informar. Cro. Jac. 366. Where an information is given by statute, to be prosecuted at the assizes, &c. the informar, on filing his information, must make oath before a judge, that the offence laid in the information was not committed in any other county than that mentioned in the information; and that he believes the offence was committed within a year next before the filing of the information. 21 Jac. 1. c. 4. And when an information is ordered to be filed, upon an affidavit made, the court will not suffer the prosecutor to put any more or other matter into the information than what only is in his affidavit. Mich. 9 W. 3. B. R. It has been resolved, that the Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 4. restrains the jurisdiction of B. R. in actions of debt by common informers, and that they cannot bring debt upon the statute in that court, unless the cause of action arise in the county where the King's Bench sits; but must in other cases prosecute by information before justices of assize, &c. as the statute directs. 1 Salk. 373. Offences created since the statute 21 Jac. 1. cap. 4. are not within that statute, to be prosecuted in the county where the fact was done; so that informations on subsequent penal statutes are not restrained thereby. Ibid. By the Stat. 18 Elin. cap. 5. Informers are to exhibit their suits in proper person, by way of information, or original action; they are not to compound with the defendant without the consent of the court, on pain of 10 l. penalty, pillory, &c. And if they discontinue, or are nonsuit, the court shall immediately assign costs to the defendant; but this statute, and the 21 Jac. 1. c. 4. do not extend to informations of officers, nor on the statutes of maintenance, champerty, concerning concealments of customs, &c. and is extended not to parties grieved, and those to whom any forfeiture is given in certain. Ibid.

An informar upon a popular statute shall never have costs, if not given by statute; but the party grieved in action on the statute shall, where a certain penalty is given. 2 Hawk. 275. Informations by the Attorney General remain as they were at Common law, notwithstanding the statute 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. And when the Attorney General exhibits an information, he does it ex officio; but when the Clerk of the Crown does it, it is generally by order of court. 5 Mod. 464. Where a penalty is divided by statute between the King and the informar, if the King prefers his information before the informar, he shall have the whole penalty; but if the informar prefers his information first, the King cannot hinder him from his proportion. 1 Lill. Abr. 65. If an informar dies, the Attorney General may proceed in the information for the King: nonsuit of an informar, is no bar against the King; and if the King's Attorney enter a noli prosequi, it is not any bar against the informar. Cro. El. 383. 1 Leon. 119. If two informations are had on the same day, they mutually abate one another; because there is no priority to attach the right of the suit in one informar, more than in the other. Hob. 138.

If an information contain several offences against a statute, and be well laid as to some of them, but defective as to the rest, the informar may have judgment for such as are well laid. Ibid. 366. After a plea pleaded to an information for any crime, the defendant by favour of the court may appear by attorney; also the court may dispense with the personal appearance before plea pleaded, except in such cases where a personal appearance is required by some statute: and it is the same of indictments for crimes under the degree of capital. Ibid. 273.

If a defendant plead nil debet to an information qui tam, &c. it is safest to say he owes nothing to the informar, nor the King, which is an answer to the whole. On breach of a statute alleged from a matter in point, the defendant may plead that he owes nothing, or Not guilty, &c. And if there be more than one defendant, they ought to plead severally, and not jointly, Not guilty; but if it be alleged from a matter of record, the record not being taken by the country, but by itself, such plea is not good. 2 Hawk. 276. Brn. Issue 23.

A replication to an information on a special plea in the courts at Westminster, is to be made by the Attorney General, and before justices of Assize, by the Clerk of the Assize: tho' the replication to a general issue in an information qui tam in the courts at Westminster, may be made in the name of the Attorney General only; and in actions qui tam, most of the precedents are, that the replication is to be made by the plaintiff. 2 Hawk. 277.

A demurrer may lie to an information qui tam, without the Attorney General. Ibid. Informations are not qualified for insufficiency, like indictments; but the defendant must demur to them. Pas. 1650. 2 Lill. 59. Fines entered in court by judgment on an information, cannot afterwards be qualified or mitigated. Cro. Car. 251. The Stat. 9 Ann. c. 29. makes the proceedings upon informations in the nature of a quo warranto more speedy and effectual. Vide the Statute, &c.

By the 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 18. The Clerk of the Crown in the court of King's Bench shall not, without express order to be given by the court in open court, exhibit, receive, or file any information for any of the causes stated, or issue out any process thereupon, before he shall have taken or shall have delivered to him a recognizance from the person or persons procuring such information to be exhibited, with the place of his, her, or their abode, with or profession, to be entered; to the person or persons against whom such information is exhibited, in the penalty of twenty pounds, that he, she, or they will effectually prosecute, &c. and if the prosecutor of such information shall not, at his own costs, within one year after issue joined therein, procure the same to be tried, or if upon such trial a verdict pass for the defendant, or in case the informar procure a noli prosequi to be entered, then in any of the said cases, the court of King's Bench is authorized to award the defendant costs, unless the judge, before whom such information shall be tried, shall at the trial in open court certify upon record, that there was reasonable cause for exhibiting such information; and in case the informar shall not, within three months after the costs taxed, and demand made thereof, pay to the defendant the costs, then the defendant shall have the benefit of the recognizance.

Provided, That nothing in that act shall extend or be construed to extend to any other information than such as shall be exhibited in the name of their Majesties coroner, or attorney in the court of King's Bench for the time being, commonly called the Master of the Crown-office.

In the construction hereof it hath been holden:

1. That if process be issued on such information before such recognizance is given as the statute directs, the same may be set aside and discharged on motion. 2 Hawk. P. C. 263.

2. That this statute extends to all informations, except those exhibited in the name of his Majesty's Attorney General, so that an information in nature of a quo warranto, tho' a proper remedy to try a right, in respect of which it may not in strictness come within the words prosequi, &c. yet being also intended to punish a misdemeanour, and also as the proceedings therein may be as vexatious as in any other, the same is within the purview of the statute, which being a remedial law, shall receive as large a construction as the words will bear. Carth. 505. The King v. The Town of Hertford. 1 Salk. 376; 6 G. 2. adjudged.

3. That no costs can be had on this statute on an acquittal by a trial at bar, not only because the clause that gives costs, unless the judge certify a reasonable cause, seems only to have a view to debt et ass. ppet. but also because a cause, which is of such consequence as to be thought proper for a trial at bar, cannot well be thought within the purview of the statute, which was chiefly designed against trifling and vexatious prosecutions. 2 Hawk. P. C. 263.

4. That if there be several defendants, and some of them acquitted, and others convicted, none of them can have costs. 1 Salk. 194.

5. That whenever a defendant's case is such as authorizes the court to award him costs, he has a right to them in debito justitiae; for it seems a general rule, that quibus jura sunt impositum est statuta to do a matter of justice, they ought to do it of course. 2 Chan. Cases 291. 2 Hawk. P. C. 263.

As to informations in the nature of a quo warranto, against persons usurping offices. See the Stat. 9 Ann. c. 20.

An information was moved against a clergyman for perjury at his admission to a living, upon an affidavit that the presentation was simoniacal. But the court refused to grant it, till he had been convicted of the simony Stran. 70.

Defendant came up on a habeas corpus from the Savoy, to which it was returned, that for several years last past the African Company have been a body corporate, and retained the defendant in their service, and sent him to the Savoy to be provided with necessaries, till he should embark for Africa, & hæc est causa, &c. The court dismissed the defendant for the insufficiency of the return, and ordered an information against the Colonel who listed the men, and the keepers of the Savoy. Stran. 404. See 14 Vin. Abr. tit. Information; and for informations on penal statutes, see Admon. Vide 3 New Abr. 164, &c.

Informatus non sum, or more properly, non sum informatus, is a formal answer made of course by an attorney, who is authorised by his client to let judgment pass in that form against him. 'Tis commonly used in warrants of attorney, given for the express purpose of defeating judgments.

Informers, (informator) is a person who informs against, or prosecutes in any of the King's courts, those who offend against any law, or penal statute; — no man may be an informer who is disabled by any misdemeanor. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 5.

Infirmitatum, is one part of the digests of the Civil law; according to Benedict, Abbot of the monastery of Peterborough, in the reign of K. Hen. 3.

Infugare, Signifies to put to flight. Leg. Canuti. c. 32.

Insula, Was anciently the garment of a priest, like that which we now call a cassock; sometimes it is taken for a coif.

Inge. This syllable, in the names of places, denotes meadow or pasture; and in the North, meadows are called the inges from the Sax. ing, i. e. pratium.

Ingenium, Is an instrument used in war, arte & ingenio confectum; from whence 'tis said we derive the word engine.

Ingenuitas, Used for liberty given to a servant by manumission. Leg. H. 1. c. 89.

Ingenuitas Regni, Ingenii, liberi & legales homines; freeholders, and the commonalty of the kingdom; sometimes this title was given to the barons and lords of the King's council. Eadmer. Hist. Nov. fol. 70.

Ingress, Egress, and Regress, Words in leases of land, to signify a free entry into, going forth of, and returning from some part of the lands let; as to get in a crop of corn, &c. after the term expired.

Ingressus, Is a writ of entry, whereby a man seeks entry into lands or tenements; and lies in many cases, having as many different forms: this writ is also called precipe quod reddat, because these are formal words inserted in all writs of entry. See Entry.

Ingressus. The relief which the heir at full age paid to the head lord, for entering upon the fee, or lands fallen by the death or forfeiture of the tenant, &c. was sometimes called ingressus. Blount.

Ingrossator magni rotuli. See Clerk of the Pipe.

In gross. Advowson in gross, Villain in gross, &c. see Gross.

Ingrosser, (ingrossator) Is one who buys and sells any thing by wholesale; and whoever shall get into his hands by buying, contract or promise, (other than by demise, grant or lease of lands,) any corn growing, or other corn or grain; butter, cheese, fish, or other dead victuals whatsoever, within the realm of England, to the intent to sell the same again, shall be reputed an unlawful ingrosser, by Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 14. Such victual only as is necessary for the food of man, is within the purview of the statute; therefore apples and fruits are not within the meaning of it. It has been holden, that hops are not within the statute. 3 Inst. 195. H. P. C. 152. Cro. Car. 231.

The buying of corn to make starch of it, and then to sell it, is not within the intent of the statute; because it is not bought, to be sold again, in the same nature it was bought, but to be first altered by a trade or art; by the like reason, the buying corn to make meal, and then to sell it, is said not to be within the act; and buying of barley, with intent to make it into malt, and after that to sell it, had no need of the exception made for it in the statute. 1 Howk. P. C. 237. Foreign corn and victuals, except fish and salt, are exempted, and not within the penalty of the statute 13 Eliz. cap. 25. And licensed badgers are excepted; as are likewise fishmongers, butchers, poulterers, &c. buying any thing in their own faculties, otherwise than by foretelling, and selling the same again at reasonable prices by retail. 1 Howk. 240.

Any merchant, whether a subject or foreigner, bringing victuals, or other merchandise into this kingdom, may sell the same in gross; but he who buys them of him cannot do so, because by such means the price will be enhanced, for the more hands any merchandise passeth thro', the dearer it must grow, as every one will make a profit: and if this were allowable, a rich man might ingross into his hands a whole commodity, and then sell it at what price he should think fit; which is of such bad consequence, that the bare ingrossing of a whole commodity, with intent to sell it at an unreasonable price, is an offence indictable at Common law, whether any part thereof be sold by the ingrosser, or not. 3 Inst. 196. Cro. Car. 231, 232.

The punishment of this offence by statute, is forfeiture of the goods for the first offence, and two months imprisonment; double value and six months imprisonment for the second offence; and loss of all goods, and imprisonment at the King's pleasure, &c. for the third offence. See Forefaller.

Ingrosser of Deeds, Is a clerk who writes records or instruments of law, in skins of parchment.

Ingrossing of a fine. The making of the indentures by the Chirographer, for delivery of them to the party to whom the fine is levied. F. N. B. 147.

Inhabitant, Is a dweller or householder in any place; as inhabitants in a vill, are the householders in the vill. 2 Inst. 702.

The word (inhabitants) includes tenants in fee-simple, tenant for life, years, by elegit, &c. tenant at will, and he who has no interest but only his habitation and dwelling. 6 Rep. 60. a. Hill. 4 Jac. C. B. Gateward's case. He who hath a house in his hands in a town, may be said to be an inhabitant. Tirrel. J. Carth. 119. Mich. 18 Car. 2. C. B. Inhabitants have not capacity to take an inheritance, as in 15 Ed. 4. to have common. 12 Rep. 120. Pasch. 12 Jac. in Dugannon's case. See Gateward's case, 5 Co. 60.

Inheritance, (hereditas) is a perpetuity in lands or tenements, to a man and his heirs: and the word inheritance is not only intended where a man hath lands or tenements by descent of hereditas; but also every fee-simple, or fee-tail, which a person hath by purchase, may be said to be an inheritance, because his heirs may inherit it. Lit. sect. 9. And one may have inheritance by creation; as in case of the King's grant of patridge, by letters patent, &c.

Inheritances are Corporal, or Incorporal.

Corporal inheritances relate to houses, lands, &c. which may be touched or handled; and incorporal inheritances are rights issuing out of, annexed to, or exercised with, corporal inheritances, as advowsons, tithes, annuities, offices, commons, franchises, privileges, services, &c. 1 Inst. 9; 49.

There is also several inheritance, which is where two, or more, hold lands severally; if two men have lands given to them and the heirs of their two bodies, these have joint estate during their lives; but their heirs have several inheritances. Kitch. 155. Without blood none none can inherit; therefore he who hath the whole and entire blood, shall have an inheritance before him who hath but part of the blood of his ancestor. 3 Rep. 41. The law of inheritance prefers the first child before all others; the male before the female; and of males the first born, &c. And as to inheritance, if a man purchases land in fee, and dies without issue, those of the blood of the father's side shall inherit, if there be any; and for want of such, the land shall go to the heirs of the mother's side. But if it come to the son by descent from the father, the heirs of the mother shall not inherit it. Plowd. 132. Lit. 4. 15. Goods and chattels cannot be turned into an inheritance. 3 Inst. 19, 126. See Descent and Fee Estate.

Inhibition, (inhibitio) Is a writ to forbid a judge from further proceeding in a cause depending before him; being in nature of a prohibition. 9 Ed. 2. c. 1. 24 Hen. 3. c. 12. 15 Car. 2. c. 9. F. N. B. 39. An inhibition is most commonly issuing out of a higher Court Christian, to an inferior, upon an appeal: Inhibitions are likewise on the visitations of archbishops and bishops, &c. This inhibition is either hominis or juris; it is Ne existantiam facias, vel aliquam jurisdictionem ecclesiasticam vel contenti- onem voluntariam habeas: Thus when the archbishop visits, he inhibits the bishop; and when a bishop visits, he inhibits the archdeacon; this is to prevent confusion, and continues till the last parish is visited. Now after such inhibition by an archbishop, if a lapse happens, the archbishop cannot institute, because his power is suspended; but the archbishop is to do it, &c. 2 Inst. 601. Pafch. 13 Car. B. R. 3 Salk. 201.

Inboc, or Inboke, (from In, within, and boka a corner or nook) Signifies any corner or part of a common field ploughed up and sowed with oats, &c. and sometimes fenced in with a dry hedge, in that year wherein the rest of the same field lies fallow and common. It is called in the North of England an intock, and in Guernsey a berbin; and no such inboke is now made without the joint consent of all the commoners, who in most places have their share by lot in the benefit of it, except in some manors, where the lord has a special privilege of so doing. Kinney's Paroch. Antiq. 297, &c. and his Glossary.

Infeittate, Tenant by the curtesy. As soon as a child is born, the father begins to have a permanent interest in the land: and the child could not be in ward of the lord of the fee, during the life of his father: Who by the birth, became one of the pari curtis, and was called, "Tenant by the curtesy initate." And this estate being once vested in him by birth of the child, is not liable to be determined by the subsequent death or coming of age of the infant. Black. Com. 2 P. 127.

Injunction, (inhibitio) Is a kind of prohibition granted in divers cases; it is generally grounded upon an interlocutory order or decree out of the court of Chancery or Exchequer, to stay proceedings in courts at law; and sometimes it is issued to the Spiritual courts. West. Symb. lib. 25. It is likewise sometimes used to give possession to a plaintiff; for want of the defendant's appearance, and may be granted by the Chancery, or Exchequer, to quiet possession of lands; also where a privileged person of the Chancery is sued elsewhere; and to stay waste, &c. Injunction lies. If a defendant by his answer in Chancery, swears a certain sum of money is due to him, the court will often not grant an injunction, unless the money be brought into court.

Of obtaining an injunction.

An injunction, is obtained by order, either upon matter confessed, or appearing of record, or by deed, writing, or other evidence shewn in court, from whence there is a probability that the party ought to be discharged in equity. Sometimes it is granted before answer, when it is only until answer, and further order, &c.

Of dissolving an injunction.

A delay of proceedings for a considerable time, is good cause for setting aside and dissolving an injunction to stay proceedings at law; but an injunction may be revived on cause shewn, and sometimes the court will revive it, tho' dissolved, where the plaintiff's case is hard, or equity is evidently on his side. Pract. Sol. 124, 125.

Of shewing cause why an injunction should issue.

If an injunction be for staying of waste, there must be affidavit made of waste committed in houses, lands, &c. belonging to the complainant: And if it be to stay suits in other courts, it is granted on suggesting some matter, by reason of which the complainant is not able to make his defence in the other court, as for want of witnesses, &c. or, for that he is prosecuted at law, for what in equity, he ought not to pay; or that the other court acts erroneously, denies him some just advantage, and that if the rigour of the law takes place, it is against equity and good conscience, &c. Ibid.

Consequence of an injunction granted.

If an attorney proceeds at law, after he is served with an injunction to stay proceedings, on affidavit made thereof, interrogatories are to be exhibited against him, to which he must answer on oath; and if it appears that he was duly served with the injunction, and hath proceeded afterwards contrary thereto, the court of Chancery will commit the attorney to the Fleet for the contempt. 2 Litt. Abr. 64. But if an injunction be granted by the court of Chancery in a criminal matter, the court of B. R. may break it, and protect any that proceed in contempt of it. Mitch. Ann. Mod. Caf. 16.

Of the proceeding to judgment with leave, and of the form of an injunction.

If a cause at law be at issue, the injunction may give leave to go to trial, and stay execution, &c. The writ of injunction is directed to the party proceeding, et omni- bus singulis Consiliariis, Advocatis, Solicitis, suis quibuscunque, &c. and concludes, injungetur precipimus quod ab omni ulteriori prosecutione quacunque ad communem legem de, pro vel concernent, aliquam materiam in quorundam contentis, &c. desistat, & quilibet vestrum desistat, subpana, &c.

Vide more on this subject. 3 New Abr. 172, &c. And 14 Fin. Abr. tit. Injunction.

Injury, (Injuria) Is a wrong or damage to a man's person or goods. The law punisheth injuries; and so abhors them, that it grants writs of anticipation for their prevention, in cases of combinations and confederacy, Stat. Comp. 93. But the law will suffer a private injury rather than a publick evil; and the act of God, or of the law, doth injury to none. 4 Rep. 124. Co. Rep. 148.

Inlagare, To restore to the benefit of the law. — Edgarus pater, vinum ad eum a Scotia, & Rex eum inlagavit & omnes homines suos. Annal. Waverl. sub anno 1074.

Inlagation, (Inlagatio, from the Sax. In lagiam, i. e. Inlagare) Signifies a restoration of one outlawed to the protection of the law, and benefit of a subject. Braet. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 14. Leg. Canoni. par. 1. c. 2.

Inlagb, (Inlagatus, vel homo sub lege) Is he who is of some frankpledge, and not outlawed. It seems to be the contrary to Utlagb. Braet. tract. 2. lib. 3. c. 11.

Inland, Is said to be terra dominicalis, pars manerii dominica, terra interior vel inclusa; for that which was let to tenants was called Outland. In an ancient will there are these words; To Wulfe I give the inland or demeans, and to Elsey the outland or tenancy. Testam. Britterici. This word was in great use among the Saxons, and often occurs in Domesday.

Inland bills. See Bills of exchange.

Inland Trade, A trade wholly managed at home in the country. Merch. Dis.

We conceive this the proper definition, and that the foreign is with propriety called Commerce, at least that which we carry on with other states.

Inland, Inlandale, Demeane or inland, to which was opposed outland, land tenanted or outlawed. Cowell. Inleasb.

such things as are infra hospitium, the words of the writ being eorum bona & catalla infra hospitium illa existentia, &c. But if the inn-keeper put the guest's horse to graze, without orders, and the horse is stolen, he shall make it good. 3 Rep. 34. The inn-keeper shall not be charged, unless there shall be some default in him or his servant; for if he that comes with the guest, or who desires to lodge with him, steal his goods, the host is not chargeable: Tho' if an inn-keeper appoint one to lie with another, he shall answer for him. 2 Shep. Abr. 334. Altho' the guest deliver not his goods to the inn-keeper to keep, &c. if they be stolen, he shall be charged: Not where the hostler requires his guest to put them in such a chamber under lock and key; if he suffers them to be in an outward court, &c. ibid.

Of tipping, &c.

Any person found tipping in an inn, is adjudged, within the statutes, against drunkenness. 21 Jac. 1. c. 7. 1 Car. 1. c. 14. And inn-keepers or alehouse-keepers, permitting tipping in their houses, are liable to the penalty of 10 s. &c. by statute 1 Jac. 1. c. 5. 1 Car. 1. c. 14. See Action on the Case and Guest. Also 3 New Abr. and 14 Vin. Abr. tit. Inns and Inn-keepers.

Inns of Court, (Hospitia Curie) Are so called, because the students therein, do not only study the law to enable them to practice in the Courts in Westminster; but also pursue such other studies, as may render them better qualified to serve the King in his court. Fortescue, c. 49. Of these (says Sir Edward Coke) there are four well known viz. The Inner Temple, Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn; which with the two Serjeants' Inns, and eight Inns of Chancery, viz. Clifford's Inn, Symonds' Inn, Clement's Inn, Lyon's Inn, Furnival's Inn, Staple's Inn, Bernard's Inn, and Thavie's Inn, (to which is since added New Inn) make the most famous university for profession of the law, or of any one human science in the world. Co. Litt. Out Inns of Court, or societies of the law, which are famed for their production of learned men, are governed by masters, principals, benchers, stewards, and other proper officers; and the chief of them have chapels for divine service, and all of them publick halls for exercises, readings and arguments, which the students are obliged to perform and attend for a competent number of years, before admitted to speak at the bar, &c. These societies or colleges, nevertheless are no corporation, nor have any judicial power over their members, but have certain orders among themselves, which by consent have the force of laws; for light offences, persons are only excommunicated, or put out of Commons; for greater, they lose their chambers, and are expelled; and when expelled out of one society, shall never be received by any of the others. All the lesser Inns of Chancery, are mostly inhabited by attornies, solicitors, and clerks, and belong to some or other of the principal Inns of Court, who have been used to send yearly some of their barristers, to read to them. Fortescue.

Innuendo, (from innuo, to nod or beckon with the head to one) Is a word used in declarations, and law pleadings, to ascertain a person or thing which was named before; as to say he (innuendo the plaintiff) did so and so, when there was mention before of another person. 4 Rep. 17. An innuendo is in effect no more than a præditi, and cannot make that certain, which was uncertain before; and the law will not allow words to be enlarged by an innuendo, so as to support an action of the case for speaking of them. Hob. 2, 6, 45. 5 Mod. 345. An innuendo may not enlarge the sense of words, nor make a supply, or alter the case where the words are defective. Hutt. Rep. 44. In slander, both the person and scandalous words ought to be certain, and not want an innuendo to make them out: If a plaintiff declares that the defendant said these words, Thou art a thief and stole a mare, &c. (innuendo the plaintiff) without an averment that the words were spoken ex animo querenti, this is not good; because it doth not certainly appear of whom they were spoken, and the innuendo doth not help it. Pag. 11 Car. B. R. 1 Denp. Abr. 158. Also if one say of another, he hath sworn himself, (innuendo before justices of assize, &c.)

this innuendo shall not make the words actionable. 1 Daw. 157. A man shall not be punished for perjury, by the help of an innuendo. 5 Mod. 344. And an innuendo will not make an action for a libel good; if the matter precedent imports not scandal, &c. to the damage of the party. Mich. 5 Ann. Where action lies without any innuendo, an innuendo shall be repugnant and void. 1 Daw. 158.

Insuperatio, Is one of the legal excuses to exempt a man from appearing in court: Causæ quæ ad excusationem sufficiunt, &c. hoc est, vel infirmitatis, vel domini necessitatis, vel contramandationis, vel regis implacitationis, vel inoperationis rasis, &c. on the days in which all pleadings are to cease, or in diebus non juridicis. Leg. H. 1. c. 61.

Insuperatus, Was anciently taken for one who died intestate; it is mentioned in Matt. Westm. 1246.

Inpeny and Outpeny, Money paid by the custom of some manors, on the alienation of tenants, &c. In peny and Outpeny consuetudo talis est in villa de East Radham, de manibus terris quæ infra burgagium tinentur, viz. Quod ipse, qui vendiderit vel dederit dictam tenuram alixi dabit pro exitu suo de eadem tenura annu denarium, et simile dabit pro ingressu alterius, et si prædicti denarii à refo fuerint, ballivus domini distringet pro eisden denariis in eadem tenura. Regist. Prior. de Cokeford, p. 25.

Inquest, Adherents or accomplices. — Sciatis quod receptum in gratiam nostram Gilbertum Marschallam, et alios qui fuerunt imprisii Richardi Marschalli. — Glanf. 18 H. 3, in Brady Hist. Engl. Append. p. 180.

Inquest, (inquisitio) Is an inquisition of jurors, in causes civil and criminal, on proof made of the fact on either side, when it is referred to their trial, being impeached by the sheriff for that purpose; and as they bring in their verdict, judgment passeth. Stannf. P. C. lib. 3. c. 12. There is an inquest of office, as well on an issue as the mise of the party, &c. as in cases of appeals of robbery, the fresh suit to entitle restitution of goods, it to be enquired of by inquest of office, which inquest is chiefly for the satisfaction of the conscience of the judges. 2 Haw. P. C. 169. Whether a criminal be a lunatick, or not, shall be tried by an inquest of office, returned by the sheriff of the county; and if it be found by the jury that he only feigns himself lunatick, and he refuses to plead, he shall be dealt with as one standing mute. H. P. C. 226. 1 And. 107. Where a person stands mute without making any answer, the court may take an inquest of office, by the oath of any twelve persons present, if he do so out of malice, &c. This signifies from a perverse or obstinate disposition. But after the issue is joined, when the jury are in court, if there be any need for such inquiry, it shall be made by them, and not by an inquest of office. 2 Haw. P. C. 327. If a person attainted of felony escape, and being retaken, denies he is the same man, inquest is to be made of it by a jury before he is executed. Ibid. 463. By Magna Charta, nothing is to be taken for inquest of life or member. 9 H. 3. c. 26.

Inquestendo. An authority given in general to some person, or persons, to inquire into something for the King's advantage. Reg. 72.

Inquisition. A manner of proceeding by way of search or examination, and used in the King's behalf in temporal causes and process, in which sense it is founded with office. Stannf. Prærog. 51. This inquisition is upon an outlawry found; in cases of treason and felony committed; upon a felto de se, &c. to entitle the King to forfeitures of lands and goods: And there is no such nicety required in an inquisition as in pleading; because an inquisition is only to inform the court how process shall issue for the King, whose title accrues by the attainer, and not by the inquisition; yet in the cases of the King and a common person, inquisitions have been held void for uncertainty. Lanc. 39. 2 Nels. Abr. 1008. It is said, there are two sorts of inquisitions, one to inform the King, the other to vest an interest in him; the one need not be certain, but the other must; and where an inquisition finds some path well, and nothing as to others, it may be helped by indici inquirendum. 2 Salk. 460. There is a judicial writ ad inquirendum, to inquire by a jury into any thing touching a cause depending in court; and inquisition sition is had upon extents of land, writs of elegit, where judgment is had by default, and damages and costs are recovered, &c. Finch 484. 2 Lill. Abr. 65.

Inquisition, Ex officio mero, Is one way of proceeding in Ecclesiastical Courts. Wood's Inst. 596. And formerly the oath ex officio was a sort of inquisition.

Inquisitors, (inquisitores) Are sheriffs, coroners super visum corporis, or the like, who have power to inquire in certain cases; and by the statute of Westm. 1. Inquirors or inquisitors are included under the name of Ministri. 2 Inst. 211.

Inrollment, (irrotulatio) Is the registering or entering in the rolls of the Chancery, King's Bench, Common Pleas or Exchequer, or by the clerk of the peace in the records of the quarter-sessions, of any lawful act; as a statute or recognizance acknowledged, a deed of bargain and sale of lands, &c. An inrollment of a deed, may be either by the Common law, or according to the statute: And inrollment of deeds ought to be made in parchment, and recorded in court, for perpetuity's sake. Trin. 23 Car. Pasch. 24 Car. 1. B. R. But the inrolling a deed doth not make it a record, tho' it thereby becomes a deed recorded; for there is a difference between matter of record, and a thing recorded to be kept in memory; a record being the entry in parchment of judicial matters controverted in a court of record, and whereof the court takes notice; whereas an inrollment of a deed is a private act of the parties concerned, of which the court takes no cognizance at the time of doing it, altho' the court gives way to it. Mich. 21 Car. 1. 2 Lill. Abr. 69. Every deed before it is inrolled, is to be acknowledged to be the deed of the party before a master of the Court of Chancery, or a judge of the court, wherein inrolled; which is the officer's warrant for inrolling of the same: And the inrollment of a deed, if it be acknowledged by the grantor, will be good proof of the deed itself upon a trial. Ibid. A deed may be inrolled without the examination of the party himself; for it is sufficient if oath is made of the execution. If two are parties, and the deed is acknowledged by one, the other is bound by it: And if a man lives in New York, &c. and would pass land in England, a nominal person may be joined with him in the deed who may acknowledge it here, and it will be binding. 1 Salk. 389. If the party dies before it is inrolled, it may be inrolled afterwards; And inrollments of deeds operate by virtue of the statute of inrollments; but if livery and seisin, &c. be had before the inrolling, it prevents the operation of the inrollment, and the party shall be in by that, as the more worthy ceremony to pass estates. 1 Leys 5. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1010. Altho' inrollment, or matter of record, shall not be tried per pais, yet the time when the inrollment of a deed was made, shall. 2 Lill. 68. See Bargain and Sale.

Inrollment, Is ordained in divers cases by Statute; Of bargains and sales by 27 H. 8. c. 16. Deeds in corporations, &c. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 22. Insidiatores viarum, Are way-layers; which words are not to be put in indictments, appeals, &c. by statute H. 4. c. 2. And before this statute, clergy might be denied felons charged generally as insidiatores viarum, &c. See 23 Car. 2. c. 1.

Insignia, Ensigns or arms. See Arms and Generality.

Institutum, Evil advice or counsel. — Multaque Regis insilia adversus Anglos dederunt. Sim. Dunelm. Ann. 1003. Insiliarius is an evil counsellor: Filius Regis cum suis consiliariis, & insiliariis, &c.

Institutum computassent, Is a writ or action of account, which lies not for things certain but only for things uncertain. Brake. Acco. 81. Also, in assumpsit, a count is often added to the declaration, called an Institutum computassent, &c. Setting forth an account stated, wherein defendant was found indebted to the plaintiff in so much, as a Consideration for the defendant's promise to pay the sum found in arrears.

Institutum tenete, Is one species of the writ of formedon, brought against a stranger by a coparcener on the possession of the ancestor, &c. See Formedon.

Insinuation, (insinuatio) Is a creeping into a man's mind or favour covertly; mentioned in the stat. 21 Hen. 8. cap. 5. Insinuation of a will is among the Civilians, the first production of it; or leaving it in the hands of the regisler, in order to its probate.

Insolvent, Till of late the Chancery would not put out an insolvent trustee; for that he was intrusted by the donor; per Byres J. Comb. 185. Mich. 3 W. & M. B. R. in case of Hill v. Mills. An insolvent person made executor cannot be put out by the ordinary; for he is intrusted by the testator. Comb. 185. in case of Hill v. Mills. Carth. 457. King v. Rayns. But Chancery granted an injunction against him, not to intermeddle with the assets, any further than to satisfy the legacy given to himself; for in equity he is but a trustee for the other legatees (infants), and where a trustee is insolvent, the court of Chancery will compel him to give security before he shall enter upon the trust. Carth. 458. Mich. 10 W. 3. *B. Inspection. See Age, Infancy, Trial.

Trial by inspection or examination, is, when for the greater expedition of a cause, in some point or issue being either the principal question, or arising collaterally out of it, but being evidently the object of sense, the judges of the court, upon the testimony of their own senses, shall decide the point in dispute. See Black. Com. 3 V. 331, 332.

Inspectimus, Is a word used in letters patens giving name to them, being the same with exemplification, and called inspectimus, because it begins Rex omnibus, &c. Inspectimus irrotulamentum quarund. Literar. Patent, &c.

Installment, A settlement, establishing, or sure placing in; as installment into dignities, &c. 20 Car. 2. c. 2.

In Ecclesiastical promotions, where the freehold passes to the person promoted, corporal possession is required, to vest the property completely in the new proprietor, who, according to the distinction of the Canonists, acquires the Jus ad rem, or inchoate and imperfect right, by nomination and institution; but not the jus in re, or complete and full right, unless by corporal possession. Therefore in Dignities possession is given by Installment; in Rectories and Vicarages by Induction, without which no Temporal rights accrue to the minister, tho' every Ecclesiastical power is vested in him by Institution. See Black. Com. 2 V. 312.

Instant, (Lat. instant, instantor) Is defined by the Logicians to be, Unum indivisibile in tempore, quod non est tempus, ne pars temporis, ad quod tamen partes temporis copulantur; and tho' it cannot be actually divided, yet in indentment of law it may, and be applied to several purposes: He who lays violent hands upon himself commits no felony till he is dead, and when dead he is not in being so as to be termed a felon; but he is so adjudged in law eo instante, at the very instant of this fact done! And there are many other like cases where the instant time that is not dividable in nature, in the consideration of the mind is divided. Flouid. Hales v. Petit, fol. 258. b.

258. b. And vide Co. Lit. 185. b. And Vin. Abr. tit. Instant, A. pl. 2.

An instant is not to be considered in law, as in logic, as a point of time, and no parcel of time; but in our law things which are to be done in an instant, have in consideration of law a priority of time in them. Vide Co. Lit. and Flow. as cited before. And in several cases, a difference is allowed in our law in an instant, as per mortem & post mortem, &c. Arg. Show. 415. in case of The King v. Dr. Birch and the Bishop of London.

Instanter, (Lat.) Instantly or presently. Law Lat. Dict.

A trial instante where a prisoner between Attainder and Execution, pleads that he is not the same that was attainted. In such case a jury is to be impanelled to try this collateral issue, viz. the identity of this person, and in such collateral issue, the trial shall be instante. See Black. Com. 4 V. 389. Instaurum, Is used in ancient deeds for a stock of cattle; and we read of staurum and instauramentum, properly young beasts, store or breed. Mon. Angl. Tom. 1. pag. 548. Instaurum was commonly taken for the whole stock upon a farm, as cattle, waggons, ploughs, and all other implements of husbandry. Pleta, lib. 2. cap. 72. And instaurum ecclesie is applied to the books, vestments, and all other utensils belonging to a church. Synod. Exet. Ann. 1287.

Instirpare, To plant or establish — Non sturum est gentem externam & turbidam instirpare. Brompt. 935.

Institution, (Institutio) Is when the bishop lays to a clerk, who is presented to a church living, Instituto te rectorem talis ecclesie, cum cura animarum, & accipe curam tuam & meam: Or it is a faculty made by the ordinary, whereby a parson is approved to be inducted to a rectory or parsonage. If the bishop upon examination finds the clerk presented capable of the benefice, he admits and institutes him; and institution may be granted either by the bishop under his Episcopal seal; or it may be done by the bishop's vicar general, chancellor or commissary; and if granted by the vicar general, or any other substitute, their acts are taken to be the acts of the bishop: Also the instrument or letters testimonial of institution may be granted by the bishop, tho' he is not in his diocese; to which some witnesses should subscribe their names. 1 Inst. 344. Clergym. Law 109. The bishop by institution transfers the cure of souls to the clerk; and if he refuseth to grant institution, the party may have his remedy in the Court of Audience of the archbishop, by duplex querela, &c. for institution is properly cognisable in the Ecclesiastical court: Where institution is granted, and suspected to be void for want of title in the patron, &c. a superinstitution hath been sometimes granted to another, to try the title of the present incumbent by ejectment. 2 Roll. Abr. 220. 4 Rep. 79.

Taking a reward for institution incurs a forfeiture of double value of one year's profit of the benefice, and makes the living void. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6. On institution the clerk hath a right to enter on the parsonage house and glebe, and take the tithes; but he cannot grant, let, or do any act to charge them, till he is inducted into the living: He is complete parson as to the spirituality, by institution; but not as to the temporality, &c. By the institution he is only admitted ad officium, to pray and preach; and is not entitled ad beneficium, until formal induction. Plowd. 528. Vide Installment. The church is full by institution against all common persons, so that if another person be afterwards inducted, it is void, and he hath but a mere possession; but a church is not full against the King till induction. 2 Inst. 358. 1 Roll. Rep. 151. When a bishop hath given institution to a clerk, he issues his mandate for induction; and if the archbishop should inhibit the archdeacon to induct the clerk thus instituted, he may do it notwithstanding. The first beginning of institutions to benefices, was in a national synod held at Westminster, Ann. 1124. For patrons did originally fill all churches by collation and livery; till this power was taken from them by canons. Selden's Hist. of Tithes, cap.

Insuper, Is used by auditors in their accounts in the Ex. chequer; as when so much is charged upon a person as due on his account, they say so much remains insuper to such an accountant. 21 Jac. 1. r. 2.

Insurante or Assurance, Signifies a security given, in consideration of a sum of money paid in hand of so much per cent. to an assurer or insurer, to indemnify the insured from such losses as shall be specified in the policy, or instrument of assurance, subscribed by the insurer or insurers for that purpose. *Dict. We shall here consider,

I. The origin of insurance, and the nature and effect of policies, &c.

It is conceived by Santonius, that Claudius Cesar was the first who brought in this custom of assurance; by which the danger and adventure of voyages is divided, repaired and borne by many persons, who for a certain sum, by the Spaniards called premium, assure ships or goods, or both, or a proportion, according to the policy. Molloy, b. 2. c. 7. sect. 1. Malynt's Lex Mercatoria, ed. 1686. p. 104.

Mr. Savary, in his Dictionnaire de Commerce, tit. Assurance, thinks this custom was first introduced by the Jews in the year 1182, but whoever was the first contriver, or original inventor of this useful branch of business, it has been many ages practised in this kingdom, and is supposed to have been introduced here by some Italians from Lombardy, who at the same time came to settle at Antwerp, and among us: And this being prior to the building of the Royal Exchange, they used to meet in a place where Lombard Street now is, at a house they had called the Pawn House or Lombard, for transacting business; and as they were then the sole negotiators in insurance, the policies made by others in after-times had a clause inserted, that those latter ones should have as much force and effect, as those formerly made in Lombard Street. Lex Mercatoria Rediviva 261.

Assurances are of various sorts, some being to places certain, others general. Those that are made to places certain, are commonly upon goods laden, or to be laden abroad outward, and until the same adventure shall be landed at such a port; or upon goods laden, or to be laden homeward in such a ship, till the adventure shall likewise be landed; or else upon goods out and in, with liberty to touch at all ports mentioned in the policy.

So likewise on ships that go trading voyages, as round to Cadix; and that it shall be lawful, after the ship's delivery there, to take in at the same port another cargo, and with that proceed to the West-Indies or other ports, and back again to Cadix, and from thence to London; this policy being general and dangerous, seldom procures subscriptions, or at least very chargeable ones.

As goods and merchandize are commonly insured, so likewise are the ship's tackle and furniture; but in regard there seldom happens a voyage but somewhat is missing or lost, the premium commonly runs higher than for merchandize.

Assurances may be made on goods sent by land, so likewise on hoys and the like, and may be made on the heads of men; as if a man is going for the Streights, and perhaps is in some fear that he may be taken by the Moor or Turkish pirates, and so made a slave, for the redemption of whom a ransom must be paid, he may advance a premium accordingly upon a policy of assurance; and if there be a caption, the assurer must answer the ransom that is secured to be paid on the policy. Molloy, b. 2. c. 7. sect. 4. cites Mich. 29 Car. 2. B. R. Lisle v. Sedgwick.

The policies are now so large, that almost all these curious questions that former ages, and the Civilians according to the law marine, nay and the Common lawyers too, have controverted, are now out of date. Scarcely any misfortune that can happen, or provision to be made, but the same is provided for in the policies that are now used; for they insure against heaven and earth, fires of weather, storms, enemies, pirates, rovers, &c. or whatsoever detriment shall happen or come to the thing insured, Gr. Molloy, b. 2. c. 7. § 7. When a ship hath been long missing, and no advice can be had where she is, the premium in time of war will run very high; sometimes 30 or 40 per cent. or more, but when these words are inserted in the insurance, lost or not lost; in such case, if it happens at the time the subscription is made, that the ship is cast away, the insurers must answer: But if the party that caused the insurance to be made, saw the ship wrecked, or had certain intelligence of it, such subscription will not be obligatory; so likewise if the insured having a rotten ship, shall insure upon the same more than she is worth, and afterwards going out of the port she is sunk or wrecked, this will be adjudged fraudulent, and not oblige insurers to answer. Mish. 26 Car. 2. B. R. And wilfully casting away, or making holes in the bottom of a ship, &c. with design to prejudice any insurers, merchants, &c. is made felony by stat. 1 Ann. St. 2. c. 9. § 4 Geo. 1. c. 12. and 12 Geo. 1. c. 29. Subscriptions for insurances are generally for certain sums; as 100 l. or 500 l. &c. at the premium current; and if a man insures goods to the value of 5000 l. and he hath but 2000 l. remitted, now he having insured a real adventure, if a loss happens, by the law marine, all the insurers are compellable to answer pro rata: Tho' this is more by the custom of merchants than by law; and by some opinions, only the first subscribers, who underwrit so much as the real adventure amounted to, are to be made liable, and the rest to have their pro rata deducted, and be discharged. Gr. Intrad. Jar. Hall. 212. If a merchant freights out wool, &c. which occasions a forfeiture of ship and lading; or if he lades contraband goods knowingly, and afterwards insures the same, and they are seized by the King's officers; the insurers are not liable to bear the loss: But if goods insured are not contraband at the time of the lading and insurance, and after become such, if they are then seized, the insurers are answerable. 12 Car. 2. 32. And if goods and merchandise be lawfully insured, and afterwards the ship becomes disabled, by reason of which, with the consent of the supercargo or merchant, they are re-laden into another vessel; and that vessel proves the ship of an enemy, by reason of which, on her arrival, she is subject to seizure; in this case it is said the insurers are liable, for this is no accident within the intention of the policy of insurances, which mentions dangers of seas, enemies, &c.

A ship is insured for a voyage, or cruise of three months, and is taken by the enemy within that time, but before she is carried infra presidia hostis is re-taken by an Englishman, and is now a living ship, this is a total loss. v. Wilf. Rip. par. 1. fol. 191.

Yet where goods are insured in a ship bound to any foreign port, and in the voyage she happens to be leaky or receive other damage, and another vessel is freighted for the preservation of the goods; and then the second vessel is lost at sea, it is said the insurers are discharged without a special clause to make them liable. Lex Mercat. or Merch. Compan. 93. Sed qd. If a ship be insured from the port of London to any foreign place, and before the ship breaks ground she happens to take fire, and is consumed, the insurers are not obliged to answer, unless the words of the insurance are As and from the port of London; for the adventure did not commence till the ship was gone from thence: Tho' if the ship had broken ground, and afterwards been driven by storm back to the port of London, and there had taken fire, the insurers must answer. Rat. Scaccar. 15 Car. 2. Goods are stolen or imbealied on ship-board, the master, and not the insurers are liable: And when insurers are to answer, and it happens that some part only of the effects insured are lost, as in the case of ejections in a storm, or other such accidents; then the insurers make an average of it, and each man pays so much pro rata, is proportion of the sum for which he subscribed. When advice is received of the loss of the ship or goods, application is to be made to the insurers, and the vouchers to be produced; with which if they are satisfied, they will pay the money; but if they have reasonable ground to scruple it, the insured must wait a convenient time, till the insurers can obtain a more satisfactory advice; or if nothing can be heard of the ship in any reasonable time, the insurers are obliged to pay the money: Tho' if the ship afterwards arrive in safety, the money is to be returned them by the insured. Merc. Compan. 91, 96, 97. A merchant having insured the greatest part of the adventures of a ship; if advice is received of a loss, but with hope of recovery, whereby such merchant would have the assistance of the insurers; he has a privilege to make a renunciation of the lading to the insurers, and to come in himself in the nature of an insurer, for so much as shall appear he hath borne the adventure of, beyond his part of the value insured. N. B. The party insured, must have property in the thing insured, at the time of insurance and loss. v. Wilf. Rip. par. 1. fol. 10.

The 6 Geo. 1. c. 18. empowers his Majesty to grant two charters for insurances of ships and merchandise, &c. and to incorporate the adventurers, in consideration of a large sum of money advanced; and all other corporations for insurance, and their policies, are declared void. By 11 Geo. 1. c. 30. Policies of insurance shall be made out and stamped in three days after ships are insured, on pain of 100 l. and promissory notes for insurance shall be void, and nothing recovered thereon. Where any person undertakes the insuring of wools to be transported, or agrees to pay money for such insurance, he is liable to forfeit 500 l. but one may be discharged of this penalty, and have likewise the whole forfeiture, on discovering, and convicting the other guilty party, in six months. Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 21. By the stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 26. no insurance shall be made on money to be lent on bottomree, or Responsoria Bonds on foreign ships or goods bound to, or from the East Indies, on penalty of forfeiting treble the sum insured or lent. This prohibition not to extend to the ships or goods of the subjects of such sovereigns who traded there before the 7th of October 1748.

By the stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. No assurance shall be made by any person on any ship belonging to his Majesty or his subjects, (except privateers, and by the owners of them) or on any goods laden on board such ship, interest or no interest, or without further proof of interest than the policy, or by way of gaining or wagering, or without benefit of salvage to the insurer. And every such assurance shall be void. Re-assurances shall not be made except the insurer becomes insolvent, and then but to the value before assured, and to be expressed in the policy to be re-assurances. The plaintiff in any action upon a policy of assurance, shall within fifteen days after request, declare what sums he hath assured in the whole, or borrowed at Responsoria or bottomree for the voyage. Any person sued on a policy of assurance may bring the money into court, and if the plaintiff shall refuse to accept it, and the jury shall not assess more damages than the money brought into court, the plaintiff shall pay costs. See Bartons.

II. Of Baratry and deviation.

Baratry is when the master of a ship, or the mariners cheat the owners or insurers, whether by running away with the ship, sinking her, deserting her, or imbealilling the cargo. Dia. Tr. and Com. 219.

Baratry of the mariners is a disease so epidemic on shipboard, that it is very rare for a master, to prevent it. However the law does in such cases impute offences and faults committed by them to the negligence of the master; and were it otherwise, the merchant would be in a very dangerous condition. The reasons why he ought to be responsible are, that the mariners are of his own choosing, and under his government, and know no other superior on shipboard but himself; and if they are faulty, he may correct and punish them, and justify the same by law; and if the fact is apparently proved against them, may reimburse himself out of their wages. Molloy, b. 1.

b. 1. c. 3. f. 13. King v. Bell 533. Regist. 11 Jan. in B. R. Horn v. Smith.

Therefore, in all cases whereforever the merchant loads aboard any goods or merchandize, if they be lost, imbeziled, or any other way damaged, he must be responsible for them; for the very loading them aboard makes him liable, and that as well by the Common law as the law maritime. Malley, b. 1. c. 3. f. 14. vites i. Nov. 190, 298. 1 Mod. 85. 2 Lev. 69.

Nay, if his mariners go with the ship-board to the quay or wharf to fetch goods on shipboard, if once they have taken charge of them, the master becomes immediately responsible, if they steal, lose, damage, or imbezel them. Malley, b. 1. c. 3. f. 15.

Where a ship was insured against the baretry of the master, &c. in an action brought thereupon, the jury found that the ship was lost by the fraud and negligence of the master: The court held, that if the master ran away with the ship, or imbezel the goods, the merchant may have an action against him; for it is reasonable that merchants who hazard their stocks in foreign traffick, should secure themselves in what manner they think proper, against baretry of the master and all other frauds; and this must be intended fraud in the master; not a bare neglect: and they all agreed that fraud is baretry, tho' not named in the covenant; but negligence might not. 1 Mod. 230, 231.

Baretry imports fraud (De Fraus Glossar. verbo Barataria fraud, delus) and he who commits a fraud may properly be said to be guilty of a neglect of his duty. Baretry of a master is not to be confined to the master's running away with the ship; and the general words of the policy ought to be construed to extend to losses of the like nature as those mentioned before. Losses arising from the fraud of the master, are of the same nature as if he had run away with the ship, supposing baretry to be confined to that which it is not, because it imports any fraud. Ld. Raym. 1349. Knight v. Cambridge. Stra. 581. S. C. Vide the case of Simpson v. Brown. 2 Stra. 1173. where the deviation of the master, being for the benefit of his owners, and not for his own, was construed not to the baretry, in an action on a policy brought by a person who had put goods on board to be carried to Marshfield.

An intention to deviate is not sufficient to discharge the underwriter. Foster v. Wilson. 2 Stra. 1249.

The excuse of necessity is always allowed. Ellen v. Bridges. 2 Stra. 1264.

A voyage ought to be performed according to usage. 2 Salk. 443.

If after a policy of insurance a damage happens, and afterwards in the same voyage a deviation, yet the assured shall recover for what happened before the deviation; for the policy is discharged from the time of the deviation only. Vid. Sower 129. Kemp and Andrews. 2 Salk. 444.

III. Of warranty to depart with convoy.

Where the captain does every thing in his power, it is a departing with convoy; and these agreements are never confined to precise words; as in the case of departing with convoy from London, where the place of rendezvous is specified; a loss in going thither is within the policy. So that the plaintiff recovered. Stra. 1250. 19 Geo. 2. Fisher v. Lewis. See infra.

A ship is to be considered as under insurance to a place of general rendezvous, according to the interpretation of the words warranted to depart with convoy. Salk. 443, 445. And if the parties mean to vary the insurance from what is commonly understood, they should particularize her departure with convoy from the place specified. Stra. 1265. 2 Nov. 2. Gordon v. Morley, and Campbell v. Bowden.

Action on a policy of insurance; the defendant pleaded an excuse, and the jury found the policy, by which the insurer undertook against the perils of the sea, pirates, enemies, &c. from London to Pinck, warranted to depart with convoy. Et per cur The words warranted to depart with convoy, mean only that he will leave the port, and sail with the convoy without any mutual default in the master; therefore, if by default of the master, the ship is separated and taken, the insurers are not liable; but if there be no default, the master having done all that could be done, and the ship is taken, they are liable; so if the ship be lost by stress of weather; for they insure against these by their own agreement. 2 Salk. 443. Hill. 2 W. & M. in B. R. Jeffries v. Legandra, S. C. 3 Lev. 320. 4 Mod. 58. 1 Show. 320. Garth. 216. Holt's Rep. 465.

Action on a policy of insurance by the defendant at London, insuring a ship from thence to the East-Indies, warranted to depart with convoy; and shews that the ship went from London to the Downs, and from thence with convoy, and was lost. After a frivolous plea and demurrer, the case stood upon the declaration; to which it was objected, that there was a departure without convoy. Et per cur. The clause warranted to depart with convoy, must be construed according to the usage among merchants, i. e. from such place, where convoys are to be had, as the Downs, &c. Holt Chief Justice curia; We take notice of the laws of merchants that are general, not of those that are particular usages. It is no part of the law of merchants to take convoy in the Downs. 2 Salk. 443. Mich. 4 W. & M. in B. R. Lothner's case.

The words warranted to depart with convoy have been resolved to import, by the usage of merchants, a continuance with that convoy as long as may be. Luc. Rep. 287.

Form of a policy of insurance.

K NOW all men by these presents, That A. B. of, &c. merchant, as well in his own name, as for and in the name and names of all and every other person and persons, to whom the same may or shall appertain, doth make assurance and hereby cause himself and them, and every of them, to be insured, left or not left, at and from the port of London in, &c. in the kingdom of, &c. and as and from thence back to London, upon the body, tackle, apparel, ordnance, munition, artillery, and other furniture of and in the good ship Elizabeth, burden, &c. or thereabouts, whereof, &c. is master, and also upon all kinds of goods and merchandises shipped on board the said ship; beginning the adventure upon the said ship and goods, from and immediately following the day of the date hereof, and so to continue and endure, until the said ship, with her said tackle, apparel, &c. shall be arrived back at London, and hath there moored at anchor twenty-four hours. And it shall be lawful for the said ship in this voyage to proceed and sail to, and touch and stay at, any ports or places whatsoever, especially at, &c. without prejudice to this insurance; and the said ship and goods, &c. for so much as concern the insured, is and shall be rated and valued at, &c. sterling, without further account to be given by the assured for the same. And touching the adventures and perils, which we the insurers are content to bear, and do take upon us, they are of the seas, men of war, fire, enemies, pirates, rovers, thieves, letters of mark, and reprisals at sea, arrests, restraints and detrainments of all Kings, Princes and people, of what nature, condition or quality soever, barratry of the master and mariners, and all other losses and misfortunes that shall come to the hurt or damage of the said ship, &c. or any part thereof. And in case of any misfortune, it shall be lawful for the insured, their factors, servants and assigns, to sue, labour, and travel for, in and about the said ship, goods, and recovery of the said ship, &c. or any part thereof, without prejudice to this insurance; to the charges of, without the insurers will contribute each of us according to the rate and quantity of his own herein assured. And so we the insurers are content, and do hereby promise, and bind ourselves; each for his own part, our heirs, executors, goods and chattels, to the insured, their executors, administrators

Arators and assigns, for the true performance of the premises, confessing ourselves paid the consideration due to us for this insurance, by, &c. at and after the rate of, &c. per cent. and in case of loss, to abate, &c. And to pay without further proof, &c. more than this present policy; any use or custom to the contrary notwithstanding. In witness, &c.

Intakers. Were a kind of thieves in the northern parts of England, so called, because they did take in and receive such bounties as their confederates the outpartners brought to them from the borders of Scotland; they are mentioned 9 H. 5. cap. 7.

Intallare. See Tassum.

Intendment of Law. (intellusit legis) The understanding, intention, and true meaning of law. Co. Litt. 78. says, the judges ought to judge according to the common intendment of law.

Intendment shall sometimes supply that which is not fully expressed or apparent, and when a thing is doubtful in some cases, intendment may make it out; also many things shall be intended after verdict, in a cause, to make a good judgment: but intendment cannot supply the want of certainty in a charge in an indictment for any crime, &c. 5 Rep. 121. 2 Hawk. P. C. 127. 441. Sometimes a thing is necessarily intended by what precedes or follows it; and where an indifferent construction may have two intendments, the rule is to take it most strongly against the plaintiff. Show 162. Tho' if a plaintiff declares, that the defendant is bound to him by obligation, it shall be intended that the obligation was sealed and delivered: if one is bound in a bond, and in the sevend. of the bond it is not expressed unto whom the money shall be paid, or if said to the obligor; the law will intend it is to be paid to the obligee: and where no time is limited for payment of the money, it shall be intended to be presently paid. 2 Lill. Abr. 71. Pasch. 24 Car. B. R.

The intent of parties in deeds, contracts, &c. is much regarded by the law: tho' it shall not take place against the direct rules of law: the law doth not in conveyances of estates admit them regularly to pass by intendment and implication; in devises of lands they are allowed, with due restrictions. Vaugh. 261, 262. Where seisin of an inheritance is once alledged, it shall be intended to continue till the contrary is shewn. Jones 181. A court pleaded generally to be held secund. consuetud. shall be intended held according to the Common law. Com. Law Com. Plac. 276. Goldsb. 111. On an act of parliament, the intent may be put in issue; but the Common law doth not allow it. Jenk. Cent. 87. 88. See Implication.

By intendment of law every parson, or rector of a church, is supposed to be resident in his benefice, unless the contrary be proved. Co. Lit. 78. b.

One part of a manor by common intendment shall not be of another nature than the rest. Co. Lit. 78. b.

Of common intendment a will shall not be supposed to be made by collusion. Co. Lit. 78. b. The law presumes that every one will act for his best advantage; therefore credits the party in whatever is to his own prejudice. Fin. Law 10. Max. 53. Usury shall not be intended, unless expressly found by the jury. Arg. Bridgm. 112. Mich. 15 Jac. cites 10 Rep. 59. Chancellor of Oxford's case. Covin shall not be intended or presumed in law, unless expressly averred. Arg. Bridgm. 112. cites the case of Tyrer v. Littleton. When one word may have a double intendment, one according to the law, and another against the law, that intendment shall be taken which is according to law; and this by a reasonable intendment. 3 Bulf. 306. Mich. 1 Car. B. R. Telv. 50. Game v. Harvey.

Intendment of Crimes. In ancient times felonious attempts, intending the death of another, were adjudged felony; for the will was taken for the fact. Bracl. i. E. 3. But now, on this day the law does not generally punish intendments; do ill, if the intent be not executed, except in case of treason, where intention proved by circumstances shall be punished as if put in execution. 3 Inst. 108. And if a person enter a house in the night, with intent to commit burglary, it is felony: and by statute, maliciously cutting off, or disfiguring any limb or member, with an intent to disfigure, &c. is felony. 23 Car. 2. c. 1.

and vide Plowd. 474. Where assault and intent to commit robbery on the highway, is made felony, and transportation, see 7 Geo. 2. c. 21. Intention of force and violence makes riots criminal. 3 Inst. 9. Also where men do evil, and say they intend none; or if the intention be only to beat, and they kill a person, they are to be punished for the crime done. Plowd. 345. And if a man entering a tavern, &c. commit a trespass, the law will judge that he intended it. 8 Rep. 147. Vide Murder.

Intent, or Intention. The words of deeds shall be construed according to the intent of the parties, and otherwise. The intent shall be destroyed where it does not agree with the law. Pl. C. 160. b. 162. b. Throgmorton v. Tracy.

In every agreement the intent is the chief thing that is to be considered; and if by the act of God, or other means not arising from the party himself, the agreement cannot be performed according to the words, yet the party shall perform it as near the intent as he may. Arg. Pl. C. 290. Trin. 7 Eliz. in case of Chapan v. Dalton.

Common usage and reputation frequently govern the matter, and direct the intention of the parties; as upon sale of a barrel of beer the barrel is not sold, but upon sale of a hoghead of wine it is otherwise. Savil 124. Mich. 32 & 33 Eliz. in case of Matthew al. Bishop v. Harcourt. Hard. 3. Arg. Trin. 1655. in scacc. The intention of a man is not always to be pursued in equity; as if a man settles a term in trust for one and his heirs, yet it shall go to the executor; per Lord North. Pasch. 1683. Vern. 164. in case of D. of Norfolk v. Howard.

All deeds are but in nature of contracts, and the intent of the parties reduced into writing, and the intention is to be chiefly regarded. In an act of parliament the intention appearing in the preamble shall controul the letter of the law; and from the regard which the law itself gives to the intention of the party, it is, that where there is fine by render, there shall be no dower; and so a rent or recognizance shall not be extinguished by levying a fine to the party. Per Master of the Rolls. Pasch. 1683. Vern. 58. See 14 Vin. Abr. tit. Intent.

Intendone, Is a writ that lies against him who enters into lands after the death of tenant in dower or for life, &c. and holds out him in reversion or remainder. F. N. B. 203.

Inter Canem & Lupum. Words formerly used in appeals to signify the crime being done in the twilight. M. filia N. de Okele appellat J. C. pro rapta & pace regis frastra die Martis prom. &c. Inter canem & lupum, i. e. in crepusculo, scilicet, Anglice twilight, i. e. inter diem & noctem. &c. Inter Placita de Trin. 7 Ed. 1. This in Herefordshire, they call the mock-shadow, corruptly the mock-shade, and in the north, day-light's gate; others betwixt hawk and buzzard. Cowell.

Intercommoning, Is where the commons of two manors lie together, and the inhabitants of both have time out of mind depastured their cattle promiscuously in each. Cowell.

Interdiction, (interdictio and interdictum) Has the same signification in the Common, as it hath in the Canon law, which thus defines it: interdictio est censura ecclesiastica prohibens administrationem divinorum. And so it is used 22 Hen. 8. cap. 12. & 25 Hen. 8. cap. 23. Eodem anno relaxatum est interdictum Oxonie, quod auctoritate Domini Joh. Episcopi Lincol. propter clericorum & fraterlegia anno proximo prateritis fuit illatum. Walf. Hist. Anno 1357. So that an interdict is, a general excommunication of a whole country or province: is mentioned in some of our historians, viz: Knights tells us, anno 1208. that the Pope excommunicated King John, and all his adherents, Et totam terram Angliam suppositum interdictum, which began the first Sunday after Easter, and continued six years and one month; during all which time nothing was done in the churches besides baptism and confessions of dying people.

The form of an interdict, as set down by Du Cange, is as follows, viz.

IN the name of Christ, We the bishop, in behalf of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and of St. Peter, the chief of the apostles, and in our own behalf, do excommunicate and interdict this church, and all the chapels thereto belonging, that no man from henceforth may have leave to sing mass, or to hear it, or in any wise to administer any divine office, nor to receive God's tidings without our leave; and whosoever shall presume to sing or hear mass, or perform any divine office, or to receive any tidings contrary to this interdict, on the part of God the Father Almighty, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and on the behalf of St. Peter, and all the saints, let him be accursed and separated from all Christian society, and from entering into Holy Mother Church, where there is forgiveness of sins; and let him be Anathema, Maranatha, for ever, with the devils in hell. Fiat, fiat, fiat. Amen.

This severe church censure hath been of long time disused.

Interdictum, In the Civil law, was a prohibition or injunction of the prætor, or an order for the possession of a thing in dispute, made by the magistrate per interdictum repetere possessionem suam. Cic. pro Cæcin. 3. If a bill be filed in either of our courts of equity to quiet the possession of lands, to stay waste, or to stop proceedings at law, an injunction is prayed in the nature of the interdictum of the Civil law, commanding the defendant to cease.

Interdicted of Water and Fire, Were antiently those persons who suffered banishment for some crime; by which judgment, order was given that no man should receive them into his house, but deny them fire and water, the two necessary elements of life, which amounted as it were to a civil death; and this was called legitimum exilium, says Livy.

Interest (interesse), Is commonly taken for a chattel real, as a lease for years, &c. and more particularly for a future term; in which case, it is said in pleading, that one is possessed de interesse termini. Therefore an estate in lands is better than a right or interest in them: tho' in legal understanding an interest extends to estates, rights and titles, that a man hath in, or out of lands, &c. so as by grant of his whole interest in such land, a reversion therein as well as possession in fee-simple shall pass. Co. Lit. 345.

A mortgage is an interest in land, and on non-payment, the estate is absolute in law, and his interest is good in equity to intitle him to receive and enjoy the profits till redemption or satisfaction, and, on a foreclosure, he hath the absolute estate both in law and equity. 9 Mod. 146. See Black. Com. 2 V. 134.

Interest of Money, As distinguished from the principal, what lawful, &c. See Usury, and Black. Com. 2 V. 455.

Where an estate is devised for payment of debts, Chancery will not allow interest for book debts. 3 Ch. Rep. 94. Dalman v. Fritman. Where lands are charged with payment of a sum in gross, they are also chargeable in equity with payment of interest for such sum. Hill. 29 Car. 2. Fin. R. 286. Shipton v. Tyrrel. Interest is recovered by way of damages, where damages are recovered ratione detentionis debiti; but not where damages only are recovered, for interest is not recovered occasione dampnorum; per Powell J. 2 Salk. 623. Hill. 10 W. 3. B. R. Sweetland v. Squire. No interest to be allowed for costs. MS. Tab. cites 6 Feb. 1719. Builer v. Burk. For more learning on this subject, see 14 Vin. Abr. tit Interest.

Interest on Bankrupt Debts. The usual rule is, that all interest on debts carrying interest shall cease, from the time of issuing the commission, yet, in case of a surplus left after payment of every debt, such interest shall again revive, and be chargeable on the bankrupt, or his representatives. Atk. 244. Black. Com. 2 V. 488.

Interest on Legacies. In case of a vested legacy, due immediately, and charged on land, or money in the funds, which yield an immediate profit, interest shall be payable thereon, from the testator's death; but if charged only on the personal estate, which cannot be immediately got in, it shall carry interest only from the end of the year after the death of the testator: 2 P. Wms. 26, 27. Black. Com. 2 V. 513, 514.

Interest, or no Interest, in policies of insurance, see 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. and tit. Insurance, and Black. Com. 2 V. 461.

Interested Witnesses. Interested witnesses may be examined upon a voir dire, if suspected to be secretly concerned in the event, or their interest may be proved in court. Black. Com. 3 V. 370.

Intestineation in a deed. A deed may be avoided by matter ex post facto, as by rasure, interlining, or other alteration in any material part; unless a memorandum be made thereof at the time of the execution and attestation. 11 Rep. 27. Black. Com. 2 V. 308.

Interlocutory Decree in Chancery. In a suit in equity, if any matter of fact is strongly controverted, the fact is usually directed to be tried at the bar of the court of King's Bench, or at the assizes upon a feigned issue. If a question of mere law arises in the course of a cause, it is the practice of the court of Chancery to refer it to the opinion of the judges of the court of King's Bench, upon a case stated for that purpose. In such cases interlocutory decrees, or orders are made. See Black. Com. 3 V. 452, 453.

Interlocutory Judgment. Interlocutory judgments are such as are given in the middle of a cause, upon some plea, proceeding on default, which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the suit. As judgment for the plaintiff in abatement, or respondeat auster, i. e. that defendant shall answer over, or farther, plead in chief, or put in a more substantial plea.

But the interlocutory judgments, most usually spoken of, are those incomplete judgments, whereby the right of the plaintiff is indeed established, but the quantum of damages sustained by him is not ascertained, which is the province of a jury. It such case a writ of inquiry issues to the sheriff, who summonses a jury, enquires of the damages, and returns to the court the inquisition so taken, whereupon the plaintiff's attorney axes costs, and signs final judgment. See Black. Com. 3 V. 396, 397.

Interlocutory Order, (ordo interlocutorius) Is that which decides not the cause, but only some incidental matter, which happens between the beginning and end of it; as where an order is made in Chancery, for the plaintiff to have an injunction, &c. till the hearing of the cause: this, or any such order, not being final, is interlocutory.—Ordo interlocutorius non definit controversiam, sed aliquid obiter, ad causam pertinens, decernit. Lanc. Inst. Juris Canon. lib. 3.

Interlopers, Persons who intercept the trade of a company of merchants. Merch. Ditt.

Interpleader in Actions, see Enterpleader.

Interregnum. There can't be any interregnum, in this country, by the policy of the constitution, for the right of sovereignty is fully invested in the successor by the very descent of the crown. See Black. Com. 1 V. 196, 249.

Interrogatories, Are particular questions demanded of witnesses brought in to be examined in a cause, especially in the court of Chancery. And these interrogatories must be exhibited by the parties in suit on each side; which are either direct for the party that produces them, or counter on behalf of the adverse party; and generally both plaintiff and defendant may exhibit, direct and counter or cross interrogatories.

They are to be pertinent, and only to the points necessary, and either drawn or perused by counsel, and be signed by them: if they are leading, viz. such as these, Did you not do or see such a thing, &c. the depositions on them will be suppressed; for they should be drawn, Did you do or did you not see, &c. without leaning to either side; and not only where they point more to one side of the question than the other; but if they are too particular, they will likewise be suppressed: The commissioners, &c. who examine witnesses on interrogatories, must examine to one interrogatory only at a time, they are to hold the witnesses to every point interrogated; and take what comes from them on their examination, without asking any idle questions, or putting down any impertinent answers not relating relating to the Interrogatories, &c. Practif. Attorn. first Edit. 225. See Depositions.

At Common law, witnesses going abroad, are sometimes examined, by consent, upon interrogatories de bene esse. See Black. Com. 3 V. 383. The mode of trial, in equity, is by interrogatories, administered, in writing to the witnesses. Black. Com. 3 V. 438. 4 V. 449.

An attachment sometimes issues against a person supposed guilty of some contempt to the court whence the process goes forth, to bring him in; and when there he is to stand committed, or put in bail to answer interrogatories upon oath. Whether this proceeding is legal and constitutional or not, it is not for the editor to determine. But, as a contempt can scarce be committed without a witness, it should seem more rational to indict the party, and give him the benefit of a legal trial, by his peers.

Intestates, (Intestati.) There are two kinds of intestates; one who makes no will; another who makes a will, and nominates executors, but they refuse; in which case he dies an intestate, and the ordinary commits administration. 2 Par. Inf. fol. 397. In former times, he who died intestate, was accounted damned, because (as Mat. Par. tells us) he was obliged by the canons, to leave at least a tenth part of his goods to pious uses, for the redemption of his soul, therefore, who neglected so to do, took no care of his own salvation. They made no difference between a suicide and an intestate; for as in one case, the goods were forfeited to the King, so in the other they were forfeited to the chief lord. But because it was accounted a very wicked thing to die without making any distribution of his goods to pious uses, and such cases often happened by sudden deaths, therefore by subsequent constitutions, the bishops had power to make such distribution as the intestate himself was bound to do; and this was called Elemosyna rationalis. Thus in Mur. Paris. anno 1190. we read, Se quis subitanea morte vel quolibet casu preoccupatus fuisset ut de rebus suis disponere non posset, distributio bonorum ejus ecclesiastica fecerat auctoritate: And it was by this means that the spiritual courts came first to have jurisdiction in testamentary cases. Cowell.

By the statute Westm. 2. Goods of intestates were to be committed to the Ordinary, to answer the debts of the deceased, &c. And the 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 10. appoints a distribution of intestates estates, after the debts and funeral expences are paid, among the wife and children of the deceased; or for want or such, the next of kin, &c. And the act of parliament doth immediately, upon the death of the intestate, vest an interest in the persons intitled; so that if any one dies before the distribution, though within the year, his share shall go to his executors or administrators; and not to the survivors and next of kin to the intestate. 1 Lill. Abr. 487.

A husband shall not be compelled to distribute his wife's estate. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. s. 25.

The brothers and sisters of the intestate shall have equal shares with the mother. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. s. 7.

Shares claimed by the administrator by custom shall be distributed Ibid. s. 8.

Distribution shall be made of estates par ante vis, whereof there is not any special occupant, and which are undivided. 14 Geo. 2. c. 20. s. 9.

If A. by will appoints that the executors of J. S. shall be his executors, and he dies, leaving J. S. there till the death of J. S. this is a dying intestate of A. for in the mean time A. has no executor. Per Dyer & Walsh, Pl. C. 281. b.

So if A. makes J. S. (to be) his executor a year after his death; for within the year he dies intestate; and therefore for this the ordinary has power to commit administration, and it shall never be disproved; By Dyer and Walsh, Pl. C. 281. b. And if executor proves the testam. and dies intestate, there, from the death of such executor by dying intestate, the first testator dyeth intestate, and for that reason the ordinary may grant administration. Per Dyer and Walsh, ibid. 281. b. 282. a.

Where the strictness of the Civil law is observed, there a man cannot die partly testate and partly intestate; tho' here in England, where that ceremonial strictness is not observed, but all immunities enjoy'd, being not obliged to any other observance in making testaments than what is jura gentium, a man may several ways die partly testate and partly intestate. 1 Godolph. Orph. Leg. cap. 19. s. 4.

Error was assigned that one pleaded (non testamento autem qui obijt intestatus) which is absurd and repugnant; per cur. It is well; for though one make a will, yet if he make no executor, he is intestate. Quint. 20. See Administrators.

Intestates Estates. Are the goods and chattels of persons dying intestate. 2 Lill. Abr. 73.

Tare & Weight. Toll or custom paid for things imported and exported, or brought in, and sold out. Cowell.

Intrate Spettum. Signifies to digen any low ground, and by dikes, walls, &c. take in and reduce it to herbage or pasture; whence comes the word intra. Will. Thorn.

Intrusion, (Intrusio) Is when the ancestor dies seized of any estate of inheritance, expectant upon an estate for life, and then tenant for life dies, between whose death and entry of the heir, a stranger intrudes. Co. Lit. 227. — Intrusio est ubi quis, cui nullum jus competit in re nec scintilla juris, possessionem vacuum ingreditur, &c. Bract. lib. 4. cap. 21. By which intrusio significeth an unlawful entry into lands or tenements void of a possessor, by him who hath no right to the same. And the difference between an intruder and an abator in this, that an abator entereth into lands void by the death of a tenant in fee; and an intruder enters into land void by the death of tenant for life, or years. F. N. B. 203. And there is a writ of intrusion, which lies where the tenant for life, &c. dies; but if a man doth intrude after the death of such a tenant, he in reversion in tail shall not have this writ, but is put to his formedon: For it lieth only for him who hath the reversion in fee-simple, &c. after the death of tenant for life, or in dower, &c. New Nat. Br. 509. Also one having such a fee-estate in remainder, shall have writ of intrusion; and the assignee of the remainder may bring it, as well as an heir, &c. 16. Ejectments are now chiefly in use. As he who enters and keeps the right heir from the possession of his ancestor is an intruder punishable by Common law; so he who enters on the King's lands and takes the profits, is an intruder against the King. Co. Lit. 477. For this intrusion information may be brought; but before office found, he who occupies the land shall not be said to be an intruder, for intrusion cannot be but where the King is actually possessed, which is not before office; tho' the King is intitled to the mesne profits after the tenant's estate ended. Mow. 295. By statute 21 Jac. 1. cap. 14. the defendants may plead the general issue in informations of intrusion, brought on behalf of the King, and retain their possession till trial; where the King hath been out of possession, and not received the profits for twenty years: And no scire facias shall issue, whereupon the subject shall be forced to special pleading, &c. See Black. Com. 3 V. 169, 183, 261.

Intrusion de Gard. Was a writ that lay where the infant within age entered into his lands, and held out his Lord. Old Nat. Br. 90.

Intrusione, Is the writ brought against an intruder; by him that hath fee-simple, &c. New Nat. Br. 433.

Inventare. To engage or mortgage lands; and impositions were mortgages of land. — Confirmatio est, omnes donationes, venditiones, & invasiones, &c. Mon. Ang. Tum. 1. pag. 476.

Inventiones, Mortgage or pignus. Ibid.

Inveniens. Is when one has been accused of some crime, which being not fully proved, he is put sub debita suspitione.

Inquisitiones. In the inquisition of sergeants and knights fees, anno 12 & 13 of King John, there are some titles called inquisitiones or invasiones per regem.

Inventiones. Invented in ancient charters for treasure-trove, money or goods found by any person, and not challenged by the owner, which by the Common law is due to the King, who grants the privilege to some particular subjects. — Quod habent inventiones sunt in Maris & in Terra. Chart. K. Ed. 1. to the Barons of the Clinges Ports. — Placit. temp. Edw. 1. & Edw. 2. MS. C. 89.

Inventory, (Inventorium) Is a list or schedule containing a true description of all the goods and chattels of a person deceased at the time of his death, with their value appraised by indifferent persons; which every executor or administrator ought to exhibit to the bishop or ordinary at such time as he shall appoint. West. Symb. lib. 2. pag. 696. By 21 H. 8. c. 5. Executors and administrators are required to make and deliver in upon oath to the ordinary, inventories indented, of which one part shall remain with the ordinary, and the other part with the executor or administrator: And the intention of this statute was for the benefit of the creditors and legatees, that the executor or administrator might not conceal any part of the personal estate from them: Though as to the valuation it is not exclusive, but the real value found by a jury; if they are undervalued, the creditors may take them as appraised; and if over-valued, it shall not be prejudicial to the executor. 2 Nels. Abr. 1015. But though generally all the personal estate of the deceased, of what nature or quality soever, ought to be put into the inventory; yet goods given away in the life-time of the deceased, and actually in the possession of the party to whom given, and the goods to which a husband is intitled as administrator to his wife, are not. 3 Bulstr. 355. And notwithstanding the law requires that the inventory be exhibited within three months after the death of the person, if it is done afterwards, it is good, for the ordinary may dispense with the time, and even in some cases, whether it shall be exhibited, or not; as where creditors are paid, and the will performed, &c. Raym. 470. These inventories proceed from the Civil law; and as by the old Roman law, the heir was obliged to answer all the testator's debts, Justinian ordained, that inventories should be made of the substance of the deceased, and he should be no further charged. Justin. Inst. See Executor & Black. Com. 2 V. 510.

In ventre sa mere, (Fr.) In the mother's belly, relating to which there is a writ mentioned in the register of curia, and in 12 Car. 2. cap. 24. Infant in ventre sa mere, is where a woman is with child at the time of her husband's death; which child, if he had been born, would be heir to the land of the husband: And this is sometimes privily, and sometimes open and visible. 1 Shep. Abr. 142. And the law hath consideration of such a child, on account of the apparent expectation of his birth: For a devise to an infant in ventre sa mere, shall be good by way of future executory devise. Raym. 164. He may be vouched in his mother's belly; and action lies for detention of charters from him as heir, &c. Hob. 222. Dyer 186. And in all cases, where a daughter or female comes into land by descent; there the son born after, shall oust her and have the land. 3 Rep. 61. Plowd 375. But if the daughter and female heir cometh to land in nature of a purchaser; as on a will of lands given to J. S. and his heirs, and he hath a daughter when the devilor dies, his wife being then with child of a son; in this case the daughter shall enjoy the land, and not the after-born son. 3 Rep. 61. 5 Ed. 4. 6. 9 H. 7. 24. Vide Infant.

Inveritate, To verify or make proof of a thing. Leg. Inc. c. 16.

Inverness, A duty of excise granted to the town of. 5 Geo. 1. c. 17. 11 Geo. 2. c. 16.

Invest and Investiture, (from the Fr. investir) Signifies to give possession: some define it thus, investitura est alicujus in suum jus introductio; a giving livery of seisin or possession. The customs and ceremonies of investiture or giving possession, were long practised with great variety: at first investitures were made by a form of words; afterwards by such things as had most resemblance to what was to be transferred; as lands passed by the delivery of a turf, &c. which was done by the grantor to the person to whom the lands were granted: but in after ages, the things by which investitures were made were not so exactly observed. Inglph. p. 901. In the church, it was the custom of old for Princes to promote such as they liked to ecclesiastical benefices, and declare their choice and promotion by delivery, to the persons chosen, of a pastoral staff and ring; the one a symbolical representation of their spiritual marriage with the church; and the other of their pastoral care and charge, which was termed investiture; after which they were consecrated by ecclesiastical persons. Hoveden tells us, that King Richard being taken by the Emperor, gave this kingdom to him, & investit rum inde per pileum suum; and that the Emperor immediately afterwards returned the gift; et investit rum per duplicem crucem de auro. Hoved. 724. Walsingham says, that John Duke of Lancaster was invested Duke of Aquitaine, per Virgam & Pileum, p. 343. See Black. Com. 2 V. 23, 53, 209, 211.

Inbitatoria & Veneriarum, Those hymns and psalms that were sung in the church to invite the people to prayer: They are mentioned in the statute of St. Paul's MS.

Inbolte. A particular account of merchandise, with its value, custom and charges, &c. sent by a merchant to his factor or correspondent in another country. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 34.

Involuntary Manslaughter, Differs from homicide excusable by misadventure, in this; that misadventure always happens in consequence of some lawful act, but this species of manslaughter in consequence of an unlawful act. Yet, in general, when an involuntary killing happens in consequence of an unlawful act, it will be either murder or manslaughter, according to the nature of the act which occasioned it. Vide Black. Com. 4 V. 192, 193.

Inure, Signifies to take effect, as the pardon inureth. Staund. Præc. fol. 40. See Enure.

Jobber, Is used for one who buys or sells cattle for others. And there are stock-jobbers, who buy and sell stocks for other persons, &c.

Jocalis, (Fr. joyaux) Jewels; derived from the Lat. jocus, joculus, and jucula, which comprehend every thing that delighteth; but in a special and more restrained sense, it signifies those things which are ornaments to women, and which in France they call their own; as diamonds, ear-rings, bracelets, &c. But in this kingdom a wife shall not be intitled to jewels, diamonds, &c. on the death of her husband, unless they are suitable to her quality; and the husband leaves assets to pay debts, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 911.

Jocari, To contend with pikes. Craftino die quidam milites Anglici strenue nimis & viriliter jocabantur. Matt. Paris. anno 1252.

Jocariur, A jester. In a deed of Richard, abbot of Bernay, to Henry Lovet, sine dat. among the witnesses to it was Willielmo tunc jocario Domini Abbatis. But in Domesday 'tis said Berdic was Joculator Regis, the King's jester.

Joculet, (Sax.) Prædiolum, agri colendi portiuncula. A little farm or manor; in some parts of Kent a yoklet, as requiring but a small yoke of oxen to till it. Sax. Dict.

Jocus partitus. 'Tis so called when two proposals are made, and a man hath liberty to choose which he will. Nec potest transigere, nec pacisci, nec jocum partium facere, nec aliud. Bracton. lib. 4. tract. 1. cap. 32. par. 2. Etiam si apparentibus partibus queruletur & respondeatur, sive loquela per non tenuram vel per quemcunque Biperti jocus cavilletur, &c. Hengham Magn. cap. 4.

Joinder in Action, Is the coupling or joining of two in a suit or action against another. F. N. B. fol. 118, 201, 221. In all personal things, where two are chargeable to two, the one may satisfy it, and accept of satisfaction, and bind his companion; and yet one cannot have an action without his companion, nor both only against one. 2 Leon. 77. In joint personal actions against two defendants, if they plead severally, and the plaintiff is nonsuit by one before he hath judgment against the other, he is barred against both. Hob. 180. A covenant to two, not to do a thing without their consent; one of them may bring an action for his particular damage. 2 Mod. 82. If a man covenants with two or three severally, which he may do, and it differs from a bond; here it was held; they could not join in action of covenant. Marrb 103. But a person, in consideration of a sum of money paid to him by A. and B. promises to procure their cattle distrained to be delivered; if they are not delivered, one joint action lies by the parties; for the consideration sideration cannot be divided. Styl. 156, 203. 1 Danv. Abr. 5. And if one jointenant of goods is robbed, both may join in an action: and where two joint owners of a sum of money are robbed upon the highway, they are to join in one action against the hundred. Latch 127. Dyer 307. 'Tis otherwise if they have several properties. Ibid. Where the suit will survive to the wife, the must join in the action. Wils. par. 1. p. 224. and see ibid. par. 2. fol. 423. Upon a joint grievance all parties may join; as the inhabitants of a hundred, &c. And where an action against owners of a ship, in case of goods damaged, &c. is quasi ex contractu, it must be brought against all of them. 3 Lev. 258. 3 Mod. 321. 2 Salk. 440. Tho' one partner acts in trade, where there are many partners, actions are to be brought against all the partners jointly for his acts. 1 Salk. 292. If two men are partners, and one of them sells goods in partnership, action for the money must be brought in both their names. Godh. 244. But where there are two partners in merchandise, and one of them appoints a factor, they may have several writs of account against him, or they may join. Moor 188. And if one of the merchants dies, the survivor is to bring the action. 2 Salk. 444. If one man calls two other men thieves, they shall not join in an action against him; and one joint action will not lie for, or against several persons for speaking the same words: for the wrong done to one is no wrong to the other; and the words of the one are not the words of the other. 1 Danv. 5. Palm. 313.

So in assault and battery. On a joint trespass the plaintiff may declare severally; but it remains joint till severed by the declaration. 2 Salk. 454. A man cannot declare in an action against one defendant for an assault and battery, and against another for taking away his goods; because the trespasses are of several natures. But where they are done by two persons jointly at one time, they may be both guilty of the whole. Styl. 153. 10 Rep. 66. If two men procure another to be indicted falsely of barrettry, he may have action against them both jointly; and it is the same if two conspire to maintain a suit, tho' one only gives money, &c. Latch 262.

Tenants in common cannot join in an action of waste against their lessee; but 'tis otherwise in the case of coparceners or jointenants. Moor 34.

Joinder of Counties. There can be no joinder of counties for the finding of an indictment: tho' in appeal of death, where a wound was given in one county, and the party died in another, the jury were to be returned jointly from each county, before the statute 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 24. But by that statute the law is altered; for now the whole may be tried either on indictment or appeal, in the county wherein the death is. 2 Hawk. P. C. 323, 403. Where several persons are arraigned upon the same indictment or appeal, and severally plead Not guilty, the prosecutor may either take out joint venire's or several. H. P. C. 256. But after a joint venire, several ones cannot be taken out.

Joinder in Demurrer. An issue upon matter of law is called demurrer. It confesses the fact to be true as stated by the opposite party, but denies that, by the law arising upon those facts, any injury is done to the plaintiff, or that the defendant has made out a legitimate excuse; according to the party who first demurs. The form of the demurrer is by averring the pleading insufficient in law, to answer the end proposed by it. The opposite party avers it to be sufficient, which is called a joinder in demurrer, and then the parties are at issue in point of law. See Black. Com. 3 V. 314, 315.

Joindre in Writ. The form, on a writ of right, may be seen in Black. Com. Append. to 3 V. iv.

Joindre of Issue. Of an issue in fact, is when he denies the fact pleaded by his antagonist has tendered the issue thus, And this he prays may be inquired of by the "country," or "And of this he puts himself upon the "country," it may be immediately subjoined by the other party, "And the said A. B. doth the like." Which done, the issue is said to be joined. Black. Com. 3 V. 315. 4 V. 334. See Joinder in Demurrer.

Joint Actions. In personal actions, several wrongs may be joined in one writ; but actions founded upon a tort, and on a contract, cannot be joined, for they require different pleas and different process. 1 Keb. 847. 1 Vent. 366. And where there is a tort by the Common law, and a tort by statute, they may not be joined; tho' where several torts are by the Common law, they may be joined, if personal. 3 Salk. 203. Trover and assumpsit may not be joined; but in an action against a common carrier, the plaintiff may declare in case upon the custom of the realm, and also upon trover and conversion, for Not guilty answers to both. 1 Danv. Abr. 4. Debt upon an amercement, and upon a mutuatus, may be joined in one declaration. Wils. par. 1. 248. So, case for a misfeasance and negligence may be joined with a count in trover, in the same declaration. Id. par. 2. 319. Two counts may be joined in the same declaration, where there is the same judgment in both. Id. 321. And any actions may be joined, where the plea of Not guilty goes to all. 8 Rep. 47. But as to carriers, see 1 Vent. 365. And judgment was arrested in assumpsit, in such a case. 1 Salk. 10. Ejectment and battery cannot be joined; but after verdict, where several damages were found, the plaintiff was allowed to release those for the battery, and had judgment for the ejectment. 1 Danv. 3. Altho' persons may join in the personalty, they shall always sever in actions concerning the realty; and waste being a mixed action favouring of the realty, that being more worthy draws over the personalty with it, in any action brought. 2 Mod. Rep. 62. A person cannot as administrator, &c. join an action for the right of another, with any action in his own right; because the costs will be entire, and it cannot be distinguished how much he is to have as administrator, and how much for himself. 1 Salk 10. See this subject well treated, or rather a variety of cases well selected and digested, in Com. Dig. 1 V. tit. Action.

N. B. Every thing, that comes within the compass of the writ, may be comprehended within the declaration; but the declaration cannot in any manner be extended beyond the writ. Vide also as to this subject Gilb. H. C. P. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.

Joint and several. An interest cannot be granted jointly and severally; as if a man grants proximam aduocationem, or makes a lease for years, to two jointly and severally, those words (severally) are void, and they are jointenants. 5 Rep. 19. Mich. 29 & 30 Eliz. Slingsby's case.

A power or authority may be joint and several. 5 Rep. 19. Slingsby's case. Joint words of parties shall, by construction of law, be taken respectively and severally. 5 Rep. 7. b.

When it appears by the count, that the several covenantees have, or are to have, several interests or estates, there when the covenant is made with the covenantees, & cum quolibet eorum, these words make the covenant several, in respect of their several interests. 5 Rep. 19.

There is a difference between a power given to two, and an interest given to two; a lease for years is made to two, & cuiuslibet eorum, this is a joint lease, and the words (cuiuslibet eorum) are void; this is to maintain quiet and avoid contention. So of an obligation made to two & cuiuslibet eorum, or a grant of the next avoidance to two & cuiuslibet eorum. But a power to sell, lett, or make livery to two & cuiuslibet eorum, 'tis good; for there is no profit. Cupido divitiarum est causa belli. Jenk. 262, 263. pl. 63.

And a grant of the next avoidance to two & cuiuslibet eorum, to present A. to the said church, is good; for the contention is avoided by restraining both to present A. Jenk. 263. pl. 63. See 14 Vin. Abr. 48. 469.

Joint Executors. Are accounted in law but as one person, and acts done by any of them shall be taken to be the acts of every one of them; for they all represent the testator. 2 Nels. Abr. 1026. If two joint executors have a lease for years, one of them may sell the term without the other's joining, because both are possessed of it as one person in right of the testator; and this is the reason why one of them cannot assign the term to the other; and for which cause one joint executor cannot compel his companion to account. Cro. Eliz. 347. Sid. 33. If one joint executor gives an acquittance or release, the other is bound by it; for as they are but one executor to the testator, tator, each hath an authority over the whole estate. 2 Brownl. 183. Kelw. 23. But, if a release is procured of one joint executor by fraud, for a less sum than due; relief may be had in equity: and joint executors shall not be charged by the acts of their companions, any further than they are actually possessed of the goods of the testator. Moor 620. Cro. Eliz. 318. 2 Leon. 209. 'Tho' if joint executors, by agreement among themselves, agree, that each shall intermeddle with such a part of the testator's estate; in this case each of them shall be chargeable for the whole by the agreement as to receipts, &c. Hurd. 314.

Also it has been decreed in Chancery, that if two or more executors join in a receipt, and one of them only receives the money, each of them is liable for the whole, as to creditors at law; but as to legatees, and those who claim distribution, who have no remedy but in equity, the receipt of one executor shall not charge the other. 1 Salk. 318. Two joint executors cannot plead distinct pleas, because their testator, if living, who was but one person, on a writ brought against him, could have but one plea. Raym. 123. It is held, where there are two joint executors, and one has possessed himself of a moiety of the goods, and then dies, in that case the survivor shall have all. 2 P. Williams 352. See Executors.

Joint fines. If a whole vill is to be fined, a joint fine may be laid, and it will be good for the necessity of it; but in other cases, fines for offences are to be severally imposed on each particular offender, and not jointly upon all of them. 1 Roll. Rep. 33. 11 Rep. 42. Dyer 211.

Joint Indictments, May be sometimes had: if offences of several persons arise from a joint criminal act, without any regard to any particular personal default or defect of either of the defendants; as the joint keeping of a gaming-house; or unlawful hunting and carrying away deer; or for maintenance, extortion, &c. an indictment or information may charge the defendants jointly. 1 Ventr. 302. 2 Hawk. P. C. 240. When there are more defendants than one in an information, they may not exhibit a joint plea of Not guilty; but are to plead severally, that neither they, nor any of them are guilty, &c. 21 H. 6. 20. 2 Roll. Abr. 707.

Joint Lives. A bond was made to a woman dum sola, to pay her so much yearly as long as she, and the obligor should live together, &c. Afterwards the woman married, and debt being brought on this bond by husband and wife, the defendant pleaded, that he and the plaintiff's wife did not live together; but it was adjudged that the money should be paid during their joint lives, so long as they were living at the same time, &c. 1 Lutw. 555. And where a person in consideration of receiving profits of the wife's lands on marriage, during their joint lives, was to pay a sum of money yearly, in trust for the wife, though it was not said every year during, &c. It was held, that the payment shall be intended to continue every year also during their joint lives. 1 Lutw. 459. Lease for years to husband and wife, if they, or any issue of their bodies should so long live, has been adjudged so long as either the husband, wife, or any of their issue should live; and not only so long as the husband and wife, &c. should jointly live. Moor 339. The word or may be taken disjunctively or distributively for either; when the word and, which requires a joining and coupling, shall not.

Jointenants, (simul tenentes or qui conjunctim tenent) Are those who come to, and hold lands or tenements jointly by one title; and these jointenants must jointly plead, and be jointly sued and impleaded, which property is common to them and coparceners; but jointenants have a sole and peculiar quality of survivorship, which coparceners have not; for if there be two or three jointenants, and one has issue and dies, the survivors, or survivor shall have the whole. Litt. 277, 280. 1 Inst. 180.

They are called jointenants, not only because lands are conveyed to them jointly, by one and the same title; but for that they take by purchase only; whereas an estate in coparcenary is always by descent. Ibid. Where a man is seised of lands and tenements, and makes a feoffment to two or more, and their heirs; or makes a lease to them for life; or where two, or more, have a joint estate in possession, in a chattel real or personal; or a joint estate in a debt, duty, covenant, contract, &c. it is a jointenancy; and the part of him who dieth, goeth not to his heir or executor; but the whole to the survivors or survivor.

But an exception is to be made as to joint merchants, for their stock or debts which they have in partnership; for the share of the person dying goes to the executor or administrator by the law merchant, and not to the survivor. Ibid.

If a father make a deed of bargain or sale of lands to his son, to hold to him and his heirs, &c. to the use of the father and son, and their heirs and assigns for ever, they are jointenants. 2 Cro. 83. And if the father devises lands to his eldest and other sons, they are jointenants and not tenants in common. Goldf. 28. Poph. 52. And a man having only two daughters, who were his heirs, devised his land to them and their heirs; and it was adjudged they were jointenants, because they have it by the devise in another manner than the law would have given it them, which would have been as coparceners by descent; here the survivor shall have the whole. Cro. Eliz. 431. Sed qu. if they may not reject the devise, and take as heirs? A man devised lands to his wife for life, and after her death to his three daughters, and the heirs males of their bodies, &c. The wife and the two eldest daughters died; and it was held that the surviving daughter should have the whole for life, the three sisters being jointenants for life, and several tenants in tail of the inheritance. Lee 47. A devise to two jointly and severally, is a jointenancy. Poph. 52. If lands are devised to two equally, and their heirs, they are jointenants; but if it had been to two, equally to be divided between them, it generally makes a tenancy in common. 2 And. 17. But by Holt Ch. Justice, the words equally to be divided, do not make a tenancy in common in a deed, but a jointenancy; tho' they might in a will. 1 Salk. 390. "Equally to be divided" in a deed of uses makes a tenancy in common. Wils. par. 1. 261.

It is said a term for years of goods devised to two equally, makes a tenancy in common, and not jointenancy; but land devised to two equally, makes a jointenancy. 3 Cro. 697. 3 Salk. 205. A devise to two equally to be divided, habendum to them and the heirs of the survivor, is a jointenancy. Style 211, 434. Lands are given by will to two persons, and the survivor of them, and their heirs, equally to be divided between them share and share alike; it is held that the first part of the devise makes them jointenants for life, and the latter words import a tenancy in common, so as they are tenants in common of the inheritance. 2 Peere Williams 280, 282. What words in a will make a tenancy in common, and yet there shall be a survivorship, if any of the devisees die under age, see Wils. par. 1. 165. One by will gives the residue of his personal estate to three persons, it is a jointenancy, and the survivor takes the whole; and where a surplus of such estate is devised to A. and B. after the debts and legacies are paid, on one's dying, it will survive. 2 Peere Williams 347.

Two or more purchase land, and advance the money in equal parts, and take a conveyance to them and their heirs; this makes a jointenancy with the chance of survivorship: But where the proportions of money are not equal, they are in nature of partners; and tho' the legal estate survives, the survivor shall be as a trustee for the others, in respect of the sums paid by each. Abr. Caf. Eq. 291. So if where two having purchased jointly, afterwards one lays out a considerable sum on improvements, &c. and dies, in equity it shall be a lien on the lands, and a trust for the representative of him who advanced it. Ibid.

A rent of 10 l. a year is granted to A. and B. to hold to one until he marry, and to the other till he is presented to such a church; it was holden they were jointenants, and that if either of them die before marriage or presentment, the rent shall survive. 1 Inst. 180. If lands are given to two men, and the heirs of their bodies, the remainder to them and their heirs; they shall be jointenants for life, tenants in common of the estate-tail, and jointenants of the fee-simple. Ibid. 183. But where a remainder is limited to the right heirs of two persons, in this this ease they shall take severally, tho' the words be joint. 5 Rep. 8. Land is granted to a man, and such woman as shall be his wife; here is no jointenancy, but the man will have the whole: Tho' if one make a feoffment in fee to the use of himself, and of such wife as he shall after marry, for their lives; when he takes a wife, they are jointenants. Co. Litt. 188. 1 Rep. 101.

One person is in by the Common law, and another by limitation of use, yet they may be jointenants by virtue of a deed of grant, &c. Jenk. Cent. 330. Lands given in the premises of a deed to three, to hold to one for life, remainder to another for life, remainder to the third for life, they are not jointenants, but shall take successively. Dyer 160.

There may be a jointenancy, tho' there is not equal benefit of survivorship on both sides. 1 Inst. 181. When a fee-simple estate is limited by a new conveyance, there one may have the fee, and another an estate for life; but when two persons are tenants for life first, and one of them gets the fee-simple, there the jointure is severed. 2 Rep. 6. If a reversion descend upon one jointenant, the jointure is severed, and by operation of law they are then tenants in common. 1 Bulst. 113. And a diversity has been taken, that where the reversion comes to the freehold, the jointure is destroyed; but when the freehold comes to him in reversion, and to another, it is otherwise. Cro. Eliz. 470, 743.

Two infants are jointenants, and one of them makes a feoffment of his moiety: this will be a severance of the jointenancy. Bro. Jointen. 13. A jointenant in fee grants a lease for life, and then dies; it severs the jointure: Tho' if the tenant for life die before either of the jointenants, then it is in statu quo prius. Co. Litt. 193. If there be two jointenants in fee, and one makes a lease for life to a stranger, the freehold and reversion is severed from the jointure: But in case one such jointenant leases for years, the jointure of the inheritance is not severed; and the other jointenant shall have the reversion by survivorship. Lut. 729, 1173. Two jointenants are of a lease for twenty-one years, and one lets his part but for three years, the jointure is severed, so that survivorship shall not take place. 1 Inst. 188, 192. In case three persons are jointly interested in a term, and one of them mortgages his third part; by this it has been held, the jointenancy was severed. 1 Salk. 158. But where one jointenant of lands, in order to sever the jointenancy, and provide for his wife, makes a deed of gift of his moiety to her; this being made to the wife, and so void in law, cannot be made good. Preced. Canc. 124. If two jointenants be of a term, and one commits felony, or is outlawed, &c. the jointure will be severed; for the King shall have the moiety by the forfeiture: And if the jointenancy is of personal things, all will be forfeited. Plowd. 410.

Where there are several jointenants in fee-tail, and some of them suffer a common recovery of the whole, the estate of the others is turned to a right; and contingent remainders may be destroyed, and a new estate gained thereby. Sid. 241. And if one jointenant levies a fine, it severs the jointenancy; but it doth not amount to an actual turning out of his companion. 1 Salk. 286. A jointenant in fee, makes a lease for years, of the land, to begin presently, or in futuro, and dies, it is a severance of the jointenancy, and cannot be avoided by the survivor; because immediately by force of the lease, the lessee hath a right in the same land, of all that to the lessor belongs. Lit. 286. And it has been held, that where a jointenant in fee or for life, makes a lease for years to commence after his death, it is good against the survivor. 2 Cro. 91. 2 Nels. Abr. 1037. But it has been also adjudged not good. Moor 776. Noy 157. See 2 Vern. 323.

If there are two jointenants for life, it is said each of them hath an estate for life, and for the life of his companion; and for that reason, if one of them make a lease, it shall continue not only during the life of the lessor, but after his death during the life of his companion, as long as the original estate out of which it was derived: Tho' it hath been resolved, that such a jointenant hath only an estate for his own possibility of surviving; his companion to be entitled to his part; therefore if he grants over his estate, that possibility is gone; and if he dies, the estate of the grantee shall revert to him in reversion. 1 Roll. 441. Jones 55. 3 Salk. 204, 205. If one jointenant grants a rent charge, &c. out of his part, and dies, the survivor shall have the whole land discharged: For he hath the land by survivorship, and not by descent from his companion. Litt. 286. 1 Co. Inst. 184. And if one jointenant in fee, makes a lease for years, reserving a rent, and dieth; the survivor shall have the reversion, but not the rent, because he claims by title paramount. 1 Inst. 18.

Jointenants, as to the possession of lands in jointure, are seised by intireties of the whole, and of every part equally, (and the possession of any jointenant is the possession of both) but as to the right of the land, they are seised only of moieties, therefore if one grant the whole, a moiety only passeth. 1 Bulst. 3. Cro. Eliz. 809. If there be two jointenants, and each make a several lease of the whole, their several moieties only shall pass by each lease. Wilf. par. 1. fol. 1. Jointenants cannot singly dispose of more than the part that belongs to them; where they join in a feoffment, in judgment of law each of them gives but his respective part; so it is of a gift in tail, lease for life, &c. And for a condition broken, they shall only enter on a moiety of the lands. 1 Inst. 186.

Every jointenant hath a right as to his own share, to several purposes, as to give, lease, forfeit, &c. But a devise of land, whereof the devisor is jointly seised, is void; the will not taking effect till after death, and the title of the survivor cometh by the death. 1 Inst. 186. Litt. 287. One jointenant may lease to his companion: But one jointenant cannot make a feoffment, or grant to another jointenant, tho' he may release. 1 Vent. 78. Raym. 187. By whatever means a jointenant comes to the estate of his companion, by conveyance, &c. from him, it may enure by way of release. 2 Cro. 649.

Action of trespass or trover may not be brought by one jointenant against his companion, because the possession of one is the possession of the other. 1 Salk. 290. Before the stat. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 16. one jointenant had no remedy against his companion, to recover damages for what he had received more than his share; and a jointenant might prejudice his companion in the personalty, by reason of the privity and trust between them, tho' not in the realty; but that statute gives action of account to one jointenant or tenant in common, his executors or administrators, against the other, as bailiff or receiver, his executors, &c. One jointenant may distrain for rent alone; and he may avow in his own right, and as bailiff to the others, but he cannot avow solely; and he may not bring debt alone. 5 Med. 73, 150.

If a jointenant in fee-simple, is indebted to the King, and dieth; the lands cannot be extended in the hands of the survivor, who claimeth not from his companion, but from the feoffor, &c. 1 Inst. 185. Where there are two jointenants, and one is indebted to the King, and dieth, the other shall hold the land discharged of the debt: But if husband and wife have a term jointly, and the husband is indebted to the King, and dieth, in such case the term shall be subject to the debt, because the husband might have disposed of the whole estate. Plowd. 321. Judgment in action of debt, is had against one jointenant for life, who before execution releases to his companion; adjudged that the moiety is still liable to the judgment during the life of the releasor; but if he had died before execution, the survivor should have had the land discharged of the debt and judgment. 6 Rep. 78. Husband and wife were jointenants, and action was brought against the husband alone, who made default, thereupon the wife prayed to be received; but it was not allowed, because she was not a party to the writ; but he in reversion may be received, and plead jointenancy in abatement of the writ. Moor 242.

If a feme sole and A. B. purchase a term for years jointly, and afterwards intermarry, the jointenancy continues. Dyer 318. 2 Nels. Abr. 1035. And where there are two women, jointenants of a lease for years, and one taketh husband, and dies, the term shall survive; if the husband hath not aliened her part, and severed the jointure: But it is otherwise in case of goods, vested in the husband by marriage. 1 Inst. 185. Jointenants sometimes enter into covenants not to take advantage of each other by survivorship. Wood's Inst. 143. When there are two jointenants, and one alien his part, the alienee and the other jointenant are tenants in common; for they claim by several titles. Lit. 292, 319, 321. And jointenants and tenants in common of inheritance, by statute, are to make partition, as coparceners; also jointenants and tenants in common for life or years, may be compelled to do the same by writ of partition, 31 H. 8. c. 1, 32 H. 8. c. 32. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 31.

The King cannot be jointenant with any person, because none can be equal with him. 1 Inst. 1. Finch 83. And Black. Com. 2 V. 409. And a corporation cannot be jointly seised of any estate with another. 2 Lev. 12.

The essential difference between joint-tenants and tenants in common is, that joint-tenants have the lands by one joint title, and in one right, and tenants in common by several titles, or by one title and by several rights; this is the reason, says my lord Coke, that joint-tenants have one joint freehold, and tenants in common have several freeholds, tho' this property is common to them both, viz. that their occupation is undivided, and neither of them knoweth his part in several. Co. Lit. 189. a.

If there be two joint-tenants, and one releaseth to the other, this passeth a fee without the word heirs, because it refers to the whole fee, which they jointly took, and are possessed of, by force of the first-conveyance; but tenants in common cannot release to each other; for a release supposeth the party to have the thing in demand; but tenants in common have several distinct freeholds, which they cannot transfer, otherwise than as persons who are sole seised. Co. Lit. 9. 200. b.

Tenants in common cannot make a joint lease of the whole, for their estates are several and distinct, and there is no privity between them, and for that reason, one tenant in common may enfeoff another. Wilk. par. 2. 232.

Vide this subject fully and very learnedly treated of in 3 New Abr. 187, &c. And see farther as to joint-tenancy, in lands. Black. Com. 2 V. 180. and as to joint-tenancy in things personal. Ib. 2 V. 399.

Jointures of Lands. A jointure is a settlement of lands and tenements made to a woman in consideration of marriage; or it is a covenant, whereby the husband or some friend of his, assureth to the wife, lands or tenements, for term of her life: It is so called, either because it is granted ratione juncturae in matrimonio, or for that land in frank marriage was given jointly to husband and wife, and after to the heirs of their bodies, whereby the husband and wife were made as it were jointenants during the coverture. 3 Rep. 27. By some a jointure is defined to be a bargain and contract of livelihood, adjoined to the contract of marriage; being a competent provision of freehold lands or tenements, &c. for the wife, to take effect after the death of the husband, if she herself is not the cause of the determination or forfeiture of it. 1 Inst. 36. 4 Rep. 2. 3.

According to Co. Lit. 36. b. The maxims of the Common law, that no right could be barred before it accrued; and that a right or title to a freehold could not be barred by acceptance of a collateral satisfaction, and those reasons allowing the wife to claim her dower, and also the benefit of such settlement as was made on her, which being contrary to justice. By 27 H. 8. c. 10. s. 6. Reciting, "That whereas divers persons had purchased, or had estates made and conveyed of, and in divers lands, &c. unto them and their wives, and to the heirs of the husband, or to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of their bodies, or to the husband and wife for term of their lives, or for term of life of the wife." 'Tis enacted, "That in such case, or where any such estate or purchase of any lands, &c. hath been or hereafter shall be made to any husband and to his wife in manner and form above expressed, or to any other person or persons, and to their heirs and assigns, to the use of and behoof of the said husband and wife, or to the use of the wife, as is before rehearsed, for the jointure of the wife; that then in every such case, every woman married having such jointure made, or hereafter to be made, shall not claim nor have title to any dower of the residue of the lands, tenements or hereditaments, that at any time were her said husband's, by whom she hath any such jointure; nor shall demand nor claim her dower of and against them that have the lands and inheritances of her said husband; but if she have no such jointure, then she shall be admitted and enabled to pursue, have, and demand her dower, by writ of dower, after the due course and order of the Common law of this realm; this act or any law or provision made to the contrary thereof notwithstanding."

Stat. 7. Provided, "That if any such woman be lawfully expelled or evicted from her said jointure, or from any part thereof, without any fraud or covin, by lawful entry, action, or by discontinuance of her husband, then every such woman shall be endowed of as much of the residue of her husband's tenements or hereditaments whereof she was before dowable, as the same lands and tenements so evicted and expelled shall amount or extend unto."

Stat. 9. Provided also, "That if any wife have, or hereafter shall have, any manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments unto her given or assured after marriage for term of her life or otherwise, in jointure, except the same assurance be to her made by act of parliament, and the said wife after that fortune to overlive the same her husband in whose time the said jointure was made or assured unto her; that then the same wife so overliving shall and may at her liberty at the death of her said husband refuse to have and take the lands and tenements so to her given, appointed, or assured during the coverture, for term of her life or otherwise, in jointure, except the same assurance be to her made by act of parliament as is aforesaid, and thereupon to have, ask, demand, and take her dower by writ of dower or otherwise, according to the Common law, of and in all such lands, tenements and hereditaments, as her husband was and stood seised of any estate of inheritance at any time during the coverture; any thing, &c."

To make a good jointure within this statute, the six following things are to be regarded:

1. The estate must take effect immediately upon the death of the husband. Vide 4 Co. 3. Hutton 51. Hob. 151. Winch 33. 1 Sid. 3. 4. Per Bridgman. Co. Lit. 133. Moor 851. 3 Bulst. 188. 1 Rol. Rep. 400. 2 Vern. 104.

2. The estate must be for term of the wife's life, or a greater estate. Vide Co. Lit. 36. a. b. 4. Co. 2. b. 3. a.

3. The estate must be made to herself and to others in trust for her. This rule, my Lord Coke says, is so necessary to be observed, that tho' the wife should assent to a jointure made in trust for her, yet it would not be good; for the statute only bars the dower when by it the possession (which was formerly an use) is executed in her. Co. Lit. 36. b.

But as the intention of the statute was to secure the wife a competent provision, and also to exclude her from claiming dower, and likewise her settlement, it seems that a provision or settlement on the wife, tho' by way of trust, if in other respects it answers the intention of the statute, will be enforced in a court of equity.

4. The estate must be in satisfaction of her whole dower. The reason hereof is, that if it be in satisfaction of part only, it is uncertain for what part, therefore void in the whole. Co. Lit. 36. b.

If an estate be made to the wife, in satisfaction of part of her dower before marriage, and after marriage, other lands are conveyed to her, she shall have dower of all the lands of her husband, notwithstanding the settlement is in satisfaction of part. 4 Co. 5.

5. The estate must be expressed to be in satisfaction of her dower; and how far a collateral recompence shall be a bar of dower or jointure. My Lord Coke says, that it must be expressed, or averred to be, in satisfaction of her dower; but quare, for this does not seem requisite, either within the words or intention of the statute. Co. Lit. 36. b. Vide Owen 3. 4 Co. 4. Moor pl. 103. Cro. Eliz. 128.

Essling v. Warburton. Dyer 220. 2 Vent. 340. 1 Chan. Cases 181. Pheasant's case.

It hath been often ruled in Chancery, that if lands, money, goods, &c. are devised to a woman, without saying in lieu or satisfaction of dower, &c. the wife shall have both; because a devise is to be considered as a bounty, and implies a consideration in itself, but if it be said in lieu or recompence of dower, there the wife cannot have both, but may waive which she pleases; 2 Chan. Cases 24. 2 Vern. 365. Preced. Chan. 133. Also vide Bro. Dow. 69. 4 Rep. 4. Dyer 220. 2 Vent. 365. Lawrence v. Lawrence. Abr. Eq. 218-9. S. C. and vide 1 Vern. 463. And Jordan v. Savage. 3 New Abr. 226.

6. The estate must not be made during the coverture. This the very words of the act of parliament require, therefore if a jointure be made to a woman during coverture in satisfaction of dower, she may waive it after her husband's death; but if she enters and agrees thereto, she is concluded: for tho' a woman is not bound by any act when she is not at her own disposal, yet if she agrees to it when she is at liberty, it is her own act, and she cannot avoid it. 4 Co. 3. Also vide Co. Lit. 29. b. 36. b. 348. a. 357. 1 Bulf. 163. Moor 717. pl. 1002. Perk. 352-3. 3 Co. 27. 3 Leon. 272. Cro. Jac. 490. Dyer 351. Hob. 72. 2 Rol. Abr. 422.

All other settlements in lieu of jointure, not made according to the statute; are jointures at Common law, and no bars to claim of dower: And a jointure was no bar of dower before this statute; as a right or title to a freehold cannot be barred by acceptance of a collateral satisfaction. 1 Inst. 36. A father made a settlement to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of his son and his wife, for their lives, for the jointure of the wife; this was adjudged no jointure to bar the wife of her dower, because it might not commence immediately after the death of the husband, who might die in the life-time of the father. 2 Cro. 489. So, if a feoffment be made to the use of the husband for life, remainder to another for years, remainder to the wife for life for her jointure. Ibid. But a feoffment in fee, upon condition that the feoffee shall make another feoffment to the use of the son of the feoffor, and to his the son's wife in tail, remainder to the right heirs of the feoffor, which feoffment is made accordingly; this is a good jointure within the statute, and bar to the dower of the wife. Moor 28.

An estate settled in jointure, coming from the ancestors of the wife, and not of the purchase of the husband or his ancestors, is not within the statute 11 H. 7. c. 20. as to discontinuances, alienations, &c. Where a father of the intended wife, in consideration of marriage, &c. covenanted to assure lands to the husband and wife, his, the covenantor's daughter, and the heirs of her body, &c. this was held no jointure, within the meaning of the statute 11 H. 7. c. 20. being an advancement of the woman by her own father. 2 Cro. 264. 2 Lill. Abr. 80. And an estate in fee-simple conveyed to a woman for her jointure, was not any jointure within the statute; which never extended to lands granted to women in fee: But an estate in fee, conveyed to a woman for her jointure, and in satisfaction of her dower, is a jointure within the statute 27 H. 8. c. 10. 4 Rep. 3.

Yet an estate for life is the usual jointure: And an estate for life upon condition, may bar the wife if she accepts it; as a jointure to a woman on condition to perform the husband's will, was judged good, where the wife entered and agreed to the estate. 3 Rep. 1, 2. &c. If no inheritance is reserved to the husband and his heirs, but the estate is limited to the wife for life, or in tail, the remainder to a stranger; it is not a jointure within the stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20. tho' made by the husband or his ancestor. Cro. Eliz. 2. A husband covenanted to stand seised of lands, to the use of himself and his heirs, till the marriage should take effect; and afterwards to himself, his wife, and their heirs; and it was adjudged a good jointure within the statute 27 H. 8. c. 10. Dyer 248. A devise to a wife for life, or in tail, for her jointure, is good within this statute: But a devise to a wife generally, without expressing what estate, is not good; because it cannot be averred to be for her jointure. 3 Rep. 1. Tho' where an assurance was made to a woman, and it was not expressed to be made for her jointure; it was held it might be averred to be made for that purpose, which is not traversable. Owen. 33.

A man makes his wife a jointure after marriage; and afterwards by will devises, that she shall have a third part of all his lands; with her jointure; here the wife will have the third part of all as a legacy, and if she waives her jointure, she may have a third part of the residue for dower. Dyer 62: If a master, in consideration of service done by his servant; grants lands to the servant and a woman he intends to marry, and the heirs of their bodies, creating an estate-tail; this is not a jointure; not being a gift of the husband, or any of his ancestors, but of his master, and in consideration of service, which will not make the husband such a purchaser as the law requires. Moor 683. But as to considerations; if an estate is settled in jointure upon a woman, in consideration of money paid, and also of a marriage to be had; the marriage shall be looked upon to be the consideration. Cro. Jac. 474. A husband, tenant in tail, remainder to his wife for life, makes a feoffment in fee to the use of himself and wife for life, for her jointure; it is no bar to the wife's dower, because it may be avoided by a writ to her first estate for life. Moor 872. If lands are conveyed to a woman before marriage, in part of her jointure only, and after marriage other lands are granted in full; it is said she may waive and refuse the lands conveyed to her after coverture, and retain her first jointure lands and dower also. 3 Rep. 1, 5. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1039.

Where a jointure is made of lands, (according to the direction of the statute of 27 H. 8. 10.) before coverture, and after the husband and wife alien them by fine, she shall not have dower in any other lands of her husband; but 'tis otherwise where the jointure is made after marriage, when the wife's estate is waivable, and her election of choosing comes not till the death of the husband. 1 Inst. 36. A man levies a fine of his land, and it is granted back again to him and his wife for her jointure, and to the heirs of the husband; then he and his wife levy a fine to another use; the wife if she survive her husband, will have dower notwithstanding the fine. 1 And. 350. If the husband make a lease of lands to his friends, for any number of years, in trust for his wife and children, that she shall have 100 l. a year out of it, or in any such manner; by this she may have the provision, which is no jointure, and likewise her dower. By Bridgman Ch. J. An estate is made to husband in tail, with remainder to the wife for life, and remainder to others; this is not such a jointure, as with her acceptance within the statute will hinder her from dower; and tho' the husband die without issue, it will not help it, but the wife shall be endowed in his other land: But if the estate were made to the husband and wife for their lives, it would be otherwise. 13 Jac. 1 B. R. 2 Shep. Abr. 74.

After the death of the husband, the wife may enter into her jointure, and is not driven to a real action, as she is to recover dower by the Common law; and upon a lawful eviction of her jointure, she shall be endowed according to the rate of her husband's lands, whereof she was dowerable at Common law. 1 Inst. 37. Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10. If she be evicted of part of her jointure, she shall have dower pro tanto. A wife's jointure shall not be forfeited by the treason of the husband: But feme-coverts, committing treason or felony, may forfeit their jointures; and being convict of recusancy, they shall forfeit two parts in three of their jointures and dower, by statute 3 Jac. 1. c. 4. If a woman conceals her jointure, and brings dower and recovers it, and then sets up her jointure, she is barred of her jointure; and by bringing writ of dower for her thirds, the wife waives the benefit of entry into lands, so as to hold them in jointure. Cro. Eliz. 128, 129. 3 Rep. 5. By stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. See Marriage.

Jointress or Jointure. Is she who hath an estate settled on her by the husband, to hold during her life, if she survive him. 17 H. 8. c. 10. 1 Inst. 46. When estates settled on a wife are a jointure, if the jointress makes any alienation of them by fine, feoffment, &c. with another husband, it is a forfeiture of the same; but if they are not a jointure by law, it is otherwise. 2 Nels. 1040. A jointress within the statute may make a lease or forty years, &c. if she so long live; and also for life, and be no forfeiture, tho' she levies a fine sur cognisance de droit; &c. Cro. Jac. 688. 3 Rep. 50. 1 Lill. 81. In other cases, if she levies a fine, it is a forfeiture; and if a jointress within the statute 11 H. 7. c. 20. suffer a recovery covinously to bar the heir, the heir may enter presently, &c. 2 Leon. 206. 1 Plowd. 42.

Journal, Is a day-book or diary of transactions, used in many cases: As by merchants and other tradesmen in their accounts; by mariners in observations at sea, &c.

Journals of Parliament, Are not records, but remembrances, and have been of no long continuance. Hob. Rep. 109.

Jourchoppers, Were regrators of yarn, which formerly perhaps was called journ: They are mentioned in the stat. 8 H. 6. c. 5.

Journeymen, (from the Fr. journee, i. e. A day, or day's work) Was properly one who wrought with another by the day; tho' it is extended by statute to those also who covenant to work with others in their trades or occupation by the year. 5 Elic. c. 4.

Journeys Accounts, (dicta computata) Is a term in law thus understood; if a writ abates by the death of the plaintiff or defendant, or for false Latin, want of form, &c. the plaintiff shall have a new writ by journey accounts, i. e. within as little time as he possibly can after the abatement of the first writ; and this second writ shall be a continuance of the cause, as if the first writ had not abated. Terms de Ley. When the new writ is purchased, which must be recenter, the plaintiff is to recite in an entry upon the roll, that the former writ was abated, and shew for what: Super quo per dictas computat. recenter tulit quoddam aliud breve, &c. 6 Rep. 10. This writ is to be brought presently; and fifteen days is held a convenient time for the purchase of the new writ. 2 Lill. Abr. 83. 1 Lut. 297. Judicial writs shall never be had by journey accounts; because they never abate for form. The abatement of the writ must be without the default of the plaintiff, or a second writ may not be purchased by journey accounts: If a writ abates for the plaintiff's default, in his mistaking the name of the vill, &c. he shall not have a writ of journey accounts; but where it abates by default of the clerk, for any variance or want of form, in such case he may have it. 6 Rep. 10. And when an outlawry is discharged or reversed, the plaintiff may have writ of journey accounts; for there is no default in him. Cro. Jac. 590. The writ must be brought for the same thing, and in the same court, as the first writ.

This learning is now of little use, it being customary to enter a judgment that the writ be quashed, and then to sue forth another.

Ireland, Is a distinct kingdom from England, but subordinate to it in government; and by Poyning's Laws (enacted in Ireland, Anno 10 Hen. 7.) all the statutes of England, till that time were declared in force in Ireland; and by special words, our statutes still may bind the people of Ireland, notwithstanding they have parliaments of their own, who make laws and statutes, being affirmed here by the King and Council. 1 Inst. 141. 2 Inst. 2. 3 Inst. 18. In the proceedings of the Irish parliament; first the lieutenant and council certify to the King the causes and considerations of all such acts, as seem good to them to be passed in parliament; and licence under the Great Seal of England, is obtained to summon and hold a parliament in Ireland: If the acts are affirmed, or altered or changed here, they are transcribed and returned into Ireland under the Great Seal: and all that passes ought to be enrolled here in the Chancery. 12 Rep. 111, 112. Treason committed in Ireland, by an Irish peer, is not triable in England; because he is entitled to a trial by his peers, which cannot be in England, but Ireland. Dyer 360. By 34 Ed. 3. c. 18. all kinds of merchandises may be exported and imported from and to Ireland, by aliens as well as denizens: But wool, and woollen manufactures, &c. are prohibited to be exported from thence into foreign parts by a modern statute. And by the 32 Car. 2. c. 2. cattle, butter, cheese, &c. are not to be imported from Ireland into this kingdom, on pain of forfeiture to the poor. Yet sometimes temporary acts are passed, permitting the importation from Ireland, of various kinds of provisions, i. e. as particular occasions require.

The statute 1 W. & M. c. 9. enacted and declared, "That the pretended parliament assembled at Dublin, was an unlawful assembly; and that all acts done by them are void." All cities, boroughs, &c. were restored by this statute to their privileges, and the proceedings against them vacated; and all Protestants restored to their possessions, &c. By 3 W. & M. c. 2. members of parliament, officers in the government, ecclesiastical persons, lawyers, &c. in Ireland, are to take the oaths, or be liable to forfeitures.

Acts of parliament made in England since the act of 10 H. 7. do not bind them in Ireland; but all acts made in England before 10 H. 7. do bind them in Ireland by the said act made in Ireland. 10 H. 7. cap. 22. 12 Rep. 111.

Lord Coke in 2 Inst. 2. says, that by this law [but there cites it as made 11 H. 7.] Magna Charta extends to Ireland. 4 Inst. 351. recites the statute more fully, and says, that acts of parliament made in England since that time, wherein Ireland is not particularly named or generally included, extend not thereunto; for tho' it be governed by the same law, yet it is a distinct realm or kingdom, and hath parliaments there. Prisons, to secure prisoners. According to Blackstone, in his Com. 4 V. 297. Imprisonment (before trial) is only for safe custody, and not for punishment: therefore, in the dubious interval between the commitment and trial, a prisoner ought to be used with the utmost humanity; and neither be loaded with needless fetters, or subjected to other hardships than such as are absolutely requisite for the purpose of confinement only: though what are so requisite, must too often be left to the discretion of the goalers; who are frequently a merciless race of men, and by being conversant in scenes of misery, steeled against any tender sensation.

Yet the law will not justify them in fettering a prisoner, unless he is unruly, or has attempted an escape: (2 Inst. 381. 3 Inst. 34.) this being the humane language of our ancient lawgivers: "Custodes potestate sibi commissam non augeant, nec eos torquent; sed omni servitia remota, pietateque adhibita, judicia debite exequantur." Flex. lib. 1. c. 26.

The same learned author, in the same Vol. fo. 317, saith, The prisoner is to be called to the bar by his name; and it is laid down in our ancient books, that, though under an indictment of the highest nature, he must be brought to the bar without irons, or any manner of shackles or bonds; unless there be evident danger of an escape, and then he may be secured with irons. Isle, (Insula), Is land inclosed in, and invironed with the sea or fresh water. There are several islands belonging to England; as the isles of Jersey and Guernsey, Isle of Man, &c. The isles of Jersey and Guernsey are not bound by our acts of parliament, except they are specially named; nor do our original writs run into those islands: But the King's Commission under the Great Seal runs there, to redress any injuries; yet the commissioners must judge according to the laws and customs of those isles: And for controversies arising in law, among the King's subjects in the isles of Jersey and Guernsey, &c. the King and his Privy Council are the proper judges, without appeal. 4 Inst. 286, 287. The purchase was completed in the year 1765, and confirmed by statute 5 Geo. 3. c. 26 & 39. whereby the whole Island and all its dependencies, (formerly granted) except the landed property of the Arthol family, their manorial rights and emoluments, and the patronage of the bishoprick and other ecclesiastical benefices, are unalienably vested in the crown, and subjected to the regulations of the British excise and customs.

Issuable terms. Hilary and Trinity terms, are usually called issuable terms, from the making up of the issues therein. Tho' for causes tried in Middlesex and London, many issues are made up in Easter and Michaelmas terms.

Issue, (Exitus, from the Fr. Issuer, i. e. Emanare) Hath divers significations in law; sometimes it is taken for the children begotten between a man and his wife, sometimes for profits growing from amerciaments and fines;

sometimes for the profits of lands and tenements: But it generally signifies the point of matter, issuing out of the allegations and pleas of the plaintiff and defendant in a cause, to be tried by a jury of twelve men. 1 Inst. 126. 11 Rep. 10.

The issues concerning causes are of two kinds:

Upon matter of fact,
and
Matter of law.

An issue in fact is where the plaintiff and defendant have agreed upon a point to be tried by a jury; and issue in law is where a demurrer to a declaration, plea, &c. and a joinder in demurrer, which is an issue at law to be determined by the judges. 1 Inst. 71, 72.

As to issues of fact, viz. whether the fact is true or false, which are triable by the jury, they are either

or

General, when it is left to the jury to try whether the defendant hath done any such thing as the plaintiff lays to his charge; as when he pleads Not guilty to a trespass, &c.

Special is when some special matter, or material point alleged by the defendant in his defence, is to be tried; as in assault and battery, where the defendant pleads that the plaintiff struck first, &c. 1 Inst. 126. And when special matter is alleged by the defendant, both parties join thereupon, and so go to a trial by the jury, if it be questio facti; or to a demurrer, if it be questio juris.

There is also a general issue, wherein the defendant may give the special matter in evidence, for excuse or justification, by virtue of several statutes, made for avoiding prolixity of pleading; and upon the general issue in such cases, the defendant may give any thing in evidence, which proves the plaintiff hath no cause of action. 1 Inst. 283. Matter amounting to the general issue, and special matter of justification, have been joined in one intire plea, and held good. 3 Lev. 41. And where there is an issue upon Not guilty, and there are other issues upon justifications, the trial of the general issue of Not guilty, is but matter of form, and the substance is upon the special matter. Cro. Jac. 599. But the general issue is pleaded, to put the plaintiff on proof of the fact.

In real actions, causes grown to issue are tried by a jury of twelve men of the county where the cause of action arises; and in criminal cases, issues ought to be tried in the county where the offence was committed; but this hath admitted of some alteration by statute. 3 Inst. 80, 135. 2 Rep. 93.

The place ought not to be made part of the issue, in a transitory action; it is not material, as it is in real and mixed actions. Trin. 24 Car. B. R. If the place is material, and made a part of the issue, there the jury cannot find the fact in another place, because by the special pleading, the point in issue is restrained to a certain place; but upon the general issue pleaded, the jury may find all local things in another county, and where the substance of the issue is found, it is good, and the finding more may be surplusage. 6 Rep. 46. If an issue is of two matters in two counties, trial may be in one county, by the statute 21 Jac. for that statute extends to cases where the matter in issue arises in two counties, and the trial is by one only, as well as where the matter in issue arises in two places in one county, and the trial is by one. 2 Lev. 121. 2 Nels. Abr. 1050. Every issue is to be joined in such a court that hath power to try it, otherwise the issue is not well joined; for if the cause cannot be tried, the issue is fruitless, and if it be tried, the trial is coram non judice. 21 Car. B. R. 2 Lill. Abr. 84.

Where an issue is not joined, there cannot be a good trial, nor ought judgment to be given. 2 Nels. Abr. 1042. All issues are to be certain and single, and joined upon the most material thing in the cause; that all the matter in question between the parties may be tried. 23 Car. B. R. 2 Lill. 85. An immaterial issue joined, which will not bring the matter in question to be tried, is not helped after verdict by the statute of jeofails; but there must be a replender: But an informal issue is helped. 18 Car. 2. B. R.

For the difference between an immaterial and informal issue, see Annals 341. The statute 32 H. c. 30. helps misjoining of issues.

A replender may be awarded after verdict, for the badness and uncertainty of the issue: And a judgment may be reversed in error, being on an immaterial issue. 2 Lutw. 1608. 2 Lew. 194. On a joint trespass by many persons, there must be only one issue joined: And if several offences are alleged against the defendant, he ought to take all but one by protestation, and offer an issue upon that one, and no more. Moor 80. But in action for damages, according to the loss which the plaintiff hath sustained, every part ought to be put in issue. 1 Saund. 269. In action upon the case for service done for a time certain, the defendant ought to put in issue all the time alleged in the declaration. Lutw. 1268. And upon a general issue in waste, the plaintiff must shew his title. Ibid. 1547. Tho' when any special point is in issue, the plaintiff is not obliged to set forth any other matter. Cro. Eliz. 320. If there are several things in a declaration, upon which an issue may be joined, and it is joined in any of them, it is good; and an affirmative and an implied negative will make a good issue. Style 151, 210.

There must be in every issue an affirmation on the one part, as that the defendant owes such a debt, &c. and a denial on the other part, as that he oweth not the debt, &c. And tho' the matter contradicts, yet there must be a negative and affirmative of it, to make a right issue. 1 Ventr. 213. An issue may be of two affirmatives. Wils. par. 1. 6. Also a negative should be as full as the affirmative, or it is no negative to make an issue; as if a defendant pleads a grant of four acres, and two acres only are denied, &c. 1 Roll. Rep. 86. It has been held, that issue ought not to be joined on a traverse only, without answering in the affirmative, &c. 2 And. 6, 102. But where the matter, which is the gist or cause of the action is found, it has been adjudged good after verdict, tho' there was no negative and affirmative to make the issue; as where in debt upon bond the defendant pleads payment, and concludes to the country, without giving the plaintiff opportunity to deny the payment, if the jury in such case find the money paid, it is good after verdict. Sid. 341.

If several issues are joined, and the jury give a verdict but as to one of them, the whole is discontinued; and where there are two issues joined, one good and the other bad, if entire damages are given upon the trial on both issues, it will be error; but if several damages are found, the plaintiff may release the bad damages, and have judgment for the rest. 2 Lill. Abr. 87, 88. And it is said judgment may be entered as to one part of the issue; and a nolle prosequi to another part of the same issue, where it may be divided. Pasch. 23 Car. B. R. Where two issues are joined, and a verdict only on one of 'em, it is a mistrial and the judgment may be arrested, and a venire facias de novo awarded, if error brought, the judgment must be arrested. Annals 246.

There may be a plea to issue to part, and a demurrer to part; which have no dependance on each other. 1 Saund. 338. Where the declaration of the plaintiff is good, and the plea of the defendant is ill; if the plaintiff in his replication tender an issue upon such ill plea, and a trial is had, and it is found for the plaintiff, he shall have judgment. Cro. Car. 18. And generally, when a plea is naught, that the plaintiff might have demurred upon it, and he doth not, but takes issue, and it is found for the defendant; this is aided by the statute of jeofails, and the defendant shall have judgment: So likewise where the replication is naught, and issue is taken upon it, and found for the plaintiff, he shall have judgment. Cro. Eliz. 455. Cro. Jac. 312. But there are many cases where the plea or replication is bad in substance, it is not aided by the statute of jeofails. See Com. Dig. V. 1. tit. Amendment.

If issue be taken on a dilatory plea, &c. and found against the defendant, final and peremptory judgment shall be given; but it is otherwise on a demurrer. Raym. 118. A good issue is offered to the defendant, he ought not to plead over; and if he plead over, the plaintiff shall have judgment. 1 Saund. 318, 338. If he does not join issue, but demurs, it is the same. The plaintiff's attorney is to be paid by the defendant's attorney for entering the plea; and for paper books, in special pleadings, &c. 2 Lill. 87, 88. And when issue is joined between the parties, it cannot be afterwards waived, if it be a good issue, without consent of both parties: But where defendant pleads the general issue, and it is not entered, he may within four days of the term, waive that issue, and plead specially; and when the defendant pleads an abatement, he may at any time after waive his plea of special matter, and plead the general issue, unless there be a rule made for him to plead as he will stand by it. 12 W. 3. B. R. 3 Salk. 211. If the plaintiff will not try the issue after joined, in such time as he ought by the course of the court, the defendant may give him a rule to enter it; which if he does not he shall be nonsuit, &c. 2 Lill. 84. If the tender of the issue comes on the part of the plaintiff, the form of it is; And this he prays may be inquired by the record; or by the country; and when on the part of the defendant, And of this he puts himself up on the country; and The plaintiff doth the like, &c.

There are many acts of parliament, that enable the defendant to plead the general issue—Too numerous, to set forth in a dictionary.—We therefore refer the reader to the tables of the statutes, tit. General Issue, &c.

Issues on Sheriffs. Are for neglects and defaults, by amercement and fine to the King, levied out of the issues and profits of their lands; and double or treble issues may be laid on a sheriff for not returning writs, &c. But they may be taken off before retreated into the Exchequer, by rule of court, on good reason shewn. 2 Lill. Abr. 89. Issues shall be levied on jurors, for non-appearance; tho' on reasonable excuse proved by two witnesses, the justices may discharge the issues. Stat. 35 Hen. 8. cap. 6. See 1 Keb. 475.

Itinerant, (Itinerans) Travelling or taking a journey: And those were anciently called Justices Itinerant, who were sent with commission into divers counties to hear causes.

The King's courts were formerly itinerant, being kept in the King's palace, and removing with his household. The Common Pleas is now fixed by Magna Charta; but tho' the court of King's Bench is constantly held in Westminster-Hall, yet there is nothing but custom to fix it there, as it is supposed to be before the King, and if actually so, must be itinerant.

Itinerary, (Itinerarium) A commentary concerning things falling out in journies. Law Lat. Dist.

Jubilee, (Annus Jubilæus) The most solemn time of Festival at Rome, when the Pope gives his blessing and remission of sins. It was first instituted by Boniface the 8th, in the year 1300, who granted a plenary indulgence and remission of sins to all who should visit the churches of St. Peter and St. Paul at Rome in that year, and stay there fifteen days; and this he ordered to be observed once in every hundred years; which Pope Clement the 6th reduced to fifty years, anno 1350, and to be held upon the day of circumcision of our Saviour: And Urban the 4th, in the year 1389, ordained it to be kept every thirty-three years, that being the age of our Saviour: After which, Pope Sixtus the 6th, reduced it to twenty-five years. In imitation of the grand jubilee of Rome, the Monks of Christ-Church in Canterbury, every fiftieth year invited a great concourse of people to come thither, and visit the tomb of Thomas Becket. And King Edw. 3. in the fiftieth year of his age, which was 1362, caused his birth-day to be observed at court, in the name of a Jubilee; giving pardons, privileges, and other civil indulgencies.

Jubilæus, Signified afterwards a man one hundred years old, and likewise a possession or prescription for fifty years. Si ager non invenitur in scriptis inquiratur de senioribus, &c. Et si sub certo jubileo mansit, sine vituperatione maneat in æternum. Du Fresnoie.

Judaism, (Judaismus) The customs, religion, or rites of the Jews: Also the income heretofore accruing from the Jews to the King: And the word Judaism was formerly used for a mortgage; and sometimes taken for usury. Ex Magno Rot. Pipæ, de anno 9 Ed. 2.

Judaismus is also taken for the mansion or dwelling-place of the Jesus in any town; as Wigorniam cepit & intravit, & Judaismus evertit. Rishangor, p. 668. And it sometimes signifies usury: as, Empta fuit grangia, &c. domus obligata in magnis debitis in Judaismo. Mon. 1 tom. p. 834.

Judge, (Judex) Is a chief magistrate in the law, to try civil and criminal causes, and punish offences. He is appointed with a certain jurisdiction; and our King hath the nomination and appointment of judges. 2 Inst. 56. A judge at his creation takes an oath, That he will serve the King, and indifferently administer justice to all men, without respect of persons, take no bribe, give no counsel where he is a party, nor deny right to any, tho' the King by his letters, or by express words, command the contrary, &c. and he is answerable in body, land and goods. 18 Ed. 3. c. 1. Judex est lex loquens, and ought to judge by laws, and not by examples: by Glanvil a judge is called justicia in abstracto, because he should be as it were justice itself. Co. Litt. 71. 7 Rep. 4. And all the commissions of judges are bounded with this limitation, Facturi quod ad justitiam pertinet secundum legem & consuetudinem Angliæ. There are ancient precedents of judges, who were fined when they transgressed the laws, tho' commanded by warrants from the King; and it is said that Earl Tyttest, who was a Chancellor, was beheaded, for acting upon the King's warrant against law. Burnet's Rich. 2. pag. 38. The judges are to give judgment according to law, and what is alledged and proved: And they have a private knowledge, and a judicial knowledge, tho' they cannot judge of their own private knowledge, but may use their discretion; but where a judge has a judicial knowledge he may and ought to give judgment according to it. Plowd. 82. King Henry 4. demanded of Judge Gascoigne, if he saw one in his presence kill A. B. and another person who was not culpable, should be indicted of this, and found Guilty before him, what he would do in this case; to which he answered, That he ought to respect the judgment against him, and relate the matter to the King, in order to procure him a pardon; for there he cannot acquit him, and give judgment according to his private knowledge. Ibid.

And the same King Henry, when his eldest son the Prince, was by the Lord Chief Justice committed to prison, for a great misdemeanor, thanked God that he had a son of that obedience, and a judge of that courage and impartiality. Stow. The King in all cases doth judge by his judges; who ought to be of counsel with prisoners: And if they are doubtful or mistaken in matter of law, a slander-by may be allowed to inform the court, as amicus curiæ. 2 Inst. 178. Our judges are to execute their offices in proper person, and cannot act by deputy, or transfer their power to others; as the judges of ecclesiastical courts may. 1 Roll. Abr. 382. Bro. Judges, 11. Yet where there are divers judges of a court of record, the act of any one of them is effectual; especially if their commissions do not expressly require more. 2 Hawk. 3. Tho' what a majority rules when present, is the act of the court. If on a demurrer or special verdict, the judges are divided in opinion, two against two, the cause must be adjourned into the Exchequer Chamber. 3 Mod. 156. And a rule is to be made for this purpose, and the record certified, &c. 5 Mod. 335. In fines levied all the judges of C. B. ought to be particularly named: But writs of certiorari to remove records out of that court, &c. are directed to the Chief Justice, without naming his companions. 1 H. 7. 27. Jenk. Cent. 167.

When a record is before the judges, they ought ex officio to try it: And they are to take notice of statutes, and of the terms, &c. Ibid. 215, 298. No judge is compellable to deliver his opinion before-hand, in relation to any question which may after come judicially before him. 3 Inst. 29. Judges of the Common law, have no ordinary jurisdiction to examine witnesses at their chambers; tho' by consent of parties, and rule of court, they may on interrogatories; and some things done by judges at their chambers, in order to proceedings in court, are accounted as done by the court.

A judge shall not be generally excepted against, or challenged; or have any action brought against him, for what he does as judge. 1 Inst. 294. 2 Inst. 422. And to kill a judge of either bench, or of assize, &c. in his place administering justice, is treason: Also drawing a weapon only upon a judge, in any of the courts of justice, the offender shall lose his right hand, forfeit his lands and goods, and suffer perpetual imprisonment. 25 Ed. 3. cap. 2. 2 Inst. 549. Judges are not in any way punishable for a mere error of judgment: And no action will lie against a judge for an erroneous judgment; or for a wrongful imprisonment, &c. 2 Hawk. 4. 1 Mod. 184. The judges of courts of record are freed from all prosecutions whatsoever, except in the parliament, where they may be punished, for any thing done by them in such courts as judges; this is to support their dignity and authority, and draw veneration to their persons, and submission to their judgments: But if a judge will so far forget the dignity and honour of his post, as to turn solicitor in a cause which he is to judge, and privately and extrajudicially tamper with witnesses, or labour jurors, he may be dealt with according to the same capacity to which he so basely degrades himself. 13 Rep. 24. Vaugh. 138. S. P. C. 173.

Bribery in judges is punishable by loss of office, fine and imprisonment; and by the Common law, bribery of judges in relation to a cause depending before them, has been punished as treason. 1 Leon. 295. Cro. Jac. 65. 1 Hawk. 170. A judge ignorantly condemns a man to death for felony, when it is not felony; for this offence, the judge shall be fined and imprisoned, and lose his office. Jenk. Cent. 162. If a judge who hath no jurisdiction of the cause, give judgment of death and award execution, which is executed, such judge is guilty of felony; and also the officer who executes the sentence. H. P. C. 35. 10 Rep. 76. And if justices of peace, on indictment of trespass, arraign a man of felony, and judge him to death, and he is executed, it is felony in them. H. P. C. 35. Dalt. cap. 98. A judge ought not to judge in his own cause, or in pleas where he is party. 8 Rep. 118.

If a fine be levied to a justice of Bank, he cannot take the consuance; for he cannot be his own judge. 8 H. 6. 21. Br. Patents, pl. 15. cites S. C. per Martin. If a fine be levied by a justice in Bank, his name shall not be in the fine. 11 H. 6. 49. b. So, if a fine be levied to a justice of Bank, his name shall not be in the fine; because he shall not be judge in his own cause. Ibid.

So if a justice of Bank be sued in Bank, he cannot record it; it shall be recorded by the other justices. So if a justice of Bank sues there, he cannot record it, but it shall be recorded by the other justices. Ibid. If the chief justice of Bank be to sue a writ there, the writ shall not be in his name, but in the name of the secondary. 8 H. 6. 19. b.

None may judge in his own cause. Ibid. See Herodii Directa, lib. 2. fol. 1440. — Arg. Bridgm. 11, 12. for it is a manifest contradiction that a man can be agent and patient in the same thing, and what Lord Coke says in Dr. Bonham's case is far from any extravagancy; for it is a very reasonable and true saying, that if an act of parliament should ordain, that the same person should be party and judge, or, as is the same thing, judge in his own cause, it would be a void act of parliament; per Holt Ch. J. 12 Mod. 687.

This is a ground in the feudal law also, as appears in the prelections of Wesmbech. cap. 17. fol. 401.

Judgment given by a judge, who is party in the suit with another, and so entered of record, is error, altho' several other judges sit there, and give judgment for the judge who is party. Jenk. 90. pl. 74.

Judger. In Cheshire, to be judge of a town, is to serve on the jury there. Leicester's Hist. Antiq. 302.

Judgment, (judicium, quasi juris dictum) Is the determination or sentence of the judges upon the suit, &c. and the ancient words of judgments are, consideratum est per curiam, &c. because judgment is ever given by the court upon due consideration had of the record and matter before them. 1 Inst. 39. Of judgments, some are final, and some not, &c. And a judgment may be given not only upon trial of the issue; but by default, nihil dicit, confession, or on demurrer; and outlawry is a judgment in itself. 1 Inst. 167. 2 Inst. 236. Finch. 457. There is likewise judgment for departing in despite of the court, without leave, in common recoveries, &c. And after an issue joined in a cause to be tried by the plaintiff and defendant, the plaintiff may, (if he will,) without going to trial or any verdict, accept of a judgment from the defendant, which judgment must be by relucta verificatione cognovit actionem: but on this judgment error may be brought without putting in bail, which it may not on judgment after verdict. 2 Lill. Abr. 104.

Judgment is sometimes had with a cessat executio; and if the defendant gives a judgment, with stay of execution, till a certain day, the plaintiff may notwithstanding sue forth a capias or a feri facias into the county where the action is laid, returnable before the day, to enable him at that day to take a testatum against the defendant; tho' he shall not in that case sue out a capias to warrant a scire facias against the bail. Pasch. 22 Car. 2. If debt be brought against an executor upon the bond of the testator, and he pleads plene administravit, this is a confession of the debt; and the plaintiff may have judgment with a cessat executio till the defendant hath assets. 4 Rep. 2 Nels. Abr. 1052.

On interlocutory judgments, upon dilatory pleas, it is in many cases respondet auster, to answer over; and if the plaintiff or defendant die after interlocutory judgment, the action shall not abate. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. Judgment upon a demurrer to a declaration, &c. is no bar to any other action; because it is not on the merits, and the plaintiff may afterwards make his declaration right, and then proceed. 2 Lill. 113. But other judgments may be pleaded in bar to any other action for the same cause; and judgment in an inferior court, may be alledged in bar to an action in a superior court. 2 Lev. 93. A judgment on nil dicit, in case, trespass, or covenant, &c. is not perfect, until writ of enquiry of damages taken out and executed upon it, of which notice is to be given the defendant, and the time of execution, &c. But in debt, it is a perfect judgment as soon as signed, &c. and there needs no writ of enquiry. 2 Lill. 105.

Where damages are given upon a judgment without trial, there shall issue out a writ of enquiry of damages; and when judgment is given on trial of the issue, the court gives damages, without writ of enquiry. 1 Inst. 167. Judgment final ought not to be given upon default in real actions; but a grand cape upon default before appearance, and a petit cape on default after appearance. 1 Lev. 105.

If in debt, part is found for the plaintiff, and the defendant acquitted of the residue, the judgment must be quod quer. in misericordia for that part whereof the defendant is acquitted. Cro. Eliz. 699. But the statute 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 12. takes away the capiatur in trespass, assault, false imprisonment, &c. and there is in lieu thereof 6s. 8d. paid to the secondary for the fine before he signs judgment.

All judgments given in any court of record, must be duly entered: the plaintiff's attorney, four days after the posse is brought into court, if the rule for judgment is out, may enter judgment for his client by the course of the court. 2 Lill. Abr. 55. After a rule to sign judgment, there ought to be four days exclusive of the day on which the rule was made, before the judgment is signed, that the party may have a reasonable time to bring writ of error: in C. B. they never give rules for signing judgment, but stay till the quarto die post, which makes but four days inclusive. Mod. Caf. 241. A plaintiff got his judgment signed on the very day, but it was not executed till after the sixth day, so that the defendant had time enough to bring a writ of error, or move any thing in arrest of judgment: but the court of B. R. held the signing of the judgment to be irregular, it being before the day allowed by the rules of the court; and tho' execution was taken out afterwards, judgment was set aside. 5 Mod. 205.

If a disfringas is returnable within term, and the party, &c. is tried two or three days only before the end of the term, the judgment shall be entered that very term, tho' there be not four days to move in arrest of judgment. 1 Salk. 77. But if verdict be given after term, no judgment can be given on it till the next term following; for the judgment is the act of the court, and the court sits not but in term. Mich. 22 Car. B. R. If verdict pass for the plaintiff, and he will not enter his judgment; the defendant by motion of court may oblige him to it. 2 Lill. Abr. 97. The defendant may enforce the plaintiff to enter his judgment, to the end he may plead it to another action. Latch. 216. 1 Danv. 722. Palm. 281. So if the defendant wants to bring a writ of error. Judgments are not only to be signed by a Judge, but entered of record; before which they are not judgments; and in a judgment given to recover a sum of money, the sum must be entered in words at length; and not in figures, which may be easily altered; and a judgment was reversed, because the time when given was in figures, and the sum recovered expressed in figures, &c. But the court may amend their judgments of the same term, because the term is but as one day in law; tho' they may not do it in another term. 2 Lill. 103. 3 Lev. 430. If a judgment be unduly obtained, the court will vacate the judgment, and restore the party damaged; if not, punish the offender: but it is against the course of the court to vacate a judgment the last day of the term. Pasch. 1656.

By statute, if the plaintiff die before judgment, it shall not hinder the judgment being entered, provided it be done within two terms after verdict. 17 Car. 2. cap. 8. A judgment entered in C. B. shall relate to the effoin day of the term, and be a judgment from that time: but a judgment in B. R. shall relate only to the first day of the term. Cro. Car. 102. If a rule be given for the defendant to plead at a certain day, and he do not plead accordingly, the plaintiff may enter judgment against him, without moving the court; tho' in real actions, and criminal causes, on indictments, &c. there must be a motion in court for a peremptory rule. 2 Lill. 116. Yet a plaintiff, after he hath signed judgment against the defendant, may waive if it he will, and accept of a plea from the defendant. Trin. 23 Car. B. R.

If a judgment be obtained, but the plaintiff doth not take out execution within a year and a day, the judgment must be revived by scire facias. If any thing be entered in a judgment, which is not mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration, the judgment is not good. 2 Lill. 104. And where it appears upon the record, that the plaintiff hath no cause of action, he shall never have judgment. 8 Rep. 120. In such case the court may give judgment for the defendant. 1 Plowd. 66. Altho' it appear to the court that the defendant's title is not good, if the plaintiff in his declaration hath not set forth a good title for himself, the court shall never give him judgment. 2 Lill. 98. Tho' the plaintiff destroys the defendant's title, if he gives him another title by pleading, &c. the defendant shall have judgment; for the court are to judge upon the whole record. 8 Rep. 90. But if action of trespass is brought for trespass done in lands belonging to such a house, and it appears at the trial that the plaintiff had no title to the house, the court cannot give judgment to turn him out of possession, because that was not judicially before them. 3 Salk. 213.

In debt on specialty, the whole and exact sum must be demanded; or the judgment upon it will not be good. 3 Mod. 41. If more be in the judgment than the plaintiff demands, it is erroneous; tho' this may be helped by a remisit dampna for part. 2 Lill. 27.

If issue is found against one party in a suit, and not against the other, judgment may be for the plaintiff to recover against him where the matter is found; and a nil capiat per billam be entered against the plaintiff as to the other. 1 Saund. 216. And when several damages are recovered against several defendants, the plaintiff may enter a nolle prosequi as to one of the defendants, &c. and have judgment against one only for the damages against him. 3 Mod. 101. In trespass and assault against three persons, they plead severally, and are found guilty, and entire damages are given, the judgment is good; and where there is but one judgment for the damages against several, the plaintiff may make his election against which he will take his judgment. Cro. Jac. 384. Cro. Eliz. 118. If one entire judgment is given against two several persons, and one of them is an infant, the whole judgment is void; (which being entire cannot be divided) except the infant be joint executor with the other party. 2 Lill. 100. When a judgment is entire, it cannot be divided, to make one part of it good, and another part thereof erroneous; but if it be not an entire judgment, it may. Ibid. On action where damages are to be recovered, if the declaration be good in part, and insufficient in part, and the defendant demurs upon the entire declaration; the plaintiff shall have judgment for that which is well laid, and be barred for the rest. 2 Saund. 379. And if in action of debt upon three bonds, it appears that one of them is forfeited, &c. the plaintiff shall have judgment for the other two. 1 Saund. 286.

Where a judgment is partly by the Common law, and partly by statute, the judgment at Common law may remain and be compleat, without the other. 1 Salk. 24.

Where there are two distinct judgments, one at Common law, and the other by statute, one may be affirmed, and the other reversed on a writ of error. Annals 50.

Every judgment ought to be compleat and formal: one judgment cannot determine another judgment; and the judges will not give a judgment against law, although the plaintiff and defendant do agree to it. 1 Salk. 213. Cro. Eliz. 817. Trin. 23 Car. B. R. In actions personal, judgment given against the plaintiff upon any plea to bar him, is peremptory. Jenk. Cent. 52. If the defendant doth not deny the debt, or other matter in suit, but endeavours to elude the action by insufficient pleading: in this case, if it be found for the plaintiff, he shall have judgment; but non vice versa, if for the defendant, because the matter of the suit is not fully and sufficiently denied, but in some measure confessed by the insufficient plea. Ibid. 70. Judgment may not be given for the plaintiff upon an insufficient bar, if the replication be so, and shew no title, but a judgment shall not be set aside for mispleading a point collateral to the issue. Hob. 8, 128. In debt upon an obligation, the defendant pleaded that he delivered it on a condition to be performed by the plaintiff, which he had not done, and therefore it was not his deed: the jury found for the defendant, that the condition was not performed, yet the plaintiff had judgment; for the defendant's plea confesses it to be his deed, and the verdict does not disprove it, and the issue is deed or no deed, &c. Jenk. Cent. 102. Here the plaintiff hath his judgment upon the defendant's confession, not upon the verdict. Ibid.

A judgment contrary to the verdict found in the case is generally void; for it is to be warranted by the verdict. Mich. 23 Car. B. R. There may be cases where judgment may be given for one of the parties contrary to the verdict; as where the defendant pleads such a plea as in effect acknowledges the demand, there tho' there should be a verdict for defendant, judgment shall be for the plaintiff, or the judge of Nisi prius may refuse to try it. Annals 250. If a verdict is imperfect, judgment cannot be given upon it; and for the uncertainty of the verdict, judgment may be void. 2 Lill. 111. Raym. 220. Action of debt lies upon a good judgment, as well after writ of error brought as before. Raym. 100. 2 Mod. 127. In actions of debt on bonds, a rule may be made to stay proceedings on payment of principal, interest and costs. Mod. Ca. 60. If a judgment is recovered jointly against three defendants, the plaintiff cannot bring action of debt upon that judgment against one alone. 2 Leon. 220. A plaintiff shall not have a new action of debt on the same bond, &c. after judgment had on it, as long as the judgment is in force. 6 Rep. 2. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1056. An erroneous judgment in Chancery is reversible in B. R. Dyer 315. And if the House of Lords reverse a judgment of B. R. the Lords are to enter the new judgment, and not the court of B. R. who by the first judgment had executed their authority. Trin. 6 Ann. B. R. 1 Salk. 403. Judgments are to continue, till they shall be attained by error. Stat. 4 H. 4. cap. 23. And after verdict given in any court of record, there shall be no stay of judgment for want of form in a writ; count, &c. or mistaking the name of either party, sum of money, day, month, year, &c. rightly named in any writ or record preceding, &c. 18 Eliz. cap. 14. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 8.

A small mistake in the title of a declaration is not a reason to set aside the judgment, and the roll may be right. Wils. par. 1. 104.

A regular judgment in a crown cause cannot be set aside on payment of costs. Ib. 163.

Where there is a judgment and no surprise, it shall not be set aside on an affidavit of a matter relative to the merits which might have been pleaded. Annals 157.

Where the condition of a bond was, that the money was not to be paid till a future day, and the consuee by virtue of a warrant of attorney entered judgment, and took out execution before the day, the court would not set the judgment aside, but did the execution. Ibid. 270.

The Stat. 8 W. 3. c. 11. orders judgment for costs, upon demurrers, and on suing writs of error, where the former judgment is affirmed, &c. And the statutes of jeofails extend to judgments upon nihil dicit, confession, & non sum informatus, &c. 4 Ann. c. 16. See Error, Jeofail, and Issue.

Judgments acknowledged for Debts. The course for one to acknowledge a judgment for debt, is for him that doth acknowledge it, to give a warrant of attorney to some attorney of that court where the judgment is to be acknowledged, to appear for him at his suit, against the party who is to have the judgment acknowledged unto him; and also to file common bail, and receive a declaration, and then plead non sum informatus, &c. or to let it pass by nihil dicit; whereupon judgment is entered for want of a plea. 2 Lill. 105. If one gives a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, and dies before it is confessed, this is a countermand of the warrant. 1 Ventr. 310. Tho' the courts have, on motion, allowed judgment to be entered up.—Where they may be entered after the party's death, see Annals 158.—But the rule does not hold in adversary suits. Ibid. 183. If a feme sole gives warrant of attorney to confess judgment, and marries before it is entered, the warrant is also countermanded; and judgment shall not be entered against husband and wife. 1 Salk. 399.

A man under arrest gives warrant of attorney to confess a judgment; if no attorney for the defendant is then present, the court, on a supposition that the judgment was obtained by force or fear, will set aside the same. 1

Salk. 408. It has been adjudged, that if one under arrest gives a warrant to confess judgment, if an attorney be not by, it is ill: and so is it if one be seemingly discharged, with design that he should give a warrant of attorney to confess a judgment: but if one arrested by process of an inferior court, gives a warrant for confessing judgment in that court, B. R. will not set it aside, tho' an attorney be not present. Mich. 2 Ann. Mod. Cas. 85. And where one has been in prison some time, and he confesses judgment to his creditor voluntarily, that judgment shall stand, altho' there be no attorney. Faresley's Rep. 115. A judgment confessed upon terms, being in effect conditional, the court will see the terms performed: but where a judgment is acknowledged absolutely, and a subsequent agreement is made, this does not affect the judgment, and the court will take no notice of it. Ibid. 400. If a warrant be to enter judgment as of such a term, or any time after; the attorney may enter it at any time during life; but without those words the judgment must be entered the term expressed in the warrant: and if no term be mentioned, it may be intended the next term. 1 Mod. 1. Or it has been held, it may be entered within a year after the date of it: and if judgment upon a warrant of attorney be not entered within the year, it cannot be done without leave of the court, on motion and affidavit made of the party's being living, and the debt not satisfied. 2 Lill. Abr. 118. 2 Show. 253. It is dangerous to take a judgment acknowledged in the vacation, as of the preceding term; and if any such judgment be taken, the warrant of attorney to confess the same must bear date before, or in the term whereof it is confessed: but the safest way is to make it a judgment of the subsequent term. 2 Lill. 103.

By Holt Chief Justice, If one will enter a judgment as of a precedent term, he must actually enter it before the effoin day of the succeeding term: and if judgment be signed in Hilary term and in the subsequent vacation the defendant sells lands, if before the Effoin of Easter term, the plaintiff enters his judgment, it shall affect the lands in the hands of the purchaser; and if one enters judgment so in vacation, when the party is dead, the judgment shall be good by relation, if he was living in the precedent term. 1 Salk. 401. Law of Securities 74. On complaints for delay of entering judgments, the same shall be examined into by commissioners and ordered to be entered, &c. by the Stat. 14 Ed. 3. and by 29 Car. 2. c. 3. Judgments, as against purchasers, shall only relate to the day of signing. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. s. 15. If any person having acknowledged or suffered a judgment as a security for money, afterwards on borrowing other money of another, mortgage his lands, &c. without giving notice of such judgment, unless he pay it off in six months, he shall forfeit his equity of redemption, &c. 4 W. & M. c. 16. The particular times of entering judgments of debt, by confession, non sum informatus, &c. and docketting them after every term, by the clerks of courts, &c. is directed under the penalty of 100l. by Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 20. And no judgment shall affect purchasers of lands and mortgages till docketted; nor have any preference against heirs, executors, &c. in the administration of estates. Ibid. Upon signing judgment 6s. 8d. is to be paid the proper officer, in satisfaction of the capiatur fine, &c. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 12. To search for judgments a fee is paid of 4d. a term.

On judgments, a release of errors is usually entered into at the time of the warrant of attorney given, or judgment had. And in case of several judgments, if two are given in one term, and the last is first executed, that creditor hath the best title. Laich. 53. When a judgment is satisfied, it is to be acknowledged on record by attorney, &c. Acknowledging a judgment in the name of another, who is not privy or consenting to the same, is felony. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 26.

Judgment in criminal Cases. No man can be attainted of treason or felony, but on judgment by express sentence, or by outlawry, or abjuration. 2 Hawk. 447. And a person shall not have two judgments for one offence; for in outlawry which is a judgment, execution shall be awarded against the offender, but no sentence pronounced.

Finch 389, 467. But one convicted of a scandalous libel, had judgment to pay a fine, and to go to all the courts in Westminster-Hall with a paper in his hat signifying his crime; and on his behaving impudently, his punishment was increased. 1 Salk. 401. No judgment or punishment can be inflicted unknown to our laws; but only by act of parliament. Dalij. 20. And the law makes no distinction, in fixed and stated judgments, between a peer and a commoner; or between a common and ordinary case and one extraordinary. 2 Hawk. 443. Judgment cannot be given for a corporal punishment, in the absence of the party. 1 Salk. 400. Tho' persons may have judgment to be fined in their absence, having a clerk in court to undertake for the fine. 1 Salk. 56. Judgment in high treason is for the offender to be drawn, hanged, his entrails taken out and burnt, his head cut off, and body quartered, &c. In petit treason, to be drawn to the place of execution and hanged: and a woman in all cases of high and petit treason, to be drawn and burnt. A man or woman for felony, is to be hanged by the neck till dead. Misprision of treason is liable to imprisonment for life. In praemunire, the party offending is to be out of the King's protection, and his body to remain in prison during the King's pleasure, &c. And for misprision of felony, fine and imprisonment is inflicted. 2 Hawk. 443, 444. For crimes and misdemeanors of an infamous nature; perjury or forgery at Common law, gross cheats, conspiracy, keeping bawdy-houses, &c. the judgments are discretionary in the court, by fine, pillory, whipping, &c. 2 Hawk. 445. See Execution in Criminal Cases. As to the several kinds of judgments, vide 1 Hawk. P. C. 57, 177, 184, 193, 196. 2 Hawk. P. C. 380, 442, 3, 4, 5. 3 Inst. 210, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 18, 19, 20, 224, 4. 1 Hal. P. C. 375.

Judgment or Trial by the Holy Cross, Was a trial in ecclesiastical cases, anciently in use among the Saxons. Cress. Church Hist. 960.

Judicatores terrarum, Are persons in the county palatine of Chester, who on a writ of error out of Chancery, are to consider of the judgment given there, and reform it; and if they do not, and it be found erroneous, they forfeit 100l. to the King by the custom. Dyer 348. Junk. Gen. 71.

Judices fiscales; So Polydore Virgil calls Empson and Dudley, who were employed by Hen. 7. for taking the benefit of penal statutes, and were pdt to death by Hen. 8. See Lord Herb. H. 8. fol. 5, 6.

Judicial decisions, opinions or determinations, as far as they refer to the laws of this kingdom, are for the matter of them of three kinds. 1st, They are either such as have their reasons singly in the laws and customs of this kingdom; as who shall succeed as heir to the ancestor? what is the ceremony requisite for passing a freehold? what estate, and how much the wife shall have for her dower? And many such matters, wherein the antient and expressed laws of the kingdom give an express decision, and the judge seems only the instrument to pronounce it; and in those things the law or custom of the realm is the only rule to judge by, and in reference to those matters, the decisions of courts are the conservatories and evidences of those laws. Or 2dly, They are such decisions, as by way of deduction and illation upon those laws are formed or deduced; as for the purpose, Whether of an estate thus or thus limited the wife shall be endowed? Whether if thus, or thus limited, the heir may be barred? And an infinite number of the like complicated questions. And herein the rule of decision is; first, the Common law and custom of the realm, which is the great substratum that is to be maintained; then authorities of decisions of former times in the same or the like cases; and then the reason of the thing itself. 3dly, Or they are such as seem to have no other guide but the common reason of the thing, unless the same point has been formerly decided, as in the exposition of the intention of clauses in deeds, wills, covenants, &c. where the very sense of the words, and their positions and relations give a rational account of the meaning of the parties, and in such cases the judge does much better herein, than what a bare grave grammarian or logician, or other prudent man could; for in many cases there have been former resolutions, either in point, or agreeing in reason or analogy with the case in question; or perhaps the clause to be expounded is mingled with some term or clauses that require the knowledge of the law to help out with the construction or exposition; both which often happen in the same case; therefore it requires the knowledge of the law to render and expound such clauses and sentences; and doubtless a good common lawyer is the best expounder of such clause, &c. Hale's Hist. Com. Law 68, 69. cites Plowden 122 to 130, 140, &c.

An extra-judicial opinion given in, or out of court, is no more than the prolatum or saying of him who gives it, nor can be taken for his opinion, unless every thing spoken at pleasure must pass as the speaker's opinion, Vaugh. 382.

So an opinion given in court, if not necessary to the judgment given of record, but that it might have been as well given, if no such, or a contrary opinion had been broached, is no judicial opinion, nor more than a gratis dictum. But an opinion, tho' erroneous, concluding to the judgment, is a judicial opinion, because delivered under the sanction of the judges oath upon deliberation, which assures that it is or was, when delivered, the opinion of the deliverer. Ibid.

Judicial Power. By the long and uniform usage of many ages, our Kings have delegated their whole judicial power to the judges of their several courts; which are the grand depository of the fundamental laws of the kingdom, and have gained a known and fixed jurisdiction, regulated by certain and established rules, which the crown itself cannot alter but by act of parliament. Black. Com. 1 V. 267. cites 2 Hawk. P. C. 2.

As to the great propriety and indeed consequence of separating the judicial, from the legislative and executive power of the state, see Montesquieu L'Esprit des Loix Liv. XI. c. 6. fo. 208, &c. of 1st Vol. of quarto edition.

Judicial Writ. The capias, and all other subsequent to the original writ, not issuing out of Chancery, but from the court into which the original was returnable, and being grounded on what has passed in that court in consequence of the sheriff's return, are called judicial, not original, writs; they issue under the private seal of that court, and not under the Great Seal of England; and are issued, not in the King's name, but in that of the Chief Justice only. Black. Com. 3 V. 282.

Judicium Dei, The judgment of God; so our ancestors called those now prohibited trials of ordeal, and its several kinds, Si se su er defendere non possit judicio Dei, sicut, aqua vel ferro, feret de eo justitia. Leges Edw. Conf. c. 16. See Spelman's Glossary on this word, and Dr. Brady in his Glossary, at the end of his Introduction to Eng. See Sutherland, and Black. Com. 4 V. 336.

Judicium parium, A trial by a man's equals, i. e. peers by peers, commoners by commoners. The most glorious privilege that a subject can enjoy. It is a protection for the lower order of people, against the violence of the great, and even the passion or caprice of the sovereign himself. 'Tis impossible sufficiently to praise this institution. The defence of Bingley, against answering interrogatories in the court of King's Bench, as tending to accuse himself, may furnish the reader with some pleasing reflections on the subject. That defence, (as drawn up by the Editor J. M. tho' not for the purpose of publication) may be seen in No. 75. of the North Briton, with a motto prefixed, against the opinion of the writer. Vide also Jury.

Jug, A watery place, according to Domesday.

Jugulator, A cut-throat, or murderer. — Statutum est prout eo ut nullus occidat jugulator, quales morderes appellant Angli, de cetero chartam de regia gratia obtineat. Thom. Walsingham, p. 343.

Jugum terrae, A yoke of land, in Domesday, contains half a plow-land, viz. Ode tenet de episcopo unum jugum terrae, & est dimid. carucata. So also 1 Inst. fo. 5. a. So in Domesday, Unum jugum de ora, & unum jugum de herbe; i. e. The rent of a yoke of land, and another yoke of land to plough. Gale 760.

Junctate, To strew rushes, as was of old the custom of accommodating the parochial church, and the very bed-chamber of princes. — Terra in Ailesbury tenetur per servitium inveniendi domino Regi cum venerit apud Ailesbury in estate stramen ad lectum suum & prater hoc herbam ad juncandam cameram suam. — Pat. 14 Ed. 1.

Juncaria, or Juncus (from juncus, the Latin word for a rush;) Is a soil or place where rushes grow. Co. Litt. fol. 5. Cum piscariis, turbariis, juncariis, & communibus pasturis ad messuagium prae dictum pertinet. Pat. 6 Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 25.

Jundum junta, A measure of salt. 2 Mon. Aug. p. 99.

Jura regalia. See Regalia.

Jurats, (jurati) Are in nature of aldermen, for the government of many corporations. As Romney Marsh is incorporate of one bailiff, twenty-four jurats, and the commonalty thereof, by Chart. 1. Ed. 4. And we read of the mayor and jurats of Maidstone, Rye, Winchelsea, &c. Also Jersey hath a bailiff and twelve jurats, or sworn assistants, to govern that island. The name is taken from the French; for in France, among others, there are major & jurati, &c. They are mentioned in the Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 30. And see 13 Ed. 1. cap. 26.

Jure divino right to the throne, A doctrine long since exploded,—and now universally denied. See Black. Com. 1 V. 191.

Jure divino right to tithes. As to this, Blackstone saith, in his Com. 2 V. 25.

“I will not put the title of the clergy to tithes upon any divine right; though such a right certainly commenced, and I believe as certainly ceased, with the Jewish theocracy. Yet an honourable and competent maintenance for the ministers of the gospel is, undoubtedly, jure divino; whatever the particular mode of that maintenance may be,” &c. &c.

Juridical Days, (dies juridici) Days in court, on which the law was administered. See Day.

Jurisdiction (jurisdictio) Is an authority or power, which a man hath to do justice in causes of complaint brought before him: of which there are two kinds; the one, which a person hath by reason of his fee, and by virtue thereof doth right in all complaints, concerning the lands within his fee; the other is a jurisdiction given by the prince to a bailiff, as divided by the Normans; and by him whom they called a bailiff, we may understand all who have commission from the King to give judgment in any cause. Custom. Normand. cap. 2. The courts and judges at Westminster have jurisdiction all over England; and are not restrained to any county or place: but all other courts are confined to their particular jurisdictions; which if they exceed, whatever they do is erroneous. 2 Lill. Abr. 120. There are three sorts of inferior jurisdictions; the first whereof is tenere placita, which is the lowest, and the party may either sue there, or in the King's courts: the second is consuance of pleas; and by this a right is vested in the lord of the franchise to hold pleas; and he is the only person that can take advantage of it, by claiming his franchise: the third sort is an exempt jurisdiction; as where the King grants to some city, that the inhabitants shall be sued within their city, and not elsewhere; tho' there is no jurisdiction, which can withstand a certiorari to the superior courts. 3 Salk. 79. 80. And a court shall not be presumed to have a jurisdiction, where it doth not appear to have one. 2 Hawk. 59. If an action is brought in a corporate town, and the plaintiff sheweth not that the matter arises infra jurisdictionem of the court, it will be wrong, tho' the town be in the margin; but the county serves in the margin for the superior courts. Trin. Com. 322. The declaration in a bafe court must alledge, that the goods were sold and delivered within the jurisdiction thereof, as well as that the defendant promised within it. Wils. par. 2. 16.

After a verdict for the plaintiff in C. B. for less than 40 s. the defendant may enter a suggestion on the roll that he resided in Middlesex, which, if true, the C. B. hath no jurisdiction, by the late statute, touching the county court of Middlesex. Ib. 68.

Where

Where commissioners or inferior jurisdictions, whose powers are limited, assume a jurisdiction they have not, the law gives an action against them. Wylf. 382.

As to the jurisdiction of the King's Bench in the principality of Wales, see ib. par. 1. 193.

Altho' a case be debated and have judgment in the Spiritual courts, yet the King's courts may afterwards discuss the same matter. Artic. 12. Stat. 9 Ed. 2. c. 6. In some causes, the Spiritual and Temporal courts have a concurrent jurisdiction. See Black. Com. 3 V. 111. 4 V. 418, 419.

Juris utrum, Is a writ which lies for the parson of the church, whose predecessor hath alienated the lands and tenements thereof. F. N. B. 48. And the writ juris utrum shall be granted to try whether free alms belong to a church, where they are transferred, &c. By Stat. 18 Ed. 1. c. 24. If a man intrude into lands and tenements, after the death of a parson, the successor shall have this writ: so if a parson be disseised of lands, parcel of his rectory, and dieth, his successor shall have a juris utrum. New Nat. Br. 109. But if a parson receive rent of the tenant of the land, which is aliened by his predecessor, he shall not himself have a writ of juris utrum; but his successor shall have it. Ibid. 111. A vicar shall have a juris utrum against a parson for the glebe of his vicarage, which is part of the same church: And the plaintiff ought to be named parson or vicar, or such name in right of which he bringeth his action. Ibid. See stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 24. and 14 Ed. 3. Stat. 1. c. 17. See Black. Com. 3 V. 252.

Jurnale, The journal or diary of accounts in a religious house.—Ut patet per jurnale hoc anno—ut patet per prædictum jurnale. Paroch. Antig. p. 571. From the French jour, a day; whence journey was at first properly but one day's travel. And our ploughmen now use the word in a strict and original sense; for they call one day's travel, or work at plough, a journey or journe. Hence a journeyman is one who works by the day, &c. Cowell.

Jurnedam, A journey or one day's travelling.—Cowell.

Juror, (jurator) Is one of those persons who are sworn on a jury; and the law requires the returning of able and sufficient jurors. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 3.

Jury, (jurata, from the Lat. jurare, to swear) Signifies a certain number of men sworn to inquire of, and try the matter of fact, and declare the truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them in a cause: And they are sworn judges upon evidence in matter of fact. The privilege of trial by jury, is of great antiquity in this kingdom; some writers will have it that juries were in use among the Britains; but it is more probable that this trial was introduced by the Saxons: Yet some say that we had our trials by jury from the Greeks; (the first trial by a jury of twelve, being in Greece.) By the laws of King Edelred, it is apparent that juries were in use many years before the Conquest; and they are, as it were, incorporated with our constitution, being the most valuable part of it; for without them no man's life can be impeached, (unless by parliament) and no one's liberty or property ought to be taken from him. And these juries are not only used in the circuits of the judges, but in other courts and matters: As if a coroner inquire how a person killed came by his death, he doth it by jury; and the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his County-Court, the steward of a Court-Leet or Court-Baron, &c. if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it in like manner: And at the general assizes there are usually many juries, because there are many causes, civil and criminal, to be tried; whereof one is called the Grand Jury, and the rest Petit Juries, of which it is said there should be one for every hundred. Lamb. Eiren. pag. 384.

Anciently the jury as well in Common Pleas, as Pleas of the Crown, were twelve knights, according to Glauvill and Bracton: And to make a jury in a writ of right, called the Grand Assize, there must be sixteen, viz. four knights, and twelve others. Finch 412. The grand jury generally consists of twenty-four men of greater quality than the other, chosen indifferently out of the whole county by the sheriff; and the petit jury consisteth of twelve men, of equal condition with the party indicted, impanelled in criminal cases, called the Jury of Life and Death: The grand jury find the bills of indictment against criminals, and the petit jury convict them by verdict, in the giving whereof all the twelve must agree; and according to their verdict the judgment passeth. 3 Inst. 30, 31, 221.

By the Common law jurymen are to be returned in all cases for trial of general issues, from the county where the fact was done. S. P. C. 154. And jurymen are to be freemen, indifferent, and not outlawed or infamous; aliens, men attainted of any crime, ought not to serve on juries; and infants, persons seventy years old, clergymen, apothecaries, &c. are exempted by law from serving upon juries. 3 Inst. 221. 2 Inst. 447. Barons of the realm, and all above them, are not to serve in any ordinary jury; and others may have this privilege by writ, or the King's grant, &c. 6 Rep. 51. J. Brown. 30. But such as have charters of exemption, shall be sworn on great assizes, and in attainments, &c. when their oath is requisite. 52 H. 3. c. 14.

By statute, jurors impanelled are to be the next neighbours, most sufficient and least suspicious; or the officer shall forfeit double damages. 28 Ed. 1. c. 9. Their qualification by 13 Ed. 1. was 40 s. per Annum estate; which was encreased to 4 l. per Annum by 27 Eliz. c. 6. and is made 10 l. per Annum freehold or copyhold within the same county, by 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. But all cities, boroughs, and corporate towns, are excepted out of this last act: And trials of felons in corporations may be by freemen worth 40 l. in goods, by the 23 Hen. 8. c. 13. Panels of juries returned to inquire for the King, may be reformed by the judges of gaol-delivery, &c. 3 Hen. 8. c. 12.

Jurymen not appearing shall forfeit issues, if they have no reasonable excuse for their defaults, viz. 5 s. on the first writ, upon the second 10 s. and the third writ 13 s. 4 d. 35 H. 8. c. 6. Tho' no jury is to appear at Westminster for a trial, when the offence was committed thirty miles off; except the Attorney General require it. 18 Eliz. c. 5. Constables of parishes, &c. at Michaelmas quarter-sessions yearly, are to return to the justices of peace, lists of the names and places of abode of persons qualified to serve on juries, between the ages of twenty-one and seventy, attested upon oath, on pain of forfeiting 5 l. And the justices of peace shall order the clerk of the peace to deliver a duplicate of those lists to the sheriff, &c. And sheriffs are to impanel no other persons, under the penalty of 20 l. &c. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32. 3 Ann. c. 18. No sheriff, bailiff, &c. shall return any person to serve on a jury, unless he hath been duly summoned five days, before the day of appearance; nor shall take any money, or other reward to excuse the appearance of any jurymen, on pain of forfeiting 10 l. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. If a trial is for any thing which concerns the sheriff or under-sheriff, the coroner is to return the jury. And the process to bring in the jury in B. R. is a distingas jurat, and in C. B. venire fac & habeas corpora jurator: Upon the venire, the sheriff, &c. returns the jury in a panel, (or little piece of parchment,) annexed to the writ, and then goes the writ of habeas corpora to bring in the jury; and where after issue joined, a suit is continued on the roll, the process is to be continued from time to time against the jurors. Br. Discontin.

If the sheriff return twelve jurors only according to the writ, where he ought to have returned twenty-four according to the usage, for speeding the trial in case of challenge, death, or sickness, &c. he shall be amerced. Jenk. Cent. 172. Lists of jurors qualified according to the acts (4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32. and 3 & 4 Ann. c. 18.) are now to be made from the rates of each parish, and fixed on the doors of churches, &c. twenty days before the feast of St. Michael, that publick notice may be given of persons qualified omitted, or of persons inserted who are not so, &c. and the lists being set right by the justices of peace in quarter-sessions, duplicates are to be delivered to the sheriffs of counties, by the clerks of the peace; the names contained in which shall be entered alphaalphabetically by the sheriffs in a book, with their additions, and places of abode, &c. If any sheriff shall return other persons to serve on juries; or the clerk of the assize record any appearance, when the party did not appear, they shall be fined by the judges, not above 10 l. nor less than 40 s. The like penalty for taking money to excuse persons from serving; and the sheriffs may be fined 5 l. for returning jurors, who have served two years before, &c.

Sheriffs, on the return of writs of venire facias, are to annex a panel of the names of a competent number of jurors named in the lists, not less than forty-eight in any county, nor more than seventy-two (without direction of the judges) who shall be summoned to serve at the assizes, &c. and the names of the persons impanelled shall be writ in several distinct pieces of paper, of equal size, and be delivered by the under-sheriff to the judge's marshal, who is to cause them to be rolled up all in the same manner, and put together in a box; and when any cause shall be brought on, some indifferent person is to draw out twelve of the said papers of names, who not being challenged, shall be the jury to try the cause; but if any persons are challenged and set aside, or shall not appear, then a further number to be drawn till there is a full jury, &c.

Where a cause comes on, before the jury in any other have given their verdict, the court shall order twelve of the residue of the papers to be drawn, &c. And jurors making default in appearance, shall be fined, not exceeding 5 l. nor under 40 s. Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. Persons having estates for five hundred years, or ninety-nine years, or other term determinable on lives, &c. of the yearly value of 20 l. are declared qualified to serve on juries, and to be inserted in the freeholders book, &c. And sheriffs of any county, or city, shall not impanel persons on any jury for the trial of capital offences, that would not be qualified in civil causes: In London jurors to be house-keepers, having lands or goods worth 100 l. who may be examined on oath, &c. Ibid. Leaseholders on leases where the rent is 50 l. a year, are liable to serve upon juries in the county of Middlesex; but no person shall be returned as a juror, who hath served two terms before in that county, by Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 7. Vide the Statutes.

Either the plaintiff or defendant may use their endeavours for any jurymen to appear; but one who is not a party to the suit, may not: And an attorney was thrown over the bar, because he had given the names of several persons in writing to the sheriff, whom he would have returned on the jury, and the names of others whom he would not have returned. Moor 882. If a jurymen appear, and refuse to be sworn, or refuse to give any verdict, if he endeavours to impose upon the court, or is guilty of any misbehaviour after departure from the bar, he may be fined, and attachment issue against him. 2 Hawk. P. C. 145, 146.

After a juror is sworn, he may not go from the bar until the evidence is given, for any cause whatsoever, without leave of the court; and with leave he must have a keeper with him. 2 Lill. 123, 127. A witness may not be called by the jury to recite the same evidence he gave in court, when they are gone from the bar. Cro. Eliz. 189. Nor may a party give a brief or notes of the cause to the jury to consider of; if he doth, he and the jurors may be fined. Moor 815. The jurymen are not to meddle with any matters which are not in issue; but they may find a thing of their own knowledge, which is not given in evidence. 3 Leon. 121. When the evidence is given, the jury are to be kept together till they bring in their verdict, without speech with any, and without meat or drink, fire or candle, otherwise than with leave of the court, by consent of the parties; and the court may give them leave to eat or drink at the bar, but not out of court. 1 Inst. 227.

If jurymen after sworn, either before or after they are agreed of their verdict, eat and drink, the verdict may be good; but they are fineable: And if it be at the charge of either party, the verdict is void. Dalis. 10. Cro. Jac. 21. If they agree to cast lots for their verdict, or to bring in guilty or Not guilty, as the court shall seem inclined, they may be fined, 2 Lev. 205. Cro. Eliz. 779. But a jury have been permitted to recall their verdict; as where one was indicted of felony, the jury found him Not guilty, but immediately before they went from the bar, they said they were mistaken, and found him guilty, which last was recorded for their verdict. Plowd. 211.

Juries are fineable, if they are unlawfully dealt with to give their verdict; but they are not fineable for giving their verdict contrary to the evidence, or against the direction of the court; for the law supposes the jury may have some other evidence than what is given in court, and they may not only find things of their own knowledge, but they go according to their consciences. Vaugh. 153. 3 Leon. 147. Attaint may lie against a jury in a civil cause, for going contrary to evidence, in case of any corruption. Vaugh. 144. And jurors are subject to no prosecution for giving their verdicts, except by way of attaint for a false verdict; in which case being found guilty, they are punishable by loss of lands and goods, their houses to be rased, and their bodies cast into prison; and the party is to be restored to all that he lost by the verdict; but this punishment is altered by the Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 3. 2 Hawk. 147. For a false verdict, in that point which is merely out of the issue, the jury may not be sued. Hob. 53, 114, 227. If a jury find matter not in issue or pertinent, it will be void: So if it be against law and sense, &c.

They are to adjudge upon the evidence given; but the jurors may not contradict what is agreed in pleading between the parties; if they do, it shall be rejected; and where the jury finds the fact, but conclude upon it contrary to law, the court may reject the conclusion. 1 And. 41. 10 Rep. 56. Co. Litt. 22. Hob. 222. The jury may find a thing done in another county, upon a general issue; and foreign matters done out of the realm, &c. Moor c. 238. Godb. 33. Jurors having once given their verdict, altho' it be imperfect, shall not be sworn again in the same issue, unless it be in assize. 2 Cro. 210. If a jurymen is guilty of bribery, he is disabled to be of any assize or jury, and to be imprisoned and ransomed at the King's will. 5 Ed. 3. c. 10. Jurymen accused of bribery, are to be tried presently by a jury then taken. 34 Ed. 3. c. 8. And if a juror takes any thing of either party to give his verdict, he shall pay ten times as much as taken; or suffer a year's imprisonment. 38 Ed. 3. c. 12. But jurymen, where there is a full jury, and they try the cause, are to have their charges allowed them. 2 Lill. 125.

If a jury take upon them the knowledge of the law, and give a general verdict, it is good; but in cases of difficulty, it is best and safest to find the special matter, and leave it to the judges to determine what is the law upon the fact. 1 Inst. 30. A jury sworn and charged in case of life and member, cannot be discharged till they give a verdict: In civil cases, it is otherwise, as where nonsuits are had, &c. And sometimes when the evidence had been heard, the parties doubting of the verdict, do consent that a juror shall be withdrawn or discharged. 1 Inst. 154, 227.

Special Jury, Is where either party is of opinion, that the persons who usually attend on common juries may not be of sufficient knowledge and experience to determine the point in question, and would prefer men who in all probability have had a more liberal education and who possess more extensive knowledge, &c. then the court upon motion orders the sheriff to attend the Secondary or prothonotary, with his book of freeholders of the county, and he, in the presence of the attorneys on both sides, is to strike a jury: And when a cause of consequence is to be tried at the bar, the court on motion and affidavit made, will make a rule for the secondary or prothonotary to name forty-eight freeholders; and each party is to strike out twelve, one at a time, the plaintiff or his attorney beginning first, and the remainder are to be the jury for the trial; and this is called a Special Jury. Trin. 23 Car. B. R. 2 Lill. 123.

How special juries are to be struck, see Annals, 158.

The nomination of a special jury, is to be in the presence of the attorneys on each side; but if either of them refuse to come, then the secondary, &c. may proceed ex parte, and he shall strike twelve for the attorney who makes default. Trin. 8 W. 3. B. R.

It has been also adjudged, that if a rule is made for a special jury, and it is not expressed that the master of the office or secondary shall strike forty-eight freeholders, and that each of the parties shall strike out twelve; in such case the master may strike the twenty-four, and neither of the parties strike out any. 1 Salk. 405. This is never done in a capital cause. T. Jones 222. A special jury may be granted to try a cause at bar, without the consent of parties; but never at the Nisi prius, unless good and sufficient cause be shewn by affidavit. Pasch. 10 Geo. 1. A rule may be made for a good jury, and that a special verdict may be found, &c. Mod. Caf. in Law and Eq. 221.

By the late act, in trials of issues on indictments, &c. and in all actions whatsoever, on the motion of any prosecutor, plaintiff or defendant, &c. the courts at Westminster may order a special jury to be struck in such manner as upon trials at bar: And when any special jury shall be ordered by rule of the said courts in any cause arising in any city, &c. the jury is to be taken out of lists or books of persons qualified, which shall be produced and brought by sheriffs, &c. before the proper officer, as the freeholders book is for striking juries in causes arising in counties. Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. The justices of assize for the counties palatine of Chester, Lancaster, &c. upon motion in behalf of the King, or any prosecutor, or defendant, in an indictment, information, or any suit, may appoint a jury to be struck for trial of issues in like manner as special juries in the courts of law at Westminster. 6 Geo. 2. c. 37. And by this statute, the 3 & 4 Geo. 2. are made perpetual.

Persons summoned on juries in courts of record in cities, corporations, and franchises, and not attending, may be fined. 29 Geo. 2. c. 19. Touching the affairs of merchants, where two merchants are plaintiff and defendant, a jury of merchants may be returned to try the issue between them. The court was moved that a jury of merchants might be returned to try an issue between two merchants, and it was granted; because it was conceived they might have better knowledge of the matters in difference than others who were not of that profession. Hill. 21 Car. B. R. When an alien is plaintiff or defendant in a cause, the jury ought to be half foreigners and half English; but it is not necessary that the foreigners be all of the same country. 2 Lill. 125. And if the trial is by all English jurors, it is not error; where the party slips his time, and does not pray trial by an equal number of aliens, &c. See Challenge, Verdict.

Jus Patronatus, Is a commission granted by the bishop to some persons to inquire who is the rightful patron of a church. If two patrons present their clerks, the bishop shall determine who shall be admitted by right of patronage, &c. on commission of inquiry of six clergymen, and six laymen, living near to the church; who are to inquire on articles as a jury, Whether the church is void? Who presented last? Who is the rightful patron? &c. But if coparceners severally present their clerks, the bishop is not obliged to award a jus patronatus, because they present under one title; and are not in like case where two patrons present under several titles. 5 Rep. 102. 1 Inst. 116. The awarding a jus patronatus is not of necessity, but at the pleasure of the ordinary, for his better information who hath the right of patronage, for if he will at his peril take notice of the right, he may admit the clerk of either of the patrons, without a jus patronatus. 1 Leon. 168. A bishop may award a jus patronatus with a solemn premonition to all persons, quorum interest, &c. where he knows not who is the patron, to give notice of an avoidance by deprivation, &c. 1 Hob. 318. This inquiry by jus patronatus is to excuse the ordinary from being a disturber. Jus patronatus is not within the statute of limitations, *1 M. Justice, (justitia) Is a constant, righteous inclination to give every one his due; or the act of doing what is right and just. *Chamb. Justice, (justiciarius) Signifies an officer deputed by the King to administer justice, and do right by way of judgment; and is called justice, because in ancient time the Latin word for him was justicia, and for that he hath his authority by deputation, and not jure magistratus. Grauvil, lib. 2. c. 6. In the King's Bench and Common Pleas, there are Chief Justices; the former of which, called Capitalis Justiciarius Banci Regii, vel ad placita coram rege tenenda, hath the title of lord whilst he enjoys his office, and is stiled Capitalis Justiciarius, because he is chief of the rest; and for this reason he hath usually the title of Lord Chief Justice of England. This justice was anciently created by letters patent under the Great Seal; but is now made by writ in this short form: Rege, &c. Roberto Raymond Mil salutem, fecimus quod constituimus vos justiciarium nostrum capitalem ad placita coram nobis tenenda, quamdiu vos bene gesseritis, &c. Teste, &c. And the ancient dignity of this supreme magistrate was very great; he had the prerogative to be vicegerent of the kingdom, when any of our Kings went beyond sea, being chosen to this office out of the greatest of the nobility; and had the power alone, which afterwards was distributed to three other great magistrates, that is, he had the power of the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, of the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and the Master of the Court of Wards; and he commonly sat in the King's Palace, and there executed that authority which was formerly performed per comitem palatii, in determining differences which happened between the barons and other great persons of the kingdom, as well as causes criminal and civil between other men: But King Richard I. first diminished his power, by appointing two other justices; to each whereof he assigned a distinct jurisdiction, viz. to one the North parts of England, to the other the South; and in the reign of King Edward I. they were reduced to one court, with a further abridgment of their authority, both as to the dignity of their persons, and extent of their jurisdiction; for no more were chosen out of the nobility as anciently, but out of the commons, who were men of integrity, and skilful in the laws of the land; whence it is said the study of the law dates its beginning. Origines Judiciales.

In the time of King John, and other of our ancient Kings, it often occurs in charters of privilege, Quod non ponatur respondere, nisi coram nobis, vel capitali justitia nostra: And this high officer hath at this time time a very extensive power and jurisdiction in pleas of the crown; and is particularly intrusted not only with the prerogative of the King, but the liberty of the subject. The Chief Justice of the Common Pleas hath also the title of Lord whilst he is in office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitorum, vel dominus justiciarius de banco; who with his assistants did originally, and doth yet, hear and determine Common Pleas, in civil causes, as distinguished from the King's pleas, or pleas of the crown. Bract. lib. 3. The Chief Justices are installed or placed on the bench by the Lord Chancellor; and the other justices by the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justices. Besides the Lords Chief Justices and the other justices of the courts at Westminster, there are many other justices commissioned by the King to execute the laws; as justices of assize, of the Forest, of Nisi prius, Oyer and Terminer, &c. all of them treated of under their heads; and Justices of Peace, &c.

Justice of the forest, (Justiciarius forestæ.) Is also a Lord by his office, and hears and determines all offences within the forest, committed against vert or venison: Of these there are two, whereof one hath jurisdiction over all forests on this side Trent, the other of all beyond it. The chief point of their jurisdiction consisteth upon the articles of the King's charter, called Charta de foresta, made Anno 9 Hen. 3. concerning which see Camd. Brit. p. 214. See Protoforestarius. The court where this justice sits and determines, is called The justice-seat of the forest, held once every three years. Mainwood's Forest Laws, cap. 24. He is also called Justice in eyre of the forest; and is the only justice that may appoint a deputy, by the statute of 33 Hen. 8. c. 35.

Justice of the hundred, (Justiciarius Hundredi.) Erat ipse hundredi Dominus, qui & centurio & centenarius, hundredique aldermannus appellatus est. Præter omnibus hundredi sibi propriis, cognovitque de causis majusculis, quæ in eisdem finiri non poterunt. Spelm.

Justitiements, from justitia. All things belonging to justice. Co. on Westm. 1. fol. 225. Also the effects or execution of justice or of jurisdiction.

Justices of assize, (Justiciarii ad capiendas assisas.) Are such as were wont by special commission to be sent (as occasion was offered) into this or that county, to take assizes for the ease of the subjects; for as these assizes pass always by jury, many men could not, without damage and charge, be brought to London, therefore justices for this purpose, by commission particularly authorized, were sent to them. For it seems, that the justices of the Common Pleas had no power to take assizes till the Stat. of 8 R. 2. c. 2. by which they were enabled to it, and to deliver gaols. And the justices of the King's Bench have by that statute such power affirmed unto them, as they had one hundred years before. These commissions Ad capiendas assisas, have of late years been settled and executed only in Lent, and the long vacation, (called now the Lent and Summer assizes) when the justices, and other learned lawyers, may be at leisure to attend those controversies; whereupon it also falls out, that the matters that were wont to be heard by more general commissions of justices in eyre, are heard all at one time with these assizes, which was not so of old, as appears by Bracton, lib. 3. cap. 7. num. 2. Habeat etiam justiciarios itinerantes de comitatu in comitatum, quandoque ad omnia placita; quandoque ad quedam specialia, sicut assisas, &c. & ad gaolas deliberandas; quandoque ad unam vel duas; non plures. And by this means the justices of both benches being worthily accounted the fittest of all others, and their assistants, were employed in these affairs. But no justice of either bench, or any other, may be justices of assize in his own county, Anno 8 R. 2. c. 2. and 33 Hen. 8. c. 24. And those who now are called justices of assize, and twice every year go the circuit, by two and two, thro' all England, dispatch their several businesses by several commissions. Crompt. Jur. fol. 210. For they have one commission to take assizes, another to deliver gaols, another of oyer and terminer, &c. That justices of assizes and justices in eyre did anciently differ, appeareth by 27 Ed. 3. cap. 5. And that justices of assize and justices of gaol-delivery were different, is evident by 4 Ed. 3. c. 3. The oath taken by the justices of assize is all one with that taken by the justices of the King's Bench. Old Abridgement of Statutes, tit. Sacramentum Justiciariorum. Cowell.

Justices of both benches, Shall decide pleas commenced before other matters be arraigned, St. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 46.

Justices in eyre (Justiciarii itinerantes.) Are so termed of the old French word erre, as (a grand erre, i. e. magnis itineribus), proverbially spoken. These in ancient time, were sent with commission into divers countries to hear such causes especially, as were termed pleas of the crown. And this was done for the ease of the people, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the case were too high for the county-court: They differed from the justices of oyer and terminer, because they (as we said before) were sent upon one or few special causes, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent thro' the provinces and counties of the land, with more indefinite and general commission, as appeareth by Bracton, lib. 3. c. 11, 12, 13. and Britton, cap. 2. And again, because the justices of oyer and terminer were sent uncertainly upon any uproar, or other occasion in the country; but these in eyre (as Mr. Gwyn sets down in the Preface to his Reading), were sent but once in every seven years; with whom agrees Horne in his Mirror of Justices, l. 2. c. Queux poient estre assours, &c. & l. 2. cap. Des peches criminals, &c. al just del Roy, &c. And lib. 3. cap. De justices in eyre: Where he also declares what belongs to their office. But according to Orig. Juridiciales, Juridicales, they went oftener. These were instituted by King Henry the Second, as Camd. in his Brit. witnesseth, pag. 104. and Hoveden par. post. suor. Annal. fol. 113. both of them these words, Justitii itinerantes, constituti per Henricum secundum, qui divisit Regnum suum in sex partes, per quarum singulas tres justiciarios itinerantes constituit, &c. In some respect they resembled our justices of assize at present, tho' their authority and manner of proceeding much differ. Co. Litt. fol. 293. Cowell.

Justices of Gaol-Delivery, (Justitii ad gaolas deliverandas.) Are those who are sent with commissions to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such, who for any offence are cast into gaol: part of their authority is to punish such as let to mainprize those prisoners who are not bailable by law, nor by the statute De Finibus, cap. 3. F. N. B. fol. 151. These seem in ancient time to have been sent into the country upon several occasions; but afterwards justices of assize were likewise authorized to the like purposes. Anno 4 Ed. 3. c. 3. Their oath is all one with others of the King's justices of either bench. Old Abridgment of the Statutes, tit. Sacramentum Justiciariorum. Cowell.

Justices of assize, if laymen, shall deliver the gaols. 27 Ed. 1. st. 1. c. 3.

The justices of peace shall deliver over their indictments to the justices of gaol-delivery. 4 Ed. 3. c. 2.

Shall be sworn like the other judges. 2 Ed. 3. c. 3.

Justices of the Jews, (Justitii ad custodiam Judeorum assignati.) King Richard 1. after his return out of the Holy Land, anno 1194. appointed particular justices, laws, and orders, for preventing the frauds, and regulating the contracts and usury of the Jews. Hoveden. parte post. pag. 745. Claus. 3 Ed. 1. m. 19.

Justices of labourers, Were justices heretofore appointed to redress the forwardness of labouring men, who would either be idle, or have unreasonable wages. See 21 Ed. 3. c. 1. 25 Ed. 3. c. 8. and 31 Ed. 1. c. 6.

Justices of Nisi prius, Are all one at this time with justices of assize, for it is a common adjournment of a cause in the Common Pleas, to put it off to such a day, Nisi prius Justitii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of Nisi prius, as well as justices of assize. Their commission you may see in Crompt. Juris. fol. 204. yet with this difference between them, that justices of assize have power to give judgment in a cause, but justices of Nisi prius only to take the verdict. But in the nature of both their functions, this seems to be the greatest difference, that justices of Nisi prius have to deal in causes personal as well as real; whereas justices of assize, in strict acceptation, meddle only with the possessory writs called Assise. Cowell.

Justices of oyer and terminer, (Justitii ad audiendum & terminandum.) Were justices deputed upon some special or extraordinary occasions. Fitzberbert in his Nat. Brev. saith, That the commission d'oyer and terminer is directed to certain persons upon any great riot, insurrections, heinous misdemeanors, or trespasses committed. And because the occasion of granting this commission should be maturely weighed, it is provided by the statute made 2 Ed. 3. c. 2. That no such commission ought to be granted, but that they shall be dispatched before the justices of the one bench or other, or justices errant, except for horrible trespasses, and that by the special favour of the King. The form of this commission, see F. N. B. f. 110.

Justices of the pabilion, (Justitii pavilonis.) Are certain judges of a pie-powder court, of a most transcendent jurisdiction, held under the bishop of Winchester at a fair on St. Giles's Hill, near that city, by virtue of letters patent granted by Richard 2. and Edward 4. Episcopus Wynton. & successores suos, a tempore quo, &c. Justitios suos, qui vocantur Justitii pavilonis, cognitiones placitorum & aliorum negotiorum eadem feria durante, necnon claves portarum & custodiam prædictæ civitatis nostræ Wynton, pro certo tempore servæ illius, & nonnullas alias libertates, immunitates & consuetudines habuisse, &c. See the patent at large in Prynne's Animad. on 4 Inst. fol. 194.

Justices of the Peace, (Justitii ad Pacem) Are those who are appointed by the King's commission to keep the peace of the county where they dwell; and are rather commissioners of the peace, of whom some of the greater quality are of the quorum, because business of importance may not be dispatched without the presence of them; or one of them. Justices of peace, (Polidore Virgil tells us,) had their beginning in the reign of William 1st, called the Conqueror; but Sir Edward Coke was of opinion, that in the sixth year of K. Ed. 1. Prima fuit institutio justiciariorum pro pace conservanda. Mr. Prynne affirms, that in the reign of King Hen. 3. after the agreement made between that King and his barons, guardians ad pacem conservandam were constituted; And Sir Henry Spelman differs from both these, being of opinion that they were not made until the beginning of the reign of King Ed. 3. when they were thought necessary for suppressing commotions, which might happen upon dethroning of K. Ed. 2.

It is certain the general commission of the peace, by statute, began 1 Ed. 3. Tho' before that time there were particular commissions of the peace to certain men, in certain places; tho' not throughout England. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1063. Heretofore there were conservators of the peace at the Common law, elected by the county, upon a writ directed to the sheriff: But the election of conservators is transferred by statutes from the people to the King; and at length justices of peace are created conservators of the peace by commission or letters patent under the Great Seal: The power of constituting them is only in the King; tho' they are generally made at the discretion of the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, by the King's leave; and the King may appoint in every county in England and Wales as many as he shall think fit. 1 Inst. 174, 175. At first the number of justices was not above three or four in a county. 18 Ed. 3. Afterwards the number was limited to six in every county; whereof two were to be of the best quality, (such as we now call of the quorum) two of the law, and two others. And after there was to be one lord, and three or four of the most worthy of the county, with some learned in the law. 34 Ed. 3. By the statute 14 R. 2. eight justices of peace were to be assigned in every county: And the number of justices has greatly increased since their first institution; Mr. Lambard above one hundred years ago complaining of their excessive number; and after him the learned Spelman takes notice that there were above threescore in each county: they are now without limitation; and their prodigious increase with the unsuitable appointment many times made of persons for this trust, hath rendered the office contemptible in the eye of our best gentry, for whom it was originally intended; it hath therefore been proposed, that in each county there should be eight honorary justices constituted of men of quality, who should not be obliged to an attendance any farther than their zeal for justice, and love for their country shall incline them; and the like number of acting justices, gentlemen capable of business, who should constantly attend, and be intitled to a reward for their pains, and upon any neglect be subject to penalties, Lambard's Just.

Justices of peace were formerly to be allowed 4 s. a day during their attendance at the quarter-sessions, to be paid by the sheriffs of counties. 12 R. 3. 2 H. 5. 18 H. 6. Attornies, &c. are incapable to be in the commission of the peace. 5 Geo. 2. cap. 18. By the statute 18 Geo. 2. c. 20. No person shall be capable of being a justice of peace, or acting as such, who shall not have, in law or equity, for his own use in possession, a freehold, copyhold, or customary estate for life, or some greater estate, or for years determinable upon a life or lives, or 21 years, in lands, &c. of the clear yearly value of 100 l. over and above all incumbrances, rents and charges; or intitled to the immediate reversion or remainder in lands, &c. of 300 l. per ann. and who shall not take the oath in this act mentioned, under the penalty of 100 l. to be recovered by action of debt, and the proof of the qualification to lie on the defendant; and if he insists on any lands not mentioned in the oath, he is to give notice of them; and lands not mentioned in the oath or notice are not to be allowed.

This

This act not to extend to cities or towns, &c. the board of green cloth, or the two universities. Justices of peace are to hold their sessions four times a year, i. e. the first week after Michaelmas, the Epiphany, Easter, and St. Thomas called Becker, being the 7th of July. Stat. 2 H.

5. They are justices of record, for none but justices of record can take a recognizance of the peace: And their power arises from their commission, or from statutes by virtue of these words in their commission, viz. Sciatis quod assignavimus vos conjunctim & divisim & quolibet vestrum justiciaribus nostris ad pacem nostram in comitatu nostro S. conservandum, &c. every justice of peace hath a separate power, and may do all acts concerning his office apart and by himself; and even may commit a fellow justice upon treason, felony, or breach of the peace: And this is the ancient power which conservators of the peace had at Common law. But it has been held, that one justice of the peace cannot commit another justice, for breach of the peace: tho' the justices in sessions may do it. Lamb. Just. 385. Jenk. Cent. 174. By virtue of another assignavimus, or clause in the commission, two or more justices of the peace (one of the quorum) have a joint power to inquire by jury of all offences mentioned in the commission; to take indictments, and grant process thereupon; and to hear and try offences; which are matters to be transacted at the quarter-sessions. And by the statutes they may act in many cases where their commission doth not reach; the statutes themselves being a sufficient commission. Lamb. lib. 4. Wood's Inst. 79, 80. The statute 4 H. 7. c. 12. 33 H. 8. c. 10. and 37 H. 8. c. 7. give them a further general power than is expressed either in their commission, or in any particular statute. The particular statutes are to be executed as they direct; wherein if no express power is given to any one justice, he can admonish only, and if not obeyed, may make presentment of the offence upon the statute, and with his fellow justices hear and determine it in sessions; or he may bind the offender to the peace, or the good behaviour: some statutes empower one justice of peace alone to act; some require two, three, four justices, &c. And where a special authority is given to justices of peace, it must be exactly pursued; or the acts of the justices will not be good. 2 Salk. 475.

A justice of peace's oath for the execution of his office, is as follows: 'You shall swear, That in the office of a justice of peace in and for the county of, &c. in all and every the articles in his Majesty's commission enjoined and to you directed, you will do equal right to the rich and poor, according to your knowledge, and the laws and statutes of this realm; you shall not be counsel to any person, in any quarrel depending before you; you shall hold your sessions according to the direction of the statutes in that case made; and you shall cause to be entered the issues, fines, and amerciaments that shall happen to be made, and all forfeitures, without any concealment, and send an account of them to the King's Exchequer; you shall not spare any one for gift or other cause, nor take any thing for doing the business of your office, but the fees and allowances accustomed and fixed by acts of parliament, &c. And in all things you shall well and truly do and execute the office of a justice of peace.' Dalt. Just. If a justice of peace does not observe the form of proceeding directed by statute, it is coram non judice, and void: but if he acts according to the direction of the statutes, neither the justices in sessions nor B. R. can reverse what he has done.

Jones 170. The power of justices is ministerial when they are commanded to do any thing by a superior authority, as by the court of B. R. &c. In all other cases they act as judges: but they must proceed according to their commission, &c. And a justice is to exercise his authority only within the county where he is appointed by his commission; not in any city which is a county of itself or town corporate, having their proper justices, &c. tho' in other towns and liberties he may. Dalt. When a justice of peace acts to compel another to perform any thing required by law, as where he imprisons or commands any one to be imprisoned, &c. he cannot act out of the jurisdiction of his county; but he may take informations any where to prove offences in the county where committed, and he principally resides, or take a recognizance to prosecute.

Cro. Car. 213. And by a late statute, justices of any county, dwelling in a city that is in itself a county within the county at large, may grant warrants, take informations, make orders, &c. at their own dwelling houses, tho' out of the county, &c. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7.

Also justices of peace may do all things relating to the laws for relief of the poor, the passing and punishing vagrants, the repairs of the highways, or concerning parochial taxes or rates, altho' such justices are rated to the taxes, within any place where they execute their office: but no justice shall act in determining any appeal to the quarter-sessions, from any order that relates to the parish where he is so charged. Statute 16 Geo. 2. cap. 18. On appeals to justices of peace in the sessions, they are to cause defects in form in orders, &c. to be rectified without charge, and then determine the matters according to the merits of the case; and their proceedings shall not be removed into B. R. without entering into recognizance of 50 l. to prosecute with effect, and pay costs if affirmed, &c. by statute 5 Geo. 2. c. 19. No certiorari shall issue to remove any order, made by justices of peace of any county, &c. or at the quarter-sessions, unless it be applied for within six months, and proved on oath that six days notice in writing was given to the justices, by whom the order was made, that they or the parties concerned may shew cause against it. 13 Geo. 2. c. 18. A man may be a justice of peace in one part of Yorkshire, and yet be no justice of peace in every part of the county; this county being divided into separate ridings. Hill. 22 Car. B. R. Justices of peace have power by their commission to hear and determine felonies and trespasses, &c. 13 Ed. 3. c. 2. But this is by a special clause in their commission; otherwise they cannot do it. H. P. C. 165. And if a commission of oyer and terminer issues to hear and determine felonies, that determines the commissions of justices of peace as to felonies, tho' not as to the peace, &c. The stat. 1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 13. directs justices of peace to take examinations in cases of felony and murder, and to certify them to the justices of gaol-delivery, &c. since which they forbear to try great felonies. H. P. C. 166.

Justices of peace may take an information against persons committing treason; issue warrants for their apprehension, and commit them to prison, &c. They commit all felons in order to trial; and bind over the prosecutors to the assizes: And if they do not certify examinations and informations to the next gaol-delivery; or do not bind over prosecutors, &c. they shall be fined. Dalt. c. 11. For petit larceny, and small felonies, the justices in their quarter-sessions may try offenders; other felonies being of course tried at the assizes: And in case of felonies, and pleas upon penal statutes, they cannot hold cognizance without an express power given them by the statutes.

Justices of peace in their sessions cannot try a cause the same sessions, without consent of parties, &c. for the party ought to have convenient time, or it will be error. Cro. Car. 317. Sid. 334. Nor can the sessions of justices refer a matter which ought to be tried, to be determined by another sessions; yet they may refer a thing to another to examine, and make report to them for their determination. 2 Salk. 477. The sessions is all as one day, and the justices may alter their judgments at any time while it continues. Ibid. 494.

'Tis incident to the office of a justice of peace to commit offenders: And a justice may commit a person that doth a felony in his own view, without warrant; but if it be on the information of another, he must make a warrant under hand and seal for that purpose. If a justice issues a warrant to arrest a felon, and the accusation be false, the justice is excused, where a felony is committed: if there be no accusation, action will lie against the justice. 1 Leam. 187. A justice makes a warrant to apprehend a felon, tho' he is not indicted, he who executes the warrant shall not be punished. 13 Rep. 76. Cro. Jac. 430. If complaint and oath be made before a justice of peace, by one, of goods stolen, and that he suspects they are in such a house, and shews the cause of his suspicion; the justice may grant a warrant to the constable, &c. to search in the place suspected, and seize the goods and person in whose custody they are found, and bring them before him, or some other justice, to give an account how he came by them; and farther to abide such order, as to law shall appertain. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 114. The search on these warrants ought to be in the day-time, and doors may be broke open by constables to take the goods; which are to be deposited in the hands of the sheriff, &c. till the party robbed hath prosecuted the offender, to have restitution. Ibid. 150, 151.

A justice of peace may make a warrant to bring a person before himself only, and it will be good; tho' it is usual to make warrants to bring the offenders before him or any other justice of the county, &c. And if a justice directs his warrant to a private person, he may execute it. 5 Rep. 60. 1 Salk. 347. If a justice grants his warrant beyond his authority, the officer must obey; but if it be where the justice has no authority, the officer is punishable if he executes it. Justices of peace may make and persuade an agreement in petty quarrels and breaches of the peace, where the King is not intitled to a fine: tho' they may not compound offences, or take money for making agreements. Noy 103. Justices may not intermeddle with property; if they do, action lies against them and the officers who execute their orders. 3 Salk. 217.

A justice of peace hath a discretionary power of binding to the good behaviour; and may require a recognizance with a great penalty of one for his keeping of the peace, where the party bound is a dangerous person, and likely to break the peace, and do much mischief. Pasch. 1652. 2 Lill. Abr. 131. And where a person is to be bound to the good behaviour, for default of sureties he may be committed to gaol. But a man giving security for keeping the peace in B. R. or the Chancery, may have a superfedeas to the justices in the country not to take security; and so where a person hears of a warrant out against him, gives surety of the peace to any other justice, &c.

If one make an assault upon a justice of peace, he may apprehend the offender, and send him to gaol till he finds sureties for the peace; and a justice may record a forcible entry upon his own possession: In other cases he cannot judge in his own cause. Wood's Inst. 81. Where a man abuleth a justice by words, before his face or behind his back, in relation to his office, he may be bound to the good behaviour; and if a justice of peace be abused in the execution of his office, the offender may be also indicted and fined. Crompt. 149. 4 Rep. 16. To say of a justice of peace he doth not understand law, &c. is indictable: And contempts against justices are punishable by indictment and fine at the sessions. 3 Mod. 139. 1 Sid. 144. But abusing a justice out of his office, by words that do not relate to his office, seems to stand only as in the case of other persons.

Justices shall not be regularly punished for any thing done by them in sessions as judges; and if a justice of peace be sued for any thing done in his office, he may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence; and if a verdict goes for him, or the plaintiff be nonsuit, he shall have double costs. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 12. Tho' if a justice of peace is guilty of any misdemeanor in his office, information lies against him in B. R. where he shall be punished by fine and imprisonment. Sid. 192. If a person be never summoned by justices of peace, to be heard and make his defence, before the justices make any order against him, it is a misbehaviour for which an information will lie against them: but it has been held, that it is not absolutely necessary to set it out in the order. Trin. 11 Geo. 1.

The court of B. R. will grant an information against a justice of peace on motion, for sending a servant to to the House of Correction without sufficient cause; if the justice do not shew good cause, &c. Mod. Cas. in L. and E. 45. 46. And for contempt of laws, &c. Attachment may be had against justices of peace in B. R. on motion of the Attorney General, &c. A justice of peace fined a thousand marks, for corrupt practices, see 1 Keb. 727. If a new commission is made and granted for justices of peace, out of which some of the justices in the old commission are omitted, yet what acts they do as justices are lawful till the next sessions, at which the new commission is published, and when the new commission is published, they are to take notice of it, and not act further.

Moor 187. By granting a new commission, discharge under the Great Seal, accession of another office, and by the death of the King, the power and offices of justices of peace determine. 4 Inst. 165. But till then they are empowered to act in a great many particular cases by statute.

By Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. No writ shall be sued out against any justice of peace, for any thing done by him in the execution of his office, until a notice in writing shall be delivered to him one month before the suing out the same, containing the cause of action, &c. within which month he may tender amends, and if the tender be found sufficient, he shall have a verdict. No such plaintiff shall recover against the justice, unless such notice shall be proved at the trial. If the justice shall neglect to make such tender, or shall make an insufficient tender, he may before issue joined, pay into court such sum as he shall think fit. Where action against a justice and constable, if there be a verdict against the justice, and the constable be acquitted, the plaintiff shall recover such costs against the justice, as to include the costs the plaintiff shall be obliged to pay to the constable. If plaintiff in any such action shall recover against a justice, and the judge shall certify that the injury was wilfully and maliciously done, the plaintiff shall recover double costs. No action shall be brought against a justice for any thing done in the execution of his office, unless commenced within six months after the act committed. By Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 27. No act, order, adjudication, warrant, indenture of apprenticeship, or other instrument made, done or executed by two or more justices, which doth not express that one or more of them is or are of the quorum, shall be impeached, set aside, or vacated for that defect only. By the statute 24 Geo. 2. c. 55. Where a justice shall grant a warrant against a person residing out of his jurisdiction, a justice of the county, &c. where such person shall reside, shall indorse his name on the warrant, which shall be a sufficient authority to the person to whom the warrant was originally directed to execute the warrant, and carry the person before the justice who indorsed the warrant, or any other justice of the same county, who, if the offence be bailable, shall take bail for the person's appearing at the next sessions for the county, &c. where the offence was committed, and deliver the recognizance and all proceedings to the constable, &c. who apprehended the party, to be by him delivered to the clerk of the peace of the county, &c. where the fact was committed; if the fact be not bailable, or the party shall not give bail, the constable may carry the party before a justice of the county where the fact was committed.

No action lies against the justice, who indorses such warrant, but only against the justice who granted it, if cause. By the Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 20. In all cases of a warrant of distress for levying any penalty inflicted, or money directed to be paid, the justice or justices granting such warrant, may therein order the goods distrained to be sold within a certain time limited in the warrant, to be not less than four days, nor more than eight days, unless the penalty or money, with the reasonable charges of taking and keeping such distress be sooner paid. The officer may deduct the reasonable charges of taking, keeping and selling the distress; and if required shall shew the party his warrant, and permit him to take a copy of it. This not to extend to Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34. nor 1 Geo. 1. c. 6. relating to tithes. See Statutes 26 Geo. 2. c. 14. and 27 Geo. 2. c. 16. for settling fees to be taken by justices clerks. See 1 Geo. 3. c. 13. for amending an act made 18 Geo. 2. concerning the qualification of justices of peace, &c.

[The Editor would have been much fuller under this head, but for two reasons; first, the laws are so voluminous that the nature of this work would not admit sufficient to be useful;—the second, that Dr. Burn hath so fully collected and so well digested all the laws relative to the office and duty of a justice of peace, that every one who is desirous of being acquainted with this part of the law is, or ought to be possessed of that very valuable work, which renders it wholly unnecessary, here, to enlarge on the subject.]

Justices of Peace within Liberties, (justitarii ad pacem infra libertates) Are such in cities, and other corporate towns, as the others are of the county; and their authority is all one within the several territories and precincts, having besides the assise of ale and beer, wood, victuals, &c. 27 H. 8. c. 5. But if the King grant to a corporation, that the mayor and recorder, &c. shall be justices of peace within the city; if there be no words of exclusion, justices of the county have concurrent jurisdiction with them; and the King, notwithstanding his charter, may grant a commission of the peace specially in that city or county. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 47. Also where the justices of any corporate town, deny doing right; justices of the peace of the county may inquire into it, as hath been lately adjudged. Mod. Cas. 164. The justices of peace in cities, or towns corporate, may commit persons apprehended within their liberties to the house of correction of the county, &c. which persons shall be liable to the like correction and punishment, as if committed there by any justices of the same county. Stat. 15 Geo. 2. c. 24. Justices of cities and corporations, are not within the qualification act. 5 Geo. 2. c. 18. See Mayors.

Justices of Trail-baston, Were justices appointed by King E. 1. during his absence in the Scotch and French wars. They were so stiled, says Hollingshed, of trailing or drawing the staff of justice; or for their summary proceeding, according to Sir Edward Coke, who tells us, they were in a manner justices in eyre; and it is said, they had a baston, or staff delivered to them as the badge of their office, so that whoever was brought before them was traile ad baston, traditus ad baculum: whereupon they had the name of justices de trail-baston, or justitarii ad trabendum offendentes ad baculum vel baston. Their office was to make inquisition through the kingdom on all officers and others, touching extortion, bribery, and such like grievances; of intruders into other mens lands, barretors, robbers and breakers of the peace, and divers other offenders; by means of which inquisitions, some were punished with death, many by ransom, and the rest flying the realm, the land was quieted, and the King gained great riches towards the support of his wars. Mat. Westm. Anno 1305. A commission of trail baston was granted to Roger de Grey, and others his associates, in the reign of King Ed. 3. Spelm. Gloss.

Justice-Seat, Is the highest court that is held in a forest, and is always held before the Lord Chief Justice in Eyre of the forest, upon warning forty days before; and there fines are set for offences, and judgments given, &c. Manswood's Forest Law, cap. 24. The fine and amercement of the justices in eyre, for false judgment, or other trespasss, shall be assessed by the said justices upon the oaths of knights, and other honest men, and be estreated into the Exchequer. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 18. And justices in eyre shall appoint a time for delivering in all writs by the sheriff, &c. 13 Ed. 1. c. 10. See Black. Com. 3 V. 72.

Justiciar, or Justicier, (Fr. justicier,) A justice, or justicier. The Lord Bermingham, justicier of Ireland. Baker's Cron. Angl. fol. 118.

The whole jurisdiction which is now distributed among the several courts of Westminster-Hall, seems in the first reigns after the conquest to have been lodged in one court, commonly called the King's court, where justice is said to have been administered sometimes by the King himself in person, and sometimes by the high justicier, who was an officer of very great authority, and used in the King's absence beyond sea to govern the realm as vice-roy. 2 Harok. P. C. 6.

The first justiciaries after the conquest were Odo bishop of Baieux in Normandy, half brother by the mother to the conqueror, and William Fitz-Osborn, who was vice-roy, and had the same power in the north that Odo had in the south, and was the chief in the conqueror's army. Brady's Preface to the Norman History 151. (B). Dugd. Chron. Series 1.

The next justiciaries were William Earl of Warren in Normandy, a great commander in the battle against Harold, and Richard de Benefacta, alias Richard de Tonebridge, son to Gilbert Earl of Brion in Normandy, and were constituted in 1073. Brady's Preface, &c. 151. (B). Dugd. Chron. Series 1.

In a great plea between Lanfrank and the said Odo, Goisfrid bishop of Constance in Normandy, was justiciary. Brady's Preface, &c. 151. (C). Dugd. Chron. Series 1.

In the beginning of William Rufus, Odo was again justiciary. William de Carilefo bishop of Durbam, a Norman, succeeded Odo, and then followed Ranulph Flambard in 1099. Afterwards in the reign of H. 1. in 1100. Hugo de Bocland, a Norman, was justiciary, and after him his son Richard Basset; then Roger bishop of Salisbury, was justiciary and chancellor. The next, in the time of King Stephen, was Henry duke of Normandy, afterwards King Henry II. And in Henry the Second's time was Robert de Bello Monte earl of Leicester in 1168, but Alboric de Vere earl of Guisnes, is said to have been justiciary before him; and after earl of Leicester, Richard de Lucie was made justiciary; after him in 1180. Ranulph de Glanvil, that famous lawyer was made justiciary; after him, Hugo de Putates, commonly called Pufus, Putac, or Pudsey, nephew to King Stephen by his sister, was made justiciary in the north parts beyond Trent; and William de Longo-Campo, or Long-Champ, bishop of Ely, was at the same time by Richard the first, made justiciary on the south parts of this side Trent. Then, after the deprivation of William bishop of Ely, Walter archbishop of Rouen in Normandy, was made justiciary of all England. Brady's Preface, &c. 151. (D) (E) (F) 152. (A) (B) (C). See Dugd. Chron. Series 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

William Long-Champ bishop of Ely, chief justiciar and lord chancellor to Ric. 1. Speed. 473. Fitz Peter, chief justiciar in the first of John. Ib. 487. Hubert de Burgh earl of Kent, chief justiciar. 1 H. 3. Ib. 513. And after him, Stephen Segrave. Ib. 521. The chief justiciar was the minister of regal command in the absence of the King. Ib. 513.

Towards the latter end of the Norman period, the power of the grand justiciar was broken, so that the Aula Regis, which before was one great court where the justiciar presided, was divided into four distinct courts, viz. Chancery, Exchequer, King's Bench, and Common Pleas. Gilb. Hist. View of the Court of Exchequer 7. cites Madd. 2, 4. it determined about the 45 H. 3. Brady's Preface, &c. 154. b.

The chancellor was the first in order on the left hand of the justiciary, and as he was a great person in court, so he was in the Exchequer; for no great thing passed but with his consent and advice; nothing could be sealed without his allowance and privy. But the justiciary surmounted him and all others in authority, and he alone was endowed with and exercised all the power which afterwards was executed by the four chief judges, viz. the Ch. Just. of B. R. the Ch. Just. of C. B. the Ch. B. of the Exchequer, and the Master of the Court of Wards. Brady's Preface to the Roman History 153. (B). As long as the power of the justiciar continued, the Aula Regis was one court, and only distinguished by the several officers; for all the officers were united under the justiciar, and he was the governor and superintendent of the courts. Gilb. Hist. View of the Exchequer 10.

Justiciatus, Judicature, prerogative. Cowell.
Justices, Is a writ directed to the sheriff in some special cases, by virtue of which he may hold plea of debt in his county court for a large sum; whereas otherwise by his ordinary power he is limited to sums under 40s. F. N. B. 117. Kitch. 74. It is called justices, because it is a commission to the sheriff to do a man justice and right, beginning with the word justices, &c. Bract. lib. 4. makes mention of a justices to the sheriff of London, in a case of dower; and it lies in account, annuity, customs and services, &c. New Nat. Br. In debt, the writ runs thus: The King, to the sheriff of S. greeting: We command you, that you justice A. B. that justly and without delay he render to C. D. five pounds, which to him he oweth, as it is said, and as reasonably he can shew, that he ought to render him; that no more clamour thereof we may hear, for default of justice, &c.

Justifiable Homicide. See Homicide, and Black. Com. 4 V. 178.

Justification.

Justification, (justificatio) Is a maintaining or shewing good reason in court why one did such a thing which he is called to answer. Broke. And pleas in justification are to set forth some special matter whereby the party justifies what he hath done, concerning lands or goods; as that he did it by authority; and this may be by the law, or from another person; wherein to make it right, there must be good authority, which is to be exactly pursued. Shep. Epit. 1041. Justification may be in trespass, and under writs, process, &c. But a person cannot justify a trespass, unless he confesseth it; for he ought to plead the special matter, and confess and justify what he hath done: and where it cannot be pleaded, justification may be given in evidence. 3 Salk. 218. Where a defendant justifies in trespass, on his possession, by virtue of any estate, he must shew his title; but when the matter is collateral to the title to the land, it is otherwise. 2 Mod. 70. If a sheriff, or other officer, justifies by virtue of any returnable writ, he is to shew that the writ was returned; tho' he need not if the writs are not returnable writs. 1 Salk. 409. And it must be shewn from what courts the writs issued. Ibid. 517. Justification may be by the command of an officer, to aid him, &c. 2 Nels. Abr. 1067.

When the action concerns a transitory thing, if the defendant justifies the taking or doing in one place; it is a justification in all places: if the action concern a local thing, a justification in one place is not a justification in another place; for in the former case the place is not material, but the meer doing or taking of the thing is the substance; and in the latter the place is material, as the defendant may be able to justify as to one place, and not in another. Pasb. 24. Car. B. R. 2 Lill. Abr. 134. If the matter of justification is local, there the defendant ought to shew the cause specially, and traverse the place; but not where it is transitory. Cro. Eliz. 667. If one have corn upon the lands of another, and he take it, and the owner of the ground sues him, he must justify, and may not plead Not guilty. 5 Rep. 85. In action for entering a close, and taking corn; the defendants may justify they did it as servants to the parson; and that the corn was tithe, severed from the nine parts, &c. 2 Keb. 44. A man may plead in justification, that land is his freehold, on making an entry thereon, &c. That one entered a house, to apprehend a felon; or by warrant to levy a forfeiture; to take a distress, &c. And in assault, that he did it by necessity, &c. Lib. Ent. Words spoken may be justified, because spoken in a legal way; and for words the defendant may justify in an action; but not in an indictment, &c. 1 Darv. 162. 3 Salk. 226. A justification (in other words) is a special plea in bar; as in actions of assault and battery, son assault demesne, that it was the plaintiff's own original assault; (or rather, that the plaintiff first, with force and arms, assaulted the defendant, and he defended himself, and therefore, if any damage happened to plaintiff, 'twas owing to the assault he made on defendant, and in his necessary defence) in trespass, that the defendant did the thing complained of in right of some office which warranted him so to do; or in an action of slander, that the plaintiff was guilty of such or such a crime, and therefore he the defendant, spoke the words. See Black. Com. 3 V. 306. Com. Dig. 5 V. 69, 319, &c. There is a justifiable homicide, &c. and justifiable assault. See Assault.

Justificators, (justificatores) Are a kind of compurgators, or those that by oath justify the innocence, or oaths of others; as in the case of waging of law: and we read in Spelman, who leaves this word without explication—Will. Rex Angliæ H. Camerario & justificatoribus suis, omnibus suis fidelibus Norf. Salutem: inquirete per comitatum quis justius hujusmodi forisfacturam haberet tempore patris mei, sive Abbas Ramefie, &c.

Justifying Bail. If a man is arrested, and puts in bail, the defendant's attorney may except against the bail, as being, in his opinion, insufficient. In such case, the bail (or other bail in their place) must justify themselves in court, or before a commissioner (for taking bail) in the country, by swearing themselves house-keepers, and each of them to be worth double the sum for which they are bail, after payment of all their debts. See the Books of Practice, and Black. Com. 3 V. 291.

Justitia, Was anciently used for a judge, and sometimes for a statute, law, or ordinance. Richardus Dei Gratia, sciat, nos, de communi proborum virorum consilio, fecisse hæc justitias subscriptas. Hoveden, p. 666.

Justitia, Is often taken for jurisdiction, or the office of a judge. Leg. Edw. Conf. cap. 26. Justitia cognoscens latronis, sua est de homine suo.

Justitia, He who now is called justitarius was formerly called justitia, i. e. a judge. Leg. H. 1. cap. 42. A Rege vel justitia ejus, vel a communi utrorumque dominum submoneatur.

Justitias facere, Is to hold plea of any thing. Mr. Selden, in his Notes upon Eadmerus, (mentioning that plea which was held at Piquenden between archbishop Lanfrank and Odo bishop of Bayeux,) tells us, Huic placito interfuerunt Geisfredus episcopus Constantiensis, qui in loco regis fuit, & justitiam illam tenuit, Lanfrancus episcopus qui ut dictum est placitavit, & etiam iuraverunt, &c.

Justitium, A ceasing from the prosecution of law, and exercising justice in places judicial. Cowell.

Kantref. According to the description of Mr. Humphrey Lloyd, out of the laws and ordinances of Howeldda, a kantref had its denomination from one hundred towns, and signifies as much, under which were contained so many commots, which the Welsh call commotud, and signifies provincia or regio, and consisteth of twelve manors or circuits, and two townships. We find the word mentioned in Mon. Angl. 1 part, fol. 319. thus—Le premier Conquerreur de trois kantref de la terre de Brecknoch, estoit Bernard de Nefmarch Norman: See Cantref.

Keep, A strong tower or hold in the middle of any castle or fortification, wherein the besieged make their last efforts of defence, was formerly in England called a keep: and the inner pile within the castle of Dover, erected by K. Hen. 2. about the year 1153. was termed the King's keep:

so at Windsor, &c. It seems to be something of the nature with what is called abroad a Citadel.

Keeper of the Forest, (Custos Forestæ) Or chief warden of the forest, hath the principal government over all officers within the forest; and warns them to appear at the court of justice seat, on a general summons from the Lord Chief Justice in Eyre. Manwood, Part. 1. p. 156.

Keeper of the Great Seal, (Custos magni sigilli) Is a Lord by his office, styled Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, and is of the King's Privy Council: Through his hands pass all charters, commissions and grants of the King, under the Great Seal; without which seal many of those grants and commissions are of no force in law, for the King is by interpretation of law a corporation, and passeth nothing but by the Great Seal, which is as the public faith of the kingdom, in the high esteem and reputation justly attributed thereto. The Great Seal consists of two impressions, one being the very seal itself with the effigies of the King stamped on it; the other has an impression of the King's arms in the figure of a target, for matters of a smaller moment, as certificates, &c. that are usually pleaded sub pede sigilli. And anciently when the King travelled into France or other foreign kingdoms, there were two Great Seals; one went with the King, and another was left with the Custos Regni, or the Chancellor, &c. If the Great Seal be altered; the same is notified in the Court of Chancery, and publick proclamation made thereof by the sheriffs, &c. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 171, 174. The Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, by statute 5 Eliz. c. 18. hath the same place, authority, preeminence, jurisdiction and execution of laws, as the Lord Chancellor of England hath, and he is constituted per traditionem magni sigilli, &c. and by taking his oath. 4 Inst. 87. See Laub. Archæon. 65. 1 Roll. Abr. 385. The Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, is superior, in point of precedence, to every temporal lord. Stat. 31 Hen. 8. c. 10. See Black. Com. 3 V. 71.

Keeper of the Privy Seal, (Custos privati sigilli) Is that officer through whose hands all charters, pardons, &c. pass, signed by the King, before they come to the Great Seal; and some things which do not pass that seal at all: he is also of the Privy Council, but was anciently called only Clerk of the Privy Seal; after which he was named Guardian del Privy Seal; and lastly, Lord Privy Seal, and made one of the great officers of the kingdom. 12 R. 2. c. 11. *Rot. Kethere, Signifies a custom to have a cart-way; or a commutation for the customary duty for carriage of the lord's goods. Cowell.

Kernellare domum, (From Lat. Crena, a notch) To build a house formerly with a wall or tower, kernelled with crannies or notches, for the better convenience of shooting arrows, and making other defence. Du Fresne derives this word from quarnellus, or quadranellus, a four-square hole or notch; ubique patent quarnelli sive fenestre: And this form of walls and battlements for military uses might possibly have its name from quadrellus a four-square dart. It was a common favour granted by our Kings in ancient times, after castles were demolished for prevention of rebellion, to give their chief subjects leave to fortify their mansion-houses with kernelled walls. — *Licentiam dedimus Johanni de H. Kichell, A cake: It was a good old custom for god-fathers and godmothers, every time their god-children asked them blessing, to give them a cake; which was called a God's Kichell. It is still a proverbial saying in some counties, Ask my blessing, and I will give you some plum-cake. Cowell.

Kiddes, Signifies one that hadges, or carries corn, dead victual, or other merchandise, up and down to sell. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 12. They are also called kiddiers. 13 El. cap. 25.

Kiddele, Kidel, or Kidel, (Kidellus) A dam, or open wear in a river, with a loop or narrow cut in it, accommodated for the laying of weels or other engines to catch fish. 2 Inst. fol. 38. Angustias, machinas sive ingenia in fluminibus posita ad salmones aliosque pisces interceptandos. Fishermen corruptly call them kettles. The word is ancient, for in Magna Charta, cap. 24. we read thus, Omnes kidelli deponantur de cætero penitus per Thamesiam & Medeweyam & per totam Angliam, nisi per costeram maris. And in a charter made by King John, power was granted to the city of London, De kidellis amovendis per Thamesiam & Medeweyam. 1 Hen. 4. cap. 12. it was accorded, inter alia, That a survey should be made of the wears, mills, stanks, flukes, and kidels, in the great rivers of England. Inq. capit. apud Derb. 15 *Nov. 1 Eliz. post mortem Tho. Kidnapping, Is the stealing and conveying away of a man, woman or child; and is an offence at Common law, punishable by fine, pillory, &c. Raym. 474. Also if a master of a ship, &c. shall, during his being abroad, force any man ashore, and willingly leave him behind, he shall suffer three months imprisonment. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7. But the party thus injured may maintain an action against the party offending, for damages sustained on occasion of such treatment, and is not bound to proceed on the statute.

According to Blackstone, this is unquestionably a very heinous crime, as it robs the King of his subjects, banishes a man from his country, and may in its consequences, be productive of the most cruel and disagreeable hardships; and therefore the Common law of England has punished it with fine, imprisonment and pillory. Raym. 474. 2 Show. 221. Skin. 47. Comb. 10. Kindred, Are a certain body of persons of kin or related to each other. There are three degrees of kindred in our law; one in the right line descending, another in the right line ascending, and the third in the collateral line; and the right line descending, wherein the kindred of the male line are called Agnati, and of the female line Cognati, is from the father to the son, and so on to his children in the male and female line; and if no son, then to the daughter, and to her children in the male and female line; if neither son nor daughter, or any of their children, to the nephew and his children, and if none of them to the niece and her children; if neither nephew nor niece, nor any of their children, then to the grandson or granddaughter of the nephew; and if neither of them, to the grandson or granddaughter of the niece; and if none of them, then to the great grandson or great granddaughter of the nephew and of the niece, &c. & sic ad infinitum.

The right line ascending is directly upwards; as from the son to the father or mother; and if neither father nor mother, to the grandfather or grandmother; if no grandfather or grandmother, to the great grandfather or great grandmother; if neither great grandfather or great grandmother, to the father of the great grandfather, or the mother of the great grandmother; and if neither of them, then to the great grandfather's grandfather, or the great grandmother's grandmother; and if none of them, to the great grandfather's great grandfather, or great grandmother's great grandmother, & sic in infinitum. The collateral line is either descending by the brother and his children downwards, or by the uncle upwards: It is between brothers and sisters, and to uncles and aunts, and the rest of the kindred, upwards and downwards, across and amongst themselves. 2 Nell. Abr. 1077, 1078.

If there are no kindred in the right descending line, the inheritance of lands goes to the collateral line; but it never ascends in the right line upwards, if there are any kindred of the collateral line, though it may ascend in that line: And there is this difference between the right line descending and the collateral line; that the right of representation of kindred in the right descending line reaches beyond the great grandchildren of the same parents; but in the collateral line, it doth not reach beyond brothers and sisters children; for after them there is no representation among collaterals.

In the right ascending line the father or mother are always in the first degree of kindred; and by the Civil law, if the son died without issue, his father or mother succeeded, and after them his brother or sister, uncle, aunt, &c. But in case of purchase by the son, if he died without issue, his father or mother could not inherit, but his brothers and sisters, &c. by which it appears, that the father cannot succeed the son immediately, though he is the next of kin. It is a constant rule in the collateral line, that those who are of the whole blood are first admitted; but after brothers and sisters children, the nearest in degree in kindred is to be considered, and not whether they are of the whole or half blood; as for instance; there were two brothers of the whole blood, and one of the half blood, those of the whole blood died, each of them leaving issue a son, then one of the sons died without issue; in this case his uncle of the half blood shall be admitted before the other surviving son of his brother by the whole blood: yet if a man purchase lands and dies without issue, it shall never go the half blood in the collateral line; tho' it is otherwise in case of a descent from a common ancestor.

The children of the brothers and sisters of the half blood, shall exclude all other collateral ascendants, as uncles and aunts, and all remoter kindred of the whole blood in the collateral line; but then the brothers of the half blood, and their children, shall succeed equally per stirpes, and not per capita, according to the distinct number of their several persons.

There are several rules to know the degrees of kindred; in the ascending line, take the son and add the father, and it is one degree ascending, then add the grandfather, and it is a second degree, a person added to a person in the line of consanguinity making a degree; and if there are many persons, take away one, and you have the number of degrees; as if there are four persons, it is the third degree, if five the fourth, &c. so that the father, son, and grandchild, in the descending line, though three persons make but two degrees: to know in what degree of kindred the sons of two brothers stand, begin from the grandfather and descend to one brother, the father of one of the sons, which is one degree, then descend to his son the ancestor's grandson, which is a second degree; and then descend again from the grandfather to the other brother, father of the other of the sons, which is one degree, and descend to his son, &c. and it is a second degree; thus reckoning the person from whom the computation is made, it appears there are two degrees, and that the sons of two brothers are distant from each other two degrees: For in what degree either of them is distant from the common stock, the person from whom the computation is made, they are distant between themselves in the same degree; and in every line the person must be reckoned from whom the computation is made. If the kindred are not equally distant from the common stock; then in what degree the most remote is distant, in the same degree they are distant between themselves, and so the kin the most remote maketh the degree; by which rule, I, and the grandchild of my uncle, are distant in the third degree, such grandchild being distant three degrees from my grandfather, the nearest common stock. Wood's Inst. 48, 49. The Common law agrees in its computation with the Civil and Canon law, as to the right line; and only with the Canon law as to the collateral line. Ibid. See Black. Com. 2 V. 205.

King, (Rex, from Lat. Rego to rule, in Sax. Cuning or Coning) Is a monarch or potentate, who rules singly and sovereignly over a people; or he that has the highest power and rule in the land. The King is the head of the commonwealth; and the learned Bracon tell us, Rex est vicarius & minister Dei in terra, omnes quidem sub eo, & ipse sub nullo nisi tantum sub Deo. Bracon. lib. 1. c. 8. But our King on his coronation, takes an oath of the following purport, viz. To govern the people of this kingdom, according to the statutes in parliament agreed on, and the laws and customs of the same; to his power to cause law and justice in mercy to be executed in all his judgments; to maintain to the utmost of his power the laws of God, the true profession of the gospel, and the protestant reformed religion established by law; and preserve to the bishops and clergy their rights and privileges, as by law are appertaining to them: this is the obligatory oath of our Kings, as regulated to be taken by 1 W. & M. c. 6. And the coronation oaths, in former times, were undoubtedly a contract between the King and the people in this nation.

The nature of the government of our King, says Forseus, is not only regal, but political: If it were merely the former, regal, he would have power to make what alterations alterations he pleased in our law, and impose taxes and other hardships upon the subject, whether they would or no; but his government being political, he cannot change the laws of the realm, without the people consent thereto, nor burthen them against their wills. Forrescue's Laud. Leg. Angl. 17. * It is also said by the same writer, that the King is appointed to protect his subjects in their lives, properties and laws; for which end and purpose he has the delegation of power from the people: likewise our King is such by the fundamental law of our land; by which law the meanest subject enjoys the liberty of his person, and property in his estate; and it is every man's concern to defend these, as well as the King in his lawful rights. Forrescue. A late author taking notice of the breaches made in the constitution of this kingdom in several reigns, and the necessity of their being redressed, affirms that is the original power and constitution of the states of the kingdom, to re-institute the regal estate, as when our Kings act arbitrarily and break thro' the constitution, as where there is no immediate heir to succeed the King, so that the throne becomes actually vacant; and without this he takes it there is no perfect constitution. Britann. Constitut.

In King John's Magna Charta of liberties, there was a clause making it lawful for the barons of the realm to choose twenty-five barons to see the charter observed by the King; with power, on any justice or other minister of the King's failing to do right, and acting contrary thereto, for four of the said barons to address the King, and pray that the same might be remedied; and if the same were not amended in forty days, upon the report of the four barons to the rest of the twenty-five, those twenty-five barons with the commonalty of the whole land, were at liberty to distress the King, take his castles, lands, &c. until the evils complain'd of should be remedied, according to their judgment; saving the person of the King, queen, and their children: And when the evils were redressed, the people were to obey the King as before. King John's Magna Chart. cap. 73. But this clause, and some others in favour of liberty, are omitted out of King Henry III's Magna Charta; though in a statute made at Oxford, anno 42 Hen. 3. to reform misgovernment, it was enacted, that twenty-four great men should be named, twelve by the King, and twelve by parliament, to appoint justices, chancellors, and other officers, to see Magna Charta observed.

The barons wars mentioned in our ancient histories, seem to have proceeded in some measure from a like power granted to them as by the charter of King John; and probably the parliament's wars from their example. Sir Edward Coke tells us, that if there be a King regnant, in possession of the crown, although he be but Rex de facto, and not de jure, yet he is Seignior le Roy; and another that hath right, if he be out of possession, is not within the meaning of the stat. 11 H. 7: c. 1. for the subjects to serve and defend him in his wars, &c. And a pardon, &c. granted by a King de jure, that is not likewise de facto, is void. 3 Inst. 7. A King that usurps the crown, grants licences of alienation or echeats, it will be good against the rightful King; so of pardons, and any thing that doth not concern the King's ancient patrimony, or the government of the people: Judicial acts in the time of such a one, bind the right King and all who submitted to his judicature. The crown was tossed between the two families of York and Lancaster many years; and yet the acts of royalty done in the reign of the several competitors, were confirmed by the parliament: And these resolutions were made, because the common people cannot judge of the King's title, and to avoid anarchy and confusion. Jenk Cent. 130, 131.

Every King for the time being, has a right to the people's allegiance, who 'tis said are bound by the statute 11 H. 7: c. 1. to defend him in his wars against every power whatsoever, and shall incur no pains or forfeiture thereby. 1 Hawk. P. C. 36. And a King out of possession, we are bound by the duty of our allegiance to resist. Ibid. But in the case of King Charles the Second, who was kept out of the exercise of the kingly office by traitors and rebels, it was adjudged that he was King both de facto and de jure; and all the acts which were done to the keeping him out, were high treason. Kel. Rep. 15.

There may be some Kings de facto, to whom it may be dangerous to do any service, viz. Such as shall depose a rightful King: And according to the Lord Chief Justice Hale, if the right heir of the crown be in actual exercise of the sovereignty in one part of the kingdom, and an usurper in the exercise of it in another, the law adjudgeth him in the possession of the crown that hath the true right; and the other is not a King de facto, but a disturber and no King: this was the case between King Ed. 4. and Hen. 6. And the like was held as to Queen Mary, who openly laid claim to the crown, and was proclaimed Queen; at the same time the Lady Jane was proclaimed Queen at London on the nomination of King Ed. 6. so that both being de facto in possession of the crown, the law adjudged the possession in Mary, who had the right of the same. State Trials 932.

It is high treason to conspire against the King, Queen, &c. And a person may be guilty of treason against a King, tho' he be not in possession of the crown. The dignity of the King of England is imperial; and our Kings have placed on their heads an imperial crown: King Edgar wrote himself imperator & dominus, &c. But no King of England used any seal of arms till the reign of Rich. 1. before that time, the seal was the King sitting in a chair of state on one side of the seal, and on horseback on the other side; but this King sealed with a seal of two lions, and King John was the first that bare three lions; and afterwards Ed. 3. quarter'd the arms of France, which has been continued down to this time. Also King Henry 8. was the first to whom Majesty was attributed; before which our Kings were called Hightness, &c. Lex Constitut. 47, 48. The eldest son of the King of England is Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall, &c. and the younger sons are born Dukes and Earls of what places the King pleases. K. Hen. 2. took his son into a kind of subordinate regality with him, so that there were Rex Pater and Rex Filius; but he did not divest himself of his sovereignty, but reserved to himself the homage of his subjects. And notwithstanding this King, by consent of parliament, created his son John King of Ireland; and King Rich. 2. made Robert de Vere Duke of Ireland; and Ed. 3. made his eldest son Lord of Ireland, with royal dominion; yet it has been held, that the King cannot regularly make a King within his own kingdom. 4 Inst. 357, 360. Hen. de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, was by King Henry 6. crown'd King of Wight Island; but it was resolved, that this could not be done without consent of parliament, and even then our greatest men have been of opinion, that the King could not by law create a King in his own kingdom, because there cannot be two Kings of the same place: And afterwards the same King Henry made the same Earl of Warwick Primus Comes totius Angliæ. A King cannot resign or dismiss himself of his office of King, without consent of parliament; nor could Hen. 2. without such consent, divide the sovereignty: there is a sacred band between the King and his kingdom, that cannot be dissolved without the free and mutual consent of both in parliament; and though in foreign kingdoms there have been instances of voluntary cessions and resignations, which possibly may be warranted by their several constitutions, yet by the laws of England, the King cannot resign his sovereignty without his parliament. Sir Matt. Hale's Hist. Coronæ. But yet let it be remembered, 'twas adjudged by parliament that James the Second had abdicated the throne.

If a King hath a kingdom by title of descent, where the laws have taken good effect and rooting; or if a King conquers a Christian kingdom, after the people have laws given them for the government of the country, to which they submit, no succeeding King can alter the same without the parliament. 7 Rep. 17. It is nevertheless held, that conquered countries may be governed by what laws the King thinks fit, and that the laws of England do not take place in such countries, until declared so by the conqueror, or his successors; here in case of infidels their laws do not cease, but only such as are against the law of God; and where the laws are rejected or silent, they shall shall be governed according to the rule of natural equity, 2 Salk. Rep. 411, 412, 666.

Our Kings have distributed their whole power of jurisdiction to the courts of justice; which courts by immemorial usage have gained a known and stated jurisdiction, that no King can alter without an act of parliament. 2 Hawk. P. C. 2. But as it has been resolved, that the successor of every King begins his reign on the very day that the former King died; therefore all patents of judges, sheriffs, justices of peace, &c. determine by the death of the King. Tho' vide stat. 1 Ann. c. 8. See 1 Geo. 3. c. 23. The Kings of England not having the whole legislative power, if the King and clergy make a canon, tho' it binds the clergy in re ecclesiastica, it does not bind laymen; for they are not represented in the convocation, but in parliament: In the primitive church, the laity were present at all synods; and when the empire became Christian, no canon was made without the Emperor's consent, and indeed the Emperor's consent included that of the people, he having in himself the whole legislative power; but the Kings of this kingdom have it not. 2 *Salk. King's Bench (Bancus Regius,) from the Saxon banca, a bench or form.

We shall here treat of,

- I. The court itself, generally.
- II. Of its criminal jurisdiction.
- III. Of its civil jurisdiction, &c.
- IV. How far its presence suspends the power of other courts, &c.
- V. Of the officers of the court.

I. Of the court of King's Bench.

The court of King's Bench is the court or judgment-seat, where the King of England was sometimes wont to sit in his own person; and therefore it was moveable with the court of King's household, and called Curia Domini Regis and Aula Regia, as Gwin reports in the Preface to his Reading; and that therein, and in the court of Exchequer, which were the only courts of the King till Henry the Third's days, were handled all matters of justice, as well civil as criminal.

After the division of the courts, and the establishment of the court of Common Pleas, for the express purpose of determining civil suits, the court of King's Bench was wont in ancient times to be especially exercised in all criminal matters and pleas of the crown, leaving the handling of private contracts and civil actions to the Common Pleas and other courts. Glanvil, lib. 1. cap. 2, 3, 4. and lib. 10. cap. 18. Smith de Rep. Ang. lib. 2. c. 11. 4 Inst. fol. 70.

This court hath a president who is Lord Chief Justice of England, with three or four justices assistants; or according to Fortescue, cap. 51. four or five, and officers thereto belonging, the clerk of the crown, a prothonotary, and other inferior ministers and attorneys. Corvill.

Towards the latter end of the Norman period, the Aula Regis, which was before one great court where the justiciar presided was divided into four distinct courts, 1. the court of Chancery, King's Bench, Common Pleas and Exchequer. Madox, c. 19. Brañ. lib. 3. c. 7. fol. 105.

The court of King's Bench retained the greater similitude with the ancient Curia or Aula Regis, and was always ambulatory, and removed with the King wherever he went: Hence the writs returnable into this court are Coram nobis ubicunque fuerimus in Anglia; and all records there are stiled Coram Rege, as it is still supposed to have always the King himself in person sitting in it; from whence it obtained the name of the court of King's Bench, and hath always retained a supreme original jurisdiction in all criminal matters; for in these the process both issued, and was returnable into this court; but in trespass it might be made returnable into either the King's Bench or Common Pleas, because the plea was criminal as well as civil. 4 Inst. 70. 2 Inst. 24. Co. Lit. 71. Dyer 187. Cramp. of Courts 782. 1 Rol. Abr. 94. By Stat. 28 Ed. 1. c. 5. this court is to follow the King. King Hen. 3. sat in person with the justices. Banco Regis several times, being seated on a high bench, and the judges in a lower one at his feet: And the King's Bench was originally the only court in Westminster-Hall; out of which the courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer seem to have been derived. 2 Hawk. P. C. 6.

This court hath supreme authority, the King being still presumed by law to sit there as judge of the court, tho' he doth judge by his judges; and the proceedings are supposed to be Coram nobis, that is before the King himself, for which reason all writs in this court are made so returnable, and not Coram justiciariis nostris, as is the form in the Common Pleas. 4 Inst. 73.

II. Of the criminal jurisdiction of the court of King's Bench.

This court is termed the Custos morum of all the realm, and by the plentitude of its power, wherever it meets with an offence contrary to the first principles of justice, and of dangerous consequence if not restrained, adapts a proper punishment to it. 1 Sid. 168. 2 Hawk. P. C. 6.

The justices of B. R. are the sovereign justices of oyer and terminer, gaol-delivery, and of eyre, and coroners of the land; and their jurisdiction is general all over England: By their preference the power of all other justices in the county, during the time of this court's sitting in it, is suspended; for in presentia majoris cessat potestas minoris; but such justices may proceed by virtue of a special commission, &c. H. P. C. 156. 4 Inst. 73. 2 Hawk. P. C. 32. It is these justices who have a sovereign jurisdiction over all matters of a criminal and publick nature, judicially brought before them, to give remedy either by the Common law or by statute: And their power is original and ordinary; when the King hath appointed them, they have their jurisdiction from the law. 1 Hawk. 152. 4 Inst. 74.

It has a particular jurisdiction, not only over all capital offences, but also over all other misdemeanors of a publick nature, tending either to a breach of the peace, or to oppression or faction, or any manner of misgovernment; and it is not material whether such offences being manifestly against the public good, directly injure any particular person or not. 4 Inst. 71. 11 Co. 98. 2 Hawk. P. C. 6.

And for the better restraining such offences, it has a discretionary power of inflicting exemplary punishment on offenders, either by fine, imprisonment or other infamous punishment, as the nature of the crime, considered in all its circumstances, shall require; and it may make use of any prison which shall seem most proper; and it is said, that no other court can remove or bail persons condemned to imprisonment by this court. 2 Hawk. P. C. 7.

Also it hath so sovereign a jurisdiction in all criminal matters, that an act of parliament appointing that all crimes of a certain denomination shall be tried before certain judges, doth not exclude the jurisdiction of this court, without express negative words; and therefore it hath been resolved, that 33 H. 8. cap. 12. which enacts, That all treasons, &c. within the King's house, shall be determined before the Lord Steward of the King's King's house, &c. doth not restrain this court from proceeding against such offences. 2 Inst. 549. 2 Jones 53. 2 Hawk. P. C. 7.

But where a statute creates a new offence which was not taken notice of by the Common law, and erects a new jurisdiction for the punishment of it, and prescribes a certain method of proceeding, it seems questionable how far this court has an implied jurisdiction in such a case. 1 Sid. 296. 2 Hawk. P. C. 7.

This court, by the plenitude of its power, may as well proceed on indictments removed by certiorari out of inferior courts, as on those originally commenced here, whether the court below be determined, or still in esse, and whether the proceedings be grounded on the Common law, or on a statute making a new law concerning an old offence. Dalf. 25. 4 Ed. 3. 31. b. Crompt. Jurisf. 131.

But the court of King's Bench will not give judgment on a conviction in the inferior court, where the proceedings are removed by certiorari, but will allow the party to waive the writ below, and to plead de novo, and to go to a trial upon an issue joined in B. R. Carth. 6. adjudged in the case of one Baker, who was convicted at Kingston upon Hull, for speaking seditious words.

Nor can a record, removed into the King's Bench from an inferior court, regularly be remanded after the term in which it came in; yet if the court perceives any practice in endeavouring to remove such record, or that it is intended for delay, they may in discretion refuse to receive it, and remand it back before it is filed. 2 Hawk. P. C. 7. and several authorities there cited.

Also by the construction of the statutes, which give a trial by nisi prius, the King's Bench may grant such a trial in cases of treason or felony, as well as in common cases, because for such trial, not the record, but only a transcript is sent down. 4 Inst. 74. Raym. 364.

And by the 6 Hen. 8. cap. 6. it is enacted, "That the King's Bench have full authority, by discretion, to remand as well the bodies of all felons removed thither, as their indictments, into the counties where the felonies were done; and to command the justices of gaol-delivery, justices of the peace, and all other justices, to proceed thereon after the course of the Common law, as the said justices might have done, if the said indictments and prisoners had not been brought into the said King's Bench." This act extends not to high treason. Raym. 367.

The judges of this court are the sovereign justices of oyer and terminer, gaol-delivery, conservators of the peace, &c. as also the sovereign coroners; and therefore, where the sheriff and coroners may receive appeals by bill, a fortiori they may; also this court may admit persons to bail in all cases according to their discretion. 4 Inst. 73. 9 Co. 118. b. 4 Inst. 74. Vaugh. 157.

In the county where the King's Bench sits, there is every term a grand inquest, who are to present all criminal matters arising within that county, and then the same court proceeds upon indictments so taken; or if in vacation, there be any indictment of felony before the justices of peace, oyer and terminer or gaol-delivery there sitting, it may be removed by certiorari into B. R. and there they proceed de die in diem, &c. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 3.

It may award execution, against persons attainted in parliament, or any other court; when the record of their attainder or a transcript is removed, and their persons brought thither by habeas corpus. Cro. Car. 176. Cro. Jac. 495. Pardons of persons condemned by former justices of gaol-delivery, ought to be allowed in B. R. the record and prisoner being removed thither by certiorari and habeas corpus. 2 Hawk. 27.

III. Of the civil jurisdiction of the court of King's Bench, &c.

On the first division of the courts, it was intended to confine the jurisdiction of the court of King's Bench to matters merely criminal, and accordingly soon afterwards it was enacted by Magna Charta, cap. 11. That Common Pleas should not follow the King's court, (i. e. B. R.) but be held in a certain place: Hence it is that this court cannot determine a meer real action. 17 Ed. 3. 50. 1 Roll. Abr. 536, 537.

But notwithstanding Common Pleas cannot be immediately holden Banco Regis, yet where there is a defect in the court, where by law they be holden originally, they may be holden in B. R. as if a record come out of the Common Pleas by writ of error, there they may hold plea to the end; so where the plea in a writ of right is removed out of the county by a pone in B. R. on a writ of mesne replevin, &c. 2 Inst. 23. 4 Inst. 72, 113. and see Saund. 256. Shew. P. C. 57.

So any action vi & armis, where the King is to have fine, as ejectment, trespass, forcible entry, &c. being of a mixed nature, may be commenced in B. R. 2 Inst. 23.

Also any officer or minister of the court, entitled to the privilege thereof may be there sued by bill in debt, covenant or other principal action; for the act takes not away the privilege of the court. 2 Inst. 23. 4 Inst. 71. 2 Bulst. 123.

From hence arose the notion, that if a man was taken up as a trespasser in the King's Bench, and there in custody, they might declare against him in debt, covenant or account; for this likewise was a case of privilege, since the Common Pleas could not procure the prisoners of the King's Bench to appear in their court; and therefore it was an exception out of Magna Charta. 4 Inst. 71. Cro. Car. 330.

By the statute of Gloucester, cap. 8. None shall have writs of trespass before justices, unless he swear by his faith that the goods taken away were worth forty shillings.

This oath is now disused, yet if the damages laid in the declaration (in cases cognizable in inferior courts) do not amount to 40*s.* the court will not hold plea of the matter. If laid to the amount of 40*s.* and there is not any sett off, and plaintiff recovers under 40*s.* defendant may suggest it on the roll, and plaintiff shall not have more costs than damages.

The court of King's Bench now holds plea in all actions in general, except real actions, suffering of recoveries, and leveying of fines, &c. but vide infra.

To this court it regularly belongs to examine errors of all judges and justices in their judgments and proceedings; the court of Exchequer excepted. F. N. B. 20, 21. It hath been held, that a writ of error lies in B. R. of an attainder before the Lord High Steward. 1 Sid. 208. And upon judgment given in the Chancery, as well as other courts, writ of error in many cases will lie returnable in the court of King's Bench. But on proceedings in B. R. by original writ, error lies not, but to the parliament. The court of B. R. being the highest court of Common law, hath power to reform inferior courts, reverse erroneous judgments given therein, and punish the magistrates and officers for corruption, &c. 2 Hawk. 8.

The court of King's Bench, as it is the highest court of Common law, hath not only power to reverse erroneous judgments for such errors as appear the defect of the understanding; but also to punish all inferior magistrates, and all officers of justice, for wilful and corrupt abuses of their authority against the obvious principles of natural justice; the instances of which are so numerous, and so various in their kinds, that it seems needless to attempt to insert them. 2 Hawk. P. C. 8. Vaugh. 157. 1 Salk. 201.

This court grants habeas corpus's to relieve persons wrongfully imprisoned; and may bail any person whatsoever: A person illegally committed to prison by the King and council, or either house of parliament, (as it is said) may be bailed in B. R. and in some cases on legal commitments; also persons committed by the Lord Chancellor, &c. 2 Hawk. 110, 111. Writs of Mandamus are granted by this court, to restore officers in corporations, colleges, &c. unjustly turned out; and freemen wrongfully disfranchised: Also quo warranto's against persons or corporations, usurping franchises and liberties against against the King; and on misuser of privileges to seize the liberties, &c. and in B. R. the King's letters patent may be repealed by Scire facias, &c. This court in ancient times was (as before observed) ordinarily exercised in all criminal matters, and pleas of the crown; leaving private contracts and civil actions to the Common Pleas, and other courts. 4 Inst. 70. It is now divided into a Crown-side and a Plea-side; the determining criminal, and the other civil causes: The Crown-side determines all criminal matters, (wherein the King is plaintiff) as treasons, felonies, murders, rapes, robberies, riots, breaches of the peace, and all causes prosecuted by way of indictment, information, &c. And into the court of B. R. Indictments from all inferior courts and orders of sessions, &c. may be removed by certiorari; and inquisitions of murder are certified of course into this court, as it is the supreme court of criminal jurisdiction: Hence also issue attachments, for disobeying rules or orders, &c. 4 Inst. 71, 72. On the Plea-side it holds plea of all personal actions prosecuted by bill or writ, as actions of debt, detinue, covenant, account, actions upon the case, and all other personal actions, ejectment, trespass, waste, &c. against any person in the custody of the marshal of the court, as every one sued here is supposed to be; and in all personal actions for or against any officer, minister or clerk of the court, who in respect of their necessary attendance have the privilege of the court. Ibid. It has been held, that action upon the statute of Winchester, of robbery, does not lie by original in the court of B. R. because it is a common plea; but it has been adjudged otherwise, and allowed on bill. 2 Danv. Abr. 279, 282. An appeal in B. R. must be arraigned on the Plea-side; except it come in by certiorari, when it is said it ought to be arraigned on the Crown-side. 2 Hawk. 308. Where the court of B. R. proceeds on an offence committed in the same county wherein it sits, the process may be made returnable immediately; but when it proceeds on an offence removed by certiorari from another county, there must be fifteen days between the teste and return of every process, &c. 9 Rep. 118. 1 Inst. 134. 1 Sid. 72. The court of B. R. may sit, hear and determine causes, after term is ended. Jenk. Cent. 62.

IV. How far the presence of the court of King's Bench suspends the power of other courts, &c.

This court being the supreme court of oyer and terminer, gaol-delivery and eyre, its presence suspends the power, and avoids the proceedings of all other courts of the same nature in the county wherein it sits, during its sitting there, especially if the justices of such courts have notice of its sitting. H. P. C. 156. 9 Co. 118. 27 Aff. pl. 1. 2 Inst. 27. 2 Hawk. P. C. 8. or without notice, per 4 Inst. 73.

But if an indictment in a foreign county be removed before commissioners of oyer and terminer into the county where the King's Bench sits, they may proceed; for the King's Bench not having the indictment before them cannot proceed for this offence. 4 Inst. 73.

But if an indictment is found in the vacation-time in the same county in which the King's Bench sits, and in term-time the King's Bench is adjourned, there may be a special commission to hear it. Ibid.

The civil side in the King's Bench commences actions on a supposition of a trespass committed by the defendant in the county where it resides, and he is taken up by process of that court, as the sovereign eyre, and being committed to the marshal, he may be declared against in any civil action whatsoever. See Process.

The first process therefore is a bill either real or feigned, and so called, because its foundation was the bill of complaint in court, touching the trespass; on this is founded the latitat, which supposes that the defendant had escaped, and therefore issues in the King's name, to apprehend the party where-ever he may be found; for the King has an universal jurisdiction over all his subjects, and consequently may call any of them that fled from the justice of his own court.

All process on writs of appeal, and all process on indictments removed hither by certiorari from a foreign county, ought to be returnable coram nobis ubicunque fuerimus. 2 Hawk. P. C. 8, 9.

V. Of the officers of the court of King's Bench.

The officers of the King's Bench are, on the Crown-side, the Clerk of the Crown, and the Secondary of the Crown: And on the Plea-side there are many clerks and officers; as a Chief Clerk or Prothonotary, and his Secondary and deputy, the Custos Brevium, two Clerks of the Papers, the Clerk of the Declarations, Signer and Sealer of bills, the Clerk of the Rules, Clerk of the Errors, the Clerk of the Bails, Filizers, the Marshal of the court, and the Cryer. The prothonotaries are the masters of the King's Bench office, and their clerks are the proper attorneys here, who enter all declarations, pleas, and other proceedings. Their Secondary constantly attends the sitting of the court, to receive matters referred to him by the judges, to be examined and reported to the court; he signs all judgments, taxes costs, and gives rules to answer, &c. And he also informs the court in point of practice. Their deputy has the custody of the stamp, for signing all writs, &c. and keeps remembrances of all records; writs returned are filed in his office, and common bails, &c. The Custos Brevium files originals and other writs whereon proceedings are had to outlawry; examines and seals all records of Nisi prius for trials at the assizes, and has several clerks under him for making up records throughout England. The Clerks of the Papers make up the paper-books of all special pleadings and demurrers, which the plaintiff's attorney commonly speaks for, and afterwards gives a rule for the defendant's attorney to bring to him again to be entered, &c. The Clerk of the Declarations files all declarations, and continues them on the back from the term of declaring till issue is joined. The signer and sealer of bills keeps a book of entry of the names of the plaintiffs and the defendants in all such writs and processes; and the defendants enter their appearances with him. The Clerk of the Rules takes notice of all rules and orders made in court, and afterwards draws them up and enters them in a book at large; and with him also are given all rules of course on a cepi corpus, habeas corpus, writs of inquiry, &c. and he or the clerk of the papers files all affidavits used in court, and makes copies of them. The Clerk of the Errors allows all writs of error, and makes Superfedeas thereupon into any county, and transcribes and certifies records. The Clerks of the Bails and Posses, file the bail-pieces, and mark the Posses, &c. The Filizers of counties make the mesne process after the original, in suing to the outlawry; and have the benefit of all process and entries, thereupon. The Marshal, by himself or deputy always attends the court, to receive into his custody such prisoners as shall be committed. The Cryer makes proclamations of summoning and adjourning the court, calls nonsuits, and swears jurymen, witnesses, &c.

Kingeld, Escuage, or royal aid. As in a charter of King Henry II. to the abbot and monks of Minevall. Volo & firmiter præcipio, ut sint quieti per totam terram meam de thiloneo & de seiris & de hundredis, & de Wapentachiis, & de Kingeld, & de Deungeld, & de Murdre. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 830.

King's Household. In the reign of King Edward III. 16,000 l. per annum and no more, was appointed for the King's household: And Anno 29 H. 6. the charge of the household was reduced to 12,000 l. a year. But in Queen Elizabeth's reign, the profits of the kingdom being very much advanced, 40,000 l. per annum was allowed for her household, And on the restoration of King Charles 2. the parliament, for the honour of the King and kingdom, settled on his Majesty 200,000 l. per annum. In the reigns of King William 3. and Queen Anne 700,000 l. a year was allotted for the support of the household, and ordinary charge of the civil list. And his Majesty King George 1. had the like sum of 700,000 l. per annum settled upon him by parliament, arising out of the duties of excise, wine-licence, licence, post-office, &c. Also to his late Majesty King George 2. The duty of excise on ale, beer, &c. was granted with a further subsidy of tonnage, and the yearly sum of 100,000 l. out of the aggregate fund, for support of the household and dignity of the crown; so as to make the revenue 800,000 l. per annum, and deficiencies to be made good by parliament. See the statutes 13 & 14 W. 3. 1 Ann. c. 7. 1 Geo. 1. 1 Geo. 2. c. 1. Also to his present Majesty King George 3. is granted the sum of 800,000 l. for support of the household and the honour and dignity of the crown. See 1 Geo. 3. c. 1.

King's Palace. The limits of the King's Palace at Westminster, extends from Charing-Cross to Westminster-Hall, and shall have such privileges as the ancient palaces. Stat. 28 H. 8. If any person shall strike another in the King's Palace, he shall have his right-hand cut off, be imprisoned during life, and also be fined. 32 H. 8. c. 12.

King's Prerogative. The statute of the King's prerogative 17 Ed. 2. contains not the King's whole prerogative, but only so much thereof as concerns the profits of his coffers, for his prerogative extends much further; and the King hath divers rights of Majesty peculiar to himself, which the learned in the law term sacra sacrorum, viz. sacred and inseparable, and which are many and various. Staundf. Prærog. Reg. Plowd. 314. Sir Henry Spelman calls the King's prerogative, Lex Regia Dignitatis; and a great many prerogatives arise to the King from the reason of the Common law; which allows that to be law almost in every case for the King, which is not so for the subject: But the King's prerogative does not extend to any thing injurious to his subjects; for the King by our law can do no wrong. Finch 85. 1 Inst. 19. The King's prerogative is incident to his crown, and as ancient as that itself; and hath in it a prescription, and is not only the law of the Exchequer, but the law of the land: This prerogative of the King is of a very large extent; it reacheth to all persons ecclesiastical and civil, as he is persona mixta, so is his power and prerogative. 7 Rep. 14. It is the King's Royal Prerogative to make war and peace: And as head of the state he calls, continues, prorogues and dissolves parliaments; and all statutes are to have his royal assent, which he may refuse to give to a bill; tho' his denial is not an express negative, but that he will advise upon it. 1 Inst. 110, 165.

His proclamation in calling or dissolving parliaments, declaring war and peace, &c. has the effect of a law; but he cannot by proclamation introduce new laws, yet he may enforce old ones discontinued. 3 Inst. 162. 2 Inst. 743. It was anciently held, that the King might suspend or alter any particular law that was hurtful to the publick: And he may dispense with a penal statute, wherein his subjects have not any interest. 4 Inst. 7. Rep. 36. Acts of parliament do not bind the King, if he be not specially named; unless they concern the commonwealth, suppress wrong or fraud, &c. in which cases they do; but he may take the benefit of any statute, tho' not named. 5 Rep. 14. 11 Rep. 71. 7 Rep. 32. And a prerogative given generally to one King, or any thing to be done to one, goes of course to others. Raym. 212. He determines rewards and punishments; moderates laws, and pardons offenders: But the King cannot pardon murder, where appeal is brought by the subject. 2 Inst. 216. And pardons of felony, &c. shall be granted only where the King may lawfully do it, according to his coronation oath. 14 Ed. 3. The King may lay embargo's on shipping; but then it must be pro bono publico, and not for the private advantage of any particular traders. 1 Salk. 32. And tho' the King hath an interest in every subject, and a right to his service; he cannot discharge the right of a subject, or hinder him of a remedy the law gives him. Holt Ch. J. 1 Salk. 19. 168.

It is held that the King is Custos totius Regni Angliæ: And he may, if he see cause, open or shut the sea-ports, and forbid the passage of his subjects over sea without licence, &c. 12 Rep. 34. He may not dispose of the ports to any subject; but shall appoint officers for the custody thereof, under him. 11 Rep. 86. It is his prerogative alone to dispose and govern the militia of the nation:

to make dukes, earls, barons, knights of the garter, &c. He names, creates, makes and removes the great officers of the government. 1 Inst. 165. All writs, processes, commissions, &c. are in the King's name; and he may make courts, which shall proceed according to the Common law. Jenk. Cent. 285. He may create universities, colleges, counties, boroughs, fairs, markets, &c. No forest, chase or park, can be made, or castle built, without the King's leave. 4 Inst. 294. The King may incorporate a whole city, parish, &c. or part of it, and grant and annex to such corporations divers franchises: Tho' they may not, under colour thereof, set up a monopoly. Godb. 253. Noy 182. And he may incorporate a town, and enable them to chuse burgesses of parliament; but this part of the prerogative of increasing the number of parliament men, seems to be given up, by the late Kings. Hob. 14.

As supreme head of the church, our King hath power to call a national or provincial council; and by his royal assent the canons made in convocation have the force of laws: And to him the last appeal is made. Danv. 73. 4 Inst. 325. He hath the supreme right of patronage all over England; and is the founder and patron of all bishopricks, &c. so that none can be made bishop but by his nomination: He not only founds churches, but licenses others to found them, exempt from the ordinary's jurisdiction; and he hath the tithes of forests and places extraparochial, which he may grant by letters patent: Also the King shall pay no tithes; tho' his lessee shall pay them. Wood's Inst. 18. 1 Cro. 511. The King hath power to make an alien free born, and to grant letters of safe conduct to foreign parts: He can put a value upon the coin, which is made by his authority; and make foreign coin current by proclamation: And to make money, the law gives the King all mines of gold and silver. Plowd. 314.

He is the general guardian of idiots and lunatics; and shall have the lands of felons, &c. convict; also the goods of felons and fugitives; goods and chattels of pirates; wreck of the sea, &c. Stat. 17 Ed. 2. cap. 1. 9 H. 3. 4 Inst. 136. The King is lord paramount of all the lands in England; and all estates for want of heirs, or by forfeiture, escheat to him: All lands are said to be holden of the King; as by construction of law they are originally derived from the crown. 1 Inst. 1. But this must be considered as in trust for the benefit of the state. Lands in the King's possession, are free from tenure; and the King may not be jointenant with any. Finch 83. The grant of the King is taken most strongly against a stranger, and favourably for him: And he may avoid his own grants for deceit, &c. Plowd. 243. The King may grant a thing in action, which another cannot; and reserve a rent to a stranger, &c. He cannot grant or take any land (not cast upon him by descent) but by matter of record: And the King may not grant an annuity to charge his person, which is not chargeable like the person of a subject; tho' he may grant it out of the revenues of excise, &c. 4 Rep. 54. 2 Inst. 186. 1 Salk. 58.

Where the title of the King and of a common person concur, his title shall be preferred. 1 Inst. 30. No distress can be made upon the King's possession; but he may distrain out of his fee in other lands, &c. and may take distresses in the highway. 2 Inst. 131. An heir shall pay the King's debt, tho' he is not named in the bond: And the King's debt shall be satisfied before that of a subject, for which there is a prerogative writ. 1 Inst. 130, 386. By the stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 19. a common person may sue the King's debtor, notwithstanding he hath a protection, and recover judgment against him; but he cannot have execution unless he give security to pay the King's debt: If he take out execution before, and levy the money, the same may be seized to satisfy the debt of the King. Godb. 290. 2 Nels. Abr. 1081, 1082. If a debtor has not a writ of protection, he may be in execution for a debt, and he hath the command of all forts, and places of strength, &c. and authority in making and casting of ordnance. 21 Jac. 1. c. 3.

The King is the fountain of honour, and has the sole power of conferring dignities and honourable titles; as common Common person as well as the King: And it hath been adjudged, that altho' the King hath a prerogative by the Common law, to have his debt first satisfied, that must be when it is in equal degree with the debt of his subject; and by the Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39. the King's debt shall be preferred, so as there is no judgment, &c. Cro. Car. 283. Hardr. 23. Goods and chattels may go in succession to the King; tho' they may not to any other sole corporation. 1 Inst. 90. In whosoever hands the goods of the King come, their lands are chargeable, and may be seized for the same: And the King is not bound by sale of his goods in open market. 2 Inst. 713. No prescription of time runs against the King; he is not within the statute of limitation of actions. 11 Rep. 74. But see the late bills, concerning Nullum Tempus, 10 & 11 Geo. 3. Action lies not against the King; but a petition instead of it, to him in the Chancery: And it is lawful for any subject to petition the King for redress, where he finds himself grieved by any sentence or judgment. 2 Inst. 187. Hob. 220. There are no costs against the King; no entry will bar him; and no judgment is ever final against him, but with a Salvo jure Regis. Litt. 178. Finch. 460. The King's title is not to be tried without warrant from the King, or assent of the Attorney General. 2 Inst. 424. The King may have such process in his suit, as no other person but himself can have in any case. 1 Rep. 18. Finch. 476. He may plead several matters, without being double, and the parties shall answer them all. Bro. Doubl. pl. 57. And in his pleading, he need not plead an act of parliament, as a subject is bound to do. 4 Rep. 75.

The King may sue in what court he pleases, and cannot be nonsuit, as he is supposed to be present in all his courts; He is not bound to join in demurrer on evidence; and the court may direct the jury to find the matter specially. Finch 82. 5 Rep. 104. The King's only testimony of any thing done in his presence, is of as high a nature and credit as any record; whence it is, that in all original writs or precepts sent out for the dispatch of justice, he useth no other witnesses than himself, as teste meipsa, &c. The King cannot be a minor; and in him the law will see no defect, negligence or folly. 1 Inst. 41, 57. There are some other prerogatives belonging to our Kings; but the judges at Westminster ought to judge of matters of prerogative relating to the King, as they do matters concerning other persons. Noy 181. Plowd. 136. The King may not by petition, bill, &c. dispose of any man's lands or goods: Nor shall he take that he hath right to, which is in the possession of another, but by due course of law. Witch. 9. He may not command a man to prison, against the writs and process of law. 12 Rep. 66. The law is the rule of the King's prerogative; which ought to be grounded upon antiquity, or otherwise it may be an incroachment on the liberty of the subject. Rex est anima Legi, & Lex est anima Regi. 2 Inst. 262. See Debt to the King, Grants of the King, &c. See farther on this subject, Black Com. 1 V. 237. And Com. Dig. 4 V. tit. Prærogative.

King's Silver, Is the money which is paid to the King in the court of Common Pleas, for a licence granted to any man to levy a fine of lands, tenements or hereditaments to another person: And this must be compounded according to the value of the land, in the alienation office, before the fine will pass. 2 Inst. 511. 6 Rep. 39, 43.

King's Swanherd, (Magister deductus cignorum.) Pat. 16 R. 2. pars 1. m. 38. Rodolphum Scot, custodem cignorum nostrorum, sive per alium quemcumque qui pro tempore custos cignorum nostrorum prædictorum fuerit. No fowl can be a swan but a swan. 4 Inst. fol. 280.

Kintal, If a certain weight of merchandise, most commonly of one hundred pounds, or something under or over, according to the several uses of divers nations. Plowden, fol. 3. mentions 2000 kintals of woad, in the case of Remiger and Fogassa. Item duodecim denarios de quolibet cere quintallo. Chart. 31 Edw. 1. m. 4. See Quintal.

Kintledge, A term used among merchants and seafaring persons, for a ship's ballast. Merch. Dic.

Kipe, (from the Saxon, Cypa) Is a basket or engine made of osiers, broad at one end, and narrower by degrees, used in Oxfordshire and other parts of England for the taking of fish; and fishing with those engines is called Kipping.

To the curious reader, it may not be improper to observe, that this manner of fishing with baskets of the same kind and shape, is practised by the barbarous inhabitants of Ceylon in the East-Indies, as appears in the relation and figure of it given by Mr. Knox in his travels, pag. 28.

Kipper-time. No salmon shall be taken between Gravesend and Henley upon Thames in kipper-time, viz. between the Invention of the Cross (3 May) and the Epiphany. Rot. Parl. 50 Edw. 3. Cowell.

Kirby's Quest, Is an ancient record remaining with the remembrancer of the Exchequer; so called from its being the inquest of John d^r Kirby, treasurer to King Ed. 1.

Kirk-mote, A synod; and sometimes it has been taken for a meeting in the church or vestry. Blount.

Knave, An old Saxon word, which had at first a sense of simplicity and innocence, then it signified a boy; Saw. cnapa, whence a knave child, i. e. a boy distinguished from a girl in several old writers; afterwards it was taken for a servant boy, and at length for any servant man: Also it was applied to a minister or officer, that bore the weapon or shield of his superior, as scild knapa, whom the Latins called armiger, and the French escuyer. 14 Ed. 3. c. 3. And it was sometimes of old made use of as a titular addition; as Johannes C. R^{us} Willielmi C. de Derby, knave, &c. 22 Hen. 7. 36. The word is now perverted to the hardest meaning, viz. A false and deceitful fellow. A knave-child, between them two they gate.—Gower, Poem, fol. 52, 106. And Wickliff in his old English translation, Exod. 1. xvi. If it be a knave-child, i. e. a son or male child. In the vision of Piers Plowman, Cokes and her knaves cryden hotes pyes, hote, i. e. Cooks and their boys, or skullions. Cowell.

Knight, (Sax. cnytt, Lat. miles, and eques auratus, from the gilt spurs he usually wore, and thence called anciently Knights of the spur: The Italians term them Cavalieri, the French Chevaliers, the Germans Ruyters, the Spaniards Cavalleros, &c.) In its original properly signified a servant; but there is now but one instance where it is taken in that sense, and that is knights of a shire, who properly serves in parliament for such a county; but in all other instances it signifies one who bears arms, who, for his virtue and martial prowess, is by the King, or one having his authority, exalted above the rank of gentleman to a higher step of dignity. The manner of making them, Camden in his Britan. thus shortly expresseth: Nostris vero temporibus, qui equestrem dignitatem suscipit, flexis genibus leviter in humero percutitur, princeps his verbis Gallice affatur; Sûs vel fois Chevalier au nom de Dieu, i. e. Surge aut sis eques in nomine Dei. This is meant of knights bachelors, which is the lowest, but most ancient degree of knighthood with us. The privilege belonging to a knight, see in Fern's Glory of Generosity, p. 116. Of knights there are two sorts; one spiritual, so called by divines in regard of their spiritual warfare, the other temporal. Cassianus de Gloria Mundi, par. 9. considerat. 2. See Selden's Titles of Honour, fol. 770. Chief Justice Popham affirmed, he had seen a commission granted to a bishop, to knight all the persons in his diocese. Godbolt's Reports, fol. 398. Of the several orders, both of spiritual and temporal knights, see Mr. Asmole's Inst. of the Knights of the Garter. He who served the King in any civil or military office or dignity, was formerly called miles: 'Tis often mentioned in the old charters of the Anglo-Saxons, which are subscribed by several of the nobility, viz. after bishops, dukes and earls, per A. B. militem, where miles signifies some officer of the courts, as minister was an officer to men of quality. Thus we read in Inglulphus, De dono F. quondam Militis Kenulfi Regis, fol. 860.

Afterwards the word was restrained to him who served only upon some military expedition, or rather to him who by reason of his tenure was bound to serve in the wars, and in this sense the word miles was taken pro vassallo. Thus in the laws of William the Conqueror: Manibus ei sese dedit, cuncta sua ab eo ut miles a Domino recipit.

recept. And he who by his office or tenure was bound to perform any military service, was furnished by the chief lord with arms, and so adaptabatur in militiam, which the French call adoubet, and we do dub such a person a knight. But before they went into the service, it was usual to go into a bath and wash themselves, and afterwards they were girt with a girdle; which custom of bathing was constantly observed, especially at the inauguration of our Kings, then those knights were made, who for that reason were called Knights of the Bath. Cowell. See Black. Com. 2 V. 69. 4 V. 432.

Knights Bachelors. The most ancient, tho' the lowest order of knighthood amongst us; for we have an instance of King Alfred's conferring this order on his son Æthelstan. Will. Malms. lib. 2. Black. Com. 1 V. 404. See Knights of the Chamber.

Knights-Banneret, (militis vexillarii) Are made only in the time of war, and is a high honour: and though knighthood is commonly given for some personal merit, which therefore lies with the person; yet John Coupland, for his valiant service performed against the Scots, had the honour of Banneret conferred on him and his heirs for ever, by patent. 29 Ed. 3. See Banneret. See Black. Com. 1 V. 404.

Knights of the Bath, (Militis Balnei) Have their name from their bathing the night before their creation. See Knights. This order of knights was introduced by King Hen. 4. and revived by King George the First in the year 1725; who erected the same into a regular military order for ever, by the name and title of The Order of the Bath, to consist of thirty-seven knights, besides the Sovereign. See the antiquity and ceremony of their creation in Dugdale's Antiquities of Warwickshire, fol. 531, 532. They have each three honorary Esquires; and they now wear a red ribbon a-cross their shoulders; have a prelate of the order, who is the bishop of Rockester, several heralds, and other officers, &c. See Black. Com. 1 V. 404.

Knights of the Chamber, (Militis Camera) Seem to be such Knights Bachelors as are made in time of peace, because knighted in the King's chamber, and not in the field: they are mentioned in Rot. Parl. 28 Ed. 3. 2 Inst. 666. See Black. Com. 1 V. 404. They are also mentioned in 2 Inst. 666. and in Rot. Parl. 29 Ed. 3. par. 1. m. 29.

Knights Court, Is a court-baron, or honour-court, held twice a year under the bishop of Horsford, at his palace there; wherein those who are lords of manors, and their tenants, holding by knight's service of the honour of that bishoprick, are suitors; which court is mentioned in Butterfield's Surv. fol. 244. If the suitor appear not at it, he pays 2 s. suit-filium for respice of homage, Cowell.

Knights-gild, Was a gild in London, consisting of nineteen knights, which King Edgar founded, giving them a portion of void ground lying without the walls of the city, now called Portokenward. Stow's Annals, p. 151. This in Mon. Angl. par. 2. fol. 82. a. is written emittens-geld.

Knights' fee, (Feodum militare) Is so much inheritance, as is sufficient yearly to maintain a knight with convenient revenue; which in Henry the Third's days was 15 l. Cam. Britan. pag. 111. But Sir Thomas Smith, (in his Repub. Angl. lib. 1. cap. 18.) rates it at 40 l. and by the statute for knights, 1 Ed. 2. cap. 1. such as had 20 l. per annum in fee, or for life, might be compelled to be knights; which statute is repealed by 17 Car. 1. cap. 20. Stow in his Annals, p. 285. says, there were found in England, at the time of the Conqueror, 60,211 knights' fees, according to others 60,215; whereof the religious houses, before their suppression, were possessed of 28,015. Q.2. carucata terra faciunt feodum unius militis. Mon. Angl. 2 pag. fol. 825. a. Of this you may read more in Selden's Title of Honour, fol. 691. and Bracton, lib. 5. tra. 1. cap. 2. See Coke on Litt. fol. 69. a. A knight's fee contained twelve plow-lands. 2 Inst. fol. 596. or 680 acres. Virgata terre continet 24 acras, 4 virgata terre makes an hide, and five hides make a knight's fee, whose relief is five pounds. Cowell. See Black. Com. 1 V. 405, 409. 2 V. 62.

Knights of the Garter, (equites garterii, or periscelidæ.) Are an order of knights, founded by King Ed. 3. who after he had obtained many notable victories, for furnishing this honourable order, made choice in his own realm, and all Europe, of twenty-five the most excellent and renowned knights for virtue and honour, and ordained himself and his successors Kings of England, to be the sovereign thereof, and the rest to be fellows and brethren, bestowing this dignity on them, and giving them a blue garter, decked with gold, pearl, and precious stones, and a buckle of gold, to wear daily on the left leg only, a kirtle, crown, cloak, chaperon, a collar, and other magnificent apparel, both of stuff and fashion; exquisite and heroical to wear at high feasts, as to so high and princely an order was meet. Smith's Repub. Ang. lib. 1. cap. 29. And according to Camden and others, this order was instituted upon King Edward the Third's having great success in a battle, wherein the King's garter was used for a token: But Polydore Virgil gives it another original, and says, that the King in the height of his glory, the Kings of France and Scotland being both prisoners in the Tower of London at one time, first erected this order, anno 1350, (see infra) from the Countess of Salisbury's dropping her garter, in a dance before his Majesty, which the King taking up, and seeing some of his nobles smile, he said, Mont fait qui mal y pense, interpreted, evil be to him that evil thinketh, which has ever since been the motto of the garter, declaring such veneration should be done to that silken tie, that the best of them should be proud of enjoying their honours that way. Camden in his Britannia faith, that this order of knights received great ornament from King Ed. 4. And King Charles I. as an addition to the splendor, ordered all the knights companions to wear on their upper garment, the cross incircled with the garter and motto. The honourable society of this order is intitled to St. George; and they are a college or corporation having a Great Seal, &c. The site of the college is the royal castle of Windsor, with the chapel of St. George, and the chapter-house in the castle, for their solemnity on St. George's day, and at their feasts and installations. Besides the King their Sovereign, and twenty-five companions, Knights of the Garter, they have a dean and canons, &c. and twenty-six poor knights, that have no other subsistence but the allowance of this house, which is given them in respect of their daily prayer to the honour of God, and St. George; and these are vulgarly called Poor Knights of Windsor. There are also certain officers belonging to the order; as Prelate of the Garter, which office is inherent to the Bishop of Winchester, for the time being; the Chancellor of the Garter, who is the Bishop of Sarum; Registrar, always Dean of Windsor; the Principal King at Arms, called Garter, to manage and marshal their solemnities, and the Usher of the Garter, being likewise Usher of the Black Rod. A Knight of the Garter wears daily abroad, a blue garter decked with gold, pearl, and precious stones on the left leg; and in all places of assembly, upon his coat on the left side of his breast, a star of silver embroidery; and the picture of St. George, enamelled upon gold and beset with diamonds, at the end of a blue ribbon that crosses the body from the left shoulder; and when dressed in his robes, a mantle collar of S S. &c. According to Blackstone, 1 V. 404. Knights of the Garter, or Knights of the order of St. George, first instituted by Ed. 3. A.D. 1344. Seld. Tit. of Honour, 2, 5, 41.

Knighthood, Formerly when the heir came of full age, provided he held a knight's fee, he was to receive the order of knighthood, and was compellable to take it upon him, or else to pay a fine to the King. See Black. Com. 2 V. 69. Note, The persons thus compellable were the King's tenants in capite, and that in consequence of the feudal tenure. This being considered in the reign of Charles I. as a great grievance, the Stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 20. was passed, whereby it was enacted, "that none shall be compelled to take knighthood". See Black. Com. 4 V. 430. Knights of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, (Militia Sancti Johannis Hierosolymitani) Were an order of knighthood, that began about the year of our Lord 1120, Honorius being Pope. They had their denomination from John the charitable patriarch of Alexandria, though vowed to St. John the Baptist their patron; Fern's Ferris's Glory of Generosity, pag. 127. They had their primary abode at first in Jerusalem, and then in the isle of Rhodes until they were expelled thence by the Turks. anno 1523. Since which time their chief seat is in the isle of Malta, where they have done great exploits against the infidels, but especially in the year 1595. They live after the order of friars, under the rule of St. Augustine, of whom mention is made in the statute 25 Hen. 8. cap. 2. and 26 Hen. 8. cap. 2. They had in England one general prior that had the government of the whole order within England and Scotland, Reg. Orig. fol. 20. and was the first prior in England, and sat in the house of Lords. But towards the end of Henry the Eighth's days they in England and Ireland, being found over much to adhere to the Pope against the King, were suppressed, and their lands and goods given to the King, by the 32 Hen. 8. 24. For occasion and propagation of this order more especially described, see in the treatise, intitled, The Book of Honour and Arms, lib. 5. c. 18. written by Mr. Richard Jones.

Knights of Malta. These knights took their name and original from the time of their expulsion from Rhodes, anno 1523. The island of Malta was then given them by the Emperor Charles V. where they now reside, and are therefore called Knights of Malta: they have done great exploits against the infidels, especially in the year 1595.

Knight Marshal. (Marescallus Hospitii Regis) Is an officer of the King's house, having jurisdiction and cognizance of transgressions within the King's house, and verge of it; as also of contracts made within the same house, whereto one of the house is a party. Reg. of Writs, fol. 185. a. and 191. b. and Spelman's Gloss. in voce Marescallus.

Knights of Rhodes. The Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, after they removed to Rhode island. 32 H. 8. c. 24. See Knights of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem.

Knights Service. (Servitium Militare) Was a tenure whereby several lands in this kingdom were held of the King; which drew after it homage, and service in war, escuage, wardship, marriage, &c. The knight's service in capite, or in chief, was service, by which the tenant was bound to serve the King in his wars: and if he held of a common person, then he was to go with his lord in the wars. But it is taken away by Stat. 12 Car. 2. cap. 24. See Chivalry, and Black. Com. 2 V. 62.

Knights of the Shire. (Milites Comitatus) Otherwise called knights of parliament, are two knights or gentlemen of worth, chosen on the King's writ, in pleno comitatu, by the freeholders of every county that can dispend 40 s. a year; and these, when every man that had a knight's fee was customarily constrained to be a knight, were obliged to be milites gladio cincti, for so runs the writ at this day; but now notables armigeri may be chosen. Stat. 1 Hen. 5. c. 1. 10 H. 6. c. 2. 23 H. 6. c. 6. Their expenses were to be borne by the county, during their sitting in parliament, by the 35 H. 8. c. 11. And as to their qualifications, they are to have 600 l. per annum freehold estate, &c. Vide 9 Ann. c. 5. and Parliament, and Black. Com. 1 V. 172.

Knights Templars. (Milites Templarii) Were a religious order of knights, instituted in the year of our Lord 1119, and so called, because they dwelt in part of the buildings belonging to the Temple at Jerusalem, and not far from the sepulchre of our Saviour. They entertained Christian strangers and pilgrims, and in their armour led them through the Holy Land, to view the sacred monuments of Christianity, without danger from infidels. This order was far spread in Christendom, particularly here in England, where it flourished in the time of King Hen. 2. And had in every nation a particular governor or master, but at length some of them at Jerusalem falling away to the Saracens from Christianity, the whole order was suppressed by Clement quintus, anno 1307. And their substance given partly to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and partly to other religions. Cassan. de Gloria Mundi, par. 9. These knights at first wore a white garment; and afterwards in the pontificate of Pope Eugenius, it was ordained that they should wear a red cross: in ancient records they were also called Frates Militie Templi Solomonii. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 554.

Knights of the Garter. The honourable the Seach knighthood, the knights whereof wear a green ribbon over their shoulders, and are otherwise honourably distinguished.

Knopa. A knob, nob, boss, or knot.—Textus super Evangelii cum uno clasp habens ex uno latere quinq; knopas argenteas, &c. Mon. Angl. tom. 3. p. 365.

Known-men. The Lollards in England, called heretics, for opposing the church of Rome before the reformation, went commonly under the name of known-men, and just first-men; which title was first given them in the diocese of Lincoln, by Bishop Smith, anno 1500.

Kyddiers. Mentioned in Stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 35. See Kidder.

Liquor. Signifies some liquid thing; and in the North it is used for a kind of liquid victuals. It is mentioned as an exaction of foresters, &c. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. pag. 722.

Lyste. (Sax.) A coffin or chest for burial of the dead. Ex Reg. Episc. Lincoln. MS.

Kyth. Is used for kin or kindred. Cognatur.

L.

Lace. (laqueus, à lax, i. e. frans) A net, gin, or snare. Litt. Dict.

Label. (appendix, lemniscus) Is a narrow slip of paper or parchment, affixed to a deed, writing or writ, hanging at or out of the same; and an appending seal is called a label.

Labina. Signifies watery land; in qua facile labitur. — Jamque dispersi liget noctanter transiunt in aquis & labinis periclitantur. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. pag. 372.

Labourer. Is an ancient writ against persons refusing to serve and do labour, who have no means of living; or against such as having served in the winter, refuse to serve in the summer. Reg. Orig. 189.

Labour. Is the foundation of property. Bodily labour, bestowed upon any subject which before lay in common to all men, is universally allowed to give the fairest and most reasonable title to an exclusive property therein. Black. Com. 2 V. 5.

Labourers. Conspiring together concerning their work or wages, shall forfeit 10 l. for the first offence, 20 l. for the second, &c. And if not paid, be set on the pillory. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 15. Justices of peace and stewards of leets, &c. have power to hear and determine complaints relating to nonpayment of labourers wages. 4 Ed. 4. 1. And labourers taking work by the great, and leaving the same unfinished, unless for nonpayment of wages, or where they are employed in the King's service, &c. are to suffer one month's imprisonment, and forfeit 5 l. The wages of labourers are to be yearly assessed for every county by the sheriff, and justices of peace in the Easter sessions, and in corporations by the head officers, under penalties. 5 Ed. 4. cap. 4. And the sheriff is to cause the rates and assessments of wages to be proclaimed. 1 Jac. 1. c. 6. All persons fit for labour, shall be compelled to serve by the day in the time of hay or corn harvest; and labourers in the harvest-time may go to other counties, having testimonials. From the middle of March to the middle of September, labourers are to work from five o'clock in the morning till seven or eight at night, being allowed two hours for breakfast and dinner, and half an hour for sleeping the three hot months; and all the rest of the year from twilight to twilight, except an hour and a half for breakfast and dinner, on pain of forfeiting 1 d. for every hour absent. See 5 Ed. 4. c. 4. If any labourer shall make an assault upon his master, he shall suffer and be punished as a servant making such assault. Ibid. By the Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 34. 22 Geo. 2. c. 27. All contracts of journey-men employed in any woollen, linen, silk, leather, or iron, &c. manufactures for raising wages, lessening the hours of work, &c. are illegal, and the offenders shall be sent to the House of Correction for three months.

Justices of peace may hear and determine disputes concerning the wages of servants and labourers, not exceeding 10 l. 20 Geo. 2. c. 19. Extended to the tanners in the Stannaries, by 27 Geo. 2. c. 6. Justices may punish servants servants on complaint of the masters, 20 Geo. 2. c. 19. f. 2. The 20 Geo. 2. c. 19. shall extend to all servants employed in husbandry, though hired for less than a year, 34 Geo. 2. c. 11. f. 3. See Black. Com. 1 V. 406, 426.

Lace. Foreign bone-lace not to be imported; 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 13. May be exported free to Scotland, Ireland, or the Plantations; 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 3. f. 15. Prohibition of importing bone-lace repealed, 5 Ann. c. 17. Manufacturers excused from the duty upon hawkers and pedlars, 4 Geo. 1. c. 6.

For other matters, see Manufactures.

Lacerta. A word signifying a fathom. Domesday.

Laches. (from the Fr. lache, i. e. laxare; or lache, ignavus) In our law signifies slackness or negligence; as it appears in Littleton, where laches of entry is a neglect in the heir to enter. And probably it may be an old English word; for when we say there is laches of entry, it is all one as if it were said, there is a lack of entry; and in this signification it is used. Litt. 136. No laches shall be adjudged in the heir within age; and regularly laches shall not bar either infants or feme covert, for not entry or claim, to avoid descents; but laches shall be accounted in them, for non-performance of a condition annexed to the state of the land. Co. Litt. 146. See Black. Com. 1 V. 247. as to laches generally. And as to the Laches of an Infant, 1 V. 465.

Latta. A defect in the weight of money; whence is derived the word lack. Du Fresno.

Lada. Hath divers significations; 1st, From the Sax. ladian, to convene or assemble; it is taken for a laib, or court of justice. 2dly, It is used for purgation by trial; from ladian: and hence the lada simplex, and lada triplex or lada plena, among the Saxons; mentioned in the laws of King Ethelred and K. Hen. 1. 3dly, Lada is applied to a lade or course of water; Camden uses water-lade, or water-course: And Spelman says, that lada is a canal to carry water from wet grounds; sometimes lada signifies a broad way. Spelm. Gloss. Mon. Angl. rom. 1. p. 854.

Lade, Lode. i. e. The mouth of a river; from the Sax. ladian, purgare, because the water is there clearer; from hence Crickdale, Lochdale, &c.

Ladies. For the order of trial of duchesses, countesses, and baronesses for treason, when indicted thereof, see Stat. 2 Hen. 4. c. 14.

Lædopium, Reproach. Facitum in sermone pluvium observant dum vel sales vel laedoris nunc levi lingua nunc mordaci. Girald. in descrip. Camb. cap. 14.

Læsa Majestatis, crimen. The crime of high treason. So denominated by Glanvill, l. 1. c. 2. High treason is also in Latin ultraproditio.

Læssione fidei, Sæpe pro. The clergy, so early as the reign of King Stephen, attempted to turn their ecclesiastical courts into courts of equity, by entertaining suits pro læssione fidei, as a spiritual offence against conscience, in case of non-payment of debts, or any breach of civil contracts. See Ld. Lyttel. H. 2. b. 3. p. 361. note. But they were checked by the constitutions of Clarendon, 10 Hen. 2. c. 15. See Black. Com. 3 V. 52.

Læstodwick. (Sax. blæstod, i. e. dominus, and fæp, proditio, infidelitas erga dominum) A betraying one's lord or master. This word is found in King Canutus's laws, c. 61. And in the laws of King Hen. 1. Quædam placita emendari (viz. quædam crimina explari) non possunt, hufbrech, openthest, ebremorth, & laforðwick. Leg. 1. c. 13.

Laga. (len) The law, lagam Rex Edwardi verbis red-do, cum illis commendationibus quibus pater meus eam emendavit, says Magna Charta. Hence we deduce Saxon-lage, Mercen-lage, Dane-lage, &c.

Lagan. Is goods sunk in the sea, from the Sax. ligan cubare: when mariners in danger of shipwreck cast goods out of the ship; and because they know they are heavy and sink, fasten a buoy or cork to them, that they may find and have them again; if the ship be lost, these goods are called lagan, and so long as they continue upon the sea, belong to the Lord Admiral; but if they are cast away upon the land, they are then a wreck, and belong to the Lord entitled to the same. 3 Co. Rep. 106. At first lagan was that right which the chief lord of the fee had to take goods cast on shore by the violence of the sea, &c. Bract. lib. 3. cap. 2. See 26 Geo. 2. c. 19.

Lagedayum, Lagday. A law-day, or time of open court. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Legemant, (legamannus) Homo habens legem; or homo legalis seu legitimus; such as we call now good men of the jury. The word is frequently used in Domesday, and the laws of Edward the Confessor, cap. 38. thus: Postea inquisitio facta per legamannos, & per miliores homines de burgo, &c. Sir Edw. Coke says, A legeman was he who had faciam & faciam super homines suos, i. e. that had a jurisdiction over their persons and estates; of which opinion were Sumner and Lambard, and that it signified the Thanes, called afterwards Barons, who sat as judges to determine rights in courts of justice: In senatus consult. de Monticulis Wallie, cap. 3. it is said, Let twelve lagmen, which Lambard renders men of law; viz. six English and six Welch, do right and justice, &c. Blount.

Lagen, (lagena) Flata, lib. 2. cap. 8, 9. In ancient times it was a measure of six sextarii. Hence perhaps our flagon. Donatus insuper de sex lagenis olei annuatim. Charta Edw. 3. m. 25. n. 82. The lieutenant of the Tower has the privilege to take unam lagenam vini, ante malum & retro, of all wine-ships that come up to the Thames. Sir Peter Leycester, in his Antiquities of Cheshire, interprets lagena vini, a bottle of wine.

Lagday, or Labday. A time of open court. See Law-day.

Laghitte, Laghite, Labhitte. (Sax. lag, leg, & sitte, ruptio) A breaking or transgressing of the law; and sometimes the punishment inflicted for so doing. Leg. H. 1. c. 13.

Lagon. See Lagan, and Co. lib. 5. fol. 106.

Lala. A broad way in a wood; the same with lada. Mon. Ang. rom. 1. pag. 483.

Lairwite, Wechewite, and Legesgeldum. (from the Sax. legan, i. e. concumbere, & wite, multa) Pæna vel multa offenditum in adulterio & fornicatione; and the privilege of punishing adultery and fornication did anciently belong to the lords of some manors, in reference to their tenants. Flata, lib. 1. c. 47. 4 Inst. 206.

Lammas-Day. Is the first of August, so called quasi Lamb-mass; on which day the tenants that held land of the cathedral church of York, (which is dedicated to St. Peter ad Vincula) were bound by their tenure to bring a live lamb into the church at high mass. It is otherwise said to come from the Sax. blæsmæsse, viz. leaf-mass, as on that day the English made an offering of bread made with new wheat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 4.

Lamp-black. To what duties liable. 4 Will. & M. c. 5. f. 2.

Lampage. See Fish.

Lamps. None but British oil to be used for lamps in private houses, under penalty of 40 s. 8 Ann. c. 9. Shares in the lights how taxable. 30 Geo. 2. c. 3. By the Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 29. Such convenient number of lamps as the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the city of London shall think proper, shall be erected in such places as to them shall seem meet; and they are to make rates not exceeding 6 d. in the pound, nor above 50 s. a year on any one person. The Alderman of each ward, with the consent of his deputy and Common Council-men, or the major part of them, may contract for the lamps, &c. Willfully breaking or extinguishing any lamp incurs the penalty of 40 s. for the first, 50 s. for the second, and 3 l. for the third offence. See the new acts for lighting, &c. the streets of London and Windsor.

Lancaster. Was erected into a county palatine, anno 50 Ed. 3. and granted by the King to his son John for life, that he should have jura regalia, and a King-like power to pardon treasons, outlawries, &c. and make justices of peace and justices of assize within the said county, and all processes and indictments to be in his name; but these royalties are abridged by the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 24. There is a feod for the county palatine, and another for the duchy, i. e. such lands as lie out of the county palatine, and yet are part of the duchy: for such there are, and the Dukes of Lancaster hold them, but not as counties palatine, for they had not jura regalia over those lands. 2 Lutw. 1236. 3 Sall. 110, 111. The statute 37 H. 8. c. 16.

annexes lands to the duchy of Launcester, for the enlargement of it. Fines levied before the justices of assize of Launcester, of lands in the county palatine, shall be of equal force with those acknowledged before the justices in the Common Pleas. 37 H. 8. c. 19. And process against an outlawed person in the county palatine of Launcester, is to be directed to the Chancellor of the duchy, who shall thereupon issue like writs to the sheriff, &c. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. 26. The statute 17 Car. 2. concerning causes of replevin shall be of force in the court of Common Pleas for the county palatine of Launcester. 19 Car. 2. 5. By the Stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 7. The Chancellor or Vice-chancellor may by commission empower persons to take affidavits in any cause, &c. depending in the Chancery or Courts of Sessions, in any plea whatsoever, civil or criminal. A quay to be made at Launcester, Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 12. See Black. Com. 1 V. 116. And as to its courts, 3 V. 78.

Launceti, These were agricolæ quidam, sed ignotæ speciei. Spelm.

Land, (terra) Signifies generally not only arable ground, meadow, pasture, woods, moors, waters, &c. but also messuages and houses; for in conveying the land, the buildings pass with it. Co. Litt. 4. 19. In a more restrained sense it is arable ground: and the land of every man is said in the law to be inclosed from that of others, though it lie in the open field; so that for any trespass therein, he shall have the writ quare clausum fregit, &c. Doct. and Stud. 8. In a grant, land may extend to meadow, or pasture, &c. But in writs and pleadings, it signifies arable only. 1 Vent. 260.

Co. on Litt. lib. 1. cap. 2. sect. 14. says, Terra est nomen generalissimum & comprehendit omnes species terræ, but properly terra dicitur a terendo, quia vomere teritur; and antiently it was written with a single r, and in that sense includes whatever may be plowed. The earth hath in law a great extent upwards, for cujus est solum ejus est usque ad celum. Co. 9 Rep. Shured's case. See Black. Com. 2 V. 7, 16, 17.

Landia, A lawn or open field without wood. Cowell.

Landbor, (From the Sax. Land and Boc, Liber) Was a charter or deed whereby land was held. Sic Anglo-Saxones chartas & instrumenta nuncuparunt, prædiorum cessiones, jura & firmitates continentia. Spelm. Gloss.

Landcheap, (Sax. Land-cheap, from cheap, to buy and sell) An ancient customary fine, paid at every alienation of land lying within some manor, or liberty of a borough, as at Malden in Essex, there is to this day a custom called by the same name, that for certain houses and lands sold within that place, thirteen pence in every mark of the purchase-money shall be paid to the town; and this custom of land-cheap, they claim (inter alia) by a grant from the Bishop of London, made anno 5 H. 4.

Landea, A ditch in marshy lands to carry water into the sea.—Vera judicium & awards faciat de Vallis, Landea, & Watergangia. Du Cange.

Landfricus, (Landfricus) The lord of the soil, or the landlord: from the Sax. land, and, terra, and rice, raðer. Es omnis erat sibi lagam 12 oris dimidium Landfrico, dimidium Wepentake. Leg. Echeired. cap. 6.

Landgandman, Was one of the inferior tenants of a manor. Custumariorum genus seu inferiorum tenentium manerii, says the learned Spelman, who adds, —Occurrit vox in custumar. de Hockham.

Landgable, Is a tax or rent issuing out of land, according to Domesday. Census prædialis vel tributum quod a prædiis colligitur, that is, says Spelman, a penny for every house; the Welsh use pridgawl for landgable.

This landgable or landgable in the register of Domesday, was a quit-rent for the site of a house, or the land whereon it stood, the same with what we now call ground-rent.—Tochi filius Outi habuit in civitate xxx mansuras præter summ ballam & duas ecclesias & dimidium—& supr. mansiones habuit locationem, & præter hoc de unaquaque annu denarium, id est, landgable, Domesday. Lincoln.

Landmeters, Agromensures, Measures of land, so called of old; Landmeters autem est terræ limes vel meta:

from the Sax. Gemara, i. e. Terminus; and hence we say Meters.

Landrecht. In the Saxon times the duties which were laid upon all that held land, were termed Trinoda necessitas, viz. Expedition, burghbote and brigbote; which duties the Saxons did not call servitia: because they were not feudal, arising from the condition of the owners, but Landrecht, rights that charged the very land, whoever did possess it. Spelm. of Feuds.

Landlord, Is he of whom lands or tenements are holden; and a landlord may distrain on the lands of common right, for rent, services, &c. Co. Litt. 57, 205. In London if a tenant commit felony, &c. whereby his goods and chattels become forfeit; the landlord shall be paid his rent for two years, before all other debts except to the King, out of the goods found in the house. Priv. Lond. 75.

Landman, Terricola, The terre-tenant.

Land-tax. The ancient method of taxation was by scutage, which was on lands held by knight-service; and by tallage on the cities and boroughs, and it was made in this manner: When the King wanted money for his wars, those tenants that did not attend him in person, paid him an aid, and the aid was assessed before the justices itinerant. It was generally a gift of all the inhabitants as a body corporate; if they did not give according to the wants of the Crown, the justiciar enquired into their behaviour, and if there were any forfeitures of their charters, quo warranto's came out, to seize their liberties into the King's hands. But Ed. 1, found this way of taxing by scutage and tallage to be very incomplete; because wars were drawn out into great length and expence; and therefore he formed into distinct bodies, the tenants in capite that held great baronies, and these were called the barones majores, (the now peers of parliament); and the representatives of the barones minores and of several corporations, viz. the citizens and burgesses, of whom he made one body; which now composes the House of Commons. Gilb. Treat. of the Excheq. 192.

King Edward the First granted the people Magna Charta, which they had long contended for, and also the charter of the forests; and for Magna Charta they granted the King a fifteenth, by the name of Quinducimam partem annuum bonorum; so that instead of particular assessments in cities and boroughs, there was one universal assessment of the fifteenth of all their substance: this fifteenth seems to have been at first made out of the ecclesiastical tenth; for the Popes claimed the tenths of all benefices; it was therefore easy to know, by the Popes' collections of his tenths, what was the value of every ecclesiastical benefice, for the Pope's tenth was reckoned at 2 s. per pound, and therefore the fifteenth must be 1 s. 4 d. The benefice consisted of the glebe and the tenth part of the township; therefore by the value of the benefice, deducting the glebe, they knew the true value of the township, and how to set a fifteenth upon it: so that the fifteenth of the townships were certain sums, set by the King's taxers and collectors under the act of parliament; and commissions were granted to the taxers and collectors of them under the Great Seal; but in collecting of the fifteenths the sums only appeared in the books below. And the collectors of every township, either returned their collection into the Exchequer, or else there were head collectors for the whole county, who returned it thither; there were likewise commissioners appointed, to supervise such taxation and collections: But about the time of Edward III. there were certain established sums set upon every township; and so, as the King's wants increased, they gave one, two, or three fifteenths. Gilb. Treat. of the Excheq. 193, 194.

We find in the times of Henry the Eighth, Queen Elizabeth, and King James the First, that they raised both subsidies and fifteenths; this was, because the value of things increased, and therefore the old fifteenths were not according to the then true value of townships. And therefore they contrived that the subsidy should be raised by a pound-rate upon lands, and likewise a pound-rate upon goods; and we find in the subsidy 4 Car. (which is said to be the greatest subsidy that ever was given, and which which passed upon the petition of rights) there was 4 s. in the pound laid upon land; and 2 s. 8 d. upon goods; now 4 s. upon land amounts to three fifteenths; and 2 s. 8 d. which was upon goods to two fifteenths; but in this they had no regard to the old rates made in the tax-book of the several townships, otherwise than to discover the value of the lands; but a method is chalked out by the act of parliament to appoint commissioners, assessors, and collectors, in order to rate and get in the said subsidy. This was found very inconvenient, because the commissioners were to be favourable to their own country, therefore it was found necessary to revive so far the ancient method, as to appoint a certain sum; and in the time of the civil war, the long parliament would not settle any persons to appoint commissioners, but the appointment of commissioners was made in the act itself: And in this new manner of taxing, they appointed the sum to be levied on each particular county, in the act itself; as well as the commissioners names, and where to levy it: And the six associated counties, viz. London, Middlesex, Kent, Sussex, Surrey, and Hertford, being not spoiled and pillaged in the civil wars, and more hearty to the parliament interest, were taxed higher than any other counties in England. Ibid. 194, 195, 196.

After the revolution, to support King William in his wars with France, it was necessary to come into a land-tax; and from 1684 to 1693, the tax was made by a pound-rate, like the former subsidies; but when the people found that the war was like to hold; about 1693, the tax was mightily lessened; every body being willing to ease his neighbour; and then they came to lay a rate upon every county; and the associating counties, being very zealous for the government in the revolution, and having taxed themselves higher than their neighbours in 1693, it was argued, that those counties were better able to bear the tax, and therefore in 1693, they laid the disproportioned sums that are now the standard of the land-tax: let us now compare the subsidy law, 4 Car. 1. with the present land-tax, and consider the manner of gathering them. Ibid.

In the old time, according to the way of making war then used, the tenants per baroniam, and by knight-service, as is herein before mentioned, were obliged to be in the camp 40 days, at their own expence, and the escuage was levied upon the defaulters; but when the art of war improved, and armies were brought into the field that continued a long time, they made their taxation by way of subsidy; which was so much in the pound upon the personal and real estate; as the subsidy of the fourth of King Charles was 2 s. 8 d. per pound on the personal, and 4 s. per pound on the real estate; and where there were different times of taxation and collecting, they were called so many different subsidies; and the spirituality gave their tax in convocation, and the temporality in parliament; but the convocation tax always passed both houses of parliament, since it could not bind as a law till it had the consent of the legislature. Their tax was made according to the rate in the King's books, and since a tenth was paid yearly to the crown, they only taxed the other nine parts as they stood in those books.

The temporality and spirituality were taxed in the same manner as to their personal estate, but as to their real estate, what was given in convocation excused their tax upon their spiritualities. The commissioners for executing the act, were appointed by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, or other great officers of the Crown, or any two of them, the Lord Chancellor being one. Ibid. 197, 198.

The present land-tax, tho' it follows the plan of the subsidies, viz. in taxing so much on the personal, and so much on the real estate, yet it differs in two material circumstances, viz. that there is a sum imposed on each particular county, and that the commissioners are named in the act itself; this came in, in the time of the civil war, in this manner; they had first taxed according to the pound-rate, but when the zeal of the people fell off, they found it necessary to fix a sum upon each particular county; and so they taxed them according to the highest sum that had been levied in such county, and obliged them to make it up; and they being then in opposition to the crown, they named the commissioners in the act itself; and this way of taxing was afterwards followed at the restoration, because they found it for the ease of the crown to name particular sums in the act of parliament, and then they named commissioners also, who were to assess and rate each particular inhabitant. The commissioners by the subsidy, were duly to execute that act; but by the land-tax they were directed in a particular manner how they should do it: that is to say, by making the distribution of the particular sum upon each particular hundred, lathe and wapentake; but by both laws, they were to subdivide themselves, and the respective commissioners were not to act out of their district. The commissioners by the land-tax acts, are to give a note to the receiver general, of the names of the acting commissioners, and sums in each division. We do not find this clause in the old subsidy law, because it was not necessary, where there was not a particular sum imposed on each county. The commissioners, both in the subsidy and land-tax, were to issue their precepts to the constables and other inhabitants, and to appoint assessors; and by both laws, the commissioners are to give them in charge, to make a just assessment, and to return such assessments to the commissioners; who by the land-tax were to return the names of collectors. And by both laws, the persons aggrieved might appeal from the assessors to the commissioners; and also stock upon land is excused from paying a personal estate. Ibid. 199, 200.

By the subsidy law, the commissioners appointed collectors; but by the land-tax, the assessors brought in the names of the collectors; because the place was answerable for the sums so assessed, until they were paid in to the receiver general; and therefore it was necessary that the assessors should appoint collectors: but by the subsidy law, there was no particular sum locally fixed; and therefore the collectors were appointed by the commissioners, who acted in behalf of the crown; and the collectors names were returned in, by both laws, to the receiver general or high collectors; and this disposition was, that the receiver might know in whose hands the money was. In the subsidy, the commissioners appointed the high collectors in each shire and division, to whom the sub-collectors were accountable, and the high collectors were accountants to the Exchequer; and one duplicate of the assessments was given to the high collector, and the other returned into the Exchequer, to be a charge upon the high collectors receipt: But according to the frame of the land-tax, the receiver is now appointed by the Lord Treasurer; and by this law, a duplicate of each particular division is to be given to the receiver general, and another to be returned into the Exchequer; the duplicate returned to the receiver, is to charge the collectors, and that returned into the Exchequer, to charge the receiver general. Ibid. 200, 201.

The high collectors by the subsidy law, gave security to the commissioners by recognizance, to answer the money by them received; but now the receiver general, by the constitution of the treasury gives security to the crown. In the subsidy law and land-tax, the under-collector was to distrain the parties refusing to pay the sum assessed: And by the subsidy law, the under-collector paid in the money collected to the high collector, who was an accountant at the Exchequer; but by the land-tax, the collectors are to pay in the money to the receiver, and he is the accountant at the Exchequer. If the collectors did not pay in the money they had collected to the receivers, the commissioners were to imprison them, and seize their effects; but if the proportion was not answered, the place itself was answerable, by a re-assessment of the commissioners. By both laws, the collectors had precepts and assessments delivered; and, under such precepts, had authority to distrain the lands and goods of the persons so assessed, by virtue of the act. By both laws the parties were to be taxed for goods, in the place where they dwelt. By both laws the distress was to be sold, and the overplus paid to the owner; by the subsidy law, in eight days; by the land-tax, in four days: And for neglect or refusal to pay, and failure of distress, the party to be imprisoned. By the subsidy law, all the commissioners joined in one certificate; but now the commissioners in each division return their estates, which are a charge upon the receiver general; but in the land-tax, if a non-payment in any place be certified by the receiver under his hand, Exchequer process is to issue against the acting commissioners. By the land-tax, if land doubly taxed comes into protestant hands, and they get a certificate from the commissioners, and prove the truth of the certificate before the barons, by two credible witnesses, the Court of Exchequer is empowered to discharge such sum from the parish or township in which the lands lie, and that discharge is carried to the House of Commons, in order to be discharged out of the general sum the next year. Ibid. 203, 204. Lapse, (Lapsus) Is a slip or omission of a patron to present to a church, within six months after it becomes void; in which case we say, that benefice is in lapse or lapsed. 13 Eliz. c. 12. And lapse is deemed to be a title given to the ordinary to collate to a benefice, on the patron's negligence in presenting within six months; and also to be a devolution of a right of presenting from the patron to the bishop; from the bishop to the archbishop; and from the archbishop to the King. Wood's Inst. 158. If after an avoidance, the patron doth not present in six months, the ordinary hath the next six months to collate to the benefice; and if he doth not collate in six months, then the metropolitan hath further six months; and if he doth not collate within his six months, it then devolves to the crown. 2 Roll. Abr. 360. Hib. 30. 4 Rep. 17. And the computation of the six months is by the kalender months, exclusive of the day in which the church becomes void. 6 Rep. 62. Where a patron presents his clerk before the bishop hath collated, the presentation is good notwithstanding the six months are past, and shall bar the bishop, who cannot take any advantage of the lapse: And so if the patron makes his presentation before the archbishop hath collated, though twelve months are past: But if the bishop collates after twelve months, this bars not the archbishop. 2 Roll. Abr. 360. 2 Inst. 273. If a bishop doth not collate to benefices of his own gift, they lapse at the end of six months to the archbishop; and if the archbishop neglects to collate within six months, to a benefice of his gift, the King shall have it by lapse. Dr. & Stud. cap. 36. And if a church continues void several years by lapse, the successor of the King may present. Civ. Car. 258. But if the King hath a title to present by lapse, and he suffers the patron to present, and the presentee dies, or resigns before the King hath presented, if the presentation is real and not by covin, he hath lost his presentation, for lapse is but for the first and next turn; and by the death of the incumbent, a new title is given to the patron; though it has been adjudged that the King in such case may present at any time as long as that presentee is incumbent. 2 Cro. 116. 7 Rep. Moor 244. When the patronage of the church is litigious, and one party doth recover against the other in a quare impedit, if the bishop be not named in the writ, and six months pass while the suit is depending, lapse shall incur to the bishop: if the bishop be named in the writ, then neither the bishop, archbishop or King, can take the benefice by lapse; and yet it is said, if the patron within the six months brings a quare impedit against the bishop, and then the six months pass without any presentation by the patron, lapse shall incur to the bishop. 2 Roll. Abr. 365. 6 Rep. 52. 1 Inst. 344. Hib. 270. Though where the bishop is a disturber, or the church remains void above six months by his fault, there shall be no lapse. 1 Inst. 344. A clerk presented being refused by the bishop for any sufficient cause, as illiterature, ill life, &c. he is to give the patron notice of it, that another may be presented in due time, otherwise the bishop shall not collate by lapse; because he shall not take advantage of his own wrong, in not giving notice to the patron as he ought to do by law. Dyer 292. And if an avoidance is by resignation, which must necessarily be to the bishop by the act of the incumbent; or by deprivation, which is the act of the law, lapse shall not incur to the bishop, till six months after notice given by him to the patron: When the church becomes void by the death of the incumbent, &c. the patron must present in six months without notice from the bishop, or shall lose his presentation by lapse. Dyer 293, 327. 1 Inst. 135. 4 Rep. 75.

In the cases of deprivation and resignation, where the patron is to have notice before the church can lapse, the patron is not bound to take notice from any body but the bishop himself, or other ordinary, which must be personally given to the party, if he live in the same county; and such notice must express in certain the cause of deprivation, &c. If the patron lives in a foreign county, then the notice may be published in the parish church, and affixed on the church door. Civ. Eliz. 119. Dyer 328. In such cases where there ought to be notice, if none is given by the bishop or archbishop in a year and a half, whereby lapse would come to the King if it had been given, here the lapse writes not to the King, where no title accrues to the inferior ordinary. Dyer 340. And it has been adjudged, that lapse is not an interest, like the patronage, but an office of trust reposed by law in the ordinary; and the end of it is, to provide the church a rector, in default of the patron: And it cannot be granted over; for the grant of the next lapse of such a church, either before it falls or after, is void. F. N. B. 34. Also if lapse occurs, and then the ordinary dies, the King shall present, and not the ordinary's executors, because it is rather an administration, than an interest. 25 Ed. 3. 4. Meller 2. Imped. 118. A lapse may incur against an infant or feme covert, if they do not present within six months. 1 Inst. 246. But there is no lapse against the King, who may take his own time, and plenarity shall be no bar against the King's title, because Natus imperator accipit Regi. 2 Inst. 273. Dyer 351. By presentation and institution, a lapse is prevented; though the clerk is never inducted: And a denative cannot lapse, either to the ordinary or the King. 2 Inst. 273. See Black. Com. 2 P. 276. 4 P. 106.

Larceny, (Fr. Larcin, Lat. Lustrum) Is a theft or felony of another's goods, in his absence, and in respect of the thing stolen, it is either

Small.

Grand larceny is a felonious taking and carrying away the personal goods of another, above the value of 12 d. not from the person, or by night, in the house of the owner. Petit larceny is when the goods stolen do not exceed the value of 12 d. It agrees with grand larceny in all things except only the value of the goods; so that where ever any offence would be grand larceny, if the thing stolen was above 12 d. value; it is petit larceny, if it be but of that value, or under. H. P. C. 60, 69. If two persons steal goods to the value of 12 d. it is grand larceny in both; and if one at different times steals diverse parcels of goods from the same person, which together exceed the value of 12 d. they may be put together in one indictment, and the offender found guilty of grand larceny; but this is very seldom done: On the contrary, the jury sometimes, where it is an offender's first offence, &c. find it specially, as they may, that the goods are but of 12 d. value; whereby it will be only petit larceny, though the offender is indicted for stealing things of the value of 40 or 40 s. H. P. C. 70. Pak 125. 3 Inst. 109. 110. Reg. 66.

Grand larceny is a felony punished with death; petit larceny only with whipping, or other corporal punishment, &c. But the offenders may have the benefit of transportation by statute. There is not only simple larceny, by taking away the goods of another, but a mixed or complicated larceny, which has a further degree of guilt in it, and is either a taking from the person, or from the house; as in case of robbery, burglary, &c. Also there is a private larceny from a man's person, without his knowledge; or in open larceny with his knowledge; private, by picking the pocket, &c. openly, where a thief takes off my hat, or periwig, from my head, and runs away with it: And as to private larceny from the person above 12 d. it is excluded clergy, if laid in the indictment as done clm 15 facit, &c. according to the words of the Stat. 3 Edw. c. 4. But otherwise it is not: open larceny with knowledge, by the Common law is within the benefit of clergy. H. P. C. 75. Dak. 109. 110. 3 Inst. 68. Dyer 224. Of all moveable goods, the property whereof is in any person, felony, or larceny may be committed; as money, household-stuff, lly, corn and trees severed from the ground, &c. But the goods stolen must be merely personal, to make it larceny; for if it be of any thing in the realty, or fixed to the freehold, as corn, or fruit growing, not severed, lead on a church, &c. it is not larceny. 3 Inst. 109. 3 Rep. 35. Dak. 372. And of papers and parchment, on which conveyances are written concerning lands, or obligations, &c. larceny cannot be committed. Went 156. But the stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 15. as to stealing of bonds and notes; and the 2 Geo. 2. c. 32. against stealing and taking away lead, or iron bars from houses, &c. Where a person finds the goods of another that are lost, and converts them to his own use, it is no larceny. H. P. C. 61. To take away goods the owner of which is unknown, sometimes is no larceny; such as treasure-trove, wrecks, wild fays, before seizure by the person who hath a right to the same; though in other cases, a man may be guilty of larceny in taking away goods, the owner whereof is unknown. Dak. 370. 3 Inst. 108. H. P. C. 67. And in some extraordinary cases, the law will rather seize a property, where in strictness there is none, than suffer an offender to escape justice. 1 Hawk. P. C. 94.

A man may commit larceny by taking away his own goods in the hands of another; as where the owner delivers goods to a carrier, and afterwards secretly steals them from him, with an intent to charge him for them, &c. because the carrier had a special property, and the possession for a time. 3 Inst. 109. Dak. 371. Pak. 126. To make the crime of larceny, there must be a felonious taking; or an intent of stealing the thing, when it comes first to the hands of the offender, at the very time of the receiving. 3 Inst. 107. Dak. 367. And if one intending to steal goods, gets possession of them by agreement, replevin, or other process at law unduly obtained, by false oath, &c. it is a felonious taking. 3 Inst. 62. Mel. Rep. 43, 44. If a man hath possession of goods once lawfully, though he afterwards carry them away with an ill intention, it is no larceny: where a taylor imbezzles cloth delivered to him, to make a suit of clothes, &c. it is not felony. H. P. C. 61. 5 Rep. 31. And if I lend a person my horse to go to a certain place, and he goes there, and then rides away with him, it is not larceny; but remedy is to be had by action for the damage; though if one comes on pretence to buy a horse, and the owner gives the stranger leave to ride him, if he rides away with the horse, it is felony; for here an intention is implied. Went 156. 364, 365. In the above cases, there is a lawful possession by delivery, to extenuate the offence: But persons having the possession of goods by delivery, may in some instances be guilty of felony, by taking away part thereof; as if a carrier open a pack, and take out part of the goods; a miller, who has corn to grind, takes out part of the same, with an intent to steal it, &c. In which cases, the possession of part, distinct from the whole, was gained by wrong, and not delivered by the owner, &c. H. P. C. 62. 3 P. C. 25. 1 Hawk. P. C. 90. If a lodger hath the possession of goods and furniture in a house, by the consent and delivery of the owner, the taking away, imbezzling or perverting thereof, with an intent to steal them, is felony and larceny. Stat. 3 Edw. 1. c. 9. And by statute, if a servant being of the age of 15 years, and not an apprentice, goes away with goods of his master or mistress delivered him to keep; or being in his service imbezzles them, or converts them to his own use, with intention to steal them, it is felony, if the goods are of the value of 40 s. or above. 23 H. 8. c. 7. 11 Edw. 3. c. 17. 28 H. 8. c. 2. 1 Edw. 6. c. 12. 5 Eliz. c. 10.

Also if one servant delivers the goods to another servant, this is a delivery by the master; yet if the master or another servant delivers a bond, or cards of debt, and the servant goes away with the bond, and receives the money thereon due, or receives the money for the cards sold, and goes away with the same, this is no felony or larceny within the statute. Dak. 389. H. P. C. 62. 3 Inst. 105. So if a servant receives his master's rents; for the master did not deliver the money to the servant, and it must be of things delivered to keep: And if goods delivered to the servant to keep, are under 40 s. value, and he goes away with them, this is only a breach of trust, by reason of the delivery; but if the goods were not delivered to him, it is felony and larceny to go away with or imbezzle them, tho' under the value of 40 s. &c. Dak. 389. Stat. 12 Hen. 8. c. 7. A person that hath the bare charge of goods, and not the possession; as a butcher that hath the charge of plate, a shepherd of sheep, a servant who hath the charge of a chamber by delivery of the key to him, &c. may be guilty of larceny. 3 Inst. 108. If the goods of a dead person are stolen, it is felony and larceny: But where servants in a house imbezzle them after their master's decease, this seems not to be felony, because the things were in some measure in their custody; tho' if they appear not on proclamation, they shall be attainted of felony, by statute 33 H. 6. c. 1. 1 Hawk. P. C. 515.

A man puts a child of seven years old to take goods and bring them to him, and he carries them away; the child is not guilty by reason of his infancy, yet it is larceny in the other. Ibid. 514. If a man reduced to extreme necessity (not owing to his own uncharitableness) steals victuals merely to satisfy his present hunger, and keep him from starving, by our English books, this is neither felony nor larceny. 1 Hawk. P. C. 93. An acquittal of larceny in one country, may be pleaded in bar of a subsequent prosecution for the same stealing in another country: And an averment that the offences in both indictments are the same, may be made out by witnesses, or inquest of office, without putting it to trial by jury; tho' that of larceny has been the usual method. 1 Hawk. P. C. 370. But it is to be observed in respect of larceny, that the defendant must be found not guilty in action of trespass brought against him by the same plaintiff for the same goods, the larceny and trespass are entirely different; and a bar in an action of an inferior nature, will not bar another ther of a superior. Ibid. 371. If a person be indicted for felony or larceny generally, and upon the evidence it appears that the fact is but a bare trespass, he cannot be found guilty, and have judgment on the trespass, but ought to be indicted anew; tho' it may be otherwise where the jury finds a special verdict, or when the fact is specially laid, &c. In trespass where the taking is felonious, no verdict ought to be given, unless the defendant hath before been tried for the felony. 2 Hawk. 440. All felony includes trespass, so that if the party be guilty of no trespass in taking the goods, he cannot be guilty of felony or larceny in carrying them away; and in every indictment of larceny, there must be the words felonice cepit & asportavit, &c. H. P. C. 61. 1 Hawk. 89.

By the 2 Geo. 2. cap. 25. it is enacted, "That if any person or persons shall steal, or take by robbery, any Exchequer orders or tallies, or other orders, intitling any other person or persons to any annuity or share in any parliamentary fund, or any Exchequer bills, Bank notes, South-Sea bonds, East-India bonds, dividend warrants of the Bank, South-Sea company, East-India company, or any other company, society or corporation, bills of exchange, navy bills or debentures, goldsmiths notes for payment of any money, or other bonds or warrants, bills or promissory notes for the payment of any money, being the property of any other person or persons, or of any corporation; notwithstanding any of the said particulars are termed in law a chose in action, it shall be deemed and construed to be felony of the same nature and in the same degree, and with or without the benefit of the clergy in the same manner, as it would have been, if the offender had stolen or taken by robbery any other goods of like value with the money due on, or secured by such orders," &c.

The 4 Geo. 1. c. 11. and 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. Impower the judges on conviction for grand or petit larceny (except the case of buying or receiving of stolen goods knowing them to be such) to transport the offenders. See Clergy, Felony.

Larderarius Regis, The King's larderer, or clerk of the kitchen. Cowell.

Larding Money. In the manor of Bradford in the county of Wilt, the tenants pay to their lord a small yearly rent by this name; which is said to be for liberty to feed their hogs with the mast of the lord's woods, the fat of a hog being called lard: Or it may be a commutation for some customary service of carrying salt or meat to the lord's larder. This was called lardarium in old charters; & decimam lardarii de бага. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. P. 321.

Larons, (Fr.) Thieves; mentioned in the statute for view of frank-pledge. 18 Ed. 2.

Lassinus, Often occurs in Walsingham, and signifies an assassin or murderer. Anno 1271.

Last, (Sax. blastan, i. e. onus, Fr. last) Denotes a burden in general, and particularly a certain weight or measure of fish, corn, wool, leather, pitch, &c. As a last of white herrings, is twelve barrels, of red herrings, twenty cades or thousand, and of pilchards, ten thousand; of corn, ten quarters, and in some parts of England twenty-one quarters; of wool, twelve sacks; of leather, twenty dickers, or ten score; of hides or skins, twelve dozen; of pitch, tar or ashes, fourteen barrels; of gunpowder, twenty-four firkins, weighing a hundred pound each, &c. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 14. 1 Jac. 1. cap. 33. 15 Car. 1. cap. 7.

Last, In the marshes of Kent, is a court held by the twenty-four jurats, and summoned by the bailiffs; wherein orders are made to lay and levy taxes, impose penalties, &c. for the preservation of the said marshes. Hist. of Imbanking and Draining, f. 54.

Lastage, (lastagium) A custom exacted in some fairs and markets, to carry things bought where one will, by the interpretation of Rassal: But it is taken for the ballast or lading of a ship, by the stat. 21 R. 2. cap. 18. — Omnes homines London sint quieti & liberi, &c. de Theobonio, & Passagio, & Lastagio, & ab omnibus aliis Consuetudinibus. Lateral, To lie side-ways in opposition to laying end-ways; used in the description of lands. Chart. dat. ann. 1317.

Lath, Leth, (lastum, Leda, Sax. lathe) Is a great part of a county, containing three or four hundreds, or wapentakes; as it is used in Kent and Sussex. Leg. Ed. Confess. c. 35. — Et sunt quidam de factis Comitatum, Leth, Hundred, & auxilium vicomitem. Pat. 1 H. 4. par. 8. m. 8. See Lada. And Black. Com. 1 V. 116.

Lathrebe, Leidgrebe or Trithingrebe, Was an officer under the Saxon government, who had authority over a third part of the county; and whose territory was therefore called Trithing, otherwise a Leid or Leithen, in which manner the county of Kent is still divided; and the Rapes in Sussex seem to answer the same. As to the jurisdiction of this officer, those matters that could not be determined in the hundred court, were thence brought to the Trithing, where all the principal men of three or more hundreds being assembled by the Lathrebe or Trithingrebe did debate and decide it; or if they could not, then the Lathrebe sent it up to the county court, to be there finally determined. — Suoque olim subaudiens magistratus quem Ledgreivum appellabant. Latimer, Is used by Sir Edward Coke for an interpreter, 2 Inst. 315. It seems that the word is mistaken, and should be latiner, because heretofore he that understood Latin, which in the time of the Romans was the prevailing language, might be a good interpreter. Camden agrees, that it signifies a Fruchman or interpreter, and says the word is used in an old inquisition. Britan. fol. 398. and may be derived or corrupted from the Fr. latiner, q. d. latiner. Cowell.

Latin. There are three sorts of Latin. 1. Good Latin, allowed by grammarians and lawyers. 2. False or incongruous Latin, which in times past would abate original writs; tho' not make void any judicial writ, declaration or plea, &c. And 3. Words of Art, known only to the sages of the law, and not to grammarians, called Lawyers Latin. 1 Lill. Abr. 146, 147. Stat. 36 Ed. 3. Formerly the use of a word not Latin at all, or so in the sense in which used, might in many cases be helped by an Anglice; tho' where there was a proper Latin word for the thing intended to be expressed, nothing could help an improper one. 2 Hawk. P. C. 232. And when there was no Latin for a thing, words made which had some countenance of Latin, were allowed good, as Felvetum, Anglici velvet, &c. 10 Rep. 131. See Indulgent, and Process.

Latinatus, An interpreter of Latin, or latiner, from the Fr. latiner; and heretofore he that understood Latin, which in the time of the Romans was the prevailing language, might be a good interpreter. 2 Co. Inst. 315.

Latitat, Is a writ whereby all men are originally called to answer in personal actions in the King's Bench, having its name upon a supposition that the defendant doth lure and lie hid, and cannot be found in the county of Middlesex to be taken by bill, but is gone into some other county, to the sheriff of which this writ is directed, to apprehend him there. F. N. B. 78. Terms de Ley. The original of it is this: In ancient time, while the King's Bench was moveable, when any man was sued, a writ was sent forth to the sheriff of the county where the court was resident, called a bill of Middlesex, to take him; and if the sheriff re-

137. 4 Rep. 124. The use of the law is to secure the property of what we enjoy; and the objects of it concern persons, their estates, crimes, and misdemeanors, courts of justice, &c. See Contin. Laws, and Black. Com. 1 P. 38. &c. and 4 P. 400, &c.

Lex hath also a special signification, wherein it is taken for that which is lawful with us, and not elsewhere; as tenant by the Curtesy of England, is called tenant by the law of England.

Lex Armis, (lex armiarum) Is that law which gives precepts how to proclaim war, make and observe leagues and treaties, to assault and encounter an enemy, and punish offenders in the camp, &c. The law and judgment of arms are necessary between two strange princes of equal power, who have no other method of determining their controversies, because they have no superior or ordinary judge, but are supreme and publick persons; and by the law of arms, Kings obtain their rights, rebels are reduced to obedience, and peace is established: but when the law of arms and war do rule, the civil laws are of little or no force. Treat. Laws 57. It is a kind of law among all nations, that in case of a solemn war, the prince that conquers gains a right of domination, as well as property over the things and persons he has subdued; and it is for this reason, because both parties have appealed to the highest tribunal that can be, viz. the trial by arms and war; wherein the Great Judge and Sovereign of the world, in a more especial manner, seems to decide the controversy. Hist. Hist. 2. 73. 74. Common things concerning arms and war, are under the cognizance of the Constable and Marshal of England. 13 R. 2.

Lex Doctis. All books within the law, are either historical, as the Year-Books; explanatory, such as Bracton's Treatise of the Royal Prerogative; illustrations, as the Abridgments of the Law; unimproved, being on one certain subject, such as Bartholomaeus's Justice of Peace, &c. Fullbeck's Parallel, cap. 3. And our books of Reports, have such great weight with the judges, that many of them are as highly valued, as the Highway Proverbum among the Romans, which were authoritative. Wood's Inst. 10. Authors of Law-Books. Vide Common Law.

Lex Day, (legidagum) Called also view of frankpledge, or court-leet, was any day of open court; and commonly used for the courts of a county or hundred. Et quidam sunt de jure contrarium & traditionem nostrorum de vicia franci plegii & lawdayorum, &c. Chari. 39 Rex. 3.

Laming of Dogs, Is the cutting off several claws of the fore-feet of dogs in the forest. Chart. Forest. c. 6. See Expositio, and Black. Com. 1 P. 72.

Lawless Court, Is a court held on King's hill at Rushford in Essex, on Wednesday morning next after Michaelmas day yearly, at cock-crowing; at which court, they whisper, and have no candle, nor any pen and ink, but a coal: and he that owes suit or service there, and appears not, forfeits double his rent: this court is mentioned by Canden, who says, that the revile attendance was imposed on the tenants, for conspiring at the like unreasonable time to raise a commotion. Camd. Britan. 441. It belongs to the honour of Rushford, and is called lawless, because held at an unlawful hour; or quia dicta sine lege. The title of it is in rhyme, and in the court-roll runs thus:

Kingshill in } ff. Curia de Domino Rege,

Tenus ibidem die Mercurii (ante diem) proximo post festum Sancti Michaelis anno regni regis, &c.

Lawless Span, (exlex) is an outlaw. Pro exlege tenetur, cum principi non obediatur nec legi, & tunc atlagabitur sicut ille qui est extra legem, sicut laughless man. Bract. lib. 3. c. 11.

Law of Marches, (from the Germ. march, i. e. limet) Is where they that are driven to it, do take the shipping and goods of that people of whom they have received wrong, and cannot get ordinary justice in another territory, when they can take them within their own bounds and precincts. Stat. 27 Ed. 3. c. 17.

Law Merchant, (lex mercatoria) Is a special law differing from the common law of England, proper to merchants, and part of the law of the realm. And the charta mercatoria, 31 Ed. 1. grants this perpetual privilege to merchants, coming into this kingdom: quod omnes barones, ministri, feitorum, civitatum, burgorum & villarum mercatorum mercatoribus in omnibus comparentibus coram eis eorum iustitiam faciant de re in rem sine dilatione; secundum legem mercatorum, de mercatoribus & singulis que per eandem legem contrahi solentur. See 13 Ed. 1. and 27 Ed. 3. c. 8. Co. Litt. 182. See Custom of Merchants.

Law Proceedings, Of all kinds, as writs, processes, pleadings, &c. are to be in the English language from the twenty-fifth of March 1733, by 4 Geo. 2. c. 26. 5 Geo. 2. c. 27. Except known abbreviations and technical terms, 6 Geo. 2. c. 14. Vide Præf.

Law Spiritual, (lex spiritualis) Is the Ecclesiastical law, allowed by our laws where it is not against the Common law, nor the statutes and customs of the kingdom: and regularly according to such Ecclesiastical or Spiritual laws, the Bishops and other Ecclesiastical judges proceed in causes within their cognizance. Co. Litt. 344. It was also called Law Christian; and in opposition to it, the Common law was often called Lex Terrena, &c.

Law of the Staple, (mentioned in Stat. 27 Edw. 2. Stat. 2. cap. 22.) Is the same with law merchant. See 4 Inst. 237, 238. and Staple.

Lawyer, See Counsellor.

Lawyer, (legista, legisperitus, jurisconsultus) By the Saxons called laman, is a counsellor, or one learned in the law. And lawyers, such as counsellors, attorneys, &c. are within the act 3 Jac. 1. against extortion; but it has been held only to extend to officers. 2 Keb. 548.

Law Corporations. Are of two sorts, civil and eleemosynary. The civil are such as are erected for a variety of temporal purposes. The eleemosynary sort are such as are constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms, or bounty, of the founder of them to such persons as he hath directed. See Black. Com. 1 P. 470, 471.

Law Jurisdiction of Bishops. See Black. Com. 1 P. 378, &c.

Law-Free, (statum laicum) Lands held in fee of a lay-lord, by the common services to which military tenure was subject; as distinguished from the ecclesiastical holding in frankalmoin, discharged from these burdens. Kent's Gloss.

Layman, Is one that is not of the clergy; and the Latin word laicus signifies as much as popularis, that which is common to the people, or belongs to the laity. Lit. Dig.

Layhall, (Sax.) A place or lay-dwelling. See 22 & 23 Car. 2.

Lazaretto. Places where quarantine is to be performed, by persons coming from infected countries. Escaping from them felony, without benefit of clergy. See 1 Jac. 1. c. 31. 26 Geo. 2. c. 6. 29 Geo. 2. c. 8.

Leagi. The Saxons divided the people of the land into three ranks: the first they called edilingi, which were such as are now nobility: the second were termed frilingi, from friling, signifying he that was born a freeman, or of parents not subject to any servitude, which are the present gentry: and the third and last were called laxci, as born to labour, and being of a more servile state than our servants, because they could not depart from their service without the leave of the lord; but were fixed to the land where born, and in the nature of slaves: hence the word laxci, or lax, signifies those of a servile condition. Nithardus de Saxonibus. lib. 24.

Lea of Yarn. A quantity of yarn, so called; and at Kidderminster it is to contain 200 threads on a reel four yards about. 22 Ed. 3 Car. 2.

Lead. Stealing of lead, affixed to a house, &c. transportation for seven years. 4 Geo. 2. c. 32.

League. Is an agreement between princes, &c. Also a measure of way by sea, or an extent of land containing three miles in most countries abroad. Breakers of leagues and truces, and how punished for offences done upon the seas. See Stat. 2 H. 5. and 4 H. 5. c. 7.

Leath, or Leche, (from the Sax. leccian, to let out water) in the bishoprick of Durham is used for a gutter; so in Yorkshire any slough or watery hole upon the road, is called by this name: and hence the water-rub so put upon in to make a lee for washing of cloaths, is in some parts of England termed a leche. Cowell.

Leahage. Is an allowance of twelve per cent. to merchants importing wine, out of the customs; and of two barrels in twenty-two of ale to brewers, &c. out of the duty of excise. Mirch. Dis.

Leap. A net, engine or wheel, made of twigs, to catch fish in. 4 Ed. 5 W. & M. c. 23. See Leap.

Leap-year. Every fourth year, having one day more than other years. The day increasing in the leap-year, and the day before, shall be accounted for one day. 11 Hen. 3. Vide Bissextile.

Lease, (from leasie letting, or rather leasie, from the Fr. laiffer, i. e. dimittens to depart with) is a demise or letting of lands, tenements or hereditaments to another, for term of life, years, or at will, for a time referred. Ca. Lit. 43. Leases are either in writing, or by word of mouth, when they are called leases parol; and it is said not to be material whether any year is referred upon a lease for life, or years, except in the case of leases by tenant in tail, &c. according to the Statute 21 H. 8. c. 28. A lease for life requires livery of seisin; and generally to the making of a good lease, several things necessarily concur; there must be a lessor, not restrained from making a lease; a lessee not disabled to receive; a thing demised which is demisable, and a sufficient description of the thing demised, &c. If it be for years, it must have a certain commencement and determination, it is to have all the usual ceremonies, as feasting, delivery, &c. and there must be an acceptance of the thing demised. Lib. 56. 1 Inst. 46. Plowd. 272. 523. A demise having no certain commencement is void: for every contract sufficient to make a lease, ought to have certainty in commencement, in the continuance, and in the end. Fag. 85. 6 Rep. 55. A lease at will is at the will of the lessor or lessee, or regularly at the will of both parties. 1 Inst. 25.

* All estates, interests of freehold, or terms for years in lands, &c. not put in writing, and signed by the parties, shall have no greater effect than as estates at will; unless it be of lands not exceeding three years from the making, wherein the rent reserved shall be two thirds of the value of the thing demised. Stat. 29 Car. 2. cap. 3. Leases exceeding three years must be made in writing, and if the substance of a lease be put in writing, and signed by the parties, though it be not sealed, it shall have the effect of a lease for years, &c. Wood's Inst. 266. Articles with covenants to let and make a lease of lands, for a certain term, or so much rent, hath been adjudged a lease. Cro. Eliz. 285. In a covenant with the words have, possess, and occupy lands, in consideration of a yearly rent, without the word lease, it was held a good lease: and a licence to occupy, take the profits, &c. which passeth an interest amounts to a lease. 3 Bull.

204. 1 Salt. 223. An agreement of the parties, that the lessee shall enjoy the lands, will make a lease: but if the agreement hath a reference to the lease to be made, and implies an intent not to be perfected till then; it is not a perfect lease until made afterwards. Bridge. 13. 2 Slep. Abr. 374. If a man on promise of a lease to be made to him, lays out money on the premises, he shall oblige the lessor afterwards to make the lease; the agreement being executed on the lessee's part: where no such expence hath been, a bare promise of the lease for a term of years, tho' the lessee have possession, shall not be good without some writing. Prima. Cas. 561. A person seised of an estate in fee-simple, in his own right, of any lands or tenements, may make a lease of it for what lives or years he will; and he that is seised of an estate-tail in lands, may make a lease of it for his own life, but no longer; except it be by fine or recovery, or lease warranted by the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. And if tenant in tail, or for life, make a lease generally, it shall be construed for his own life. 1 Inst. 42.

He that is seised of an estate for life, may make a lease for his life, according as he is seised; also he may make a lease for years of the estate, and it shall be good as long as the estate for life doth last: one possessed of lands for years, may make a lease of all the years, except one day, or any short part of the term; it is to be granted for a less term than the taker hath in the lands; for if all the estate is granted, it is an assignment: and if lessee for years makes a lease for life, the lessee may enjoy it for the lessor's life, if the term of years lasts so long; but if he gives livery and seisin upon it, this is a forfeiture of the estate for years. Wood's Inst. 267. Jointenants, tenants in common, and coparceners, may make leases for life, years, or at will, of their own parts, and shall bind their companions: and in some cases, persons who are not seised of lands in fee, &c. may make leases for life or years, by special power enabling them to do it, when the authority must be exactly pursued. Ibid. But there is a difference, where there is a general power to make leases, and a particular power. 8 Rep. 69.

A lease for life cannot be made to commence in futuro, by the Common law; because livery cannot be made to a future estate: though where a lease is made for life, the day is at a day to come, and after the day, the lessor makes livery, there it shall be good; and a lease in reversion may be made for life, which commences at a day that is future. 1 Inst. 5. 1 Rep. 156. A lease for years may begin from a day past, or to come, at Michaelmas last, Christmas next, three or four years after, or after the death of the lessor, &c. Tho' a term cannot commence upon a contingency, which depends on another contingency. 1 Inst. 5. 1 Rep. 156. If one make a lease for years; after the death of A. B. if he die within ten years; this is a good lease, in case he dies within that time, otherwise not. Plowd. 70. And where a man has a lease of land for eighty years, and he grants it to another on hold for thirty years, to begin after his death; it will be good for the whole thirty years, provided there be so many of the eighty to come at the time of the death of the lessor. Bro. Grant. 54. 1 Rep. 155. A lease made from the lessor's death, until anno Domini 1780 is good; and if a lease be during the minority of J. S. or until he shall come to the age of twenty-one years; these are good leases; and if he die before his full age, the lease is ended. Hub. 174. A person grants a rent of 20 l. a year, till an hundred pounds be paid, 'tis a lease of the rent for five years. Ca. Len. 48. If a man makes a lease of land to another, until he shall levy out of the profits one hundred pounds, or he is paid that sum, &c. This will be a lease for life, determinable on the payment of the hundred pounds, if livery and seisin be made: but if there is no livery, it will not be good for years, but void for incertainty. 21 Aff. 18. Plowd. 27. 6 Rep. 55.

A lease for years to such person as A. B. shall name, is not good: though it may be for so many years, as he shall name; not as shall be named by his executors, &c. for it must be in the life-time of the parties. Hub. 173. Moor, cap. 211. And if a man makes a lease to another for so many years as a third person shall name, when the years years are named by such person, it is good for so many years. 1 Inst. 45. So if a person lets his lands for as many years as he hath in the manor of D. and he hath then a term for ten years, this is a good lease for ten years; and in the like cases, by referring to a certainty, it may be made good and certain. Ibid. A lease may be made for life or years, of any thing that lies in livery or grant; but leases for years ought to be made of such lands, &c. whereunto the lessor may come to distrain; not of incorporeal inheritances. 1 Inst. 47. And they may be for the term of one thousand years, or any number of years, months or weeks; or be from week to week, &c. for one, two or three years, and be good for those years; and a tenant for half a year, or a quarter of a year, is tenant for years. 1 Inst. 6. If one makes a lease for a year, and so from year to year, it is a lease for two years; and afterwards it is but an estate at will. 1 Mod. 4. 1 Luce. 213. And if from three years to three years, it is a good lease for six years; also if a man make a lease for years, without saying for how many, it may be good for two years, to answer the plural number. Wood. Inst. 265.

A lessee hath a term for a year by parol, and so from a year to year, so long as both parties please; if the lessee enters on a second year, he is bound for that year, and so on; and if there is a lease by deed for a year, and so from year to year as long as both parties agree, this is binding but for one year, though if the lessee enters upon the second year, he is for that year bound; if 'tis for a year, and so from year to year, so long as both parties agree till six years expire; this is a lease for six years, but determinable every year at the will of either party; but if it is for a year, and so from year to year till six years determine, this is a certain lease for six years, adjudged by Holt Chief Justice. Mod. Ca. 215. If A. make a lease of land to B. for ten years; and it is agreed between them, that he shall pay fifty pounds at the end of the said term, and if he do so, and pay fifty pounds at the end of every ten years; then the said B. shall have a perpetual demise and grant of the lands, from ten years to ten years continually following, extra memoriam hominum, &c. Though this be a good lease for the first ten years, as for all the rest, it is uncertain and void; by covenant a further lease may be made for the like term of years. Plowd. 192. 2 Srep. Abr. 376.

A parson makes a lease of his glebe for so many years as he shall be parson, this cannot be made certain; but if he makes a lease for three years, and so from three years to three years, so long as he shall be parson, it is a good lease for six years, if he continue parson so long. 6 Rep. 35. 3 Cre. 511. And if one make a lease for twenty-one years, if the lessee shall so long live; this is a good lease for years, and a certainty in an uncertainty. 1 Inst. 46. A lease made to a man for seven years, if D. shall live so long, who is dead when the lease is made; by this the lessee hath an absolute lease for seven years. 9 Rep. 63. Lease for life is granted, and says that if the lessee within one year do not pay 20 s. then he shall have but a lease for two years; here if he pays not the money, he shall have only the two years, although livery of seisin be had thereon. 1 Inst. 218. If a lease be made to A. B. during his own life, and the lives of C. and D. it is one entire estate of freehold, and shall continue during the three lives, and the life of the survivor of them; and tho' the lessee can have it no longer than his own life, yet his assignee shall have the benefit of it so long as the other two are living. 5 Rep. 13. Moor 32. Where one grants land by lease to J. B. and C. D. to hold to them during their lives, although the words and the longest liver of them be omitted, they shall hold it during the life of the longest liver. 5 Rep. 9. A lease is made to a person for sixty years, if A. B. and C. D. so long live; and afterwards A. B. dies, by his death the lease is determined. Though if the lease be made to one for the lives of A. B. and C. D. the freehold doth not determine by the death of one of them; and if in the other case of a term, the words or either of them be inserted in the lease, it will be good for both their lives. 13 Rep. 66.

A lease was made to a man for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live; and if he died within the term, the son to have it for the residue of the term: this was adjudged void as to the son, because there can be no limitation of the residue of a term which is determined. Cre. Eliz. 216. But if the words of the lease be, To hold during the residue of the ninety-nine years, and not during the rest of the term, in this case it may be good to the son also. 1 Rep. 153. Dyer 253. A lease was made for twenty-one years, if the lessee lived so long, and in the service of the lessor; the lessor died within the term, and yet it was held that the lease continued, for it was by the act of God that the lessee could serve no longer. Cre. Eliz. 643.

If a lease be to a man, and to her whom he shall take to wife, it is void; because there ought to be such persons at the time of the commencement of the lease which might take. 4 Leon. 158. When a lease in reversion is granted as such after another lease, and that lease is void by failure, &c. the reversionary lease, expectant upon the lease for years that is void, is void also. Cre. Car. 289. But where a man recites a lease, when in truth there is no lease; or a lease which is void, and misrecites the same in a point material, and grants a further lease to commence after the determination thereof; in such case the new lease shall begin from the time of delivery. Dyer 93. 6 Rep. 36. Vaugh. 73, 80, &c. A lease that has an impossible date for its commencement, is said to be void; and an uncertain limitation makes the lease void, because it being part of the agreement, the court cannot determine what the contract was. 1 Mod. 180. Though it hath been adjudged, where a lease bears a date which is impossible, the term shall begin from the delivery, as if there was no date. 1 Inst. 40. If a lease be to hold from the day of the date, the day itself is excluded; otherwise the day of delivery is inclusive. 5 Rep. 2.

A man makes a lease for years to one, and afterwards makes a lease for years to another of the same land; the second lease is not void; but shall be good for so many years thereof, as shall come after the first lease ended. Noy's Max. 67. And if one make a lease for years, and afterwards the lessor enters upon the lands let, before the term is expired, and makes a lease of these lands to another; this second lease is a good lease until the lessee doth re-enter; and then the first lease is revived, and he is in thereby. 2 Lill. Abr. 152. It hath been held, that a lease may be void as to one, and stand good to another; and leases voidable, or void for the present, may after become good again. 1 Inst. 46. 3 Rep. 51. If a lease be made to two, to hold to them and two others, it is voidable as to the two other persons; and when the two first die, the lease is at an end. 2 Leon. 1. A lease which is only voidable, and not absolutely void, may be made void by the lessor by re-entry; but if a lease be void absolutely, there needs no re-entry: And as a voidable lease is made void by re-entry, and putting out the lessee; so it is affirmed, by accepting and receiving the rent which acknowledges the lessee to be tenant. 21 Car. B. R. 2 Lill. 149. If a lessor accepts of rent of an assignee of a lease, having knowledge of the assignment, he may not afterwards charge the lessee with the rent in action of debt. 3 Rep. 23. And where a lessee for years accepts of a less term from the lessor, even by word, it is said this is a surrender of the term which he had by deed. Style 448.

When a term for years in lease, and a fee-simple, meet in one person, the lease is drowned in the inheritance; yet in some cases it may have continuance, to make good charges and payments, &c. Poph. 39. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1100. If a lease for years is made to a man and his heirs, it shall go to his executors. 1 Inst. 46. 388. And a lease for years, notwithstanding it be a very long lease, cannot be intailed; but may be assigned in trust, to several uses. 2 Lill. Abr. 150. If such a lease comes to be limited in tail, the law allows not a present remainder to be limited thereupon. Ibid. Lessee for years, though for never so great a term, has only a chattel; but tenant for life hath a freehold. 1 Inst. 6. A lease is sealed by the lessor, and the lessee hath not sealed the counterpart, action of covenant may be brought upon the lease against the lessor; but where the lease is sealed by the lessee, lessee, and not the lessor, nothing operates. 1 Clv. 18. Owen 100.

A man out of possession, cannot make a lease of lands, without entering and sealing the lease upon the land. Dalif. 81. The lessee is to enter on the premises let; and such lessee for years is not in possession, so as to bring trespass, &c. until actual entry; but he may grant over his term before entry. 1 Inst. 46. 2 Lill. 160. A lessee of a future interest never enters by virtue of his term, but enters before, and continues after the commencement of the term; and then the lessor ousts him, the lessee may assign over his term off from the land. 1 Lev. 47. But a lease to begin at Michaelmas, if the lessee enters before Michaelmas, and continues the possession immediately, it is a disseisin. Ibid. 46. If a lease be made of a close of land, by a certain name, in the parish of A. in the county of B. whereas the close is in another county, the said parish extending into both counties; such a lease is good to pass such land: though where a house is leased without a name, and the parish is mistaken; it hath been held otherwise. Dyer 276, 292.

Land and mines are leased to a tenant; this only extends to the open mines, and the lessee shall not have any others, if there are such: And if land and timber are demised, the lessee is not empowered to sell it. 2 Lev. 184. 2 Mod. 193. A man makes a lease of lands for life, or years, the lessee hath but a special interest in the timber-trees, as annexed to the land, to have the mast and shadow for his cattle; and when they are severed from the lands, or blown down with wind, the lessor shall have them as parcel of his inheritance. 4 Rep. 62. 11 Rep. 81. If an house falls down by tempest, &c. the lessee hath an interest to take the timber, to re-edify it for his habitation. 4 Rep. 63. And every lessee for years, &c. may take of timber necessary plough-bote, house-bote, fire-bote, &c. without doing waste. 1 Inst. 41. And tenants suffering houses to be uncovered, or in decay; taking away wainscot, &c. fixed to the freehold, unless put up by the lessee, and taken down before the term is expired; cutting down timber-trees to sell; permitting young trees to be destroyed by cattle, &c. ploughing up ground that time out of mind hath not been ploughed; not keeping banks in repair, &c. are guilty of waste. 1 Inst. 52. Dyer 37. 1 Salk. 368.

Lessees are bound to repair their tenements, except it be mentioned in the lease to the contrary. Though a lessee for years is not obliged to repair the house let to him which is burnt by accident; if there be not a special covenant in the lease, that he shall leave the house in good repair at the end of the term: yet if the house be burnt by negligence, the lessee shall repair it, altho' there be no such covenant. Pajeb. 24 Car. B. R. A lessee at will is not bound to sustain or repair, as tenant for years, is: If the house of such a tenant is burnt down by negligence, action lies not against the tenant; but action lies for voluntary waste, in pulling down houses, or cutting wood, &c. 5 Rep. 13.

By stat. 6 & 10 Ann. c. 14. No action shall be brought against any person, in whose house, any fire shall accidentally begin, or any recompence be made by such person for damages, so as not to extend to, or make void, any agreement between landlord and tenant; and negligent firing of houses is liable to penalties.

A lessor who hath fee, cannot reserve rent to any other but himself, his heirs, &c. And if he reserves a rent to his executors, the rent shall be to the heir, as incident to the reversion of the lands. 1 Inst. 47. The lessor may take a distress on the tenements let for the rent; or may have action of debt for the arrears, &c. Also land leased shall be subject to those lawful remedies which the lessor provides for the recovery of his rent, possession, &c. into whose hands soever the land comes. Cro. Jac. 300. And as to the lessee, if lessee for years loses his lease, if it can be proved that there was such a term let to him by lease, and that it is not determined, he shall not lose his term; so it is of any other estate in lands, if the deed that created it be lost, for the estate in the land is derived from the party that made it, and not from the deed otherwise than instrumentally and declarative of the mind and intent of the party, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 152. If a person be in possession of the lands of another, and hath usually paid rent for them; the proof of a quarter or half year's rent paid, will be good evidence of a lease at will, though it cannot be expressly proved that the lands were demised at will to him in possession; it shall be presumed the rent was received by the owner of the land upon some private contract. Ibid. 151.

Lands are leased at will, the lessee cannot determine his will before or after the day of payment of the rent, but it must be done on that very day; and the law will not allow the lessee to do it to the prejudice of the lessor, as to the rent; nor that the lessor shall determine his will to the prejudice of the lessee, after the land is sown with corn, &c. Sid. 339. Lev. 109. For where lessee at will sows the land, if he does not himself determine the will, he shall have the corn: And where tenant for life sows the corn, and dies, his executors shall have it; but it is not so of tenant for years, where the term ends before the corn is ripe, &c. 5 Rep. 116. The lessor and lessee, where the estate is at will, may determine the will when they please; but if the lessor doth it within a quarter, he shall lose that quarter's rent; and if the lessee doth it, he must pay a quarter's rent. 2 Salk. 413. By words spoken on the ground by the lessor in the absence of the lessee, the will is not determined; but the lessee is to have notice. 1 Inst. 55. If a man makes a lease at will, and dies, the will is determined; and if the tenant continues in possession, he is tenant at sufferance. Ibid. 57. But where a lessor makes an estate at will to two or three persons, and one of them dies; it has been adjudged this doth not determine the estate at will, 5 R.p. 10. Tenant at will grants over his estate to another, it determines his will. 1 Inst. 57. No tenant shall take leases of above two farms, in any town, village, &c. nor hold two, unless he dwell in the parish, under penalties and forfeitures, by Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 13. See 21 H. 8. cap. 13.

There is a late statute for the more effectual preventing frauds committed by tenants; and for the more easy recovery of rents, and renewal of leases; by which chief leases of lands may be renewed on surrender, without the surrendering of the under leases, &c. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. And how leases of lands, &c. left uncultivated, may become void, for non-payment of rent, on view of two justices of peace, &c. by the late act 11 Geo. 2. cap. 19. See the purport of these statutes, under Rent.

Leases by Statute. There are three kinds of persons, who may make leases for life or years by statute, that could not do so heretofore, viz. Tenants in tail, husband and wife of the wife's land, and persons seized of lands in right of the church. By the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. Tenants in tail are enabled to make leases on the following conditions, i. e. They are to be made by deed indented; to begin from the time of making, or some short time after, as Michaelmas next, &c. If there be an old lease in being, it must be absolutely surrendered, or expire within a year after the making of the new; they must not exceed three lives or twenty-one years, from the making, or be for both, but may be for less terms; they are to be of lands manurable or corporeal, out of which a rent may be legally issuing; and of such lands or tenements which have been most commonly let to farm by the space of twenty years; the accustomed yearly rent, paid within twenty years is to be reserved; and they are not to be made without impeachment of waste, &c. It has been held on this statute, that where a new thing is demised with lands accustomedly let, though there be great increase of rent, the lease is void: but more rent than the accustomed rent may be reserved. 5 Rep. 5. 6 Rep. 37. And the leases according to the statute bind the issues in tail; but not those in reversion or remainder: for if tenant in tail makes a lease warranted by the statute, and dies without issue, the lease as to him in reversion or remainder is void; tho' by a common recovery, leases may be made to bind him in remainder, &c. Wood's Inst. 267.

A guardian during the minority of an infant tenant in tail, who was but one year old, made a lease for twenty years; and it was adjudged not good by the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. to bind the issue in tail; and it is the same in the case of tenant in dower, tenant by the curtesy, or husband seized in right of his wife, because they have no inheritance. Dier 171. The statute impowers a husband to make leases of land in tail, held in his wife's right, so as in such leases the conditions aforementioned are observed, and the wife be made a party to and seal the leases; and the rent is to be reserved to the husband and wife, and her heirs, &c. If a lease of the wife's land is not warranted by the statute, it is a good lease against the husband, though not against the wife: the husband and wife cannot bind him in reversion or remainder. 1 Inst. 362. Bishops, Spiritual Persons, &c. seised in fee in right of their churches, may make leases of their spiritual livings for three lives, or one and twenty years, having all the qualities required by the statute, in case of leases made by tenants in tail, 32 H. 8. c. 28. And leases otherwise made are to be void; but not against the bishops, &c. making them only against their successors. 3 Rep. 59.

A bishop, &c. may make leases of lands for twenty-one years, or three lives, according to the statute, without confirmation of dean and chapter; and at Common law might make them for any longer time, without limitation, with confirmation of dean and chapter; but this is restrained by the statutes 1 Eliz. c. 19. and 13 Eliz. c. 10. Such confirmation will now make good concurrent leases for twenty-one years, &c. upon leases for years; though a bishop cannot make a concurrent lease for life or lives. Wood's Inst. 273. If a bishop have two chapters, as there may be two or more to one bishoprick; both chapters must confirm leases made by the bishop. 1 Inst. 131. A lease by a bishop made to begin presently for twenty-one years; when there is an old lease in being, is good, notwithstanding the statute of 1 Eliz. Moor cap. 241. But if such lease is to commence at a day to come, it will be void, 1 Leon. 44. Lease for three lives of a bishop of tithes, is void against the successor; although the usual rent be duly reserved. Moor ca. 1078. 2 Cro. 173.

Leases of a dean and chapter are good, without confirmation of the bishop. Dyer 273. 2 Nell. Abr. 1096. Where there is a chapter, and no dean; they may make grants, &c. and are within the statute. 1 Mod. 204. And a prebendary is seised in right of the church within the equity of the statute 32 H. 8. c. 28. 4 Leon. 51. A prebendary's lease confirmed by the archbishop, who is his patron, is good without confirmation of dean and chapter. 3 Bulstr. 290. But where a prebendary made a lease for years of part of his prebend, and this was confirmed by dean and chapter; because it was not confirmed likewise by the bishop, who was patron and ordinary of the prebend, the lease was adjudged void. Dyer 60. If a prebendary hath rectories in two several dioceses belonging to his prebend, and his lease of them is confirmed by the bishop, dean and chapter of the diocese of which he is prebendary, it is good, though not confirmed by the other. Sid. 75.

A chancellor of a cathedral church may make a lease, and 'tis said it will be good against the successor, though not confirmed, &c. Ibid. 158. If a parson or vicar makes a lease for life or years, of lands usually letten, reserving the customary rent, &c. it must be confirmed by patron and ordinary, for they are out of the statute 32 H. 8. c. 28. And if the parson and ordinary make a lease for years of the glebe to the patron; and afterwards the patron assigns this lease to another, such assignment is good, and is a confirmation of that lease to the assignee. 5 Rep. 15. Ancient covenants in former leases may be good to bind the successor, so as to discharge the lessee from payment of pensions, tenths, &c. but of any new matter they shall not. 1 Vent. 223.

By the Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 20. the lease of a parson is not good for any longer time than the parson's residence upon his living, without absence fourscore days in any year; and an incumbent offending contrary to this act, shall lose a year's profit of the benefice, &c. 4 Rep. 403. A lease for years of a spiritual person, will be void by his death, if it is not according to the statutes; and a lease for life is voidable by entry, &c. of the successor: And so in like cases, leases not warranted by statute, are void or voidable on the deaths of their makers: Acceptance of rent on a void lease shall not bind the successor. 2 Cro. 173.

On college leases, a third part of the rent is to be reserved in corn, &c. 18 Eliz. c. 6. By 14 Eliz. c. 11.

it is ordained, that the 13 Eliz. c. 10. shall not extend to leases of the masters and fellows of colleges, &c. of houses in corporation towns, which may be made for forty years, &c. But the 18 Eliz. c. 11. makes void leases of masters and fellows of colleges, deans and chapters, masters of hospitals, &c. where another lease for years is in being, and not to be expired or surrendered within three years; and leases of such persons are to be made for twenty-one years or three lives, reserving the accustomed rents, &c. Bishops are out of this statute.

If a bishop be not bishop de jure, leases made by him to charge the bishoprick, are void; though all judicial acts by him are good. 2 Cro. 353. And where a bishop makes a lease, which may tend to the diminution of the revenues of the bishoprick; &c. which should maintain the successor; there the deprivation or translation of the bishop, is all one with his death. 1 Inst. 329. Also all assurances and demises of bishops lands to the King, shall be void. 1 Jac. 1. c. 3. Persons for whose lives estates are held by lease, &c. remaining beyond sea, or being absent seven years; if no proof be made of their being alive, shall be accounted dead. 19 Car. 2. c. 6. If the assignee of a term of years assigns it over to a poor insolvent person, on purpose to get rid of it, he shall not be liable to rent afterwards incurred, for the privity of estate is destroyed by the legal assignment to the insolvent person; and it was the folly of the landlord to discharge the original lessee. 2 Strange 1221.

Leases of the King. Leases made by the King, of part of the dutchy of Cornwall, are to be for three lives, or thirty-one years, and not be made dispensable of waste, whereon the ancient rent is to be reserved; and estates in reversion, with those in possession, are not to exceed three lives, &c. 13 Car. 2. c. 4. All leases and grants made by letters patent, or indentures under the Great Seal of England, or seal of the court of Exchequer, or by copy of court-roll, according to the custom of the manors of the dutchy of Cornwall, not exceeding one, two or three lives, or some term determinable thereon, &c. are confirmed; and covenants, conditions, &c. in leases for lives or years, shall be good in law, as if the King were seised in fee-simple. Stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 9. See 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 18. 12 Ann. c. 22. And leases from the crown of lands in England and Wales, and under the seals of the dutchy of Lancaster, &c. for one, two or three lives, or terms not exceeding fifty years, are allowed time for inrollment, &c. by 10 Ann. c. 18. Leases made by the Prince of Wales of lands, &c. in the dutchy of Cornwall, for three lives or thirty-one years, on which is reserved the most usual rent paid for the greatest part of twenty years before, shall be good against the King, the Prince and their heirs, &c. and the conditions of such leases be as effectual, as if the Prince had been seised of an absolute estate in fee-simple in the lands. Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 29.

A freehold lease for three lives, differs from a chattel lease only in this, viz. That the habendum is to the lessee, his heirs and assigns, for and during the natural lives of him the said C. D. E. his wife, and T. D. his son, and during the life natural of every and either of them longest living. And in every covenant, the lessee covenants for himself, his heirs and assigns; and the covenants are the same as in a chattel lease; with the addition of a letter of attorney at the end, to deliver possession and seisin, as in a deed of feoffment.

Lease and Release. Is a conveyance of right or interest in lands or tenements, to another that hath the possession thereof. Accomp. Conv. 1 Vol. 129. Though the deed of feoffment was the usual conveyance at Common law; yet since the Stat. of 27 H. 8. c. 10. of uses, the conveyance by lease and release has taken place of it, and is become a very common assurance to pass lands and tenements; for it amounts to a feoffment, the use drawing after it the possession without actual entry, &c. and supplying the place of livery and seisin, required in that deed: In the making it, a lease or bargain and sale for a year, or such like term, is first prepared and executed; to the intent that by virtue thereof the lessee may be in actual actual possession of the lands intended to be conveyed by the release, and thereby and by force of the statute 27 H. 8. c. 10. for transferring of uses into possession, be enabled to take and accept a grant of the reversion and inheritance of the said lands, &c. to the use of himself and his heirs for ever: upon which the release is accordingly made, reciting the lease, and declaring the uses: And in these cases, a pepper-corn rent in the lease for a year is a sufficient reservation to raise an use, to make the lessee capable of a release. 2 Ven. 35. 2 Mod. 262.

When an estate is conveyed by lease and release, in the lease for a year there must be the words, bargain and sell for money, and 5 s. or any other sum, though never paid, is a good consideration, whereupon the bargainee for a year is immediately in possession on the executing of the deed, without actual entry: if only the words demise, grant and to farm let are used, in that case the lessee cannot accept of a release of the inheritance until he hath actually entered and is in possession. 2 Lill. Abr. 435. But where Littleton says, that if a lease is made for years, and the lessor releases to the lessee before entry; such release is void, because the lessee had only a right, and not the possession; and such release shall not enure to enlarge the estate, without the possession: though this is true at Common law, it is not so now upon the statute of uses. 2 Mod. 250, 251. And if a man make a lease for life, remainder for life, and the first lessee dieth; on which, the lessor releases to him in remainder, before entry; this is a good release to enlarge the estate, he having an estate in law capable of enlargement by release, before entry had. 1 Inst. 270.

No person can make a bargain and sale, who hath not possession of the lands: but it is not necessary to reserve a rent therein; because the consideration of money raises the use. If a lease be without any such consideration, the lessee hath not any estate till entry, nor hath the lessor any reversion; and therefore a release will not operate, &c. 1 Inst. 270, 278. Cro. Jac. 169. 1 Mod. 263. On lease at will, a release shall be good by reason of the privity between the parties: but if a man be only tenant at sufferance, the release will not enure to him; and as to the person who hath the reversion it is void, for such tenant hath not any possession, there being no estate in him. Litt. Sect. 461, 462. Cro. Eliz. 21. Dyer 251. It is necessary in all cases where a release of lands is made, that the estate be turned to a right; as in a disseisin, &c. where there are two rights, a right of possession in the disseisor, and a right to the estate in the disseisee; now when the disseisee hath released to the disseisor, here the disseisor hath both the rights in him, viz. The right to the estate, and also to the possession: or else it is requisite that there be privity of estate between the tenant in possession and the releasor; for a release will not operate without privity. 2 Lill. 435. A release made by one that at the time of the making thereof had no right, is void; and a release made to one that at the time of making thereof hath nothing in the lands, is also void, because he ought to have a freehold, or a possession or privity. Noy's Max. 74.

He that makes a release must have an estate in himself, out of which the estate may be derived to the lessee; the lessee is to have an estate in possession in deed or in law; in the land whereof the release is made, as a foundation for the release; there must be privity of estate between the releasor and lessee; and be sufficient words in law not only to make the release, but also to create and raise a new estate, or the release will not be good. 1 Inst. 22. A release to a man and his heirs will pass a fee-simple; and if made to a man, and the heirs of his body, by this the lessee hath an estate-tail: But a release of a man's right in fee-simple, is not sufficient to pass a fee-simple. 1 Inst. 273. And if a person release to another all his right which he hath in the land, without using any more words, as To hold to him and his heirs, &c. the lessee hath only an estate for life. Dyer 263. A release made to a tenant in tail, or for life, of right to land, shall extend to him in remainder or reversion. 1 Inst. 267. By release of all a man's right unto lands, all actions, entries, titles of dower, rents, &c. are discharged; though it bars not a right that shall descend afterwards: And a release of all right in such land will not discharge a judgment not executed; because such judgment doth not vest any right; but only makes the land liable to execution. 8 Rep. 151. 3 Salk. 298.

'Tis said a release of all one's title to lands, is a release of all one's right. Litt. 509. 1 Inst. 292. By a release of all entries, or right of entry, a man hath into lands, without more words, the releasor is barred of all right or power of entry into those lands; and yet if a man have a double remedy, viz. a right of entry, and an action to recover, and then release all entries, by this he is not barred and excluded his action; nor doth a release of actions bar the right of entry. Plowd. 484. 1 Inst. 345. A release made by deed poll, of right to lands, &c. needs no other execution than sealing and delivery; and will operate without consideration: but 'tis convenient to put a valuable consideration therein; lest it should be judg'd fraudulent by statute. Litt. Sect. 445. Lill. Convey. 230, 248. Cro. Jac. 270.

A release that doth not enure by way of passing away an estate, or extinguishment, may be made upon condition or with a defeasance, so as the condition, &c. be contained in the release, or delivered at the same time with it: And there may be a recital, covenants, warranty, &c. inserted in this release; though it is said the deed is good, without any such additions. Accom. Convey. Vol. 1.

In a lease and release to make a tenant to the præcipe to suffer a recovery, where the release is made to A. B. and his heirs, (viz. the tenant to the præcipe) it must be also said to the use of him the said A. B. and his heirs and assigns for ever; for the lessee must be absolute tenant of the freehold. 2 Vent. 312. Lill. Conveyance 251. And a release made on trust, must be to A. B. his heirs and assigns, to the only use and behoof of the lessee, his heirs and assigns for ever; in trust for C. D. who is to be a party to the deed, and the purchase-money to be paid by the cestui que trust: If the words to the use, &c. are not inserted in the release, the estate doth not execute by the statute of uses, and the trust is void. Lill. Ibid. 251, 233. A lease and release make but one conveyance, being in the nature of one deed. 1 Mod. 252.

It may not be improper here to observe, that in a court of equity, either suppessio veri, or suggestio falsi, is a good reason to set aside any release or conveyance. 1 Wilf. Rep. 239, 240, 727.

Leat, A mill-leat, corruptly millleat. A trench to convey water to or from a mill, mentioned in stat. 7 Jac. 1. cap. 19. but most peculiar to Devonshire, where in conveyances the word does frequently occur. Cowell.

Leather. There are several statutes relating to leather; as the 27 H. 8. c. 14. directs packers to be appointed for leather to be transported; but the 18 Eliz. c. 9. prohibits the shipping of leather, on penalty of forfeiture, &c. Though by 20 Car. c. 5. transportation of leather is allowed to Scotland, Ireland, or any foreign country, paying a custom or duty; which statute is continued by divers subsequent acts. No person shall ingross leather to sell again, under the penalty of forfeiture: none but tanners are to buy any rough hides of leather, or calve-skins in the hair, on pain of forfeiture; and no person shall forestal hides, under the penalty of 6 s. 8 d. a hide. Leather not sufficiently tanned, is to be forfeited. In London, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen are to appoint and swear searchers of leather, out of the company of shoemakers, &c. and also triers of sufficient leather; and the same is to be done by mayors, &c. in other towns and corporations; and searchers allowing insufficient leather, incur a forfeiture of 40 s. Shoemakers making shoes of insufficient leather, are liable to 3 s. 4 d. penalty. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22.

Red tanned leather is to be brought into open leather markets, and searched and sealed before exposed to sale, or shall be forfeited; and contracts for sale otherwise to be void. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 7. Hides of leather are adjudged the ware and manufacture of the carrier, and subject to search, &c. All persons dealing in leather, may buy tanned leather searched in open market; and any person may buy or sell leather hides or skins by weight. 1 W. & M. c. 33. Duties are granted on leather, and entries to be made of tan-yards, under the penalty of 50 l. and tanners and leather dressers using any private tan-yards, or concealing skins, &c. shall forfeit 20 l. leviable by justices of the peace, by distress, &c. 9 Ann. c. 11. See 5 Geo. 1. c.

Lecturer, (Prælector) A reader of lectures; and in London, and other cities, there are lecturers who are assistants to the rectors of churches in preaching, &c. These lecturers are chosen by the vestry, or chief inhabitants of the parish, and are usually the afternoon preachers: The law requires, that they should have the consent of those by whom they are employed, and likewise the approbation and admission of the ordinary; and they are, at the time of their admission, to subscribe to the thirty-nine articles of religion, &c. required by the Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. They are to be licensed by the bishop, as other ministers, and a man cannot be a lecturer without a licence from the bishop or archbishop; but the power of a bishop, &c. is only as to the qualification and fitness of the person, and not as to the right of the lectureship; for if a bishop determine in favour of a lecturer, a prohibition may be granted to try the right. Mich. 12 W. 3. B. R. If lecturers preach in the week days, they must read the Common Prayer for the day when they first preach, and declare their assent to that book; they are likewise to do the same the first lecture day in every month, so long as they continue lecturers, or they shall be disabled to preach till they conform to the same: And if they preach before such conformity, they may be committed to prison for three months, by warrant of two justices of peace, granted on the certificate of the ordinary. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. Rights Clerg. 338.

Where lectures are to be preached or read in any cathedral or collegiate church, if the lecturer openly at the time aforesaid, declare his assent to all things in the book of Common Prayer, it shall be sufficient; and university sermons or lectures are excepted out of the act concerning lectures. There are lectures founded by the donations of pious persons, the lecturers whereof are appointed by the founders; without any interposition or consent of rectors of churches, &c. tho' with the leave and approbation of the bishop; such as that of lady Moier at St. Paul's, &c. Lega & Laista. Anciently the allay of money was so called Debita nummi temperies, quam veteres legam & lactam appellabant. Spelm.

Legabilis, Signifies what is not entailed as hereditary; but may be bequeathed by legacy, in a last will and testament. Articula propofit. in parlamento coram Rege, Anno 1234.

Legacy, (legatum) Is a particular thing given by a man's last will and testament; and he to whom such legacy is given, is called a legatee; and there is a residuary legatee.

Of legatees, time of payment, and lapsed legacies.

It seems necessary, that the legatee should be born at the time of making the will; and it has been adjudged where legacies were given to a man's children, that those who were born afterwards should have no share thereof. 1 Bull. 153. But it has been otherwise decreed in Chancery. 1 Ch. Rep. 301. A man devised 200 l. apiece to the two children of A. B. at the end of ten years after the death of the testator; afterwards the children died within the ten years; and it was held a lapsed legacy: for there is a difference where a devise is to take effect at a future time, and where the payment is to be made at a future time; and whenever the time is annexed to the legacy itself, and not to the payment of it, if the legatee dies before the time happens, 'tis a lapsed legacy. 2 Salk. 415. A bequest of money to one at the age of twenty-one, or day of marriage, without saying to be paid at that time, and the legatee dies before the term; this is a lapsed legacy: And so it is if the devise had been to her when she shall marry; or when a son shall come of age, and they die before. Godb. 182. 2 Vent. 342.

But a devise of a sum of money, to be paid at the day of marriage, or age of twenty-one years; if the legatee die before either of these happen, the legatee's administrator shall have it, because the legatee had a present interest, tho' the time of payment was not yet come; and 'tis a charge on the personal estate which was in being at the testator's death; and if it were discharged by this accident, then it would be for the benefit of the executor, which was never intended by the testator. 2 Ventr. 366. 2 Lew. 207. A father bequeathed goods to his son, when he should be of the age of twenty-one years, and if he die before that time, then his daughter should have them; afterwards the father died, and then the son died before he was of age; adjudged that the daughter shall have the goods given in legacy immediately, and not stay till her brother would have been of age, if he had lived. 1 And. 33. And where a legacy was devised to an infant, to be paid when he shall come of age, and he died before that time; it was ruled that his administrator should have it it presently, and not stay until the infant should have been of age, if he had lived. 1 Leon. 278. In a case of this nature, it has been decreed in equity, that although the administrator should have the legacy, yet he must wait for it till such time as the child would have come to twenty-one. 2 Vern. 199.

Of legacies devised out of real estates, &c.

Where a legacy is to arise out of the real estate, it shall not go to the representative of the legatee; but sink in the inheritance: And yet where 1000*l.* was given by a person out of lands, to his daughter, and interest to be computed from his death, &c. here tho' the legatee died before the time appointed for paying the same, it was held the legacy should be raised notwithstanding; and the Lord Chancellor said, that this legacy was a vested one. 2 Vern. Rep. 617. Barnardist. 328, 330. A person by will, &c. gives a portion or legacy to a child, payable at twenty-one years of age, out of a real and personal estate, and the child dies before the legacy becomes payable; in that case, so much thereof as the personal estate will pay, shall go to the child's executors and administrators: But so far as the legacy is charged upon the land, 'tis said it shall sink. 2 Pere Williams 613. Also if a legacy be given to one, to be paid out of such a fund, and the same fails; it has been resolved, that it ought to be paid out of the personal estate, and the failing of the manner appointed for payment shall not defeat the legacy. 1 Pere Williams 779. One by will disposes of his estate in legacies, and afterwards by parol, or word of mouth, gives a bill for a certain sum, to be delivered over to another, if he the testator should die of that sickness; this is adjudged good, but it being in the nature of a legacy, may be deemed fraudulent against creditors. Ibid. 405, 406.

Of payment of legacies, &c.

If a legacy when due be paid to the father of an infant, it is no good payment; and the executor may be obliged in equity to pay it over again: And where any legacy is bequeathed to a feme covert, paying it to her alone, is not sufficient, without her husband. 1 Vern. 261. As an executor is not obliged to pay a legacy, without security given him by the legatee to refund, if there are debts, because the legacy is not due till the debts are paid, and a man must be just before he is charitable; so in some cases, the executor may be compelled to give security to the legatee for the payment of his legacy; as where a testator bequeathed 1000*l.* to a person, to be paid at the age of twenty-one, and made an executor, and died; afterwards the legatee exhibited a bill in equity against the executor, setting forth that he had wasted the estate, and praying that he might give security to pay the legacy when it should become due; and it was ordered accordingly. 1 Ch. Rep. 136, 237.

Of interest on legacies.

If a legacy is devised, and no certain time of payment, and the legatee is an infant, he shall have interest for the legacy from the expiration of one year after the testator's death; for so long the executor shall have, that he may see whether there are any debts, and no laches shall be imputed to the infant: But if the legatee be of full age, he shall have no interest but from the time of the demand of his legacy. Where a legacy is payable at a day certain, it must be paid with interest from that day. 1 Salk. 413. 2 Nels. Abr. 1114. A person gives a legacy charged upon land, which yields rents and profits, and there is no day of payment mentioned, the legacy shall carry interest from the testator's death, because the land yields profit from that time: Tho' were it charged on the personal estate, and the will mentions no time for paying it, there the legacy bears interest only from the end of a year, after the death of the testator; which is said to be the settled difference. 2 Pere Williams 26. It has been decreed in equity, that altho' a legacy be devised to be paid at a certain time, it carries interest only from such time as it is demanded: 'Tis otherwise of a debt; and in such case non-payment at the day, has been held no breach, without demand and refusal. Preced. Chanc. 161. See Abr. Cas. Eq. 286. One having a legacy given him, payable within a year, knew nothing of it till a great while afterwards, when the executor published it in the Gazette; here Chancery would allow no interest, but the bare legacy. Preced. Chanc. 11. The assent or agreement of the executor is first to be obtained before any legacy can be taken; until then the legatee may not meddle with the legacy, because the executor is to pay debts before legacies, &c. Wood's Inst. 329. And this is the reason why no property can be transferred to the legatee, without the executor's assent: If the executor refuses to assent to a legacy, he may be obliged to it by a court of equity, or the spiritual court. March, Rep. 19.

Of suing for legacies.

Legacies being gratuities, and no duties, action will not lie at Common law for the recovery of a legacy; but remedy is to be had in the Chancery or spiritual court. Allen 38. The cognizance of a legacy properly belongs to the spiritual courts, for such bequests were not good by the Common law; but this is to be understood, where a legacy is devised generally: If 'tis payable out of the land, or out of the profits of the land, an action of the case lies at Common law; but the usual remedy is in Chancery. Sid. 44. 3 Salk. 223. By Holt Ch. Just. A legatee may maintain an action of debt at Common law against the owner of land, out of which the legacy is to be paid; and since the statute of wills gives him a right, by consequence he shall have an action at law to recover it. 2 Salk. 415. and sometimes the Common law takes notice of a legacy, not directly, but in a collateral way; as where the executor promised to pay the money, if the legatee would forbear to sue for the legacy, this was adjudged a good consideration to ground an action; but that it would not lie for a legacy in specie, which would be to devert the spiritual court of what properly belonged to their jurisdiction, by turning suits which might be brought there into actions on the case. Rayn. 23. If security is given by bond to pay a legacy, in such case an action at law is the proper remedy; by giving the bond, the legacy is as it were extinct, and becomes a debt at Common law, and the legatee can never afterwards sue for it in the spiritual court. Holt. 39. For the recovery of a debt or such like thing in action, given by way of legacy, it is best to make the legatee executor as to that debt, &c. or he must have a letter of attorney to sue in the executor's name. Wood's Inst. 330.

Of devises to creditors, and who capable of being legatees.

Where a testator gives his debtor a legacy greater than his debt, it shall be taken in satisfaction of it: Tho' where the legacy is less, it shall not be deemed as any part thereof; but as a legacy is a gift, sometimes the legatee has been decreed both. 1 Salk. 155. 2 Salk. 308. If a greater legacy is given by a codicil, to the same person that was legatee in the will, it shall not be a satisfaction, unless so expressed. 1 Pere Williams 414. The name of a legatee being very feebly spelt, it was referred to a master in Chancery, to examine who was the person intended. Ibid. 425. Some persons are incapable of taking by legacy, by several statutes; as the 13 H. 3. c. 6. relating to officers, lawyers, &c. not taking the oaths; and 5 Geo. 1. c. 27. concerning artificers going abroad, &c. A sum bequeathed out of a debt must be paid, tho' the debt is recovered by the testator; otherwise of a bequest of the debt itself. 2 Strange 824. One cannot sue in the spiritual court for a donatio mortis causa. 2 Strange 777. See Executor and Will. New Abr. 3 H. tit. Legacies. And Black. Com. 2 V. 5. s. 3. §. 98.

Legal Name. Is used for him who stands velut in curia, not outlawed, excommunicated, or infamous; and in this sense are the words quasi legatarius bonorum: Hence also legatus is taken for the condition of such a man. Leg. Ed. Cas. c. 16.

Legalis Moneta Angliæ, Lawful money of England, is gold or silver money coined here by the King's authority, &c. 1 Inst. 207. See Coin.

Legatary, (Legatarius) He or she to whom any thing is bequeathed; a legatee. Sir Henry Spelman says, it is sometimes used pro legato vel nuncio.

Legate, (Legatus) An ambassador or Pope's Nuncio. And there are two sorts of legates, a legate a latere, and legatus natus; the difference between whom is thus: legatus a latere was usually one of the Pope's family vested with the greatest authority in all ecclesiastical affairs over the whole kingdom where he was sent; and during the time of his legation, he might determine even those appeals which had been made from thence to Rome: Legatus natus had a more limited jurisdiction, but was exempted from the authority of the legate a latere; and he could exercise even his jurisdiction in his own province. The Popes of Rome had formerly in England the archbishops of Canterbury their legatos natus; and upon extraordinary occasions, sent over legatos a latere.

Legatee, Is the person to whom a legacy is bequeathed by a last will.

Legatary, (Mentioned in stat. 37 Eliz. cap. 16.) The same with legatary.

Legatum, In the ecclesiastick sense was a legacy given to the church or accustomed mortuary. Cowell.

Legem facere, To make law, or oath: Legem habere, to be capable of giving evidence upon oath; Minor non habet legem. Seldon's Notes on Hen. 3. 133.

Leggild, (Legergildum) See Lecherwite and Lairwite.

Legiosus, Litigious, and so subjected to a course of law. Cowell.

Legitimation, (Legitimatio) A making lawful or legitimate; and naturalization, &c. makes a foreigner a lawful subject of the state.

Leipa, A departure from service.—Si quis à Domino suo sine licentia discedat, ut leipa emendatur, & redire cogatur. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 43.

Leitwit, (Mulier adulteriorum. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 7.) Is used for a liberty, whereby a lord challengeth the penalty of one that lieth unlawfully with his bond-woman. Cowell.

Lemon juice. See Lime.

Lent, (From the Germ. Leutz. i. e. Ver, the spring fast) Is a time for fasting for forty days, next before Easter; mentioned in the stat. 2 Ed. 6. c. 19. And first commanded to be observed in England by Ercombert, seventh King of Kent, before the year 800. Baker's Chron. 7. No meat was formerly to be eaten in Lent, or on Wednesdays or other fish days, but by licence, under certain penalties. 27 Eliz. cap. 7. And butchers were not to kill flesh in the Lent, unless for victualling ships, &c. See Quadragesima.

Leip and Lacc, (Leppe & Lasse) Is a custom in the manor of Writtel in Com. Essex, that every cart which goes over Greenbury within that manor, (except it be the cart of a nobleman) shall pay 4 d. to the lord. This Greenbury is conceived to have been anciently a market-place; on which account this privilege was granted. Blount.

Lepta, A measure which contained the third part of two bushels: Whence we derive a feed-leap. Du Cange.

Leporarius, A greyhound for the hare. Concedo eis duos leporarios, &c. ad leporem capiendum in foresta nostra de Essexia. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. fol. 283.

Leporium, Is a place where hares are kept together. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. fol. 1035.

Leposo amobendo, An ancient writ that lies to remove a leper or lazer, who thrusts himself into the company of his neighbours in any parish, either in the church, or at other publick meetings, to their annoyance. Reg. Orig. 237. The writ lieth against those lepers that appear outwardly to be such, by sores on their bodies, smell, &c. and not against others: And if a man be a leper, and keep within his house, so as not to converse with his neighbours; he shall not be removed. New Nat. Br. 521.

Le Roy le Veut, Words by which the Royal Assent is signified by the clerk of the parliament to publick bills; and to a private bill the King's answer is, Soi fait comme il est desire.

Le Roy se Advisera, And by these words to a bill, presented to the King by his houses of parliament, are understood his denial of that bill. By this means the indecency of a positive refusal to give the Royal Assent to a bill passed by the Lords and Commons is avoided.

Leschewes, Trees fallen by chance, or windfalls. Broke's Abr. 341.

Lesla, A leash of greyhounds, now restrained to the number of three, but formerly more. Spelm.

Lespegeud, (Sax. Leſ-gegen) Baro minor. hominibus quos Angli Lespegeud nuncupant, Dani vero young men vocant, &c. Constitut. Canut. de Foresta, Art. 2.

Lesla, A legacy; and from this word also lease is derived. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. pag. 562.

Leslor and Lessee, The parties to a lease. See Lease.

Lestage Mentioned in some writers, is the same as lastage.

Lestagefre, Lestage-free, or exempt from the duty of paying ballast money. Cowell.

Letmes, or Letbes, Is a word used in Domesday, to signify pastures, and is still used in many places of England, and often inserted in deeds and conveyances. Cowell.

Letare Jerusalem, Was used for the customary oblation made on Midlent Sunday, when the proper hymn was Letare Jerusalem, &c. by the inhabitants within a diocese to the mother cathedral church; and these voluntary offerings on that day, were by degrees settled into an annual composition or pecuniary payment, charged on the parochial priest, who was presumed to receive them from the people of his congregation, and obliged to return them to the cathedral church; and this among other burdens was at length thrown on the oppressed vicars, as appears by the ordination of the vicarage of Erdele, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, Anno 1290, where it is provided, Qui quidem vicarius solvet synodalia, Letare Jerusalem, &c. From the ancient custom of processions at that time, began the practice which is still retained in many parts of England, of Mothering, or going to visit parents on Midlent Sunday. See Quadragesimalia.

Letters, Where it is felony to send letters without a name, or in a fictitious one. See stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. Extorting money, &c. by threatening letters, to be punished by fine and imprisonment, or by pillory, whipping, or transportation. 30 Geo. 2. cap. 24. See 4 Black. Com. 144.

Letter of Advice for electing of a Bishop. A letter from the King to the dean and chapter containing the name of the person whom he would have them elect. Black. Com. 1 V. 379.

Letter of Advice in Chancery. If a peer is a defendant in the court of Chancery, the Lord Chancellor sends a letter missive to him to request his appearance, together with a copy of the bill; if he neglects to appear, then he may be served with a subpoena; if he continues still in contempt a sequestration issues out immediately against his lands and goods, without any of the mesne process of attachments, &c. which are directed only against the person, therefore cannot affect a lord of parliament. The same process issues against a member of the house of commons, except that the Lord Chancellor doth not send him any letter missive. Black. Com. 3 V. 445.

Letters of Absolution, (Littera Absolutoria) Or absolatory letters, were such in former times, when an abbot released any of his brethren ab omni subjectione & obedientia, &c. And made them capable of entering into some other order of religion. Mon. Faverhamensi. pag. 7.

Letter of Attorney, (Littera Attornati) Is a writing, authorising an attorney to do any lawful act in the stead of another: As to give seisin of lands; receive debts, or sue a third person, &c. And letters of attorney are either general or special. West. Symb. par. 1. Stat. 7 R. 2. c. 13. The nature of this instrument is to give the attorney the full power and authority of the maker, to accomplish the act intended to be performed; And sometimes these writings are revocable, and sometimes not so: but when they are revocable, it is usually a bare authority only; only; and they are irrevocable when debts, &c. are assigned to another, in which case the word irrevocable is inserted.

In cases of letters of attorney the authority must be strictly pursued: If it be to deliver livery and seisin of lands between certain hours, and the attorney doth it before or after; or in a capital messuage, and he does it in another part of the land, &c. the act of the attorney to execute the estate shall be void. Plowd. 475. But notwithstanding the ancient opinions for pursuing authorities with great strictness and exactness, yet in case of livery and seisin they have been always favourably expounded of later times, unless where it hath appeared, that the authority was not pursued at all; as if a letter of attorney be made to three, two cannot execute it, because they are not the parties delegated, and they do not agree with the authority. 2 Mod. Rep. 79. Where the attorney does less than the authority mentions, it is void: It is said if he doth more, it may be good for so much as he had power to do. 1 Inst. 258. There were two attorneys made jointly and severally, to deliver seisin of lands, &c. and one of them delivered seisin of part of the land, and after another attorney being tenant thereof for years, gave livery of the other part of the land: This was held good, though made at several times. 1 And. 247. And if a man make a deed of feoffment of lands in divers counties, with such a letter of attorney, the livery must be at several times; otherwise it cannot be made. Ibid. See 1 Leon. 192, 260.

If a mayor and commonalty make a feoffment of lands, and execute a letter of attorney to deliver seisin; the livery and seisin, after the death of the mayor, will be good, by reason the corporation dieth not. 1 Inst. 52. In other cases, by the death of the party giving it, the power given by letter of attorney generally determines. A person made a letter of attorney to a creditor to receive all his wages and pay due from a ship, and afterwards died at sea; this authority was adjudged to be so determined, that all the rest of the creditors should have a share in his administration. Preced. Chanc. 125. 2 Vern. 391.

Letters Claus, (Litera Clausa) Close letters, opposed to letters patent; being commonly sealed up with the King's Signet or Privy Seal; whereas the letters patent are left open and sealed with the broad seal.

Letter of Credit, Is where a merchant or correspondent writes a letter to another, requesting him to credit the bearer with a certain sum of money. Merch. Dia.

Letters of Exchange, (Litera Cambii) Reg. Orig. 194. See Bills of Exchange.

Letter of Licence, Is an instrument or writing made by creditors to a man that hath failed in his trade, allowing him longer time for the payment of his debts, and protecting him from arrests in going about his affairs. These letters of licence give leave to the party to whom granted to resort freely to his creditors, or any others, and to compound debts, &c. And the creditors covenant, that if the debtor shall receive any molestation or hindrance from any of them, he shall be acquitted and discharged of his debt against such creditor, &c.

Letters of Marque, Are extraordinary reprisals for reparation to merchants taken and despoiled by strangers at sea, grantable by the secretaries of state, with the approbation of the King and Council; and usually in time of war, &c. Lex. Mercat. 173. If a letter of Marque wilfully and knowingly take a ship, and goods belonging to another nation, not of that state against whom the commission is awarded, but of some other in amity, this amounts to a downright piracy. Roll. Abr. 430. See Reprisal.

Letters Patent, (Litera Patentes) Sometimes called letters overs, are writings of the King sealed with the Great Seal of England, whereby a person is enabled to do or enjoy that which otherwise he could not; and so called, because they are open with the seal affixed, and ready to be shewn for confirmation of the authority thereby given. 19 H. 7. cap. 7. And we read of letters patent to make denizens, &c. 32 Hen. 6. c. 16. 19 Hen. 3. c. 18. Letters patent may be granted by common persons, but in such case they are properly called patentes; yet for distinction, the King's letters patent have been called letters patent royal. Anno 2 H. 6. c. 10. Letters patent conclude with testes me ipsi, &c. 2 Inst. 78. See Patents. And Black. Com. 2 V. 346.

Letters of safe conduct. See Safe conduct.

Lebant and Couchant, Is a law term for cattle that have been so long in the ground of another, that they have lain down and are risen again to feed; in ancient records levantes & Couchantes. When the cattle of a stranger are come into another man's ground, and have been there a good space of time, (supposed to be a day and a night) they are said to be levant and couchant. Terms de Ley. 2 Lill. Abr. 167. Beasts of a stranger on the lord's ground may be distrained for rent, though they have not been levant and couchant; but it is otherwise if the tenant of the land is in fault in not keeping up his mounds, by reason whereof the beasts escape upon the land. Wood's Inst. 190. See Districti. And Black. Com. 3 V. 9. 239.

Lebanum, (From the Lat. Levare, to make lighter) Is leavened bread.

Lebart foenum, To make hay, or properly to cast it into wind-rows, in order ad tassandum, to cock it up.

—Homines de Hedington venient cum furcis suis ad didum foenum levandum & tassandum. Paroch. Antiq. pag. 320. Hence una levatio foeni was one day's hay-making, a service paid the lord by inferior tenants. — Alicia quæ fuit uxor Richardi le Grey faciet unam sartulaturam & unam Wedbedripam, & levationem foeni. ch. p. 402.

Lebart facias. A writ directed to the sheriff for levying a sum of money upon a man's lands and tenements, goods and chattels, who has forfeited his recognizance. Reg. Orig. 298. This writ is given by the Common law, before the statute Westm. 2. cap. 18. gave the writ of elegit; and a levari facias commands the debt to be levied de exiitibus & profectibus terræ, &c. And cattle of a stranger on the land have been held issues of the land, which is debtor. 1 Salk. 395. On a judgment in an inferior court, and a levari facias, whereupon a warrant was made to levy the debt de terris & catallis, it was adjudged that the precept ought to be to levy the money de terris bonis & catallis, &c. 2 Lutw. 1410. A levari facias in debt lies against a parson, directed to the bishop, &c. to levy the money on his spiritual goods. 13 H. 4. 17. When a year and a day is past, after the day of payment by the recognizance, there should be anciently a writ of debt; but now a scire facias, &c. See Black. Com. 3 V. 417.

There is a levari facias damna disseisoribus, for the levying of damages, wherein the disseisor has formerly been condemned to the disseisee. Reg. Orig. 214. Also levari facias residuum debiti, to levy the remainder of a debt upon lands and tenements, or chattels of the debtor, where part has been satisfied before. Reg. Orig. 299. And a levari facias quando vicecomes returnavit quod non habuit emptores, commanding the sheriff to sell the goods of the debtor, which he has taken, and returned that he could not sell. Reg. Orig. 300.

Leuca, Is a measure of land, consisting of 1500 paces. Ingulphus tells us, 'tis 2000 paces, pag. 910, In the Monastic. 1 tom. p. 313. 'tis 480 perches.

Leucata, Is a space of ground, as much as a mile contains. De hysce, &c. continens unam leucatam in latitudine & dimidium in longitudine. Monast. 1 tom. p. 768 And so it seems to be used in a charter of William the Conqueror to Battle Abbey. Cowell.

Levellus, A level, even or upon the level. Cowell.

Levitical degree, The farthest between uncle and niece. See Black. Com. 1 V. 435. Gill. Rep. 158.

Levy, (Levare) Is used in the law for to collect, or exact; as to levy money, &c. And sometimes to erect, or cast up; as to levy a ditch, &c. And to levy a fine of land is the usual term: In ancient time, the word tere a fine, was made use of. 17 H. 6.

Levying Money without Consent of Parliament. No subject of England can be constrained to pay any aids or taxes, even for the defence of the realm or the support of government, but such as are imposed by his own consent.

sent, or that of his representatives in parliament. See the Statutes. 25 Ed. 1. c. 5 & 6. 34 Ed. 1. stat. 4. c. 1. 14 Ed. 3. stat. 2. c. 1. The petition of right, 3 Car. 1. 1 W. & M. stat. 2. c. 2.

Levying war against the King. This is high treason. It may be done by taking arms, not only to dethrone the King, but under pretence to reform religion, or the laws, or to remove evil counsellors, or other grievances whether real or pretended. Black. Com. 4 V. 81. cites 1 Hawth. P. C. 37. But Blackstone on the same subject in the very next page says,

"In cases of national oppression the nation has VERY JUSTLY RISEN as one man, to vindicate the ORIGINAL CONTRACT subsisting between the King and his people."

Lewdness. Is punishable by our law by fine, imprisonment, &c. And Mish. 15 Car. 2. a person was indicted for open lewdness in shewing his naked body in a balcony, and other misdemeanors, and was fined 2000 marks, imprisoned for a week, and bound to the good behaviour for three years. 1 Sid. 168. In times past when any man granted a lease of his house; it was usual to insert an express covenant, that the tenant should not entertain any lewd women, &c. See Bawdy-house. And Black. Com. 4 V. 64.

Lex. A law for the government of mankind in society. Litt. Dig. It is often taken for judicium Dei. 'Tis the same as lada amongst the Saxons, which is either a canonical or vulgar purgation. In Leg. H. 1. cap. 62. Ab adventu Domini usque ad octavas Epiphania non est tempus leges faciendi.

Lex amissa, or legem amittere, viz. One who is an infamous, perjured or outlawed person. In Bracton, lib. 4. cap. 19. par. 2. Non est ulterius dignus lege.

Lex apostata, or Legem apostatare. Is to do a thing contrary to law. 'Tis mentioned in Leg. H. 1. cap. 12. Qui legem apostatabit verum sua sit reus prima vice.

Lex Brehania, The Brehan or Irish law, overthrown by K. John.

Lex Byetolse, Was the law of the ancient Britains, or Marches of Wales. Lex Marchiarum.

Lex Derastina, Derastina est Lex quadam in Normannia constituta, per quam in simplicibus querelis insecutus factum, quod a parte adversa ei obijciatur, se non fecisse declarat. And it is the proof of a thing, which one denies to be done by him, where another affirms it; defeating the assertion of his adversary, and shewing it to be against reason or probability: This was used amongst the Old Romans, as well as the Normans. Grand Customar. c. 126.

Lex Judicialis, Is properly purgatio per judicium ferri; sometimes called judicium. Leg. H. 1.

Lex Sacramentalis, i. e. purgatio per sacramentum. Leg. H. 1. c. 9.

Lex Talionis, Is juris postivi; and the taliones among the Hebrews, were converted into pecuniary estimates, so that the price of an eye, &c. lost was allowed to the person injured. 1 Hall's Hist. P. C. 12. Black. Com. 4 V. 12.

Lex terra, The law and custom of the land, distinguished by this name from lege civili, as Mr. Selden tells us in Dissertationes ad Potham. cap. 9. par. 3.

Lex Wallensis, The British law, or law of Wales. Statut. Wall.

Lex or Leys, The French word for law. We also term pasture by a name frequent in several countries, leys, and so it is used in Domesday.

Leys, Lei, ley, Whether in the beginning or end of names of places, signify an open field, or large pastures. From the Saxon, lag, campus, pascuum; as Blechingley, &c. Cowell.

Lex-gager, (mentioned in stat. 1 Ga. 1. cap. 3.) Wager of law. See Wager of law.

Libel, (Libellus) Signifies literally a little book; but by use, it is the original declaration of any action in the Civil law. 1 Hen. 7. cap. 3. 2 Rd. 6. cap. 13. It signifieth also a scandalous report of any man spread abroad, or otherwise unlawfully published, and then called famosus libellus, an infamous libel.

And this is either
aut
sine scriptis.

In scriptis is when any writing is composed or published to another's disgrace, &c.

And sine scriptis, where the person is painted in a shameful manner, with a fool's coat, asses ears, &c. or a gallows, or other ignominious sign is fixed at his door. 3 Inst. 174.

Sentiments of the ancients.

Seneca calls defamatory libels contumeliosi libelli, and Bracton carmina famosa; contumelious libels, and infamous rhymes, which flow from malice; and the Romans would not permit their lives and fame to be subject to the injury and scandal of poets; for they made an ordinance, that whosoever should presume to compose any such verses, were to be punished with death. Treat. of Laws 75. But in a free state, like that of Great Britain such a law does not, cannot exist.—The moment our legislators should be corrupt enough, to give existence to such a law, that moment, liberty would be no more.

Definition of a libel, &c. and against whom libels are published.

'Tis observed in our law, that a libel is the greatest degree of scandal, and does not die like words which may be forgot, an action for which is confined to the person; but the cause of action for scandal in a libel survives. 5 Rep. 125. A libel in a strict sense is a malicious aspersions of another, expressed in printing or writing; and tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one that is alive, and to expose him to public hatred, ridicule, or contempt: But in a larger signification, it may be applied to any defamation whatsoever. Ibid. 121. All libels are made against private men, or magistrates, and public persons; and those against magistrates deserve the greatest punishment: If a libel be made against a private man, it may excite the person libelled, or his friends, to revenge and break the peace; and if against a magistrate, it is not only a breach of the peace, but a scandal to government, and stirs up sedition. Ibid. It hath been held, that writing a seditious libel is not a breach of the peace; and that a member of parliament writing such a libel, is intitled to his privilege from being arrested for the same. Wilf. par. 2. 159. Tho' a private person or magistrate be dead at the time of making the libel, yet it is punishable; as it tends to a breach of the peace. Hob. 215. not reported.

The charge being true, not (in law) a justification of a libel.

With regard to this consideration, it is far from being a justification of a libel, that the contents thereof are true, or that the person upon whom made had a bad reputation; since the greater appearance there is of truth in any malicious invective, so much the more provoking it is. 5 Rep. 125. Moor 627. It is not material whether the matter be true or false, if the prosecution be by information or indictment; but in action on the case, one may justify that the matter is true. 5 Rep. 125. Hob. 253. Such is the law. How far it is consonant to reason, we will not attempt to say.—The end proposed, is, to avoid disturbance, &c. and preserve the peace.

What the law requires from a subject, knowing of a libel, &c.

When any man finds a libel, if it be against a private person, he ought to burn it, or deliver it to a magistrate; and where it concerns a magistrate, he should deliver it presently to a magistrate. Ibid. If a libel be found in a house, the master cannot be punished for framing, printing and publishing it; but it is said he may be indicted for for having it, and not delivering it to a magistrate. 1 Vent. 31.

Of punishment for printing and publishing, &c. of libels.

If a printer print a libel against a private person, he may be indicted and punished for it; and so may he who prints a libel against a magistrate, and much more one who does it against the King and state: Nor can a person in such a case excuse himself by saying they were dying speeches, or the words of dying men; for a man may at his death justify his villainy; and he who publishes it is punishable: And it is no excuse for the printing or publishing a libel, to say that he did it in the way of trade, or to maintain his family. State Trials, 1 Vol. 982, 986. Also if booksellers, &c. publish or sell libels, though they know not the contents of them, they are punishable. It has been resolved, that where persons write, print, or sell, any pamphlets, scandalizing the publick, or any private persons, such libellous books may be seized, and the persons punished by law; and all persons exposing any books to sale, reflecting on the government, may be punished: Also writers of news, (though not scandalous, seditious, or reflecting on the government, if they write false news;) are indictable. State Trials, 2 Vol. 477. One was indicted for a libel in scandalizing the King's vittnesses, and reflecting on the justice of the nation, and had judgment of the pillory and fine. Ibid. 3 Vol. 50. A person for libelling the Lord Chancellor Bacon, affirming that he had done injustice, and other scandalous matter, was sentenced to pay 1000*l.* fine, to ride on a horse with his face to the tail from the Fleet to Westminster, with his fault written on his head, to acknowledge his offence in all the courts at Westminster, stand in the pillory, and that one of his ears should be cut off at Westminster, and the other in Cheapside, and to suffer imprisonment during life. Poph. 135. One who exhibited a libel against a Lord Chief Justice, directed to the King, calling the Chief Justice, traitor, perjured judge, &c. had judgment to stand in the pillory, was fined 1000 marks, and bound to good behaviour during life. Cro. Car. 125.

Of petitions to the throne, parliament, &c.

The petition of the Seven Bishops in the reign of King James 2. against the King's declaration, setting forth that it was founded on a dispensing power, which had been declared illegal in parliament, &c. was called a seditious libel against the King; and they refusing to give recognisances to appear in B. R. were committed to the Tower; but being after tried at bar, were acquitted: 3 Mod. 212. The printing of a petition to a committee of parliament, (which would be a libel against the party complained of, were it made for any other purpose) and delivering copies thereof to the members of the committee, is not the publication of a libel, being justified by the order and course of proceedings in parliament: 1 Hawk. P. C. 196.

Of libellous matter in legal proceedings.

Scandalous matter in legal proceedings by bill, petition, &c. in a court of justice amounts not to a libel, if the court hath jurisdiction of the cause. Dyer 285. 4 Rep. 14. But he who delivers a paper full of reflections on any person, in nature of a petition to a committee; to any other persons except the members of parliament, who have to do with it, may be punished as the publisher of a libel. 1 Hawk. 196. And by the better opinion, a person cannot justify the printing any papers which import a crime in another, to instruct counsel, &c. but it will be a libel. Sid. 414.

Of sending letters, &c. to the parties charged with any scandalous matter.

Sending an abusive letter to one, without publishing it to others, is no libel; but if it be sent to a third person, or any ways dispersed, it is a publication of the libel: And tho' sending a scandalous letter to the party himself is not a libel, nor can any action be brought upon it, because it is no publication; yet it is an high offence. 12 Rep. 34. 1 Lev. 139. 2 Brownl. 157. It is an offence against the King's peace, punishable by indictment; and if copies of it are afterwards dispersed, it aggravates the crime, or rather makes it a new crime, for which the party may have an action. Poph. 35. Hob. 62. Writing a letter to a man, and abusing him for his publick charities, &c. is a libellous act, punishable by indictment. Hob. 215.

Of private libels and obscenity:

A private libel, for a private matter, as a letter scandalizing a person courting a woman, is indictable, and fineable to the King. Sid. 270. No writing is esteemed a libel, unless it reflect upon some particular person; and a writing full of obscene ribaldry, is not punishable by any prosecution at Common law; but the author may be bound to the good behaviour, as a person of evil fame. 1 Hawk. 195.

What is, and what is not a libel.

Where a writing inveighs against mankind in general, or against a particular order of men, this is no libel; it must descend to particulars and individuals, to make it a libel. Trin. 11 W. 3. B. R. But a general reflection on the government is a libel, tho' no particular person is reflected on: And the writing against a known law is held to be criminal. State Trials, 4 V. 672. 903. According to Holt Ch. J. scandalous matter is not necessary to make a libel; it is enough if the defendant induces an ill opinion to be had of the plaintiff, &c. And if a man speak scandalous words, unless they are put in writing, he is not guilty of a libel; for the nature of a libel consisteth in putting the infamous matter into writing. 2 Salk. 417. 3 Salk. 226. A defamatory writing, expressing only one or two letters of a man's name, if it be in such a manner, that from what goes before and follows after, it must be understood by the natural construction of the whole, to signify and point at such a particular person, is as properly a libel as if the whole name were expressed at large. Trin. 12 Ann. 1 Hawk. 194.

Of the wording of a libel.

Printing or writing may be libellous, tho' the scandal is not directly charged, but obliquely and ironically; and where a writing pretends to recommend to one the characters of several great men for his imitation, instead of taking notice of what they are generally famous for, pitches on such qualities only which their enemies charge them with the want of; as by proposing such a one to be imitated for his learning, who is known to be a good good soldier, but an illiterate; &c. this will amount to a libel. Ibid.

Of the author, contriver and publisher.

In the making of libels, if one man dictates, and another writes a libel, both are guilty; for the writing after another shows his approbation of what is contained in the libel; and the first reducing a libel into writing may be said to be the making it, but not the composing: if one repeats, another writes; and a third approves what is written, they are all makers of the libel; because all persons who concur to an unlawful act are guilty. 5 Mod. 167. The making a libel is the genus; and composing and contriving is one species; writing, a second species; and procuring to be written, a third; and one may be found guilty of writing only, &c. 2 Salk. 419, &c. But observe; a mere writing, without a publication, was not in question in Salsfield. 'Tis conceived that for the mere writing of a libel, not published, no action can be maintained; nor prosecution legally supported.

If one writes a copy of a libel, and does not deliver it to others, the writing is no publication: but it has been adjudged, that the copying a libel, without authority, is writing a libel, and he that thus writes it, is a contriver; and

and that he who hath a written copy of a known libel, if it is found upon him, this shall be evidence of the publication; but if such libel be not publicly known, then the bare having a copy is not a publication. 2 Salk. 417. 2 Nels. Ab. 1122. Writing a copy of a libel is writing of a libel, as it has the same pernicious consequence; and if the law were otherwise, men might write copies, and print them with impunity. 2 Salk. 419. And when a libel appears under a man's own hand-writing, and no author is known, he is taken in the manner, and it turns the proof upon him; and if he cannot produce the composer, it is hard to find that he is not the very man. Ibid. If one reads a libel, or hears it read, and laughs at it, it is not a publishing; for before he reads or hears it read, he cannot know it to be a libel: tho' if he afterwards reads or repeats it, or any part thereof, in the hearing of others, it is a publication of it: yet if part of it be repeated in mirth without any malicious purpose of defamation, it is said to be no offence. 9 Rep. 59. Moor 862. Every one convicted of publishing a libel ought to be esteemed the contriver or procurer: the procurer and writer of a libel have been held to be both contrivers; also the procuring another to publish it, and the publisher, are both publishers: and the contriver, procurer, and publisher of a libel, are punishable by fine, imprisonment, pillory, or other corporal punishment, at the discretion of the court, according to the heinousness of the crime, &c. Moor 627. 5 Rep. 125. 3 Inst. 174. 3 Cro. 17.

Of setting forth a libel in law proceedings, according to the tenor.

In informations and law proceedings there are two ways of describing a libel, by the sense, and by the words; the first is cujus tenor sequitur, and the second quæ sequitur in hæc Anglicana verba, &c. in which the description is by particular words, and whereof every word is a mark; so that if there is any variance, it is fatal; in the other description by the sense, it is not material to be very exact in the words, because the matter is described by the sense of them. 2 Salk. 660. One great intention of the law in prohibiting libels against persons, is to restrain men from endeavouring to make themselves their own judges of complaints, and to oblige them to refer the decision thereof to the law, &c. And 'tis of great consequence to the state, for preserving peace, order, and good government.—Yet in a free state, such as this is, by the principles of its constitution, 'tis perhaps impossible to draw the line with precision. The liberty of the press is of the utmost importance; yet, though not restricted by statute, it should be observed that the courts of law are always open to punish any abuse of that invaluable privilege. The declaration for a libel must lay it to be of and concerning the plaintiff, otherwise there can be no judgment. 2 Strange 934. Books against Christianity, and obscene books, are punishable as libels. 2 Strange 788, 834.

For further learning on this subject, vide New Abr. 3 V. tit. Libel, and Black. Com. 3 V. 125. 4 V. 150.

Libel, in the Spiritual court. If upon a libel for any ecclesiastical matter, the defendant make a surmise in B. R. to have a prohibition, and such surmise be insufficient, the other party may shew it to the court, and the judges will discharge it. 1 Leon. 10, 128. The libel used in ecclesiastical proceedings, consists of three parts. 1. The major proposition, which shews a just cause of the petition. 2. The narration, or minor proposition. 3. The conclusion, or conclusive petition, which conjoins both propositions, &c. and the form of it is as follows: In the name of God, Amen, Before you the Worshipful T. F. Doctor of Laws, Principal Official of the Consistory Court of York, &c. The party C. D. against A. B. alledgeth, complaineth, and propoundeth, &c. Imprimis, he doth propound, that the said C. D. was and is a man very honest, just and upright, of good fame, life and conversation, aspersed or defamed with no crime, except what is afterwards mentioned; and is commonly reputed and esteemed as such, &c. Item, That notwithstanding the premises, the said A. B. out of a malign spirit, in the month of, &c. in this present year 1771, within the parish of, &c. maliciously, and with an intent of defaming and injuring the said C. D. hath defamed and injured him, and said some reproachful and defamatory words of and against him the said C. D. and especially these words following, viz. That, &c. (here set forth the words) and the party doth propound and article, as to such time and manner of speaking the words, &c. Wherefore, proof being made in and upon the premises, the party C. D. doth request and petition that the said A. B. for such his rashness, may be corrected and punished; and also that he may be condemned in charges, made in this cause on the behalf of the said C. D. &c. (or to disown the said defamatory words, &c.) or otherwise that right and justice may be administered, &c. Black. Com. 3 V. 100.

Libera, A livery or delivery of so much grass or corn to a customary tenant, who cuts down or prepares the said grass or corn, and receives some part or small portion of it as a reward or gratuity. Cowell.

Libera Batella, Signifies a free boat.—Per liberam batellam, hoc est, habere unam Cymbam ad Piscand. subter Pontem Cestrie, &c. & ibidem cum omni genere retium. Plac. in Itin. apud Cestriam, 14 H. 7.

Libera Chæsa habenda, Is a judicial writ granted to a person for a free chase belonging to his manor; after proof made by inquiry of a jury, that the same of right belongs to him. Reg. Orig. 36.

Liberam Legum. On trial by battel, if either champion proves recræant, i. e. yields and pronounces the word cræven, he is condemned as a recræant, amittere liberam legem, that is, to become infamous and not be accounted liber et legalis homo, being supposed by the event to be proved forsworn, and therefore never to be put upon a jury, or admitted as a witness in any cause. Black. Com. 3 V. 340, 341.

Libera Piscaria, A free fishery, which being granted to one, he hath a property in the fish, &c. 2 Salk. 637. See Fishing.

Liber Taurus, A free bull. Comptum per jur. quod Will. de H. fuit seistus de libero tauro habendo in, &c. Ideo consideratum est, quod prædictus Will. recuperet damna sua quæ taxantur per jur. ad ius. pro imparcatione ejusdem tauri, &c. Norf. 16 Ed. 1.

Libera wara. See Wara.

Liberate, Is a writ that lies for the payment of a yearly pension or sum of money granted under the Great Seal, and directed to the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer, &c. for that purpose. In another sense it is a writ to the sheriff of a county, for the delivery of possession of lands and goods extended, or taken upon the forfeiture of a recognizance. Also a writ issuing out of the Chancery directed to a gaoler for delivery of a prisoner that hath put in bail for his appearance. F. N. B. 132. 4 Inst. 116. This writ is most commonly used for delivery of goods, &c. on an extent; and by the extent the conusee of a recognizance hath not any absolute interest in the goods, until the liberate. 2 Lill. 169. It has been adjudged, that where an extent is upon a statute merchant, there needs no liberate, for the sheriff may deliver all in execution without it; but where an extent is upon a statute staple, or a recognizance, there must be a return made of such an extent, and then a liberate before there can be a delivery in execution. 3 Salk. 159. See Extent.

Liberatio, Is taken for money, meat, drink, clothes, &c. yearly given and delivered by the lord to his domestick servants. Blount.

Libertas Ecclesiastica. This is a frequent phrase in our old writers, to signify church liberty, or ecclesiastical immunities: the right of investiture extorted from our Kings by force of papal power, was at first the only thing challenged by the clergy, as their libertas ecclesiastica: but by degrees, under weak princes and prevailing factions, under the title of church liberty, they contended for a freedom of their persons and possessions from all secular power and jurisdiction, as appears by the canons and decrees of the council held by Boniface, Archbishop of Canterbury, at Merton, A. D. 1258. and at London, A. D. 1260, &c. Cowell. See Lord Lysle's History of Hen. II. and Robertson's History of Emp. C. V.

Liberate,

Libertate probanda, Is an antient writ that lay for such as being demanded for villeins offered to prove themselves free; directed to the sheriff that he should take security of them for the proving of their freedom before the justices of assize, and that in the mean time they should be unmolested. F. N. B. 77. Villenage, and the appendixes thereof, viz. writs de nativo habendo, libertate probanda, &c. were of old great titles in the books of law, but are now antiquated.

Libertatibus allocandis, A writ lying for a citizen or burgher, impleaded contrary to his liberty, to have his privilege allowed. Reg. Orig. 262. And if any claim a special liberty to be impleaded within a city or borough, and not elsewhere, there may be a special writ de libertatibus allocandis, to permit the burghesses to use their liberties, &c. These writs are of several forms, and may be used by a corporation, or by any single person, as the case shall happen. New Nat. Br. 509, 510. The Barons of the Exchequer, &c. may sue forth such writs, if they are delayed to have their liberties allowed them. Ibid.

Libertatibus exigendis in Itinere, An antient writ whereby the King commands the Justices in Eyre to admit of an attorney for the defence of another man's liberty. Reg. Orig. 19.

Liberties or franchises. These are synonymous terms, and their definition is, a royal privilege, or branch of the King's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a subject. The kinds of them are various, and almost infinite. See Black. Com. 2 V. 37, &c.

Liberty, (libertas) Is a privilege held by grant or prescription, by which men enjoy some benefit beyond the ordinary subject. Bract. But in a more general signification, it is said to be a power to do as one thinks fit; unless restrained by the law of the land: and it is well observed, that human nature is ever an advocate for this liberty; it being the gift of God to man in his creation; therefore every thing is desirous of it, as a sort of restitution to its primitive state. Fortescue 96. It is upon that account the laws of England in all cases favour liberty, and which is counted very precious, not only in respect of the profit which every one obtains by his liberty, but also in respect of the publick. 2 Lill. Abr. 169. According to Mansfield. Liv. 26. c. 20. Liberty consists principally in not being compelled to do any thing, which the law does not require, i. e. because we are governed by civil laws, and therefore we are free, living under those laws. See infra, at the end of this head.

The people of this kingdom are to enjoy their antient liberties, without impeachment, by Magna Charta. No freeman shall be imprisoned or condemned without trial by his peers, or the law. Mag. Chart. c. 19. Likewise no person is to be arrested, &c. without process at law: and matters which concern liberty are to be speedily determined, &c.

Magna Charta, 9 Hen. 3. cap. 29. No freeman shall be taken or imprisoned, or disseised of his freehold, or of his liberties or free customs, or be outlawed, banished or otherwise destroyed; nor shall the King pass upon him, but by the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. The King shall sell to none, or deny or delay to none, right or justice. See 25 Ed. 3. §. 5. cap. 4. and 42 Ed. 3. cap. 3.

Stat. Confirm. Chart. 25 Ed. 1. cap. 2. If any judgment be given contrary to the great charters, it shall be undone and holden for nought.

Stat. 2 Ed. 3. cap. 8. It shall not be commanded by the Great Seal or the Little Seal, to disturb or delay common right; and the such commandments come, the justices shall not cease to do right.

Stat. 5 Ed. 3. cap. 9. No man shall be attached by any accusation, nor forejudged of life or limb, nor shall his lands or goods be seized into the King's hands against the great charter and the law of the land.

Stat. 25 Ed. 3. §. 5. cap. 4. None shall be taken by petition or suggestion made to the King or his council, unless it be by indictment of lawful people of the neighbourhood, or by process made by writ original at the Common law. And none shall be put out of his franchises or freehold, unless he be duly brought to answer, and forejudged by course of law; and if any thing be done to the contrary, it shall be redressed and holden for none.

Stat. 42 Ed. 3. cap. 3. No man shall be put to answer without presentment before justices, or matter of record of due process; or writ original, according to the antient law of the land. And if any thing be done to the contrary, it shall be void in law, and held for error.

Vide the Petition of Right, 3 Car. 1. and see 16 Car. 1. c. 10. for the dissolution of the Star-Chamber.

The following we have stated pretty fully, as it is an act of great consequence to the subjects of this free state.

Stat. 1 Will. & Mar. §. 2. cap. 2. §. 1. Whereas the Lords spiritual and temporal and commons assembled at Westminster, representing all the estates of the people of this realm, did upon the 13th of February 1688. present unto their Majesties, then Prince and Princess of Orange, a declaration, containing that,

The said Lords spiritual and temporal and commons, being assembled in a full and free representative of this nation; for the vindicating their antient rights and liberties, declare,

That the pretended power of suspending of laws, or the execution of laws; by regal authority, without consent of parliament, is illegal;

That the pretended power of dispensing with laws, or the execution of laws; by regal authority, as it hath been assumed and exercised of late; is illegal;

That the commission for erecting the late court of commissioners for ecclesiastical causes, and all other commissions and courts of like nature, are illegal and pernicious;

That levying money for or to the use of the crown, by pretence of prerogative, without grant of parliament, for longer time, or in other manner than the same is or shall be granted; is illegal;

That it is the right of the subjects to petition the King, and all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal;

That the raising or keeping a standing army within the kingdom in time of peace, unless it be with consent of parliament, is against law;

That the subjects which are protestants may have arms for their defence suitable to their conditions, and as allowed by law;

That election of members of parliament ought to be free;

That the freedom of speech, and debates or proceedings in parliament, ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of parliament;

That excessive bail ought not to be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted;

That jurors ought to be duly impanelled and returned, and jurors which pass upon men in trials for high treason ought to be freeholders;

That all grants and promises of fines and forfeitures of particular persons before conviction, are illegal and void;

And for redress of all grievances, and for the amending, strengthening and preserving of the laws, parliaments ought to be held frequently;

And they do claim, demand, and insist upon all and singular the premises, as their undoubted rights and liberties; and that no declarations, judgments, doings, or proceedings, to the prejudice of the people in any of the said premises, ought in any wise to be drawn hereafter into consequence or example;

Stat. 6. All and singular the rights and liberties asserted and claimed in the said declaration are the true, antient and indubitable rights and liberties of the people of this kingdom, and so shall be esteemed, allowed, adjudged, and taken to be; and all the particulars aforesaid shall be firmly holden as they are expressed in the said declaration; and all officers shall serve their Majesties according to the same in all times to come.

Stat. 12. No dispensation by non obstante of any statute shall be allowed, except a dispensation be allowed of in such statute; and except in such cases as shall be specially provided for during this session of parliament.

Stat. 13. No charter granted before the 23d of October 1689. shall be invalidated by this act, but shall remain of the same force as if this act had never been made.

Vide the Stat. 12 & 13 Will. 3. cap. 2. whereby, amongst other things, it is enacted, That no person who has an office or place of profit under the King, or receives a pension from the crown, shall be capable of serving as a member of the house of commons.

But the former part of this clause has been altered by a subsequent law, the acceptance of an office, &c. by a member, only vacating his seat, and he may be re-elected, if the electors think proper. And this may be considered as a reasonable law, otherwise the crown might be deprived of the service of some of the most able men in the state. If an ill use is, or ever should be made of this, we can only say 'tis impossible for human laws to be perfect, and guard against every evil.

According to Montesquieu Liv. 11. c. 3. "Liberty is a right to do whatever the laws permit." If a citizen could do what they forbid, he would no longer be possessed of liberty, because all his fellow citizens would have the same power. See ante, at the beginning of this head. An Englishman may add to the preceding idea his right of legislation. See Black. Com. 1 V. 6, 125.

Liberty to hold Pleas, Signifies to have a court of one's own; and to hold it before a Mayor, Bailiff, &c. See Franchise.

Liblacum, The manner of bewitching any person; also a barbarous sacrifice. Leg. Athelstan. 6.

Librae arsa penulatae & ad numerum: A phrase which often occurs in the Domesday-Register, and some other memorials of that and the next age,—as Ailesbury in Buckinghamshire, the King's manor.—In totis valentibus reddit lvi libr. arsas & pensatas, & de thelonio x libr. ad numerum, i. e. in the whole value it pays fifty-six pounds burnt and weighed; and for toll ten pounds by tale. For they sometimes took their money ad numerum by tale in the current coin upon content: but sometimes they rejected the common coin by tale, and would melt it down to take it by weight when purified from the dross and too great alloy; for which purpose they had in those times always a fire ready in the Exchequer to burn the money, and then weigh it. Cowell.

Libra pensa, A pound of money in weight; for it was usual in former days, not only to tell the money, but to weigh it; for several cities, bishops and noblemen had their mints, and coined money, and often very bad, and therefore though the pound consisted of 20s. they weighed it. Thus in Domesday we read, Reddit nunc 30 libras arsas & pensatas. Gale's Hist. of Brit. vol. 761.

Library, Where a library is erected in any parish, it shall be preserved for the uses directed by the founder: and incumbents and ministers of parishes, &c. are to give security therefore, and make catalogues of the books, &c. None of the books shall be alienable, without consent of the bishop, and then only where there is a duplicate of such books: if any book shall be taken away and detained, a justice's warrant may be issued to search for and restore the same: also action of trover may be brought in the name of the proper ordinary, &c. And bishops have power to make rules and orders concerning libraries, appoint persons to view their condition, and inquire of the state of them in their visitations. Statute 7 Ann. cap. 14.

Cotton library settled in the family for the use of the publick, 12 & 13 Will. 3. cap. 5. Vested in the crown; 5 Ann. cap. 30. Establishment of the British Museum, 26 Geo. 2. c. 22. 27 Geo. 2. c. 16. f. 3.

Librata terrae, Contains four oxgangs, and every oxgang 13 acres. Skene, verb. Bonata terrae, with us, it is so much land as is yearly worth 20s. for in Henry the Third's time, he that had quinde im libras terrae; was to receive the order of knighthood. See Fardingdale. Some are of opinion, that as money is divided into pounds, shillings, pence, half-pence and farthings, the same degrees are to be observed in the division of lands; and therefore as quadrans signifies a farthing, so quadrantata is the fourth part of an acre, oblata is half; and de- maritata is a whole acre, solidata is twelve acres, and librata is twenty times twelve acres, i. e. two hundred and forty. Spelman is of another opinion, who compares an acre to a mark in money; and as in one there are one hundred and sixty pence, so in the other there are one hundred and sixty perches, which they divide into balvos and quarters: so that an acre contains three hundred and sixty denarios; but some say, that librata terrae is so much ground as is worth yearly 20s. of current money. Cowell.

Licence, (licentia) Is a power or authority given to a man to do some lawful act: and is a personal liberty to the party to whom given, which cannot be transferred over; but it may be made to a man, or his assigns, &c. 12 H. 7. 25. There may be a parol licence, as well as by deed in writing; but if it be not for a certain time, it passes no interest. 2 Nels. Abr. 1123. And if there be no time certain in the licence; as if a man license another to dig clay, &c. in his land, but doth not say for how long, the licence may be countermanded; though if it be until such a time, he cannot. Poph. 151. If a lessor licences his lessee (who is restrained by covenant from aliening without licence) to alien, and such lessor dies before he aliens; this is no countermand of the licence: so it is if the lessor grants over his estate. Cre. Jac. 133. But where a lord of a manor for life granteth a licence to a copyhold tenant to alien, and dieth; the licence is destroyed, and the power of alienation ceaseth. 1 Inst. 52. Copyhold tenants leasing their copyhold for a longer time than one year, are to have a licence for it; or they incur a forfeiture of their estates. 1 Inst. 63. If any licence is given to a person, and he abuses it, he shall be adjudged a trespasser ab initio. 8 Rep. 146. A grants to B. a way over his ground, or licence to go through it to church, by this none but B. himself may go in it, but if one give me licence to go over his land with my plough, or to cut down a tree therein, and take it away: by this I may take what help is needful to do the same. So if it be to hunt and kill and carry away deer; not if it be to hunt and kill only. 12 H. 7. 25. 13 H. 7. 8 Rep. 146. By licence a man may practise physick and surgery in London; and do divers other things, by statute 3 H. 8. c. 7, &c. Vide 15 Vin. Abr. tit. Licence.

Licence to alien in Mortmain. Alienations in mortmain to ecclesiastical persons, &c. are restrained by several statutes; but the King may grant licences to any person or bodies politick, &c. to alien or hold lands in mortmain. 27 Ed. 1. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 37. See Mortmain.

Licence to arise, (licentia surgendi) Is a liberty or space of time given by the court to a tenant to arise out of his bed, who is effoined de malo lecti, in a real action: and it is also the writ thereupon. Bracton. And the law in this case is, that the tenant may not arise or go out of his chamber, until he hath been viewed by knights thereto appointed, and hath a day assigned him to appear; the reason whereof is, that it may be known, whether he caused himself to be effoined deceitfully or not; and if the demandant can prove that he was seen abroad before the view or licence of the court, he shall be taken to be deceitfully effoined, and to have made default. Bracton, lib. 5. Fluta, lib. 6. cap. 10.

Licence to found a Church, Granted by the King. See Church.

Licence to go to Election of bishops is by Conge d'Esire directed to the dean and chapter to elect the person named by the King, &c. Reg. Writs 294. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 20.

Licence of the King to go beyond sea may be revoked before the time expires, because it concerns the publick good. Jenk. Cent. See Ne exeat Regnum.

Licence of Marriage. Bishops have power to grant licences for the marrying of persons; and persons marrying any person without publishing the banns of matrimony, or without licence, incur a forfeiture of 100 l. &c. by statute 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 35. See Marriage.

Licence to erect a Park, Warren, &c. See Park and Warren.

Licentia concordandi, Is that licence for which the King's Silver is paid on passing a fine, mentioned in the statute 12 Car. 2. c. 12.

Licentia

Licentia surgendi, Is the writ whereby the tenant enfeigned de malo lecti, obtaineth liberty to rise. See Licence to arise.

Licentia Transfretandi, Is a writ or warrant directed to the keeper of the port of Devon, or other sea-port, commanding them to let such persons pass over sea, who have obtained the King's licence thereunto. Reg. Orig. 193.

Litibod Laltu, Is a proverbial speech, intending as much as to hang a man first, and judge him afterwards.

Liege, (Ligius) Is used for Liege Lord, and sometimes for Liege Man: Liege Lord is he that acknowledgeth no superior; and liege man is he which oweth allegiance to his liege lord. 34 & 35 H. 8. The King's subjects are called liege people, because they owe and are bound to pay allegiance to him. Stat. 8 H. 6. c. 10. 14 H. 8. c. 21. But in ancient times, private persons, as lords of manors, &c. had their lieges. Shene saith, that this word is derived from the Ital. Liga, a bond or league; others derive it from Litis, which is a man wholly at the command of the Lord. Blount.

Lieges and Liege-people, (Ligati) The King's subjects, anciently so called, because they owe and are bound to pay allegiance to him. Stat. 8 Hen. 6. cap. 10. 14 Hen. 8. cap. 2. and divers other statutes. Cowell.

Lien, (Fr.) Is a word used in the law, of two significations: personal lien, such as a bond, covenant or contract; and real lien, a judgment, statute, recognizance, which oblige and affect the land. Termin de Ley.

Lieu, Instead or in place of another thing. And when one thing doth come in the place of another, it shall be of the same nature as that was; as in case of an exchange, &c. 2 Shep. Abr. 359.

Lieu conus, In law proceedings, signifies a castle, manor, or other notorious place, well known and generally taken notice of by those that dwell about it. 2 Lill. Abr. 641. A revoir faciat, for a jury to appear, may be from a lieu conus: And a fine or recovery of lands in a lieu conus, is good; but it is said in a fin. fac. to have execution of such fine, the vill or parish must be named. 2 Cro. 574. 2 Mod. Rep. 48, 49.

Lieutenant, (locum tenens) Is the King's deputy, or he that exercises the King's or any other's place, and represents his person; as the Lieutenant of Ireland. Stat. 4 H. 4. c. 6. and 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 2. The Lieutenant of the Ordnance, 39 Eliz. cap. 7. And the Lieutenant of the Tower, an officer under the constable, &c. And the word lieutenant is used for a military officer, next in command to the captain.

Life, Union and co-operation of soul with body; enjoyment or possession of terrestrial existence. Yates.

The life of every man is under the protection of the law. Wood's Inst. 11. A lease made to a person during life, is determinable by a civil death; but if it be to hold during natural life, it will be otherwise. 2 Rep. 18.

Life Estates, Where persons for whole lives estates are held, shall absent themselves for seven years, they shall be presumed dead. 19 Car. 2. c. 6. Persons for whole lives estates are held, on application to the Lord Chancellor, to be produced. 6 Ann. c. 13. The tenant holding after the determination of the life, deemed a trespasser. Ibid. Posthumous children enabled to take in remainder, where the life estate is determined. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 16. Estates per autre vie shall be divisible, and abide in the hands of the heir or executor. 29 Car. 2. c. 3.

Stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 16. 12 Geo. 3. Estates per autre vie, in case there be no special occupant thereof, of which no devise shall have been made according to 29 Car. 2. c. 3. or so much thereof as shall not have been so devised, shall be distributed in the same manner as the personal estate of the testator or intestate.

Life-Rent, A rent which a man receives for term of life, or for satisfaction of a debt. Shen.

Ligantia, (ligantia) Is the true and faithful obedience of a subject to his sovereign: And is also applied to the territory and dominion of the King's Acres; as children born out of the hymens of the King, &c. Stat. 15 Ed. 3. Ca. Litt. 129.

Ligantia, (ligantia) Is such a duty or fealty, as no man may owe or bear to more than one lord; and therefore it is used for that duty and allegiance, which every good subject oweth to his liege lord the King. It has been thus defined, Ligantia est vinculum arctius inter subditum & regem utroque invicem connectens; hunc ad protectionem & justum regimen, illos ad tributa & debitam subjectionem. As there is a mutual connection of dominion and fidelity between lords and tenants, so there is a higher and greater connection between the King and subject: for the subject oweth to the King his faithful obedience, and ought to prefer the service of his Prince and country before the safety of his life; and the sovereign is to protect and defend his subjects. Forrestus. See Allegiantia.

Lighter-men, (Mentioned in stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. Act for changing, &c. the streets of London.) Are those that carry away, by water, dung and rubbish in lighters, from the city of London.

They are now generally employed in the carrying of goods to and from ships, &c. lying in the river Thames.

Light-house, A useful light to be placed in a light-house erected on the Shiffons, by the master, wardens and assistants of Trinity-house of Deptford-Sirond; and masters of ships passing by the same, are to pay a certain tonnage duty, &c. Stat. 4 Ann. c. 20. 8 Ann. c. 17. The like act concerning the light-house built by William Trench, Esq. on the island or rock called Skarries, near Holyhead in the county of Anglesea. 3 Geo. 2. cap. 36.

Lights, Stopping lights of a house is a nuisance; but stopping a prospect is not, being only matter of delight, not of necessity: And a person may have either an offse of nuisance against the person erecting any such nuisance, or he may stand on his own ground and abate it. 9 Rep. 18. 1 Mod. 14. For any nuisance erected or being on the fall of my neighbour, whereby I sustain damage, I may maintain an action on the case. If a man has a vacant piece of ground, and builds thereupon a house, with good lights, which he sells or lets to another; and after he builds upon ground contiguous, or lets the same to another person, who builds thereupon to the nuisance of the lights of the first house, the lessee of the first house may have an action of the case against such builder, &c. And though formerly they were to be lights of an ancient messuage, that is now altered. Mod. Ca. 116, 117.

Lights and Lamps, Household in Middlesex and Surrey within the bills of mortality, at what times to set out lamps, 2 W. & M. Jff. 2. c. 8. 18. 15. None but British oil to be used for lamps in dwelling-houses, under penalty of 40 s. 2 Ann. c. 9. Jff. 18.

With respect to London and Westminster, there are a variety of new acts, for paving, lighting and cleansing the streets, &c. not necessary to enumerate.

Lighting-tim, Signifies the right which a man hath to the cutting of fuel in woods; and sometimes it is taken for a tribute or payment due for the same.

Lignum Vitæ, An apothecary's drug, of great price. Lignum vitæ is the product of the British plantations in America may be imported free from all customs and impositions. Stat. 1 Geo. 2. Stat. 2. c. 17.

Lignum Vitæ, Timber fit for building. Du Fresno.

Ligula, A copy or transcript of a court-roll or deed mentioned by Sir John Maynard in his Mem. in Seaccar. 12 Ed. 1.

Ligurion, A flatterer. Liguriones, mendaces, rapaces, De gromanes habent. Leg. Canut. 29. Mr. Samner is of opinion that it signifies a glutton, from the Saxon li-cara, gulbis. Cowell.

Limbs, The limbs as well as the life of a man are of such high value, in the estimation of the law of England, that it pardons even homicide, if committed se defendendo, or in order to preserve them. Black Com. 1 P. 130.

Limbs and Limbs-Taxes, To what duties liable, see 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 1.

Limitation, (limitatio) Is a certain time assign'd by statute, within which an action must be brought.

We shall now consider,

I. Its nature and origin.

II. The limitation of actions as divided into, real, personal, and mixed.

III. The time when the right of action accrued, so as to be affected by the statutes, and of the courts of equity.

IV. The exceptions in 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. what will save a bar thereof; and of the manner of pleading.

I. Of the nature and origin, of the limitation of actions.
The time of limitation is two-fold; first, in writs, by divers acts of parliament; secondly, to make a title to any inheritance, and that is by the Common law. Co. Lit. 114, 115.

It seems, that by the Common law there was no stated or fixed time to bring actions; for tho' it be said by Bracton, that Omnes actiones in mundo infra certa tempora limitationem habent; yet my Lord Coke says, that the limitation of actions was by force of divers acts of parliament; also, (says he) this general position of Bracton's admitted of several exceptions. Bract. lib. 2 fol. 228. 2 Inst. 95. Co. Lit. 115. 4 Cr. 10. 11.

But by the ancient law there was a stated time for the heir of the tenant to claim after the death of his ancestor, or else he lost his land, according to the feudal text, Præterea si quis infensuratus major quatuordecim annis sua incurrit, vel negligentia per ann. 5 diem futuris, quod studi investituram a proprio domino non petierit, transacto hoc spatio, feudum amittit & ad dominum redeat. Speim. Gloss. 12.

The fixing upon this period of a year and a day, upon several other occasions, seems to have been deduced from this ancient rule, and on this occasion was pitched upon, because the services appointed them to be annually computed; therefore the feud was ordered to be taken up within such time as such annual services became due, or else it was lost and returned to the lord; and the same time that was appointed to the tenant to claim from the lord, was also appointed to make his claim upon any disseisor; and if no such claim was made, the disseisor, dying seised, cast the right of possession upon the heir; and this was to keep the same uniformity in point of time thro' the law, as also that the lord might be at a certainty whom he might take for his tenant, and admit upon every descent; and since the heir of the tenant anciently lost the whole land, in case he did not take it up within time, it was fit the tenant should lose the right and possession, in case he did not claim within the same time upon the disseisor, that the heir of the disseisor might be in peace, in case the person that had right did not make his claim upon him, and that from thenceforth the lord might receive him into his feud; and as upon the ancient plan of feudal constitution, if the heir did not take up the feud within a year and a day, a desertion and dereliction was presumed; so also if the disseisor did not claim within the same time, the right of possession was relinquish'd. Speim. Gloss. annus & dies 12, 23.

Before the 32 Hen. 8. c. 2. certain remarkable periods were fixed upon, within which the titles upon which men designed to be relieved must have accrued; thus in the time of Hen. 3. by the statute of Merton, cap. 8. at which time the limitation in a writ of right was from the time of King Henry 1. by that statute it is reduced to the time of King Henry 2. and for assises of mort d'ancestor they were thereby reduced from the last return of King John out of Ireland, which was 18 Johanni; and for assises of novel disseisin, a prima translatio Regis in Normanniam, which was 5 Hen. 3. and which before that had been post ultimam redditionem Henrici 3. de Britannia; and this limitation was also afterwards by the statutes Westm. 1. cap. 39. and Westm. 2. cap. 40. reduced to a narrower compass, the writ of right being limited to the first coronation of Ric. 1. But for these ancient limitations see Co. Lit. 14. b. 15. a. 2 Inst. 94, 95. 2 Roll. Abr. 111. Hold's Hist. of the Law 125. 2 Rep. 45.

II. Of the limitation of assises, or divided into, real, penal, and personal.

1. In real assises.

By 32 H. 8. c. 2. it is enacted, "That no person shall from thenceforth sue, have or maintain any writ of right, or make any prescription, title or claim to or for any manors, lands, tenements, rents, annuities, commons, pensions, portions, corodies, or other hereditaments, of the possession of his or their ancestor or predecessor, and declare and allege any further seisin or possession of his ancestor or predecessor, but only of the seisin or possession of his ancestor or predecessor, which hath been, or now is, or shall be seised of the said manors, lands, tenements, rents, annuities, commons, pensions, portions, corodies, or other hereditaments, within threcore years next before the teste of the same writ, or next before the said prescription, title or claim, to hereafter to be sued, commenced, brought, made or had."

And it is further enacted by the said statute, par. 2. "That no manner of person shall sue, have or maintain any assise of mort d'ancestor, cofenage, ayle, writ of entry upon disseisin, done to any of his ancestors or predecessors, for any manors, lands, tenements or other hereditaments, of any further seisin or possession of his or their ancestor or predecessor, but only of the seisin or possession of his or their ancestor or predecessor, which was or hereafter shall be seised of the same manors, lands, tenements or other hereditaments, within fifty years next before the teste of the original of the same writ hereafter to be brought."

It is further enacted, par. 3. "That no person shall sue, have or maintain any action for any manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, of or upon his or their own seisin or possession therein, above thirty years next before the teste of the original of the same writ hereafter to be brought."

And further, par. 4. "That no person shall hereafter make any avowry or cognizance for any rent, suit or service, and allege any seisin of any rent, suit or service, in the same avowry or cognizance in the possession of any other, whose estate he shall pretend or claim to have, above fifty years next before the making of the said avowry or cognizance."

And it is further enacted by the said statute, par. 5. "That all formedons in reverter, formedons in remainder, and seire facias upon fines of any manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, at any time hereafter to be sued, shall be sued and taken within fifty years next after the title and cause of action fallen, and at no time after the fifty years pass."

Note; This statute hath the usual saving, for infants, feme covert, persons in prisons and beyond sea. In the construction of this statute it hath been holden, That in a formedon in reverter or remainder, or on a seire facias, on a fine of such nature, the demandant need not mention the statute in order to make out his title, but the tenant, if he would take advantage of it, must plead it. Dyer 115. b. pl. 101. So in an avowry for rent. Moor 31. pl. 102. 1 Roll. Rep. 50.

It has been held, that this statute being in restraint of the Common law, ought to be construed strictly; that, therefore it does not extend to a formedon in descender, cessavit nor cessavit. 4 Co. B. 1 And. 16. Lit. Rep. 342.

To a bill in Chancery, to be relieved touching a re-charge upon lands by a will, the defendant pleaded the statute of limitations, and that there had been no demand or payment in forty years; and it was held, that this statute concerns only customary rents between landlord and tenant, and not any rent that commences by grant, whereof the commencement may be shewn. 2 Vern. 255. Collins v. Goddall.

The statute does not extend to the services of alcuage homage and fealty, for a man may live above the time limited by the act; neither doth it extend to any other service which by common possibility may not happen or become due within fifty years, as to cover the hall of the lord, or to attend the lord in the war, &c. Co. Lit. 115. a. 2 Inst. 95. 4 Co. B. 11. 8 Co. 65. 3 Lev. 21.

And where the tenure is by homage, fealty and alcuage uncertain, and by suit of court or rent, or any other annual service, the seisin of the suit or rent, or any other annual service, is a good seisin of the homage, fealty or alcuage, or other accidental services, as wardship, maritagium, or the like. 2 Inst. 96. 4 Co. B. 11. Wick. 12. Moor. 10. 2 Roll. Rep. 102.

By the 1 Mar. cap. 1. it is enacted, "That the 32 Hen. 8. c. 2. shall not extend to any writ of right of assize, entry, assize, for assise of darrein presentment, assize of advowson, assize of warren, assize of right of ward, assize of restitution of ward, for the wardship of the body, or for the wardship of any curacy, honour, manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments holden by knight-service, but that such suits may be brought as before the making of the said act."

By the 21 Jac. 1. cap. 16. for quieting men's estates, and avoiding of suits, it is enacted, "That all writs of formedon in descender, formedon in remainder, and formedon in reverter, at any time hereafter to be sued or brought of, or for, any manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments, whereunto any person or persons now hath or have any title, or cause to have or pursue any such writ, shall be sued and taken within twenty years next after the end of this present session of parliament; and after the said twenty years expired, no person or persons, or any of their heirs, shall have or maintain any such writ of or for any of the said manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments; and that all writs of formedon in descender, formedon in remainder, formedon in reverter, of any manors, lands, tenements or other hereditaments whatsoever, at any time hereafter to be sued or brought by occasion or means of any title, or cause hereafter happening, shall be sued, and taken within twenty years next after the title and cause of action first descended or fallen, and at no time after the said twenty years; and that no person or persons that now hath any right, or title of entry, into any manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments, now held from him or them, shall thereafter enter, but within twenty years next after the end of this present session of parliament, or within twenty years next after any other title of entry accrued; and that no person or persons shall at any time hereafter make any entry into any lands, tenements or hereditaments, but within twenty years next after his or their right or title, which shall hereafter first descend or accrue to the same; and in default thereof such persons so not entering, and their heirs, shall be utterly excluded and disabled from such entry after to be made; any former law, &c.

Provided, That if any person or persons, that is or shall be intitled to such writ or writs, as that hath or shall have such right or title of entry, do or shall be, at the time of the said right or title first descended, accrued, come or fallen, within the age of one and twenty years, feme covert, non compos mentis, imprisoned, or beyond the seas, that then such person and persons, and his and their heirs and heirs, shall or may, notwithstanding the said twenty years be expired, bring his action, or make his entry, as he might have done before this act; so as such person and persons, or his or their heirs and heirs, shall within ten years next after his or their full age, discovery, coming of sound mind, enlargement out of prison, or coming into this realm, or death, takes benefit of, and sue forth the same, and at no time after the said ten years.

In the construction of this statute it hath been holden, That the possession of one joint-tenant is the possession of the other, so far as to prevent this statute. 1 Salk. 285.

That a claim of entry to prevent the statute of limitations must be upon the land, unless there be some special reason to the contrary. 1 Salk. 285.

That if a person be barred of his formedon, he is not thereby hindered to pursue his right of entry which afterwards accrues to him, no more than a person, who has several remedies, and discharges one of them, is excluded thereby from pursuing the other. 1 Lane. 201. Hunt v. Burne. 1 Salk. 285. 2 Salk. 420. 3 C.

If A. has had possession of lands for twenty years without interruption, and then B. gets possession, upon which A. is put to his election, though A. is plaintiff, yet the possession of twenty years shall be a good title in him, as if he had still been in possession; because a possession for twenty years is like a tenant which only enters, and gives a right of possession, which is sufficient to maintain an ejectment. 1 Salk. 420. held as have been since so ruled by the judges.

That if one tenant in common receives the whole profits for twenty years or more, yet this does not bar his companion; for the statute of limitations never runs against a man, but where he is actually ousted or disabled. 1 Salk. 453.

It has been ruled, that one shall be within the statute of limitations, because an action for the profits of the public's quays, and so were owing to the possessor of the land or tenant. 2 Salk. 410.

But ecclesiastical persons are not bound by any of the statutes of limitations, because it would be a side-wind to evade the statutes made to prohibit their alienations. Comp. Incumb. 429.

2. In penal actions.

By the 31 Eliz. cap. 5. per. 3. it is enacted, "That all actions, suits, bills, indictments or informations, which shall be brought for any forfeiture upon any statute penal, made or to be made, whereby the forfeiture is or shall be limited to the Queen, &c. shall be brought within two years after the offence; and that all actions, suits, bills or informations, which shall be brought for any forfeiture upon any penal statute, made or to be made, except the statutes of tillage, the benefit and suit whereof is or shall be by the said statute limited to the Queen, her heirs or successors, and to any other that shall prosecute in that behalf, shall be brought by any person that may lawfully sue for the same within one year next after the offence committed; and in default of such person, that then the same shall be brought for the Queen's Majesty, her heirs or successors, any time within the two years after that year ended. Where a shorter time is limited by any penal statute, the prosecution must be that time."

Also vide 18 El. c. 3. and 21 Jac. 1. c. 4. the former requiring a memorandum of the day of exhibiting an information, the latter an oath from the informer.

In the construction of these statutes it hath been holden, that the 21 Jac. 1. cap. 4. does not extend to any offence created since that statute; so that prosecutions on subsequent penal statutes are not restrained thereby, but that statute is to them as it were repealed pro tanto. 1 Salk. 272-73. 1 Mod. 445.

That if an offence prohibited by any penal statute be also an offence at Common law, the prosecution of it as of an offence at Common law, is no way restrained by any of these statutes. 1 Mod. 270. 4 Mod. 144.

That if an information ex parte be brought after the year on a penal statute, which gives one moiety to the informer, and the other to the King, it is naught only as to the informer, but good for the King. Cro. Gar. 131. Cro. Jac. 366. and vide Dalry. 60.

That if a suit on a penal statute be brought after the limited time, the defendant need not plead the statute, but may take advantage of it on the general issue. 1 Show. 355.

That the party grieved is not within the restraint of these statutes, but may sue in the same manner as before. Cro. Jac. 645. Hey 71. 3 Lane. 237.

It seems doubtful, whether a suit by a common informer on a penal statute, which first gives an action to the party grieved, and in his default, after a certain time, to any one who will sue, be within the restraint of these statutes. 1 Show. 355. 356.

It has been held by three judges, that suing out a perpetua within the year was a sufficient commencement of the suit to save the limitation of time on a penal statute, because the perpetua is the original of B. R. and may be continued on record as an original. But this held otherwise, for the action being for a penalty given by a statute, the plaintiff might have brought an action of debt by original in B. R. because the statute gives the action; and he held, that there was a difference between a civil action, and an action given by statute; for in the first case, the suing out a perpetua within the time, and continuing it afterwards, will be sufficient; but in the other case, if the party proceeds by bill, he ought to file his bill within time, that it may appear to be upon the record itself. Cro. Jac. 312. Calliford v. Blandford. 1 Show. Rep. 113. 2 C.

3. In personal actions.

By the 21 Jac. 1. cap. 16. it is enacted, That all actions for the debt for money shall be commenced and sued within two years next after the words spoken, and not after.

In the construction of this breach of the statute it hath been holden,

That an action of perpetua in quantum is not within the statute. 1 Salk. 246. 5 Mod. 455.

That

That it extends not to actions for slander of title, for that is not properly slander; but a cause of damage, and the slander intended by the statute is to the person. Cro. Car. 141. Law v. Harwood, adjudged.

That if the words are of themselves actionable, without the necessity of alleging special damages, altho' a loss ensues, yet in this case the statute of limitations is a good bar; but if the words at the time of the speaking of them are not actionable, but a subsequent loss ensues, which intitles the plaintiff to his action, in such case the statute is no bar. 1 Sid. 95. Sanders v. Edwards. Raym. 61. 8. C. and see 3 Mod. 111. S. C. cited.

That if an action for words be founded upon an indictment, or other matter of record, it is not within the statute, but such action may be brought at any time. 1 Sid. 95. But if in case, qu. if it should not be in six years?

By the same stat. it is enacted, that all actions of trespass, of assault, battery, wounding, imprisonment, or any of them, shall be commenced and sued within four years NEXT AFTER the cause of such actions or suits, and not after.

It seems, that if a man brings trespass for beating his servant, per quod servitium amisit, this is not such an action as is within this branch of the statute, being founded on the special damage. 1 Salk. 206. 3 Mod. 74.

If to an action of assault, battery and imprisonment, the defendant pleads, as to the assault and imprisonment, the statute of limitations, without answering particularly to the battery, otherwise than by using the words transgressio prædicta, it is sufficient, for these words are an answer to the whole. 1 Lev. 31.

By the same stat. it is enacted, that all actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, all actions of trespass, detinue, action per trover and replevin for taking away of goods and chattels, all actions of account, other than such accounts as concern the trade of merchandize between merchant and merchant, their factors or servants, all actions on the case, (other than for slander) all actions of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, all actions of debt for arrearages of rent within six years NEXT AFTER the cause of action.

Provision is made for feme-coverts, persons that are non compos, imprisoned, or beyond sea.

It hath been adjudged, that an action of debt on the 2 Ed. 6. for not setting out tithes, is not within the statute, the action being grounded on an act of parliament, which is the highest record. Cro. Car. 513. Talory v. Jackson. 1 Saund. 38. 2 Saund. 66. 1 Sid. 305. 415. 1 Keb. 95. 2 Keb. 462.

So it hath been adjudged, that an action of debt for rent reserved on a lease by indenture is out of the statute, the lease by indenture being equal to a specialty. Matt. 109. Freeman v. Stacy. 1 Saund. 38. cited.

Also it hath been adjudged, that an action of debt for an escape is not within the statute, not only because it is founded in maleficio, and arises on a contract in law, which is different from those actions of debt on a lending or contract mentioned in the statute, but also because it is grounded on the 1 Ric. 2. cap. 12. which first gave an action of debt for an escape, there being no remedy for creditors before but by action on the case. 1 Saund. 17. Jones v. Pope. 1 Lev. 191. S. C. adjudged. 2 Keb. 903. S. C. and 1 Sid. 305. S. C.

So it hath been adjudged, that this statute cannot be pleaded to an action of debt brought against a tenant for money by him levied on a fi. facias, because the action is founded in maleficio, as also upon the judgment on which the fi. facias issued, which is a matter of record. 1 Mod. 245. Cockran v. Welby 212. and 2 Salk. Rep. 75. S. C.

It hath been adjudged, that an action of debt on an award under the hand and seal of the arbitrators, tho' the submission was by parol, is not within the statute. 2 Saund. 64. Sid. 415. 1 Lev. 273. 2 Keb. 462. 456. 533. S. C.

An action of debt for a fine of a copyholder is not within the statute. 1 Keb. 536. 1 Lev. 273.

If a man recovers a judgment or sentence in Præsumptio for money due to him, the debt shall be considered here only as a debt by simple contract, and the statute of limitations will run upon it. 2 Vern. 540. per curiam.

If the plaintiff be in England at the time the cause of action accrues, the time of limitation begins to run, so that if he, or (if he dies abroad) his representative does not sue within six years, he is barred by the statute. Wyl. par. 1. 134.

It seems that to an assumpsit brought by the assignees of a bankrupt, for a debt due to the bankrupt, this statute is a good bar; for tho' the assignment is by force of an act of parliament, yet the assignees stand only in the place of the bankrupt, and can have no other right nor remedy than he had. 2 Lev. 166. 3 Keb. 645. Comb. 70.

It seems clearly agreed, that tho' the statutes of limitation bind the courts of equity, that yet a trust is not within these statutes. March 129. 2 Salk. 124.

A charity is not barred by length of time, nor within the statute of limitations. 2 Vern. 399.

So it hath been held, that a legacy is not within the statute of limitations. 1 Vern. 256.

It seems to be the doctrine of courts of equity, that mortgages are not within the statute of limitations; yet where a man comes in at an old hand, it hath been sometimes decreed, that the possessor should account no further than for the profits made in his own time, to discourage the stirring in such dormant titles; also the courts have allowed length of time to be pleaded in bar, where the mortgaged estate hath descended as a fee without entry or claim from the mortgagor, and where the possessor would be intangled in a long account; and in these cases the statute of limitations has been mentioned as a proper direction to go by. 1 Chan. Ca. 101. See Mortgage.

III. Of the time when the right of action accrues, so as to be affected by the statute, and of the courts bound thereby.

This statute cannot be a bar unless the six years are expired, after there hath been complete cause of action; as if a man promise to pay 10*l.* to J. S. when he came from Rome, or when he marries, and ten years after J. S. marries, or comes from Rome, the right of action accrues from the happening of the contingency, from which time the statute shall be a bar, and not from the time of the promise. Godb. 437.

So in an action of the case wherein the plaintiff declared, that in consideration that he would forbear to sue the defendant, for some sheep killed by the defendant's dog, the defendant promised to make him satisfaction upon request, and that such a time he requested, &c. and it was held, that the right of action accrued from the request, not from the time of killing the sheep; that therefore the defendant could not plead the statute of limitations, the request being within six years, tho' the killing the sheep, and promise of satisfaction was long before. Godb. 437. Stanford v. Boroughs adjudged. See 1 Lev. 48. Webb v. Martin. 1 Sid. 66. 1 Keb. 177. S. C. But if six years had elapsed after request made, the defendant might have pleaded Non accrevit infra sex annos.

For similar cases, vide 2 Salk. 422. 1 Kent. 191. 3 Keb. 613. Cro. Car. 245. 6. 333. 1 Jon. 252. 3 Mod. 120. 25. Allen 62. 2 Salk. 420. Comb. 26.

It is clearly agreed, that the statute of limitations is a good plea in a court of equity. March 129. 1 Salk. 424.

But it seems to be agreed, that the statute of limitations is no plea in the courts of Admiralty, or Spiritual court, where they proceed according to their law, and in a matter in which they have cognizance. 6 Mod. 25. 26. 2 Salk. 424. 3 Keb. 166. 194.

Therefore it hath been agreed, that for a suit upon a contract super altum mare, no prohibition should go upon their refusal of a plea of the statute of limitations. 6 Mod. 26.

So it hath been held, not to be pleadable to a proceeding in the Spiritual court, pro restitutione maritus in dotem, because the proceeding is pro reformatione maritus, not for damages. 2 Salk. 424.

It hath been doubted, whether in a suit in the Admiralty for mariners wages, this statute is a good plea; because it is said, that this is a matter properly determinable at Common Common law; and the allowing the Admiralty jurisdiction therein, only a matter of indulgence. 2 Salk. 424. 6 Mod. 25.

But this is now settled by the 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 16. by which it is enacted, That all suits and actions in the court of Admiralty for seamen's wages, shall be commenced and sued within six years next after the cause of such suits or actions shall accrue, and not after.

IV. The exceptions in 21 Jac. 1. c. 16.—What will save a bar thereof.—And of the manner of pleading.

As to this it hath been adjudged, that the last proviso in the statute not only extends to those actions therein enumerated, but also to an assumpsit, tho' not mentioned, and to all other actions on the case being of equal mischief, and plainly within the intention of the legislature. Cro. Car. 245, 333. 2 Saund. 120. 2 Mod. 71. 1 Sid. 455.

1. Exception in relation to infants. As to this it hath been holden, that the statute being general, infants had been included, had they not been particularly excepted. 1 Lev. 31.

It hath been holden, that if an infant, during his infancy, by his guardian bring an action, the defendant cannot plead the statute of limitations; altho' the cause of action accrued six years before, and the words of the statute are, that after his coming of age, &c. 2 Saund. 121.

It hath been held in Chancery, that if one receives the profits of an infant's estate, and six years after his coming of age, he brings a bill for an account, the statute of limitations is as much a bar to such a suit, as if he had brought an action of account at Common law; for this receipt of the profits of an infant's estate is not such a trust, as being a creature of the court of equity, the statute shall be no bar to; for he might have his action of account against him at law, and therefore no necessity to come into this court for the account; for the reason why bills for an account are brought here, is from the nature of the demand, and that they may have a discovery of books, papers, and the party's oath, for the more easy taking of the account, which cannot be so well done at law; but if the infant dies by for six years after he comes of age, as he is barred of his action of account at law, so shall he be of his remedy in this court. Abr. Eq. 304, Lockey v. Lockey.

2. Exception in relation to merchants accounts. As to this exception, it hath been a matter of much controversy, whether it extends to all actions and accounts relating to merchants and merchandize, or to actions of account open and current only; the words of the statute being, That all actions of trespass, &c. all actions of account and upon the case, other than such actions as concern the trade of merchants; so that by the words, other than such actions, not being said actions of account, it has been insisted that all actions concerning merchants are excepted. 1 Jon. 401. 2 Saund. 124, 125. 1 Lev. 287. 2 Keb. 622. 1 Lev. 298. 1 Vent. 90. 1 Mod. 270. 2 Mod. 312. 2 Vern. 456.

But it is now settled, that accounts open and current only are within the statute; that therefore if an account be stated and settled between merchant and merchant, and a sum certain agreed to be due to one of them, if in such case he, to whom the money is due, does not bring his action within the limited time, he is barred by the statute. Vide the authorities supra.

So it hath been adjudged, that by the exception in the statute concerning merchants accounts, no other actions are excepted but actions of account. Carth. 226.

Also it hath been adjudged, that bills of exchange for value received, are not such matters of account as are intended by the exception in the statute of limitations. Carth. 226.

3. Exception in relation to persons beyond sea. It seems to have been agreed, that the exception as to persons being beyond sea, extends only where the creditors or plaintiffs are absent, and not to debtors or defendants, because the first only are mentioned in the statute; and this construction has the rather prevailed, because it was reputed the creditor's folly, that he did not file an original, and outlaw the debtor, which would have prevented the bar of the statute. Cro. Car. 245, 333. 1 Jon. 252. 1 Lev. 143. 3 Mod. 311. 2 Lutw. 950. 1 Salk. 420.

But as the creditors being beyond sea is saved by the 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. so now by the 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 16. it is enacted, That if any person or persons, against whom there is or shall be any cause of suit or action for seamen's wages, or against whom there shall be any cause of action of trespass, detinue, action sur trover or replevin, for taking away goods or chattels, or of action of account, or upon the case, or of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, of debt for arrearages of rent, or assault, menace, battery, wounding and imprisonment, or any of them, be, or shall be, at the time of any such cause of suit or action given or accrued, fallen or come beyond the seas; that then such person or persons, who is or shall be intitled to any such suit or action, shall be at liberty to bring the said actions against such person and persons after their return from beyond the seas, within such times as are limited for the bringing of the said actions by the 21 Jac. 1. c. 16.

4. Where an executor or administrator is to sue or be sued. A. received money belonging to a person who before died intestate, and to whom B. after such receipt took out administration, and brought an action against A. to which he pleaded the statute of limitations, the plaintiff replied, and shewed that administration was committed to him such a year, which was infra sex annos; tho' six years were expired since the receipt of the money, yet not being so since the administration committed, the action not barred by the statute. 1 Salk. 421. Currey v. Stephenson, Skin. 555. 4 Mod. 376. Latch. 335. S. C.

It is said in general, that where one brings an action before the expiration of six years, and dies before judgment, the six years being then expired, this shall not prevent his executor. 2 Salk. 424-5.

But if an executor sues upon a promissory note to the testator, and dies before judgment, and six years from the original cause of action are actually expired, and the executor brings a new action in four years after the first executor's death, the statute of limitations shall be a bar to such action; for tho' the debt does not become irrecoverable, by an abatement of the action after the six years elapsed by the plaintiff's death; yet the executor should make a recent prosecution, to which the clause in the statute, that provides a year after the reversal of a judgment, &c. may be a good direction, or shew that he came as early as he could, because there was a contest about the will, or right of administration; for the statute was made for the benefit of the defendants, to free them from actions when their witnesses were dead, or their vouchers lost. Trin. 1 Geo. 2. Wilcox v. Huggins.

If there be no executor against whom the plaintiff may bring his action, he shall not be prejudiced by the statute of limitations, nor shall any laches in such case be imputed to him. 2 Vern. 695.

5. Where no jurisdiction to sue is, or where hindered by some authority. It seems agreed, that there being no courts, or the courts of justice being shut, is no plea to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations; as where after the civil war an assumpsit was brought, that the defendant pleaded the statute of limitations; to which the plaintiff replied, that a civil war had broke out, and that the government was usurped by rebels, which hindered the course of justice, and by which the courts were shut up, and that within six years after the war ended he commenced his action; and this replication was held ill, for the statute being general, must work upon all cases which are not exempted by the exception. 1 Keb. 157. 1 Lev. 31. Carth. 157. 2 Salk. 420.

It is clearly agreed, that the defendant's being a member of parliament, and intitled to privilege, will not save a bar of the statute; because the plaintiff may have filed an original without being guilty of any breach of privilege. 1 Lev. 31. Carth. 156-7.

It is said, that if a man sues in chancery, and, pending the suit there, the statute of limitations attaches on his demand, and his bill is afterwards dismissed, the matter being properly determinable at Common law; in such case case the court will preserve the plaintiff's right, and will not suffer the statute to be pleaded in bar to his demand. 1 Vern. 73, 74.

If the statute of limitations be pleaded to an action, the plaintiff to save his action may reply, that he had commenced the suit in an inferior court within the time of limitation, and that it was removed to Westminster by habeas corpus; and this shall be allowed by a favourable construction of the statute of limitations; altho' in strictness the suit is commenced in the court above, when it is removed by habeas corpus. 1 Sid. 228. 3 Keb. 263. Bruin v. Chapman. 1 Lev. 143. S. C. Also vide 2 Salk. 424.

6. Where the suing out a writ will save a bar of the statute. It is clearly agreed, that the suing out an original will save a bar of the statute of limitations, and that thereupon the defendant may be outlawed; and that if beyond sea at the time of the outlawry, tho' it shall be reversed after his return, yet the plaintiff may bring another original by journey accounts, and thereby take advantage of his first writ. Carth. 136. 1 Salk. 420. 3 Mod. 311.

Also it is agreed, that the suing out a latitat is a sufficient commencement of a suit, to save the limitation of time, because the latitat is the original of B. R. and may be continued on record as an original writ. 1 Sid. 53, 60. Carth. 233. 1 Salk. 421.

Also it hath been ruled, that to a plea of the statute of limitations the plaintiff may reply, that he sued out a latitat, and continued it down by a vicecomes non misit breves, without concluding prout patet per recordum; for the latitat roll is only for the private use of the court, and no record. 2 Keb. 46. Bottle v. Wood.

The same is law, as to a bill of Middlesex.

But tho' the suing out an original, or latitat, will be a sufficient commencement of a suit, yet the plaintiff, in order to make it effectual, must show that he hath continued the writ to the time of the action brought. Carth. 144. 2 Salk. 420. 1 Lutw. 101, 254. 3 Mod. 33. That the attorney's writing the continuances on the writ in his chambers is sufficient. 1 Sid. 53. 1 Keb. 140. Also vide Carth. 144. 2 Salk. 420. S. C. 1 Salk. 421.

7. Where a debt barred by the statute shall be said to be revived. It is clearly agreed, that if after the six years the debtor acknowledges the debt, and promises payment thereof, that this revives it, and brings it out of the statute; as if a debtor by promissory note, or simple contract, promises within six years of the action brought that he will pay the debt; tho' this was barred by the statute, yet it is revived by the promise; for as the note itself was at first but an evidence of the debt, so that being barred the acknowledgment and promise is a new evidence of the debt, and being proved, will maintain an assumpsit for recovery of it. 1 Salk. 28, 29. Carth. 470. 5 Mod. 425, 426. 2 Show. 126. 2 Vent. 151.

Also it hath been adjudged, that a conditional promise will revive a debt barred by the statute of limitations; as where to an assumpsit by an executor for goods sold and delivered by the testator, the defendant pleaded the statute, and upon evidence it appeared, that the defendant within six years, being applied to by the executor for the debt said, If you prove that I had the goods, I will pay you; which being fully proved at the trial, it was held that this conditional promise revived the debt; and that tho' made to the executor, after the death of the testator, was sufficient to maintain the issue; because the promise did not give any new cause of action, but only revived the old cause, and was of no other use, but to prevent the bar by the statute of limitations. Carth. 470. Heylin v. Hastings. 1 Salk. 29. S. C. 5 Mod. 425. S. C. cited.

So it hath been held, that a bare acknowledgment of the debt within six years of the action, is sufficient to revive it, and prevent the statute, tho' no promise was made. Carth. 470.

But if an indebitatus assumpsit for goods sold, be brought against four persons, who plead the statute of limitations, and it be found that one of them promised within six years, there can be no judgment against him; for the contract being intire, it must be found that they all promised. 2 Vent. 151.

It seems to be the doctrine of the courts of equity, that if a man by will or deed subject his lands to the payment of his debts, debts barred by the statute of limitations shall be paid, for they are debts in equity, and the duty remains; and the statute hath not extinguished that, tho' it hath taken away the remedy. 1 Salk. 154. 2 Vern. 141.

Also it hath been ruled in equity, that if a man has a debt due to him by note, or a book debt, and has made no demand of it for six years, so that he is barred by the statute of limitations; yet if the debtor, or his executor, after the six years, puts out an advertisement in the Gazette, or any other news-paper, that all persons who have any debts owing to them, may apply to such a plate, and that they shall be paid; this (tho' general, and therefore might be intended of legal subsisting debts only,) yet amounts to such an acknowledgment of that debt which was barred, as will revive the right, and bring it out of the statute again. Abr. Eq. 305. Andrews v. Brown.

Of pleading.

It seems to be admitted, that the statute of limitations must be pleaded positively by him that would take advantage thereof; and that the same cannot be given in evidence, especially in an assumpsit, because the statute speaks of a time past, and relates to the time of making the promise, 1 Lev. 111. 1 Sid. 253. and see Cro. Jac. 115.

But in debt for rent, upon nil debet pleaded, the statute of limitations may be given in evidence, for the statute has made it no debt at the time of the plea pleaded, the words being in the present tense. 1 Salk. 278. Per Holt.

In replevin the defendant pleaded Not guilty De cap' prædicti infra sex annos jam ultimo claspos; and tho' it was urged, that this was the same with pleading non cap'it, and if he did not take, he could not be guilty of the detainer; and if this way of pleading were not allowed, the statute would be entirely evaded as to this action; yet the plea was held ill, because he ought to have answered to the detainer, as well as to the taking; also a thing may be lawfully distrained, although unlawfully kept; as by being put into a castle, &c. by which means it could not be replevied. 1 Sid. 81. Arundel v. Trevor. 1 Keb. 279. S. C.

In trespass, for a trespass done thirteen years before, the defendant pleads, that infra sex annos, &c. non est inde culpabilis. Plaintiff replies, that he brought his action such a term, and that within six years before that time the defendant did the trespass; and upon this the defendant takes issue, and is found guilty: And it was held, 1st, That the defendant's plea was good in bar, without pleading the statute, 2dly, That the plaintiff's replication was no departure; altho' it was objected, that he could have replied nothing, but that he was under some of the disabilities, for which there is a saving in the statute; for the plaintiff is not tied to the time or place laid in the declaration, but may vary from it upon evidence; and so when the defendant, by his plea, pleads to a certain time or place, and thereby makes the time or place material, the plaintiff may follow him without any departure. Raym. 86. 1 Lev. 110. 1 Keb. 566. S. C. Lee v. Raynes. Vide New Abr. 3 V. tit. Limitation.

N. B. The King is not within the general acts of limitation; nor ecclesiastical persons, for lands belonging to their churches. 11 Rep. 74. If a debt be set off by way of plea, the statute of limitations may be replied to. 2 Strange 1271. A writ of error to reverse a common recovery cannot be brought after twenty years, tho' the right of the plaintiff in the matter accrued within that time. 2 Strange 1257.

Limitation of the Crown. The statutes 1 W. 1. c. 3. 12 W. 3. c. 2. and 1 G. 2. c. 17. 4 Ann. c. 8. &c. are acts for the limitation of the crown, and settling it on protestant heirs in the house of Hanover. See Crown.

Limitation

Limitation of Estate. In a legal sense, imports how long the estate shall continue, or is rather a qualification of a precedent estate. A limitation is generally by such words as durante vita, quamdiu dum, &c. And if there be not a performance according to the limitation, it shall determine an estate without entry or claim; which a condition doth not. 10 Rep. 41. 1 Inst. 204. It is taken for the compass and time of an estate: as where one doth give lands to a man, to hold to him and his heirs male; and to him and the heirs female, &c. here the daughters shall not have any thing in it, so long as there is a male, for the estate to the heirs male is first limited. Co. Litt. 3, 13. If a limitation of an estate be uncertain, the limitation is void; and the estate shall remain as if there had been no such limitation. Cro. Eliz. 216. But a thing that is limited in a will by plain words, shall not be afterwards made uncertain by general words which follow. Hill. 23 Car. 3. R. Where a devise is to the eldest son, upon condition that he pays such legacies; and if he refuses, the land shall remain to the legatees: on his refusal, the legatees may enter by way of limitation. Noy 51. And in all cases, where after a condition, an interest is granted to a stranger, it is a limitation. 1 Leon. 269. Cro. Eliz. 204. It was held by Holt C. J. that the statute de donis, (13 Ed. 1. c. 1.) ought not to be taken strictly; but all limitations within the meaning of it are to be supported: therefore tho' words of an express condition be not ordinarily construed as a limitation; yet when an estate is to remain over for breach of any condition, which is by the express words thereof, it should be intended a limitation. Trin. 4 Ann. Lands may be given and limited to one in tail, remainder to another, remainder in fee, &c. Tho' a limitation of an estate cannot begin after the determination of an absolute estate in fee-simple; for that would be to suffer perpetuities to be made, which the law abhors. 2 Lill. Abr. 173. Lindestern, A place often mentioned in our ancient histories; being formerly a bishop's see, now Holy Island.

Lineal Consanguinity, Is that which subsists between persons, of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other.

Lineal Descent. The descent of estates, from ancestor to heir, i. e. from one to another, in a right line. 'Tis peculiar to our laws, that estates cannot lineally ascend. See Black. Com. 2 V. 210.

Lineal Descent of the Crown. The crown lineally descends, unless otherwise settled by parliament. On failure of lineal descendants, it goes to the next collateral relations of the last King, provided they are lineally descended from the blood royal, unless otherwise settled by parliament. See Black. Com. 1 V. 194.

Lineal Warranty. Where the heir derives, or may by possibility derive his title to land warranted, either from or through the ancestor who makes the warranty. Black. Com. 2 V. 301.

Linens. No person shall put to sale any piece of Douglas linen, &c. unless the just length be expressed thereon, on pain to forfeit the same. 28 H. 8. c. 4. Using means

And linen of all sorts made of flax or hemp, of the manufacture of this kingdom may be exported duty free. 3 Geo. 1. c. 7. Linen made in Great Britain and Ireland being much improved, to extend it farther, a bounty of one penny for every yard of such linen from 6d. to 12d. per yard and a half-penny for each yard, under 6d. price, is granted on exporting them; payable out of a duty laid on foreign cambricks, by 15 Geo. 2. c. 29. Stealing of linen, &c. from whitening grounds or drying houses, to the value of 10s. is felony. See Felony. Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 16. By the Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 30. Affixing on foreign linens any stamp put upon Scotch or Irish linens, or affixing a counterfeit stamp on British or Irish linens, incurs a penalty of 5l. By the Stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 24. for the exportation of foreign linens, under the denomination of British or Irish linens. The stamp master is to be sworn to the true execution of his office; and linens to be stamped, must be sworn to be the manufacture of Scotland or Ireland, and a penalty of 5l. each piece is laid on false stamps. And by the Stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 25. An additional bounty is allowed on the exportation of British and Irish linens, of one half-penny per yard, for linens of the value of, from 5d. to 12d. per yard, and 1d. per yard for linens of the value of, from 12d. to 1s. 6d. per yard. Livery, (Fr. livre, i. e. infigne gestamen, or liverer, i. e. traders) Hath three significations. In one sense, it is used for a suit of clothes, cloak, gown, hat, &c. which a nobleman or gentleman gives to his servants or followers, with cognisance or without; mentioned in 1 R. 2. c. 7. and divers other statutes: and formerly great men gave liveries to several, who were not of their family, to engage them in their quarrels for that year; but afterwards it was ordained, that no man of any condition whatsoever, should give any livery, but to his domesticks, his officers, or counsel learned in the law. By 1 R. 2. it was prohibited on pain of imprisonment; and the 1 Hen. 4. c. 7. made the offenders liable to ransom at the King's will, &c. which statute was farther confirmed and explained anno 2 & 7 Hen. 4. and 8 Hen. 6. c. 4. and yet this offence was so deeply rooted, that Ed. 4. was obliged to confirm the former statutes, and further to extend the meaning of them, adding a penalty of 5 l. to every one that gives such livery, and the like on every one retained for maintenance either by writing, oath, or promise, for for every month. 8 Ed. 4. c. 2. But most of the above statutes are repealed by 3 Car. 1. c. 4. Livery in the second signification, was a delivery of possession to those tenants who held of the King in capite, or knights service; as the King by his prerogative hath primer seisin of all lands and tenements so holden of him. Staunf. Præf. 12. In the third sense, livery was the writ which lay for the heir of age, to obtain the possession or seisin of his lands at the King's hands. F. N. B. 155. By the statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24. All wardships, liveries, &c. are taken away.

Livery of Seisin, (liberatio seisinæ) Is a delivery of possession of lands, tenements and hereditaments, unto one that hath a right to the same; being a ceremony in the Common law used in the conveyance of lands, &c. where an estate of free-simple, free-tail, or other freehold passeth. Brag. lib. 2. cap. 18. Wyll. Symb. par. 1. lib. 2. And it is a testimonial of the willing departing of him who makes the livery, from the thing whereof the livery is made; and of the willing acceptance of the other party receiving the livery; first invented, that the common people might have knowledge of the passing or alteration of estates from man to man, and thereby be better able to try in whom the right of possession of lands and tenements were, if the same should be contested, and they should be impanelled on juries, or otherwise have to do concerning the same. Wyll. Ibid. This livery may be made of a house, lands, or any thing corporeal; but not of incorporeal things. Where a house and lands are conveyed, the house is the principal, and the lands accessory; and there the livery must be made, and not upon the land. 2 Rep. 31. 4 Lam. 374.

Of livery and seisin there are two kinds.

A livery in deed,
and
Livery in law.

Livery in deed, is when the feoffor taketh the ring of the door, &c. and delivereth the same to the feoffee, in the name of seisin. 1 Inst. 48. 6 Rep. 26. And livery in deed may be either by words, and some solemn act; or by words without any solemn act, if the feoffor and feoffee are on the land. Wood's Inst. 237.

Livery in law, is when the feoffor himself being in view of the house or land, faith to the feoffee, after delivery of the deed, I give to you yonder land, &c. to you and your heirs, go into the same and take possession accordingly: now if the feoffee enters on the land, during the life-time of the feoffor, it is a good feoffment and livery. 1 Inst. 48, 52. If a deed of feoffment be delivered upon the land, in the name of seisin of all the lands, it will be a good livery and seisin; but the bare delivery of a deed upon the land, though it may make the deed, it shall not amount to livery and seisin, without those words. 1 Inst. 2, 181. If one makes a feoffment to four persons, and seisin delivered to three of them, in the name of all; the estate is vested in all of them. 3 Rep. 26. And if lands lie in divers places in one county, livery and seisin in one parcel in one place, in the name of the rest is sufficient; though if the lands lie in several counties, it is otherwise; for then livery and seisin must be in every county. Lit. 61.

Precautions to be taken.

No person ought to be in the house, or upon the land, when livery is made, but the feoffor and feoffee; all others are to be removed from it: if the lessor, feoffor makes livery and seisin, the lessee being upon the land contradicting it, the livery is void. Cre. Eliz. 321. A lessor enfeoffed a stranger, and came to make livery and seisin; the lessee's wife being in the house, the lessor enters, and by force turns the wife into the backside, which was part of the land let, and then he makes livery in the house, in the name of all the lands let; as the woman was remaining all the while upon the land, and contradicting the livery, the livery was held void: but if she had voluntarily gone out of the house, upon part of the land; or the lessor had turned her into the street, so that she had not been upon any part of the land; it had been good. Dalif. Rep. 94.

Of enfeoffing, or making of feoffments, &c. and the operation of livery and seisin.

If a man agrees with me to make a feoffment upon condition, and after makes a charter of feoffment without any condition, and then makes livery and seisin, secundum formam chartæ, this is absolute without any condition; for the livery is not made according to the agreement, but according to the charter. 34 Ass. 1. But if a person enfeoffs another, as a security for the payment of money, and afterwards makes livery of seisin, to him and his heirs generally; the estate hath been holden to be upon condition, since the intent of the parties was not changed, but continued at the time of the livery. 1 Inst. 242. And where a charter of feoffment is made, and in the deed there is no condition; but when the feoffor would make livery of seisin to the feoffee, by force of the deed, he, expressing the estate, makes livery of seisin, upon condition, the feoffment is of force as if it had not been made. Lit. Sect. 359. 2 Danv. Abr. 13.

Of leases, &c. and livery.

A man makes a lease for years, remainder to another for life, in tail or in fee: here livery and seisin, in deed must be made to the lessee for years; without which nothing passeth to him in remainder, it being for the benefit of him in remainder, and not the lessee, who hath only a term: and if the lessee entereth, before livery and seisin, made to him, the livery shall be void. Lit. 60. 1 Inst. 49. Wood's Inst. 238. A lease for years is granted to A. B. with remainder to his right heirs, whereon livery is made; the remainder is void, because there is not any person is est. who can presently take by the livery; and every livery ought to have its operation presently. 4 Lev. 67. There was a lease made to a man and his wife, and their daughter; so hold from Michaelmas next, and the lessor made livery after Michaelmas; this was adjudged good, being being made by the lessor himself; but it had been otherwise, if it had been to be done by attorney. or if the lessor had made livery before Michaelmas. 2 Roll. Rep. 109. Lease for twenty years to a man to commence from a time past; and after the expiration of the said term, then to him and his wife, and their son, for their lives, and the longest liver of them, with a letter of attorney to make livery and seisin, &c. It is a good lease for years, with remainder for life, if livery and seisin be made by the attorney at the time of executing the lease; but if the livery and seisin be made by the attorney some time afterwards, in such case it is said the livery is void. Moor 14. A man may make a letter of attorney to deliver seisin by force of the deed, which may be contained in the same deed; and a letter of attorney may be likewise made to receive livery and seisin. 5 Rep. 91. 1 Inst. 49, 52.

Of the manner of making livery, &c.

The manner of making livery of seisin is thus: the parties to the deed, grantor and grantee, or the attorneys by them authorised, come to the door of the house, or some part of the land; and there having declared the cause of their meeting, in the presence of witnesses, they read the deed or the contents thereof; and if by attorney, the power of attorney; and then, if it be a house they take the ring, latch or key of the door, (all the people being out of the house,) or if it be land, a clod of earth, and a twig or bough of one of the trees thereon; and the same ring or key, clod, &c. with the deed they deliver to the grantee or his attorney, saying the usual words, viz. I A. B. do hereby deliver unto you C. D. possession and seisin of this messuage or tenement, &c. To hold to you, your heirs and assigns, according to the true intent and meaning of this indenture, &c. And afterwards, if it be a house, the grantee, &c. enters first alone, and shuts the door; and then he opens it, and lets in others. Accomp. Curvey. 2d edit. vol. 1.

Livery and seisin indorsed on the deed.

Memorandum, That on the day, &c. full possession and seisin was had and taken of the messuage or tenement, and premisses within granted, by A. B. one of the attorneys within named, and by him delivered over unto the within named C. D. To Hold to him, his heirs, &c. according to the contents, and true meaning of the within written indenture, in the presence of, &c.

If a house or lands belong to an office, by grant of the office by deed, the house or land passeth without livery: and by a fine, which is a feoffment of record; by a lease and release; bargain and sale by deed enrolled; exchange, &c. a freehold passeth, without livery; and so in a deed of feoffment to use, by virtue of the statute of uses. 1 Inst. 49. So that livery and seisin is not so commonly used as formerly; neither can an estate be created now by livery and seisin only, without writing. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. See Black. Com. 2 V. 311.

London, The metropolis of this kingdom, formerly called Augusta, has been built above three thousand years, and flourished for fifteen hundred years. Its exchange, where merchants of all nations meet, is not to be equalled; and for stateliness of buildings, extent of bounds, learning, arts and sciences, traffick and trade, this city gives place to none in the world. Stow. It is divided into twenty-six wards, over each of which there is an alderman; and is governed by a lord mayor, who is chosen yearly, and presented to the King, or in his absence to his justices, or the barons of the Exchequer at Westminster. Chart. K. Hen. 3. The lord mayor of London, for the time being, is chief justice of gaol delivery; escheator within the liberties, and bailiff of the river Thames, &c. He is a high officer in the city, having all courts for distribution of justice under his jurisdiction, viz. The court of hustings, sheriff's court, mayor's court, court of common council, &c. 2 Inst. 330. King Hen. 4. granted to the mayor and commonalty of London the assise of bread, beer, ale, &c. and victuals, and things saleable in the city. In London every day, except Sunday, is a market overt, for the buying and selling of goods and merchandise. 5 Rep. 85. But no person, not being a freeman of London, shall keep any shop or other place to put to sale by retail any goods or wares, or use any handicraft trade for hire, gain or sale within the city, upon pain of forfeiting 5 l. 8 Rep. 124. And persons making ill and unserviceable goods in London, the chief officers of the company may seize and carry them to the Guildhall, and have the goods tried by a jury; and if found defective, they may break them, &c. Trin. 34 Car. 2. B. R. A person must be a freeman of London to be intitled to carry on merchandise there. Chart. Car. 1. Where a woman exerciseth a trade in London, wherein her husband doth not intermeddle, by the custom she shall have all advantages, and be sued as a feme sole merchant: but if the husband meddle with the trade of the wife, or carry on the same trade, it is otherwise. 1 Cro. 63. 3 Keb. 902. There are three ways to be a freeman of London; by servitude of an apprenticeship; by birthright, as being the son of a freeman: and by redemption, i. e. by order of the court of aldermen. Ibid. 126. 4 Mod. 145. The customs of London are against the Common law, and made good by parliament. 4 Inst. 249. But to set forth a custom or usage in the city of London, it must be said antiqua civitas, or it will not be good. 2 Leon. 99.

By Magna Charta the city of London shall have all their ancient usages, liberties and customs, which they have used to enjoy; and they are confirmed to them by that statute. 9 Hen. 3. c. 9. and 2 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 8. And there is a custom in London to punish by information in the mayor's court, in the name of the common serjeant of the city, assaults on aldermen, and affronting language, &c. Farress. Rep. 28, 29. Upon the custom of London concerning the payment of wharfage, &c. by every freeman to the corporation, the trial shall not be by the mouth of the recorder, as customs generally are, but by the country, and a jury from Surrey adjoining. Moor, cap. 129. An arrest may be made in London on the plaintiff's entering his plaint in either of the counters, and a serjeant of London need not shew his mace when he arrests one: and the liberties of the city extend to the suburbs and Temple-Bar. Jenk. Cent. 291.

The mayor of London is to cause errors, defaults, and misprisions there to be redressed, under the penalty of 1000 marks; and the constable of the Tower shall execute process against the mayor for default, &c. 28 Ed. 3. cap. 10. Citizens and freemen of London may recover debts under 40 s. in the court of requests at Guildhall, commonly called the court of conscience. 1 Jac. 1. c.

14. 3 Jac. 1. c. 15. 14 Geo. 2. c. 10. After the fire of London, a judicature was erected for determining differences relating to houses burnt; and several rules were laid down for rebuilding the city, the several streets, lanes, &c. The lord mayor and aldermen were to set out markets: the number of parishes and churches was ascertained, and a duty granted on coals for rebuilding of the churches, &c. 19 Car. 2. cap. 23. and 22 Car. 2. cap. 11. And the tithes of the parishes in London, the churches whereof were burnt, were appointed; none less than 100 l. per annum, nor above 200 l. per annum to be assessed, and levied quarterly. 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 15.

The lord mayor, &c. is impowered to appoint persons to set out the manner of paving and pitching the streets of London; and also of drains and sewers, and to impose a tax upon houses for maintenance thereof. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 17. Scavengers are to be chosen in London, and within the bills of mortality, in each parish, by the constable, churchwardens, &c. to see that the streets be kept clean; and housekeepers are to sweep and cleanse the streets every Wednesday and Saturday, under penalties, 2 W. & M. sess. 2. c. 2. Persons authorized by the lord mayor, aldermen and common council of London shall have the same power in London and liberties thereof, as commissioners of sewers have in any other county or place. 7 Ann. cap. 9. Commissioners are appointed for supplying the city of London with water from the river Thames, &c. And calling filth into water-courses, incurs 40 s. penalty. 8 Geo. 1. c. 26. But vide the late paving acts.

By a late statute, for regulating elections within the city, it is ordained, That elections of aldermen and common council men, are to be by freemen householders, paying scot and lot, and having houses of the value of 10 l. a year; and none shall vote at election of members of parliament, but liverymen that have been twelve months on the livery, and who are not discharged from payment of taxes, or those who have received any alms, &c. And freemen of London may dispose of their personal estates as they think fit, notwithstanding the custom of the city; but the act mentions such as should be made free after such a time, and others before unmarried, &c. 11 Geo. 1. c. 18. By-law to confine brewers to certain hours to carry out their drink, good. 2 Strange 1085. Apprentices enrolled before the chamberlain, may be discharged by justices where they live. 1 Strange 663. Longellus. Is a word used in Thorn's Chronicle, and it signifies a coverlet. Cowell.

Longitude of a place. In geography, is an arch of the equator intercepted between the first meridian, and the meridian passing through the proposed place; which is always equal to the angle at the pole, formed by the first meridian, and the meridian of the place.

The first meridian may be placed at pleasure, passing through any place, as London, Paris, Teneriff, &c. but with us, it is generally fixed at London; and the degrees of longitude counted from it, will be either east, or west, according as they lie on the east or west side of that meridian.

In other words, to explain the subject in a familiar manner, to those wholly unacquainted with it, as by the the latitude we learn the distance north or south, so by knowing the longitude, we know the distance from any given place, east or west; allowing for the difference of a degree of longitude at the equator (or middle of the globe) and at the arctic circle, &c.

The longitude is, as before described, in other words, the distance of a place, east or west, from that imaginary line drawn from north to south, thro' a place fixed on for that purpose, and called the first meridian, i. e. the meridian, or boundary from whence we reckon, east or west; so that by ascertaining the latitude and longitude of a place, its situation on the natural or artificial globe, with respect to all other places, is known.

For the discovery of the longitude at sea, the Lord Admiral and several others are appointed commissioners, to receive proposals, &c. and if they are satisfied of the probability of such discovery, the commissioners of the navy have power to make bills for any sum not exceeding 2000 l. to make the experiment; and the first discoverer of a method for finding the longitude, is intitled to a reward of 10,000 l. if he determines the same to one degree of a circle, 15,000 l. if to two thirds of that distance, and 20,000 l. if to one half of a degree, to be paid by the treasurer of the navy. 12 Ann. Sess. 2. c. 15. The commissioners for discovering the longitude, may apply part of the 2000 l. ordered for experiments, to be laid out in making a survey, and fixing the longitude and latitude of the chief ports, and headlands, of our coasts, for rendering the discovery at sea useful. See Stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 39. 26 Geo. 2. c. 25.

Lord, (Dominus) Is a word or title of honour, diversely used, being attributed not only to those who are noble by birth or creation, otherwise called Lords of Parliament, and peers of the realm; but to such, so called, by the curtesy of England, as all the sons of a duke, and the eldest son of an earl; and to persons honourable by office, as the Lord Chief Justice, &c. and sometimes to a private person, that hath the fee of a manor, and consequently the homage of the tenants within his manor; for by his tenants he is called Lord. In this last signification, it is most used in our law books; where it is divided into Lord Paramount, and Lord Mesne; and Very Lord, &c. Old Nat. Br. 79. Lord and Vassal. In the time of the feudal tenures, the grantor of land was called the proprietor, or lord; being the person who retained the dominion or ultimate property of the feud or fee: and the grantee, who had only the use of possession, according to the terms of the grant, was stiled the feudatory or vassal, which was only another name, for the tenant or holder of the lands; though, on account of the prejudices we have justly conceived against the doctrine, which were afterwards grafted on this system, we now use the word vassal, opprobriously, as synonymous to slave or bondman. *Black. Loriners, (Fr. Lormiers, from the Lat. laurum) Is one of the companies of London, that make bits for bridles, spurs, and such like small iron ware, mentioned in the stat. 1 R. 2. c. 12.

Lossage. Signifies a flatterer, or sycophant. And Godwin, writing of the Bishop of Notwich says of Bishop Herbert, Sargis in ecclesiis nostrum genitorem lingua. Brompt. Chron. pag. 991.

Lot, A contribution, or duty. See Scot.

Lot or Loth, Is the thirteenth dish, of lead in the mines of Derbyshire, which belongs to the King. Escheat. Ann. 16 Ed. 1.

Lothertwite, or Leperwit, Is a liberty or privilege to take amends of him that defileth your bond-woman without licence, Rassall's Exposition of Words; so that it is an amends for lying with a bond-woman. Cowell.

Lotteries. In late reigns several statutes have been made for raising money for the use of the government, by way of lottery, and the subjecting duties on beer and ale, malt, paper, &c. for the repayment thereof: As the 5 & 6 W. 3. c. 7. to raise one million, by 10 l. tickets, and the fortunate adventurers to have annuities, &c. The 10 Ann. cap. 19. for raising two millions at 6 per cent. interest. The 1 Geo. 1. c. 1. to raise and complete 1,400,000 l. The 3 Geo. 1. c. 4. for raising the sum of 500,000 l. by 3 l. tickets; and annuities of 4 l. per cent. to the fortunate. The 7 Geo. 1. cap. 20. for raising 700,000 l. by lottery, tickets at 10 l. each. And the 8 & 9 Geo. 1. to raise the like sum, &c. The 12 Geo. 1. c. 2. to raise one million, the highest benefit of fortunate adventurers, to be 20,000 l. and blanks of 10 l. tickets to have 7 l. 10 s. attended with annuities at 3 l. per cent. And the 4 Geo. 2. cap. 9. for raising 1,200,000 l. by way of lottery on the same conditions, &c. These lotteries are publicly drawn by commissioners appointed; and the annuities, and interest for prizes and blanks, are paid till redemption by parliament.

By the 8 Geo. 1. c. 2. for suppression of private lotteries, no person shall set up or keep any office of sales of houses, lands, plate, goods, &c. for improvement of small sums of money, or expose to sale any houses or goods by way of lottery, lots, tickets or numbers, or publish proposals relating to the same, &c. on pain of forfeiting 500 l. And adventurers in such sales to forfeit double the sum contributed. Persons keeping offices, of places for such sales of houses, or goods, &c. by way of lottery, cards or dice, and any game to be determined by the lot or drawing, or by any machine or device of chance; and publishing proposals, or delivering out tickets to that end, shall forfeit 200 l. being convicted before a justice of peace, leviable by distress, &c. And justices refusing to do what is required, are liable to 10 l. penalty, by 12 Geo. 2. c. 28. No persons shall sell the chance of any ticket, in a public lottery, for less than the whole time of drawing; nor any shares therein, or receive money on consideration of repayment, if tickets prove unfortunate, &c. on forfeiture of treble the sum received; to be recovered in the courts at Westminster, &c. See 5 Geo. 1. c. 9. Laws against private lotteries extended to Ireland. 29 Geo. 2. c. 7. 30 Geo. 2. c. 5. See 6 Geo. 2. c. 35. 16 Geo. 2. c. 13. 12 Geo. 2. c. 28. 28 Geo. 2. c. 15. And 29 Geo. 2. c. 7. See also Gaming, and Black. Com. 4 V. 168.

Lobe. Provoking unlawful love; was one species of the crime of witchcraft, punishable by statute 1 Jac. 1. cap. 12.

Lourcurus, A ram or bell-wether. Cowell.

Lourgulary, Is the casting any corrupt or poisonous thing in the water, which was lowrgulary, and felony; and some think it a corruption of burglary. Stat. pro Stratis London. Anno 1573.

Loubellers, Are such persons as go out in the night-time with a light and a bell, by the light and noise whereof birds sitting upon the ground become stupified, and so are covered and taken with a net: The word is derived from the Sax. low, which signified a flame of fire. Antiq. Warwick. p. 4.

Lombore, A recompence for the death of a man, killed in a tumult, or, as we say, by the mob. Cowell.

Ludi de Rege & Regina, Playing at cards, so called, because there are Kings and Queens in the pack. Cowell.

Luminare, A lamp or candle, set burning on the altar of any church or chapel; for the maintenance whereof lands and rent-charges were frequently given to parish churches, &c. Kennet's Gloss.

Lunatick, Is defined to be a person, who is sometimes of good and sound memory, and understanding, and sometimes not. Quandam quidem lucidis intervallis; And so long as he hath not understanding, he is Non compos mentis. As a lunatick, without memory, understands not what he does: in criminal cases, his acts shall not be imputed to him; unless he kill or offer to kill the King, when by our old books books he might be guilty of treason, and punished as a traitor; though this is contradicted by the late opinions. 1 Inst. 247. 3 Inst. 46. H. P. C. 10, 43. And it is said, if one who has committed a capital offence, become lunatick and non compos before conviction, he shall not be tried; and if after conviction, that he shall not be executed. 1 Hawuk. P. C. 2. Whilst a man is lunatick, and he doth a criminal act, it is his madness, and not his intention, which is the cause of the action, and actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea; and for that reason, his punishment could not be an example to others. Plowd. 19. 1 Inst. 247. But he who incites a madman or lunatick to do a murder, or other crime, is a principal offender, and as much punishable as if he had done it himself. H. P. C. 43. Kyl. 53.

By the ancient Common law, a dangerous madman may be kept in prison, till he recovers his senses. Bro. Coron. 101. And by a late statute, lunaticks or madmen wandering may be apprehended by a justice's warrant, and locked up and chained if necessary; or be sent to their last legal settlement; and two justices, by order, may charge their estates for their maintenance, &c. Stat. 12 Ann. Sess. 2. c. 23. A lunatick cannot lawfully promise or contract for any thing; and the grants of lunaticks and infants are parallel. 1 Inst. 247. 3 Mod. 301. Every deed made by a lunatick, who is non compos, is voidable; though a lunatick, himself, making a purchase, if he recovers his memory, he may agree to it, and afterwards his heir cannot disagree to it: but otherwise his deeds may be avoided by his heir; except he levy a fine, or do any other act of record, &c. Lit. 405, 406. 4 Rep. 126. The deed of a lunatick shall not be avoidable by himself; for he shall not be allowed to work his own disability, by making himself a madman. 4 Rep. 124. In equity a lunatick may be relieved against his own acts; and where a purchase has been obtained of him, at an under value, or he hath made a settlement, &c. the deeds, fines, &c. in such a case, have been set aside, on a bill brought by the lunatick and his committee. 2 Vern. 678. Abr. Ca. Eq. 278, 279. If a lunatick sue an action, it must be sued in his own name; and if an action be brought against the lunatick, he is to appear by attorney, if of full age, and by a guardian, if under age. 1 Inst. 135.

There are commissions of lunacy, issued out of the Chancery, to examine whether the person be lunatick or not; and to make inquests of his lands, &c. Though if lands are seized by the King, by virtue of a commission of lunacy, and he grants the custody of the lunatick, sine computo reddendo; if he afterwards is of sound memory, he shall have an action of account for the profits. Dyer 25. The King hath the guardianship of the lands of lunaticks; but not the sole interest in granting, and the custody of their lands or bodies; as he hath of idiots: And the King, or other guardian of a lunatick, is accountable to him, his executors, &c. 4 Rep. 124. As a lunatick may recover his understanding, and have discretion enough to dispose and govern his lands, the King shall not have the custody of him and his lands; for after he has recovered his memory and understanding, he is to have his estate at his own disposal. Dyer 302. 3 Salk. 301. The statute 17 Ed. 2. cap. 10. ordains, that the King is to provide that the lands of lunaticks be safely kept, and they and their families maintained by the profits; and the residue shall be kept for their use, and be delivered to them, when they come to their right mind; the King taking nothing to his own use, &c. A lunatick found by inquisition, upon a commission of lunacy, whose person and estate are committed to particular trustees, may not marry before he or she be declared of sound mind, by the Lord Chancellor, &c. If any such do, the marriage is void, by 15 Geo. 2. c. 30. See 4 Geo. 2. c. 10. and Idiot. By the statute 17 Ed. 2. c. 5. Two justices may by warrant directed to the constable, &c. cause such, as by lunacy are so far disordered in their senses, that they may be dangerous to be permitted to go abroad, to be apprehended and kept safely locked up or sent to their last legal settlement. The charges (being proved on oath) of removal, keeping and curing such person, to be paid by order of two justices out of the lunatick's real or personal estate; but if he has none, or not more than sufficient to maintain his family, then to be paid by the parish. Lunacy may be given in evidence, on a plea of non est factum. 2 Strange 1104. See Black. Com. 1 V. 304, 439. 2 V. 291. 3 V. 427. 4 V. 24. 388. Lunda, A weight formerly used here—Lunda angulorum constat de 10 Sticis. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 12.

Lundys, A sterling silver-penny, which had its name from being coined only at London, and not at the country mints. Lounds's Essay on Coin, p. 17.

Lupanatrix, A bawd or strumpet: And by the custom of London, a constable may enter a house, and arrest a common strumpet, and carry her to prison. 3 Inst. 206. —Rex Majori & Vic. London, &c. Intellimus quod plures Roberti & Murdra perpetrantes per receptatores publicas lupanatrices in diversis locis in civitate nostra predicta, &c. Claus. 4 Ed. 1. p. 1. m. 16.

Lupinum caput gerere, Signified to be outlawed, and have one's head's exposed like a wolf's, with a reward to him that shall bring it in. Plac. Coron. 4 Johan. Rot. 2.

Lupulicetum, (Lat.) A hop-garden, or place where hops grow. 1 Inst. 4.

Luthburghs or Luxenburghs, were a base sort of foreign coin, made of the likeness of English money, and brought into England in the reign of King Ed. 3. to deceive the King and his people: on account of which, it was made treason, for any one wittingly to bring any such money into the realm, knowing it to be false. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. 3 Inst. 1.

Lustrings. A company was incorporated for making, dressing, and lustrating alamoses and lustrings in England, who were to have the sole benefit thereof, confirmed by the following stat. And no foreign silks known by the name of lustrings or alamoses are to be imported, but at the port of London, &c. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 43. See Silk.

Luxury. There were formerly various laws to restrain excess in apparel, all repealed by stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 25. But as to excess in diet, there still remains one ancient statute unrepealed, viz. 10 Ed. 3. stat. 3. which ordains, that no man shall be served, at dinner, or supper, with more than two courses; except upon some great holydays there specified, in which he may be served with three. See Black. Com. 4 V. 170, 171. Montesq. Sp. L. B. 7. c. 2 & 4.

Lysfeld, Lef-silver, A small fine or pecuniary composition, paid by the customary tenant, to the lord, for leave to plow or sow, &c. Somn. of Gavilkind.

Lymputta, A lime-pit. Cowell.

Lynemore, Was a doctor both of the Civil and Canon laws, and dean of the arches. He was ambassador for Henry the Fifth into Portugal, anno 1422, as appeareth by the Preface to his Commentary upon the Provincials. Cowell.

Lynn, An act for regulating worsted-weavers and their apprentices in the town of Lynn, &c. See 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 5. for rebuilding the houses there. See 26 Hen. 8. c. 9.

M.

M Is the letter with which persons convicted of manslaughter, are marked on the brawn of the left thumb. 4 H. 7. c. 13.

Mac, In the Irish language, signifies a son, Filius. Litt. Dig.

Macce. See Spices.

Macce-grate, or Macce-griffe, (Maccecarii.) Are such as willingly buy and sell stolen flesh, knowing the same to be stolen. Britton, cap. 29. and Crompton's Justice of Peace, fol. 193. Vide Leges Iner, cap. 20. De carne furtivum veniente. De macegraribus carnis furtivas scientibus, vendantibus & emantibus. Stat. Walliae.

Maccecaris, Maccecarina, (Macella), The flesh-market or shambles. Cowell.

Maccecarinus, A butcher. Cowell. Leg. Ed. Reg. c. 39.

Maccecatillare or Maccecatulare, (from the Fr. Macbecoulir.) To make a warlike device, especially over the gate of a castle, resembling a grate, through which scalding water, or offensive things may be thrown on pioneers or assailants. 1 Inst. 5. a.

Matto, A mafon. Corwell.

Mauckartel, May be sold on Sunday, 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 24.

Madder, To be imported unmixed, 13 & 14 Car. 2. 30. repealed 15 Car. 2. c. 16. stat. 3. To what duties liable, 2 W. & M. c. 5. Tithes of madder settled, 31 Geo. 2. c. 12. 5 Geo. 3. c. 18. Penalty of stealing, or destroying madder roots, 31 Geo. 2. c. 35.

Madding-money, Old Roman coins, sometimes found about Dunstable, are so called by the country people; they seem to retain this name from Magintum, used by the Emperor Antoninus, in his Itinerary, for Dunstable. Camden.

Madrigals, is an old word, signifying country songs. Corwell.

Maerium, (Derived from the Fr. Marefme) Properly signifies any sort of timber, fit for building; feu quodvis materiamen. Clau. 16 Ed. 2. m. 3.

Magbote or Magbote, (From the Sax. Mag, i. e. Cognatus & bote, compensatio) A compensation for the slaying or murder of one's kinsman, in ancient times, when corporal punishments for murder, &c. were sometimes commuted into pecuniary fines, if the friends and relations of the party killed were so satisfied. Leg. Canuti, c. 2.

Magick, (Magia, Necromantia) Witchcraft and sorcery. See Conjuration.

Magister. This title often found in old writings, signified that the person to whom attributed had attained some degree of eminency in scientia aliqua, praesertim literaria; and formerly those who are now called doctors, were termed magistri.

Magistrate, (Magistratus) A ruler, and he is said to be custos utriusque tabulae; the keeper or preserver of both tables of the law. If any magistrate, or minister of justice, is slain in the execution of his office, or keeping of the peace; it is murder, for the contempt and disobedience to the King and the laws. 9 Co. See Black. Com. 1 V. 146, 338. 4 P. 140.

Magna Assisa eligenda, Is a writ directed to the sheriff, to summon four lawful knights before the justices of assize, there upon their oaths to choose twelve knights of the vicinage, &c. to pass upon the great assize, between A. B. plaintiff, and C. D. defendant, &c. Reg. Orig. 8.

Magna Charta, The great charter of liberties granted in the ninth year of King Hen. 3. It is so called, either for the excellency of the laws therein contained, or because there was another charter called the Charter of the Forest established with it, which was the less of the two; or in regard of the great troubles in obtaining it, and the remarkable solemnity in denouncing excommunication and anathema against the breakers thereof: Spelman calls it, Augustissimum Anglicanum Libertatum Diploma & Sacra Anchora. King Edward the Confessor granted to the church and state several privileges and liberties by charter; and some were granted by the charter of King Hen. 1. Afterwards King Stephen, and King Hen. 2. confirmed the charter of Hen. 1. and King Rich. 1. took an oath at his coronation to observe all just laws, which was an implicit confirmation of that charter; and King John took the like oath; this King likewise, after a difference between him and the Pope, and being imboiled in wars at home and abroad, particularly confirmed the aforementioned charter, with further privileges, but soon after broke it, and thereupon the barons took up arms against him, and his reign ended in wars; to whom succeeded King Hen. 3. who in the 37th year of his reign, after it had been several times by him confirmed, and as often broken, came to Westminster-Hall, and in the presence of the nobility and bishops, with lighted candles in their hands, Magna Charta was read; the King all that while laying his hand on his breast, and at last solemnly swearing faithfully and irrevocably to observe all things therein contained, as he was a man, a Christian, a soldier, and a King; then the bishops extinguished the candles, and threw them on the ground; and every one said, Thus let him be extinguish- ed, and sink in hell, who violates this charter: Upon which the bells were set on ringing, and all persons by their rejoicing approved of what was done.

But notwithstanding this very solemn confirmation of this charter, the very next year King Henry invaded the rights of his people, till the barons levied war against him; and after various success, he confirmed this charter, and the Charter of the Forest, in the parliament of Marlbridge, and in the 52d year of his reign. And his son King Edward 1. confirming these charters, in the twenty-fifth year of his reign made an explanation of the liberties therein granted to the people; adding some which are new, called Articuli super Chartas: And Magna Charta was not only then confirmed, but more than thirty times since. Co. Litt. 81.

This excellent statute, or rather body of statute law at that time, so beneficial to the subject, and of such great equity, is the most ancient written law of the land; And it is divided into thirty-eight chapters; the 1st of which after the solemn preamble of its being made for the honour of God, the exaltation of holy church, and amendment of the kingdom, &c. ordains, That the church of England shall be free, and all ecclesiastical persons enjoy their rights and privileges. The 2d is of the nobility, knights-service, reliefs, &c. The 3d concerns heirs, and their being in ward. The 4th directs guardians for heirs within age, who are not to commit waste. The 5th relates to the custody of lands, &c. of heirs, and delivery of them up when the heirs are of age. The 6th is concerning the marriage of heirs. The 7th appoints dower to women, after the death of their husbands, a third part of the lands, &c. The 8th relates to sheriffs and their bailiffs, and requires that they shall not seize lands for debts where there are goods, &c. the surety not to be distrained, where the principal is sufficient. The 9th grants to London, and all cities and towns, their ancient liberties. The 10th orders, that no distress shall be taken for more rent than is due, &c. By the 11th the court of Common Pleas is to be held in a certain place. The 12th gives assizes for remedy, on disseisin of lands, &c. The 13th relates to assizes of darrein presentment, brought by ecclesiastics. The 14th enacts, that no freeman shall be amerced for a small fault, but in proportion to the offence; and by the oaths of lawful men. The 15th, no town shall be distrained to make bridges, &c. but such as of ancient times have been accustomed. The 16th is for repairing of sea-banks and sewers. The 17th prohibits sheriffs, coroners, &c. from holding pleas of the crown. The 18th enacts, that the King's debtor dying, the King shall be first paid his debt, &c. The 19th directs the manner of levying purveyance for the King's house. The 20th concerns castleward, where a knight was to be distrained for money for keeping his castle, on his neglect. The 21st forbids sheriffs, bailiffs, &c. to take the horses or carts of any person to make carriage without paying for it. By the 22d the King is to have lands of felons a year and a day, and afterwards the lord of the fee. The 23d requires weirs to be put down on rivers. The 24th directs the writ precipe in capite, for lords against tenants offering wrong, &c. The 25th declares that there shall be but one measure throughout the land. The 26th, inquisition of life and member, to be granted freely. The 27th relates to knight's-service, petit serjeanty, and other ancient tenures, (taken away together with wardship, &c. by 12 Car. 2.) The 28th directs, that no man shall be put to his law, on the bare suggestion of another, but by lawful witnesses. The 29th, no freeman shall be disseised of his freehold, imprisoned and condemned, but by judgment of his peers, or by law. The 30th requires that merchant strangers be civilly treated, &c. The 31st relates to tenures coming to the King by escheat. By the 32d no freeman shall sell land, but so that the residue may answer the services. The 33d, patrons of abbeys, &c. shall have the custody of them in the time of vacation. The 34th, a woman to have an appeal for the death of her husband. The 35th directs the keeping of the county-court monthly, and also the times of holding the sheriff's turn, and view of frank-pledge. The 36th makes it unlawful to give lands to religious houses in Mortmain. The 37th relates to estnage, and subsidy, to be taken as usual.

And the 38th ratifies and confirms every article of this great charter of liberties. By the stat. 25 Ed. 1. it is ordained, that the great charter shall be taken as the Common law. And all statutes made against Magna Charta, are declared to be void by 43 Ed. 3.

Maiden Lifes, Is when at any assizes no person is condemned to die.

Maiden Bents, A noble paid by every tenant in the manor of Builth, in Com. Radnor, at their marriage; anciently given to the lord for his omitting the custom of Marcheta, whereby he was to have the first night's lodging with his tenant's wife; but it was more probably a fine for a licence to marry a daughter.

Maignagium, (Fr. maignen, i. e. faber ararius) A brasier's shop; tho' some say it signifies a house.—Idem hugo tenebat unum maignagium in foro ejusdem ville, &c. Lib. Ramef. fect. 265.

Maimem or Maphem, (maibemium, from the Fr. me-baigne, i. e. membri mutilationem) Signifies a maim, wound, or corporal hurt, by which a man loseth the use of any member, that is or might be of any defence to him: As if a man's skull be broke, or any bone broken in any other part of the body; a foot, hand, finger, or joint of a foot, or any member be cut off; if by any wound, the sinews be made to shrink; or where any one is castrated; or if an eye be put out, any fore-tooth broke, &c. But the cutting off an ear, or nose, the breaking of the hinder teeth, and such like, was held no maimem; as they were not a weakening of a person's strength, but a disfiguring and deformity of the body. Glauv. lib. 4. cap. 7. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. Britton, cap. 25. S. P. C. lib. 1. cap. 41. By statute, if any one on purpose, by malice fore-thought, and lying in wait, shall cut off the nose, put out the eye, disable the tongue, or cut off or disable any limb or member of any of the King's subjects, with intent to maim or disfigure him, the person offending, his aiders, abettors, &c. are guilty of felony, without benefit of clergy; though no attainder of such felony shall corrupt the blood, or forfeit the dower of the wife, lands or goods of the offender. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 1.

In these cases of maiming, a voluntary act the law judgeth of malice: And if a man attack another, of malice fore-thought in order to murder him with a bill, or any such like instrument, which cannot but endanger the maiming him, and in such attack, happen not to kill but only to maim him, he may be indicted of felony on this statute; and it shall be left to the jury on the evidence, whether there were a design to murder by maiming, and consequently a malicious intent to maim as well as kill, in which case the offence is within the statute. 1 Hawk. P. C. 112. All maimem by the Common law was felony; And it is said that anciently a maimem by castration was punished with death; and other maimems with the loss of member for member; but afterwards no maimem was punished in any case with the loss of life or member, but only by fine and imprisonment, and damages to the party. 3 Inst. 62, 118. S. P. C. 32. H. P. C. 133. For maimem, indictment or an appeal may be had; or in common cases action of trespass, at the plaintiff's election: And maimem shall be under the inspection of the court, to increase damages given by the jury, &c. if the court thinks fit. Sid. 108. Maimem was commonly tried by the judges inspecting the party; and if they doubted whether it were a maimem or not, they used to take the opinion of some able surgeon in the point. Homo maimematus, a man maimed or wounded. See Appeal of Maimem. See Black. Com. 1 V. 130. 3 V. 121. 4 V. 205.

Maii Inductio, An ancient custom for the priest and people of country villages to go in procession to some adjoining wood on a May-day morning; and return in a kind of triumph, with a may-pole, boughs, flowers, garlands, and other tokens of the spring. This May-game, or rejoicing at the coming of the Spring, was for a long time observed, and still is in some parts of England; but there was thought to be so much heathen vanity in it, that it was condemned and prohibited within the diocese of Lincoln, by the good old bishop Grossthead.—Faciunt etiam, ut audivimus, clerici ludos quos vocant inductionem Maii, & festum autumnum, &c. quod nullo modo vos latere possit: Si vestra prudentia super hiis diligenter inquireret, &c.

Mait, (macula.) A coat of mail, so called from the Fr. maille, which signifies a square figure, or the hole of a net: So maille de boubergeons was a coat of mail, because the links or joints in it resemble the squares of a net. Mail is likewise used for the leather bag wherein letters are carried by the post, from bulga, a budget.

Maile, Anciently a kind of money; and silver half-pence were termed mailles. 9 Hen. 5. By indenture in the mint, a pound weight of old sterling silver was to be coined into three hundred and sixty Sterlings or pennies, or seven hundred and twenty mailles or half-pennies, or one thousand four hundred and forty farthings. Lownd's Ess. on Coin 38.

Maiming. See Maimem.

Mainad, A false oath, or perjury.—Si nolis abjurare, emendet ipsum mainad, i. e. Perjurium dupliciter. Leg. Inax. cap. 34.

Maine-porte, (In manu portatum.) Is a small tribute, commonly of loaves of bread, which in some places the parishioners pay to the rector of their church, in recompence for certain tithes. Corwell.

And this mainport bread was paid to the vicar of Blyth, as you may read in the Antiq. of Nottinghamshire, p. 473.

Mainobze, (from the Fr. main, i. e. manus, and ouvrer, operari) Is handy-work; or some trespass committed by a man's hand. 7 R. 2. c. 4. Brit. 62.

Mainour, or Manour, or Meinour, (from the French manier, i. e. manu tractare.) In a legal sense denotes the thing that a thief taketh away, or stealeth. As to be taken with the mainour, Pl. Cor. fol. 179, is to be taken with the thing stolen about him: And again, fol. 194, it was presented, that a thief was delivered to the sheriff or viscount, together with the mainour: And again, fol. 186. If a man be indicted, that he feloniously stole the goods of another, where, in truth, they are his own goods, and the goods be brought into the court as the mainour; and it be demanded of him, what he saith to the goods, and he disclaim them; though he be acquitted of the felony, he shall lose the goods: And again, fol. 149. If the defendant were taken with the manour, and the manour be carried to the court, they, in ancient times, would arraign him upon the manour without any appeal or indictment. Corwell. See Black. Com. 3 V. 71. 4 V. 303.

Mainpernable, That may be let to bail; and what persons are mainpernable appears by the stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 15. See Bail.

Mainpernoys, (manu captores) Are those persons to whom a man is delivered out of custody or prison, on their becoming bound for his appearing, &c. which if he do not do, they shall forfeit their recognizances; and they are called manu captores, because they do as it were manu capere & ducere captivum & custodia vel prisona.

Mainprise, (manu captio, from the Fr. main, i. e. manus & pris, captus) Signifies in our law the taking or receiving of a person into friendly custody, who otherwise might be committed to prison, upon security given that he shall be forth-coming at a time and place assigned; as to let let one to mainprise is to commit him to those that undertake he shall appear at the day appointed. Old Nat. Br. 42. F. N. B. 249.

Manwood makes this difference between mainprise and bail: He that is mainprised is said to be at large, after the day he is set to mainprise, until the day of his appearance; but where a man is let to bail, by any judge, &c. until a certain day, there he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward for the time; and they may, if they will, keep him in prison, so that he that is so bailed shall not be said to be at large, or at his own liberty. Manw. p. 167. A man under mainprise is supposed to go at large, under no possibility of being confined by his sureties or mainperners, as in case of bail. 4 Inst. 179. Mainprise is an undertaking in a certain sum; bail answers the condemnation in civil cases, and in criminal, body for body: Mainprise may be where one is never arrested, or in prison; but no man is bailed, but he that is under arrest, or in prison; so that mainprise is more large than bail. H. P. C. 96. Wood's Inst. 582, 618. Upon a Capias or exigent awarded against a man, he shall find mainprise for his appearance; and if the defendant make default, his manucaptors are to be amerced, &c. And a bill of mainprise, acknowledged and put into court, is good tho' it be not enrolled. Jenk. Cent. 129. There is an ancient writ of mainprise, whereby those who are bailable, and have been refused the benefit of it, may be delivered out of prison; as where persons are imprisoned on suspicion of larceny, or indicted of trespass, before justices of peace, &c. Reg. Orig. 269. F. N. B. 250. 2 Hawk. P. C. 93. See Manucaptio. And Black. Com. 3 V. 128.

Mainmoot, In the North of England is taken for as much as forsworn. Brownl. 4.

Maintainers, Are those that maintain or second a cause depending between others, by disbursing money, or making friends, for either party, &c. not being interested in the suit, or attorneys employed therein. Stat. 19 Hen. 7. c. 14.

Maintenance, (manutentia) Signifies the unlawful upholding of a cause or person, metaphorically drawn from the succouring a young child that learns to go by one's hand; and in law is taken in the worst sense. 32 H. 8. c. 9. Also it is used for the buying or obtaining of pretended rights to lands. Stat. Ibid.

Maintenance is either ruralis, in the country; as where one assists another in his pretensions to lands, by taking or holding the possession of them for him; or where one stirs up quarrels or suits in the country: Or it is curialis, in a court of justice; where one officiously intermeddles in a suit depending in any court, which no way belongs to him, and he hath nothing to do with, by assisting the plaintiff or defendant with money or otherwise, in the prosecution or defence of any such suit. Co. Litt. 368. 2 Inst. 213. 2 Roll. Abr. 115. And he, who fears that another will maintain his adversary, may by way of prevention have an original writ grounded on the statutes, prohibiting him so to do. 1 Hawk. P. C. 225. Reg. Orig. 182.

Who are guilty of maintenance.

Not only he who lays out his money to assist another in his cause, but he that by his friendship or interest saves them that expence which he might otherwise be put to, is guilty of maintenance. Bro. Mainten. 7, 14, 17, &c. And if any person officiously give evidence, or open the evidence without being called upon to do it; speak in the cause, as if of counsel with the party; retain an attorney for him, &c. or shall give any publick countenance to another in relation to the suit; as where one of great power and interest, says that he will spend twenty pounds on one side, &c. or such a person comes to the bar with one of the parties, and stands by him while his cause is tried, to intimidate the jury; if a juror solicits a judge to give judgment according to the verdict, after which he hath nothing more to do, &c. these acts are maintenance. 1 Hawk. 249, 250. But a man cannot be guilty of maintenance, in respect of any money given by him to another, before any suit is actually commenced: Nor is it such, to give another advice, as to what action is proper to be brought, what method to be taken, or what counsellor or attorney to be employed; or for one neighbour to go with another to his counsel, so as he do not give him any money: And money may be lawfully given to a poor man, out of charity, to carry on his suit, and be no maintenance: Attornies may lay out their money for their clients, to be repaid again; but not at their own expence, on condition of no purchase no pay, if they carry the cause or lose it. Fitzb. Mainten. 18. 3 Roll. Abr. 118. 2 Inst. 564.

It is said that if a man of great power, not learned in the law, tells another who asks his advice, that he hath a good title, it is maintenance. 1 Hawk. 250. In case any person who is no lawyer, and that hath no interest in the cause, shall take upon him to do the part of a lawyer; this will be unlawful maintenance. And after a suit is begun, no man may encourage either of the parties, or yield them any aid or help, by money, or the like, but he that hath interest therein: But to lend another money to maintain his law-suit, is no maintenance. 22 H. 6. 6. 19 E. 4. 3. 2 Shep. Abr. 406. If a person hath any interest in the thing in dispute, tho' on contingency only, he may lawfully maintain an action relating to it; as if tenant in tail, or for life, be impleaded, he in reversion or remainder, &c. may maintain the defence of the suit, with his own money; and a lessor may lawfully maintain his lessee. 2 Roll. Abr. 115. A lord may justify maintaining a tenant, in defence of his title; and the tenant may maintain his lord: One bound to warrant lands, may lawfully maintain the tenant impleaded; and a man may maintain those who are enfeoffed of lands in trust for him, concerning those lands, &c. An heir apparent, or the husband of such an heir, may maintain the ancestor in an action concerning the inheritance of the land whereof he is seised in fee; a master maintain his servant, and assist him with money, but not in a real action, unless he hath some of his wages in his hands; and a servant by reason of relation may maintain his master in all things, except laying out his own money in the master's suit. 1 Hawk. 252, 253. 1 Inst. 368.

Of the statute law on this subject.

By the statutes, none of the King's officers shall maintain pleas, or suits, in the King's court, for lands, &c. under covenant to have part thereof, or any profit therein. And clerks of justices are not to take part in quarrels, or delay right, on pain of treble damages. 3 Ed. 1. c. 25. No persons shall take upon them to maintain quarrels, to the let and disturbance of the Common law, by themselves or by any other. 1 Ed. 3. c. 14. and 20 Ed. 3. 4. The King's counsellors, officers or servants, or any other person whatsoever, shall not sustain quarrels by maintenance, upon grievous pain, imprisonment and ransom. 1 R. 2. c. 4. No man may obtain or buy any pretended right or title to any land, unless the seller hath taken the profits a year, or been in possession, on pain of forfeiting the value, &c. And none shall unlawfully maintain any suit concerning lands, or retain any person for maintenance, by letters, rewards or promises, under the penalty of 10 l. for every offence, to be divided between the King and the prosecutor. 32 H. 8. cap. 9.

Of rights and titles within the meaning of the law.

But maintaining suits in the Spiritual court, is not within the statutes relating to maintenance. Cro. Eliz. 594. Tho' maintenance in a court baron, is as much within the purview of the stat. 1 R. 2. as maintenance in a court of record. 1 Hawk. 255. A pretended right to copyhold lands sold, is within the stat. of H. 8. 4 Rep. 26. If A. be owner of land in possession, and another who hath no right granteth the land; altho' the grant upon it be void, yet the grantor and grantee are liable to this statute. 1 Inst. 369. So where he that hath a pretended right, and none in truth, shall get the possession wrongfully, and then sell the land, &c. But a remainder-man in fee, may obtain the pretended title of a stranger. 1 Inst. 369. 3 Inst. 76, 77. And a person who hath good right and title, at the time of the bargain or lease, will not be within the above statute, altho' neither he nor his ancestors have been been in possession thereof, &c. for a year before. Plow. 47. Dyer 74.

Of other acts.

The buying of a lease for years, is within the act: Tho' if a person make such lease to try a title in ejectment, unless it be to a great man; it is out of the statute. 1 Inst. 369. Dyer 374. A lessor having good right to land, but not in possession, made a lease of it, and did not seal it on the land; it was adjudged within the stat. 32 Hen. 8. 1 Leon. 166.

Of a chose in action.

The law will not suffer any thing in action, entry, &c. to be granted over; this is to prevent titles being granted to men of substance, to oppress the meaner sort of people. 1 Inst. 214. And where a bond was given for performance of covenants in a lease, and after the covenants being broken, the lessee assigned both the lease and bond to another, and then the assignee put the bond in suit; this was held maintenance; so it would have been if the lessee had assigned the bond and not the lease, and afterwards the covenants were broken, and the bond put in suit. Godb. 81. 2 Nels. Abr. 1142.

Of prosecuting offenders.

By the common law, persons guilty of maintenance may be prosecuted by indictment, and be fined and imprisoned; or by action, &c. And a court of record may commit a man for an act of maintenance done in the face of the court. Heil. 79. 1 Inst. 368.

For more learning on this subject. see 15 Vin. Abr. tit. Maintenance.

Majority. The only method of determining the acts of many, is by a majority: The major part of members of parliament enact laws, and the majority of electors choose members of parliament; the act of the major part of any corporation, is accounted the act of the corporation; and where the majority is, there by the law is the whole. Stat. 19 Hen. 7. Stud. Compan. 25.

Mayor. A mayor, doth not come from the Lat. major, but from an old English word maier, i. e. potestas. Cowell.

Maisnada. Signifies a family, quasi mansionata.

Maison de Dieu. A monastery, hospital, or almshouse. Stat. 2 & 3 P. & M. cap. 23. 29 Elix. cap. 5, &c. All hospitals, Maisons de Dieu, and abiding places for poor, lame and impotent persons, erected by the statute 39 Elix. c. 5. or at any time since founded, according to the intent of that statute, shall be incorporated and have perpetual succession, &c. 21 Jac. 1. c. 1.

Maisura. A house or mansion; a farm; from the Fr. majon.—Baldwinus Comes Exon. omnibus Baronibus suis & hominibus, dedit Maisuram quam ipse tenet, &c. MS. Carter. pen. Eliam Ashmole Armig.

Majus jus. Is a writ or law proceeding in some customary manors, in order to a trial of right of land: And the entry in the old books is thus: Ad hanc curiam venit A. B. in propria persona sua & dat Domino, &c. ad vidend. Rotul. Curie. Et petit inquirend. utrum ipse habeat Majus jus in uno messuagio, &c. Et super hoc homag. dicunt, &c. Ex Libro MS. Episcop. Heref. temp. Ed. 3.

Make. (Facere.) Signifies to perform or execute; as to make his law, is to perform that law which he hath formerly bound himself to: That is, to clear himself of an action commenced against him by his oath, and the oaths of his neighbours. Old Nat. Brev. 161. Kitchen. 192. Si placitum debiti vel transgressionis vel aliquod placitum fuerit inter vicinos, & defendentes negaverint & vadierint legem versus Invenientem, solebant facere legem cum tertia manu, &c. (Inq. de Consuetud. Manerii de Surton Calfild a tempore Athelstani Regis.) i. e. The defendants were to bring three persons to swear with them. Which law seemeth to be borrowed from the Feudists, who call those men that came to swear for another in this case sacramentalis. Of whom Hotoman saith thus, In verbis Feudal. sacramentalis a sacramento, id est, juramento dicebantur ii, qui quavis rei de qua ambigebatur, testes non fuissent, tamen ex ejus, cujus rei agebatur, animi sententia, in eadem quæ illi verba jurabant, illius videlicet probatis & innocentia confisi, &c. The formal words used by him that makes his law are commonly these, Hear, O ye justices, that I do not owe this sum of money demanded, neither in all nor any part thereof in manner and form declared. So help me God, and the contents of this book. To make services or custom, is nothing else but to perform them. Old Nat. Brev. 14. to make oath is to take oath.

Make Services and Customs. Signifies nothing but to perform them. Old Nat. Br. 14.

Maila. A male, or port-mail, a bag to carry letters, &c. Id. ib.

Malandrinus. A thief or pirate; mentioned in Walsingham, 388.

Malberge. Mons placiti, A hill where the people assembled at a court, like our assizes; which by the Scots and Irish are called Parley-hills. Du Cange.

Malecreditus. Is one of bad credit, who is suspected, and not to be trusted. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 38.

Malediction. (maledictio) A curse which was anciently annexed to donations of lands, made to churches and religious houses—Si quis autem (quod non optamus) hanc nostram donationem infringere temptaverit, perpeffus sit gelidis glaciærum flatibus & malignorum spirituum; terribiles tormentorum cruciatus evolviffe non quiescat, nisi prius in rigius penitentia gemitibus, & pura emendatione emendaverit. Chart. Reg. Athelstani Monast. de Wiltune, Anno 933.—

And we read in a Charter of William de Warren, Earl of Surry: Venientibus contra hæc & destruentibus ea, occurrat Deus in gladio ire & furoris & vindictæ et Maledictionis æternæ: Servantibus autem hæc & defendentibus ea, occurrat Deus in pace, gratia & misericordia & salute æterna. Amen, Amen, Amen.

Malefeasance. (from the Fr. malfaire, i. e. to offend) Is a doing of evil, or transgressing. 2 Cro. 266.

Malfeuzyn. In the North signifies as much as forfezorn, Brownloe's Rep. 4. Hobart's Rep. 8.

Maletent. Is interpreted to be a toll for every sack of wool, by statute: Nothing from henceforth shall be taken for sacks of wool, by colour of maletent, &c. Statute 35 Ed. 1.

Malice. Is a formal design of doing mischief to another; it differs from hatred. 2 Inst. 42. In murder, 'tis malice makes the crime; and if a man having a malicious intent to kill another, in the execution of his malice kill a person not intended, the malice shall be connected to his person, and he shall be adjudged a murderer. Plowd. 474. The words Ex malitia præcogitata are necessary to an indictment of murder, &c. See Murder.

Malice exprefs. See Black. Com. 4 V. 199. Malice implied, ib. 4 V. 200. Malice prepenſe, ib. 4 V. 198, 206.

Malignare. Signifies the same as to maim any one. Qui ordinatum occiderit vel malignaverit emendet ei sicut restum est. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 11.

Malignus. i. e. Diabolus: proh dolor, hunc populum propria de sede malignus.

Malo grato. The doing a thing unwillingly. Liberatatem ecclesie, &c. malo grato stabilierunt, i. e. he being unwilling. Mat. Paris. 1245.

Malt. Bad malt shall not be mingled with good, under penalties; malt is to be three weeks in making and drying; except in June, July and August, and in those months not less than seventeen days; and half a peck of dust must be taken out of every quarter by screening, &c. before it shall be offered to sale, on pain of forfeiting 20 d. per quarter. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 10. Where bad malt is made, or bad malt shall be mixed with good, a constable, by the direction of a justice of peace, may search for the same; and order it to be sold at reasonable price, &c. 11 Jac. 1. cap. 28. A duty of 6 d. per bushel was granted on malt, by Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 21. which by subsequent statutes hath been continued yearly ever since; maltsters are, once a month, to make an entry at the excise office of all malt made, under the penalty of 20 l. and to pay the duty in three months, or forfeit double value: and if any maltsters alter their steeping vessels, without giving notice, or shall use any private cistern, they shall forfeit 50 l. And refusing excise-officers entrance into their houses, &c. forfeit 5 l. Also concealing concealing malt from the sight of the gager, is liable to a penalty of 10 s. per bushel: and wetting barley any where but in the cistern, incurs a forfeiture of 2 s. 6 d. a bushel, &c. But justices of peace have power to mitigate the penalties and forfeitures. 2 Ann. c. 2. 6 Geo. 1. c. 20. Malt made for exportation is discharged from duty; yet must be entered, and kept secrete from other malt; on pain of 50 l. and when made shall be put into store-houses with two locks, and not delivered out without presence of an officer, &c. Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 4. If any malt be brought from Scotland into England, it shall pay 3 d. a bushel more, to make up the English duty, and be entered, and the duty paid before landing, &c. or shall be forfeited. 13 Geo. 1. c. 7. An allowance is made for exporting malt, on certificates of officers, and security given not to re-land it; but if landed in any part of Great Britain, the same to be forfeited, and treble value, &c. by 3 Geo. 2. c. 7. 6 Geo. 2. c. 1. 9 Geo. 2. and 10 Geo. 2. c. 1. Annual statutes are made for laying a duty on malt, mum, cyder and perry. 20 Geo. 2. c. 5. 21 Geo. 2. c. 1. 22 Geo. 2. c. 1. &c. By Stat. 33 Geo. 2. c. 7. An additional duty of 3 d. per bushel was laid upon malt. See Brasum.

Perpetual duties on malt, &c. 33 Geo. 2. c. 7.

Regulation for securing the payment of malt duties, and to prevent mixtures, 3 Geo. 3. c. 13.

Malt-shot, Malt-fet. Some payment for making malt.

—Solverit de malt-shot termino circumscriptis Domini 20 denarios. Somner of Gavelkind, p. 27.

Maltbittles, (from the Fr. malvoillance) Is used in our antient records, for crimes and misdemeanors, or malicious practices.—Ces sont les traisens, felonies, et malveilles faits au nostre seigneur le Roy, et a son peuple per Roger de Mortimer, &c. Record. 4 Ed. 3.

Maltbessa. A warlike engine to batter and beat down walls. Matt. Paris.

Maltbessin, (Fr. mauvais voisin, malus vicinus) An ill neighbour.

Maltbets Jurors. Are understood to be such as use to pack juries, by the nomination of either party in a cause, or other practice. Artic. super Chart. cap. 10.

Malum in se. Our law books make a distinction between malum in se and malum prohibitum. Vaugh. Rep. 332. All offences at Common law generally are mala in se; but playing at unlawful games, and frequenting of taverns, &c. are only mala prohibita to some persons, and at certain times, and not mala in se. 2 Roll. Abr. 355.

Man, (isle of,) French wines, not exceeding 100 tons in one year, may be imported by strangers, 5 El. cap. 5. stat. 46. Liberty given to import cattle and corn into England, 15 Car. 2. c. 7. f. 21. No drawback to be allowed for foreign goods exported to the isle of Man, 12 Geo. 1. c. 28. stat. 21. No goods but of the product of the island to be imported from Man, 12 Geo. 1. c. 28. stat. 22. The Treasury may purchase the isle of Man, 12 Geo. 1. c. 28. f. 25. For carrying into execution a contract made pursuant to 12 Geo. 1. between the commissioners of the Treasury and the Duke and Duchess of Athol, proprietors of the isle of Man, and their trustees for the purchase of the said island, 5 Geo. 3. c. 26.

Mania, Signified formerly an old woman. Gera. of Tith. cap. 95.

Managium, (from the Fr. manage, a dwelling or inhabiting) Is a mansion house or dwelling-place.—Concess. capitale managium meum cap. perimantia, &c. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 82.

Manbote, (Sax.) A compensation or recompence for homicide; particularly due to the lord for killing his man or vassal. Saxons de Cons. Vol. 1. pag. 622. See Lambard in his Explication of Saxon Words, verbo astimatio, and Hoveden, in parte 1^a. Annal. Norw. fol. 344. & Rut.

Manca, Was a square piece of gold coin, commonly valued at thirty pence; and mancausa was as much as a mark of silver, having its name from manca, being coined with the hand. Leg. Canons. But the manca and mancausa were not always of that value; for sometimes the former was valued at six shillings, and the latter as used by the English Saxons was equal in value to our half crown. Manca sex solidis astimatur. Leg. H. 1. c. 69. Thorn. In his Chronicle tells us, that mancausa est pondus duorum solidorum et sex denariorum; and with him agrees Du Cange, who says that twenty manca make fifty shillings; Manca and mancausa are promiscuously used in the old books for the same money. Spelm.

Manch, Is sixty shekels of silver, or seven pounds and ten shillings; and one hundred shekels of gold, of seventy-five pounds. Merch. DiB.

Manchester, Its collegiate church, how visitable, 2 Geo. 2. c. 29.

Mancipite, (manceps) A clerk of the kitchen, or caterer; and an officer in the Inner Temple was antiently so called, who is now the steward there, of whom Chaucer, our antient poet, sometime a student of that house, thus writes:

*A manciple there was within the Temple,
Of which all catours might taken ensample.*

This officer still remains in colleges, in the universities. Conwell.

Mandamus, Is a writ issuing out of the court of King's Bench, sent by the King to the head of some corporation, &c. commanding them to admit or restore a person into his place or office, &c. 2 Inst. 40.

It is now an established remedy, and every day made use of, to oblige inferior courts and magistrates to do that justice, which, without such writ, they are in duty, and by virtue of their offices, obliged to do; and is a writ of right, which the superior court is obliged to issue, in the ordinary form, without imposing any terms on him who demands it. 3 New Abr. 528.

But tho' it be a writ of right, yet the court seldom grants it, without giving the party, to whom it is pray'd, a day to shew cause why it should not issue; also such matter must be laid before the court, by which it may appear, that the party is intitled to it. 3 New Abr. 528.

A mandamus lies to restore a mayor, alderman, or capital burghs of a corporation; a recorder, town-clerk, attorney turned out of an inferior court, steward of a court, constable, &c. 11 Rep. 99. Raym. 153. 1 Keb. 549. 2 Nels. Abr. 1148, 1149. By some opinions it doth not lie, to restore a common council-man. 2 Cro. 540. But see 1 Vent. 302. A mandamus may be had to restore a freeman; and also to admit one to the freedom of the city, having served an apprenticeship. Sid. 107. To restore a fellow of the college of physicians, it lies; though not for a fellow of a college, in the universities, if there is a visitor. 1 Lew. 19, 23. It hath been resolved, that a mandamus shall not be granted to restore a fellow or member of any college of scholars or physick, because these are private foundations. Carthew's Rep. 92. And this writ lieth not, for the deputy of an office, &c. yet he who hath power to make such deputy, may have it. Med. C. 18. 1 Lew. 306. It lies not, generally, to elect a man into any office; nor for a clerk of a company, which is a private office; or to restore a barrister expelled a society; a proctor, &c. 2 Lew. 14, 18. 2 Nels. 1150, 1151. But a mandamus may lie to remove persons as well as restore them; by virtue of any particular statute, on breach thereof. 4 Med. 233.

If justices of peace refuse to admit one to take the oaths, to qualify himself for any place, &c. mandamus lies; so to a bishop or archdeacon, to swear a churchwarden; to grant a probate of a will; and to admit an executor to prove a will, or an administrator; to a rector, vicar or churchwarden, to restore a sexton. Wood's Inst. 568. Mandamus lieth to admit a man to take the oath of allegiance, &c. and to admit according to the act of toleration, in order to be qualified to be a dissenting minister. Med. Cap. 310. Also mandamus will lie to the bishop, to grant a licence for a parson to preach, where 'tis denied, and he is in orders for it; and this writ lies to restore a person to university degrees. 2 Ed. Raym. 1206, 1334. But after a man is restored on a peremptory mandamus, he may be displaced again, for the same matters for which he was before removed, and others. Ib. 1283. In the writ of mandamus,

mandamus, the words are to admit or restore, vel causam significare quare, &c. And if a corporation have power to disfranchise a freeman, and they do it accordingly, if a writ is granted to restore him, vel causam significare quare, and they certify a sufficient but false cause, the court of B. R. cannot restore him, but there lies an action for a false return; and if then it be found for him, he shall have a peremptory mandamus, which is usually granted after the first writ; or if he be imprisoned, he may bring action of trespass and false imprisonment, &c. 11 Rep. 99. 5 Mod. 254.

Of judgment on the return.

There is to be judgment upon the return of the writ, before any action of the case may be brought for a false return of a mandamus. 2 Lev. 238. And returns upon writs of mandamus must be certain for the court to judge upon. 11 Rep. 99.

By statute, where any writ of mandamus shall issue out of B. R. &c. the persons required by law are to make their return to the first mandamus; and on the return made thereto, the person suing out the writ may plead to, and traverse all or any of the material facts contained in such return, to which the person making the return shall reply, take issue, &c. And the parties proceed as if action had been brought for a false return; and if judgment be given for the plaintiff, he shall have damages and costs, as in action on the case, &c. 9 Ann. c. 20.

A case has happened, and others of the like kind may happen, where an action could not be brought, nor the return pleaded to, or traversed, under the statute. In such case, it may perhaps be advisable to move the court of King's Bench, for an information, against the person or persons, making a false return, or such a return, as will lay the party, who moved for the mandamus, under the dilemma mentioned above. Case of Battersea parish, about Hilary term, 1769.

All the statutes of jeofails shall extend to writs of mandamus, and proceedings thereon. A person having a mandamus to be admitted to any office or privilege, ought to suggest whatever is necessary to intitle him to be admitted; and if that be not done, or if it is false, it will be good matter to return on the mandamus; and on the return of these writs, as well as others of this nature, there are usually great arguments in favour of liberty, &c. Mod. Ca. 310. It has been held, that several persons cannot have one Mandamus; nor can several join in an Action on the Case for a false Return. 2 Salk. 433. But there has been an instance to the contrary, where the circumstances of the case were such, that required a variety of persons to join in the application, viz. on the late highway act, to compel the justices to nominate a surveyor out of the list, returned by the inhabitants. Case of Battersea parish. In B. R. about Hilary term, 1769.

A writ of mandamus may not be directed to one person, or to a mayor and alderman, &c. to command another to do any act; it must be directed to those only who are to do the thing required, and obey the writ. 2 Salk. 446, 701. This writ is not to be issued before granted by the court; and if the corporation to which the mandamus is sent, be above forty miles from London, there shall be fifteen days between the return and the return of the first writ of mandamus; but if but forty miles, or under, eight days only; and the alias and pluries may be made returnable immediately: also at the return of the pluries, if no return be made, and there is affidavit of the service, attachment shall go forth for the contempt, without hearing counsel to excuse it. Ibid. 434. A motion was made for an attachment, for not returning an alias mandamus; and by Holt Ch. Just. In case of a mandamus out of Chancery, no attachment lies till the pluries, for that is in nature of an action to recover damages for the delay; but upon a mandamus out of B. R. the first writ ought to be returned, though an attachment is not granted without a peremptory rule to return the writ, and then it goes for the contempt, &c. Ibid. 429.

Some modern cases where a mandamus will lie, and where not.

A mandamus lies to admit, restore, or discharge a constable; for he is a publick officer, and one whose office relates to the administration of justice. 2 Roll. Rep. 82. 1 Roll. Abr. 535. 1 Salk. 175.

Mandamus to proceed to election, where a clause for holding over. Stran. 555.

Mandamus may be granted to go to an election, tho' there is a mayor de facto. Stran. 1003.

Granted to go to election, notwithstanding a dubious election de facto. Stran. 1157.

Granted to elect corporation officers, where there were wrongful officers in possession. Stran. 1180.

Granted peremptory on the reversal of a judgment for the defendant. Stran. 697.

Mandamus for a prebend. Stran. 1082. To admit a prebendary. Stran. 159.

Lies for a chaplain where there is no visitor. Stran. 797.

To a university to restore to degrees. Stran. 557.

To restore a schoolmaster. Stran. 58.

For a parish clerk, sexton, scavenger. Stran. 59.

To swear an ale-taster. Stran. 608.

To swear a director of the amicable assurance. Stran. 696.

Mandamus for yeoman of the wood wharf. Stran. 832.

Mandamus to admit a deputy register. Stran. 893.

A principal may have a mandamus to admit his deputy. Stran. 895.

To allow constables their expences of carriages for the troops. Stran. 42, 93.

To reimburse a surveyor of highways. Stran. 211.

And this general jurisdiction and superintendency of the King's Bench, over all inferior courts to restrain them within their bounds, and to compel them to execute their jurisdiction, whether such jurisdiction arises from a modern charter, subsists by custom, or is created by act of parliament, yet being in subsidiaria justitia, has of late been exercised in variety of instances; as a mandamus granted to the quarter-sessions, to give judgment for abating a nuisance.

So a mandamus was granted, to the court of Sandwich, to give judgment in an assault and battery. Mich. 5 Geo. 3.

So a mandamus was granted to the sheriff's court in London, to give final judgment upon a writ of inquiry. Mich. 7 Geo. 1. Baily v. Brown.

So a mandamus was granted, to the bailiff of Andover, to give judgment in a cause there depending; but the court in this case required an affidavit of their refusal, or else it should be presumed that the court would do right. Trin. 2 Geo. 2.

So a mandamus was granted to the corporation of Liverpool, to hold an assembly for doing the publick business, which was making leases. Mich. 8 Geo. 1.

But though these kind of writs, are daily awarded to judges of courts, to give judgment, or to proceed in the execution of their authority, yet they are never granted to aid a jurisdiction, but only to enforce the execution of it; nor are they ever granted where there is another proper remedy.

Mandamus to a judge in nature of a procedendo. Stran. 113.

To justices of peace, to give judgment in an excise case. Stran. 536.

Granted to commit administration generally. Stran. 552.

To take security on articles of the peace. Stran. 835.

Mandamus to the clerk of a company, to deliver books. Stran. 879.

To produce the books, at the next assembly. Stran. 948.

Granted to attend a court-leet. Stran. 1207.

No mandamus lies for a lecturer. Stran. 1592.

Lies not, to swear in one, who has had judgment, on an information against him, for an usurpation. Stran. 625.

To call a vestry, for the election of churchwardens, refused. Stran. 686.

Mandamus lies not, to grant a licence to keep an ale-house. Stran. 881.

Lies not, for an administrator durante minori aetate. Stran. 892.

No peremptory mandamus, pending error, on action for false return. Stran. 983.

No mandamus lies, to insert particular persons in a poor's rate. Siran. 1259.

But though the court of King's Bench be intrusted with this jurisdiction of issuing out mandamus's, yet they are not obliged to do so in all cases wherein it may seem proper, but herein may exercise a discretionary power, as well in refusing as granting such writ; as where the end of it is merely to try a private right; where the granting it would be attended with manifest hardships and difficulties, &c. so even since the statute 11 Geo. 1. c. 4. for obliging corporations to elect officers, it hath been held, that this court hath a discretionary power of refusing a writ for that purpose, but may first receive information about the election, and, if dissatisfied about the right, may send the parties to try it in an information. Hill. 8 Geo. 2. The King v. Mayor and Burgeses of Tintagel in Cornwall.

Mandamus. Was also a writ that lay after the year and day, where in the mean time the writ, called diem clausit extremum, had not been sent out to the eschator, on the death of the King's tenant in capite, &c. And was likewise a writ or charge to the sheriff, to take into the hands of the King all the lands and tenements of the King's widow tenant, who against her oath married without his consent. *F. N. Mandatarj, (mandatarius) Is he to whom a command or charge is given.

Mandate, (mandatum) Is a commandment judicial of the King, or his justices, to have any thing done for the dispatch of justice; of which there is great diversity. Reg. Judic. And we read of the Bishop's mandata to the sheriff, &c. Stat. 31 Edic. c. 9. A mandate may be issued by the King's Bench to swear a churchwarden, or parish clerk, &c. when refused to be sworn by the bishop's minister. March. Rep. 22, 101.

Mandati Dies, (Mandie or Maunday Thursday) The day before Good Friday, when is commemorated and practised the command of our Saviour, in washing the feet of the poor, &c. And our Kings of England, to shew their humility, long executed the antient custom on that day, of washing the feet of poor men, in number equal to the years of their reign, and giving them shoes, stockings and money.

Mandato panes, Loaves of bread given to the poor upon Maunday Thursday. Chartular. Glaston. MS. fol. 29.

Mantenens. Was antiently used for tenentes or tenants; qui in solo alieno manent; and it was not lawful for them or their children, to depart without leave of the lord. Cancil. Synodal. apud Cloverho. anno 822.

Mangouare, Signifies to buy in the market. Leg. Athelred. c. 24.

Mangonellus, A warlike instrument made to cast small stones against the walls of a castle. Cowell.

Mangonus, An engine of war made to cast stones; and it differs from a petrard as follows, viz.

Interca grossos petraras mittit ad intus
Affidus lapides mangonellusque minores.

Maniculus, Was an handkerchief which priests always had in their left hands. Blount.

Mannr, (from the Fr. manier, or maiser, i. e. manu trahere.) To be taken with the manner, is where a thief having stolen any thing, is taken with the same about him, as it were in his hands; which is called flagrante delicto. S. P. C. 179. Such a criminal is not bailable by law: and antiently if one guilty of felony or larceny had been freshly pursued, and taken with the manner, and the goods so found upon him, had been brought into court with him, he might be tried immediately, without any appeal or indictment, and this is said to have been the proper method of proceeding in such manners which had the franchise of infangthefe. H. P. C. 201. S. P. C. 28. 2 Hawk. P. C. 211.

Manning, (manopera) A day's work of a man; and in antient deeds there was sometimes reserved so much rent, and so many mannings.

Mannire, Is where one is cited to appear in court; and stand to judgment there: it is different from bannire; for though both of them signify a citation, one is by the adverse party, and the other by the judge. Leg. H. 1. c. 10. Du Cange.

Mannopus, (manopera) Goods taken in the hands of an apprehended thief. Cowell.

Mannus. A horse, a pad or saddle horse. In the laws of Alfred, we find manstheof, for a horse-stealer. Cowell.

Manor, (manerium) Seems to be derived of the Fr. manoir, habitatio, or rather from manendo, of abiding there, because the lord did usually reside there. Est feudum mobile partim vassalis (quos tenentes vocamus) ob certa servitia concessum; partim Domino in usum familie sue, cum jurisdictione in vassallos, ob concessa prædia reservatum. Quæ vassallis conceduntur, terras dicimus tenementales, quæ domino reservantur dominicales. Totum vero feudum dominium appellatur, olim baronia; unde curia quæ huic præest jurisdictioni bœdæ curia baronis nomen retinet. Skene de verb. signif. saith, It is called manerium quasi manu-vini, because it is laboured by handy-work: it is a noble sort of fee, granted partly to tenants for certain services to be performed, and partly reserved to the use of his family, with jurisdiction over his tenants for their farms. That which was granted out to tenants, we call tenementales; those reserved to the lord, were dominicales: the whole fee was termed a lordship, of old a barony; from whence the court, that is always an appendant to the manor, is called The court baron.

Touching the original of manors, it seems that in the beginning, there was a circuit of ground, granted by the King to some baron or man of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exercise some jurisdiction more or less within that compass, as he thought good to grant, performing such services, and paying such yearly rent for the same, as he by his grant required; and that afterwards this great man parcelled his land to other meaner men, enjoining them such services and rents as he thought good, and so as he became tenant to the King, the inferiors became tenants to him. See Perkin's Reservations 670. and Horne's Mirror of Justices, lib. 1. cap. de Rey Alfred, and Fulbeck, fol. 18. And according to this our custom, all lands holden in fee throughout France are divided into fiefs and arrieri fiefs, whereof the former are such as are immediately granted by the King; the second, such as the King's fundatories, do grant to others. Gregorii Syntagm. lib. 6. cap. 5. num. 3.

In these days, a manor rather significeth the jurisdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or site. For a man may have a manor in gross, (as the law termeth it) that is, the right and interest of a court-baron, with the perquisites thereunto belonging, and another, or others have every foot of the land. Kitchin, fol. 4. Broke, hoc titulo per totum. Bracton, lib. 4. cap. 31. num. 3. divideth munerium into capitale & non capitale. See Fœe.

A manor may be compounded of divers things, as of a house, arable land, pasture, meadow, wood, rent, advowson, court-baron, and such like; and this ought to be by long continuance of time, beyond the memory of man; for at this day a manor cannot be made, because a court-baron cannot now be made, and a manor cannot be without a court-baron, and suitors or freeholders, two at the least; for if all the freeholds, except one, escheat to the lord, or if he purchase all, except one, there his manor is gone causa quæ supra, although in common speech it may be so called. Cowell.

By a grant of the demesnes and services, the manor passeth; and by grant and render of the demesnes only, the manor is destroyed, because the services and demesnes are thereby severed by the act of the party; though it is otherwise, if by act of law, as by partition. 6 Rep. 63. There are two coparceners of a manor; the demesnes are assigned to one, and the services to the other, the manor is gone; but if one die without issue, and the manor descends to her who had the services, the manor is revived again, for the severance was by act in law. 1 Jess. 122. 8 Rep. 79. 3 Salk. 25, 40. A new manor may arise and revive by operation of law. 1 Leon. 204. A manor cannot be without a court-baron: and it must be time out of mind; at this day a manor cannot be made, mede, because a court-baron cannot now be made. 1 Inst. 58, 108. It may contain one or more villages or hamlets; or only great part of a village, &c. And there are capital manors, or honours, which have other manors under them, the lords whereof perform customs and services to the superior lords. 2 Inst. 67. 2 Roll. Abr. 72. There may be also customary manors, granted by copy of court-roll, and held of other manors. 4 Rep. 26. 11 Rep. 17. But it cannot be a manor in law, if it wanteth freehold tenants; nor be a customary manor, without copyhold tenants; so if there are no suitors in a court-baron but one, or there be only one copyholder in a customary manor: for there should be two freeholders, or suitors at least. 1 Inst. 58. Lit. 73. 2 Roll. Abr. 121. But it is said, if there be but one freehold tenant, the seignior continues between the lord and that one tenant. 1 And. 257. 1 Nell. Abr. 524. The custom remains, where tenements are divided from the rest of the manor, the tenants paying their services; and he who hath the freehold of them, may keep a court of survey, &c. Cro. Eliz. 103. See Copyhold, and 15 Vin. Abr. tit. Manor, and Black. Com. 2 V. 90.

Manse, (mansa) An habitation, or farm and land. Spelm. See Mansum.

Manster, A bastard. Covarr.

Manstion, (mansio a manendo) Among the ancient Romans, was a place appointed for the lodging of the prince, or soldiers in their journey; and in this sense we read primam mansionem, &c. It is with us most commonly used for the lord's chief dwelling-house within his fee; otherwise called the capital messuage, or manor place. Stene. Some say it is a dwelling of one or more houses without a neighbour: and mansion-house is taken in law for any house of dwelling of another; in cases of committing burglary, &c. 3 Co. Inst. 64. The Latin word mansio, according to Sir Edward Coke, seems to be a certain quantity of land: hida vel mansia, and mansa, are mentioned in some old writers and charters. Fluta, lib. 6. And that which in ancient Latin authors was termed hida, was afterwards called mansus.—Mansio esse potest constructa ex pluribus domibus vel una, quæ erit habitatio una & sola sine vicino; etiam si alia mansio sit vicinata non erit villa, quia villa est ex pluribus mansionibus vicinata & collata ex pluribus vicinis. Bract. lib. 5. p. 1.

Manlaughter, (homicidium, from the Sax. manslyte) Is the unlawful killing a man without any premeditated malice; as when two persons meet, and upon some falling out, the one kills the other. It is done in a present heat, on a sudden quarrel, and upon a just provocation; and without any deliberate intention of doing mischief: and it differs from murder only, in that it is not done with foregoing malice; and from chancemedley, having no present intent to kill. Stamf. P. C. lib. 1. cap. 9. and Bracton, c. 9. This crime is felony; but for the first time admits of clergy: and there can be no accessaries to this offence before the fact, because it must be done without premeditation. H. P. C. 217. In the laws of Caustus, the same distinction was made between murder and manslaughter, as now; for we find, if a man was killed wilfully and premeditatedly, then the offender was to be delivered to the kindred of the slain, &c. But if on his trial, the fact was proved not to be wilful, then he was resigned to the bishop, &c. Leg. 53.

What it is, that constitutes manslaughter, and the difference between that, and murder.

Manslaughter must be upon a sudden quarrel, where the party guilty does not appear to be master of his temper, by talking calmly on the quarrel, or afterwards in other discourse, whereby the heat of blood may be presumed to be cooled. Crompt. 23. Kel. 56. Therefore if two persons meet together, and in striving for the wall, one of them kills the other, this is manslaughter; and so it is, if upon a sudden occasion, they had gone into the fields and fought; and one had killed the other; for all is one continued act of passion, on the first sudden occasion. 3 Inst. 51, 55. H. P. C. 48. And if two persons who have formerly fought on malice, are afterwards to all appearance reconciled, and fight again on a fresh quarrel, and one of them is killed, it shall not be construed that they were moved on the old grudge, unless it appear by the whole circumstances of the fact. 1 Hawk. P. C. 82. If two men fall out on a sudden and fight, and one breaks his sword, and a stranger standing by lends him another, with which he kills his adversary, it is manslaughter in both. H. P. C. 56. And where a stranger to a person, a man's servant, &c. coming suddenly, sees him fighting with another, and sides with him and kills the other; this is only manslaughter: also if a man's friend is assaulted, and he in vindication of his friend, on a sudden takes up a mischievous instrument, and kills the enemy of his friend, this is manslaughter: so where a person in rescuing another, injuriously restrained of his liberty, by pretended press-makers, &c. kills any of them. H. P. C. 57. Plowd. 101. Kel. 46, 136.

Of officers, &c.

But if the person killed were a bailiff, or other officer of justice, resisted by any one in the due execution of his duty, it would be murder. Kelw. 67, 86. If a master go with malice to kill a person, and his servants being with him know nothing thereof, and then they join in the assault and murder, it is but manslaughter in the servants: though if the master have malice, and he tells his servants of it, and that his intention is to kill the party, and they go with their master; if they kill him, it is murder in both master and servants. Dyer 26. 9 Rep. 66. Plowd. 100. There were two men in an inner chamber, quarrelling, and together by the ears; a brother of one of them standing at the door, that could not get in, cried to his brother to make him sure, and presently after he gave the other a mortal wound; this was held manslaughter in him that stood at the door. Trin. 1 Jac. 1. Shep. Abr. 493. Several persons having forcible possession of a house, afterwards killed the person whom they had ejected, as he was endeavouring in the night forcibly to regain the possession, and to fire the house; and they were adjudged only guilty of manslaughter, notwithstanding they did the fact in maintenance of a deliberate injury, because the party slain was so much in fault himself: yet if in such, or any other quarrel, whether it were sudden or premeditated, a justice of peace, constable, or even a private person, be killed in endeavouring to keep the peace, he who kills him is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. 85.

Of provocation, &c.

It hath been adjudged, that upon a killing on a sudden quarrel, if a man be so far provoked by another, by words or gestures, as to make a push at him with a sword, or strike at him with any other such weapon as manifestly endangers his life, before the other's sword is drawn, and thereupon a fight ensues, and he who made such assault kill the other, it is murder; for by assaulting the other in such a manner, without giving him an opportunity to defend himself, shewed that he intended to kill him: but in case he who draws upon another in a sudden quarrel, make no pass at him till his sword is drawn, and then fighting with him kill him, he is guilty of manslaughter only; because by giving the other time to be on his guard, he shews his intent is not so much to kill, as to combat with the other, according to the common notions of honour. Kel. 61, 131. 1 Hawk. P. C. 81, 82.

As to provocations, &c.

And as to provocations, no trespass, breach of a man's word, or affront by words, &c. will be thought a just provocation to excuse the killing of another. Ibid. 130. Though if upon ill words, as giving the lie, or calling another a son of a whore, both parties suddenly fight, and one kills the other, this is manslaughter: and if one upon angry words assaults another, by pulling him by the nose, and he that is assaulted draws his sword and immediately kills the other, this is but manslaughter; for an indignity was offered to the slayer, from whence he might reasonably apprehend that there might be some further design upon him. Ibid. 55, 60, 135.

If a man is taken in adultery with another person's wife, and the husband draws his sword and presently kills the adulterer; this is a just provocation, and makes it manslaughter. 1 Vent. 158. Raym. 212.

• Punishment of manslaughter, as murder, in particular cases, by statute.

There is manslaughter punishable as murder, by statute: By the 1 Jac. 1. c. 8. If any person shall stab another, not having then a weapon drawn, or not stricken first, so that he dies within six months, although it were not of malice or fore-thought, it is felony without benefit of clergy: But this doth not extend to persons stabbing others se defendendo, or by misfortune, &c. with no intent to commit manslaughter; and the statute relates to the party only, that actually gave the stroke, or stabbed the other, and not to those that were aiding or abetting. H. P. C. 58. A blow given, or weapon drawn at any time during the quarrel, before the thrust or stab given, is within the statute; and drawing out a pistol, and levying it at the party killing, or throwing a pot, bottle, &c. at him, are within the equity of the words, having a weapon drawn. 5 Lev. 255, 256. So if the party killed have a cudgel in his hand; clergy shall be allowed. Godb. 154. And he that is ousted of clergy by this statute must be specially indicted upon it; though even then, the jury may find manslaughter generally: for the statute makes no new offence, but only takes away the benefit of the clergy, which was allowed at Common law. H. P. C. 58, 266. The statute is but a declaration of the Common law; and made to prevent the compassion of juries, who oftentimes were persuaded to believe, that to be a provocation to extenuate the crime of murder, which in law was not. Kel. 55. And on the Statute 1 Jac. 1. of Stabbing, it has been usual to prefer two indictments, one of murder, another upon this statute, and put the prisoner to plead to both; then to charge the jury, first, with the indictment for murder, and if they find it not to be that crime, to inquire on the other bill, because if convicted of either, the offender is excluded his clergy. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 468.

Of accidents happening, from two persons playing together.

Two masters of defence play at hand-sword, and one wounds the other, of which he dies, it is only manslaughter; and it is said not to be felony where they play by the King's command, for that they play by consent to try their manhood, and may be the better able to do the King service upon occasion. 3 Inst. 56, 160. Dalt. 352. Hob. 134. When two persons play at foils, and one kills the other, it is manslaughter. H. P. C. 32, 57. Though if one kill another at wrestling, or shooting in bow and arrow at butts, &c. this will not be manslaughter in the offender. Kelw. 168. These last cases are without an ill intent,

Of inconsiderate acts, without evil intention, from which the death of any one ensues. Et c. contra.

If one shoots off a gun in a highway, or throws a stone over a wall, in a place where people often meet, and a person is killed; or at another in play, and kill him; if done without any evil intention, it is manslaughter. 3 Inst. 57. But if an unlawful act be done with an ill intent, and the act is deliberate, if death happens, it is murder. H. P. C. 32, 44. 3 Inst. 56. Kel. 112. A person shoots at the tame fowl of another, which is an unlawful act, and kills a stander-by, it is murder: if he be shooting at a hare, wild fowl, and not qualified to keep a gun, or to kill game, it is manslaughter: And where he is qualified to keep a gun, it is only chancemedley. 3 Inst. 59. Though in cases of this nature, it ought to be considered how far the unlawful act, doth tend immediately, or by necessary consequence, to the injury of another. H. P. C. 31. Kel. 117. A man drives his cart carelessly, and it goes over a child in the street; if he see the child, and yet drive upon him, it is murder; but if he saw not the child, it is manslaughter. And if a child run cross the way, and the cart runs over him, before it is possible to make a stop, it is per infortunium. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 476. See Chancemedley and Murder.

Manstealing or Kidnapping. The forcible abduction or stealing away of man, woman, or child, from their own country, and selling them into another, was capital, by the Jewish law. Exod. xxi. 16. So by the Civil law it was punished with death. Ps. 48. 15. 1. The Common law of England hath punished it with fine, imprisonment; and pillory. Rayn. 474. 2 Shew. 221. Skin. 47. Comb. 10. and vide Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7. and Black. Com. 4 V. 219.

Manualis Obedientia, Is used for sworn obedience, or submission upon oath. Henricus de Teisdale Rector Ecclesie de G. fecit pro illa Domino Johanni Archiepiscopo Ebor. Manualium Obedientiam apud Ebor. 11 Kal. Maii 1295. Ex Registr. Ebor.

Manu capto, A writ that lies for a man taken on suspicion of felony, &c. who cannot be admitted to bail by the sheriff, or others having power to let to mainprise. F. N. B. 229.

Manual, (Manualis) Signifies what is employed or used by the hand, and whereof a present profit may be made: As such a thing in the manual occupation of one, is where it is actually used or employed by him. Staunder. Prerog. 54.

Manufacture, A commodity produced by the work of the hand; as cloth, &c. Mereb. Dict. All persons may work in manufactures of hemp, or flax, or tapestry. 15 Car. 2. c. 15. Provisions against frauds in the manufactures of woollen, linen, and iron. 1 Ann. Stat. 2. c. 18. 13 Geo. 2. c. 8. Workmen in the woollen manufactures to be paid in money only. 10 Ann. c. 16. Penalties on manufacturers in leather imbezilling their work. 13 Geo. 2. c. 8. Manufacturers in leather shall be paid their wages in money. Ibid. Regulations of the manufacturers in woollen, linen, iron, leather, &c. and for the payment of their wages. 22 Geo. 2. c. 27. Penalty on seducing manufacturers out of the kingdom, and on exporting utensils of the silk and woollen manufactures. Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 13. By the Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 27. Any person employed in working up any woollen, linen, silk, leather or iron manufacture, who shall purloin, imbezil, secret, sell, pawn, exchange, or unlawfully dispose of any of the materials, shall be committed to the house of correction for fourteen days, and whipped; and for a second offence to be committed for not less than three weeks, and whipped. The receiver to forfeit 20 l. or be whipped; and for a second offence 40 l. or be whipped. See Labourers. See Black. Com. 4 V. 160.

Manumission, (Manumissio) Is the freeing a villein or slave out of bondage; which was formerly done several ways: Some were manumitted by delivery to the sheriff, and proclamation in the county, &c. others by charter; one way of manumission was for the lord to take the bondman by the head, and say, I will that this man be free, and then moving him forward out of his hands. And there was a manumission implied; when the lord made an obligation for payment of money to the bondman, or sued him when he might enter without suit, &c. The form of manumitting a person in the time of Will. 1. called The Conqueror, is thus set down.——Si quis velit servum suum liberum facere, tradat eum vicecomiti per manum dextram, in pleno comitatu, & quietum illum clamare debet: a iugo servitutis sue per manumissionem, & ostendat ei libera res portus & vias, & tradat illi libera arma, scilicet lanceam & gladium, & deinde liber homo efficitur. Lamb. Archai. 126.

Manu opera, Stolen goods taken upon a thief, apprehended in the fact. See Mannopus.

Manuopera, Cattle or any implements used to work in husbandry. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. pag. 977. Fleta. lib. 1. p. 52.

Manupastus, Signifies a domestick; Sæpe obvenit in furensi dialecto, pro famulo & serviente domestico. Spelm. He shall be culpable as of a thing done by one of his family, or by his own hand—Erat culpabilis tanquam de manupasto. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 66.

Manups, A foot of full and legal measure. Cowell.

Manure, (colo, melioro) To till, plough, or manure land. Litt. Dic.

Manus, Was anciently used for an oath, and for him that took it as a compurgator. And it often occurs in old records; Tertia, quarta, &c. manu jurare; that is, the party was to bring so many, to swear with him, that they believed what he vouched was true: And we read of a woman accused of adultery; Mulieri hoc neganti purgatio sexta manu extitit indicta, i. e. she was to vindicate her reputation upon the testimony of six compurgators. Reg. Ed. Christ. Cant. If a person swore alone, it was propria manu & unita. The use of this word came probably from its being required at a person's hands, to justify himself; or from laying the hand upon the New Testament, on taking the oath.

Manus mediae & infimae homines, Men of a mean condition, of the lowest degree.—Et plures mediae manus quos ex iustis & rationabilibus causis Rex pater exheredaverat. Radulphus de Diceto sub anno 1112.—Inferioris & infimae manus homo. Idem sub annis 1138, 1185.

Manutententia, Is a writ used in case of maintenance. Reg. Orig. fol. 182 & 189. See Maintenance.

Manwotz, The price or value of a man's life, or head; for of old every man was rated at a certain price, according to his quality, which price was paid to the lord in satisfaction for killing him. Cowell.

March, Earldom of, grants of its lands are to be under the Great Seal. 4 Hen. 7. c. 14.

Marchers or Lords Marchers, Were those noblemen that lived on the Marches of Wales or Scotland; who in times past (according to Camden) had their laws, and potestatem vite, &c. like petty Kings; which are abolished by the stat. 27 H. 8. c. 26. and 1 Ed. 6. c. 10. In old records the lords Marches of Wales were styled Marchianes de Marchia Wallia. See 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 15.

Marches, (marchia, from the Germ. march, i. e. limes, or from the Ft. marque, viz. Signum, being the notorious distinction between two countries, or territories) Are the limits between England and Wales, or between us and Scotland; which last are divided into West and Middle Marches. 4 Hen. 5. c. 7. 22 Ed. 4. c. 8. 24 Hen. 8. c. 9. And there was formerly a court called the Court of the Marches of Wales, where pleas of debt or damages, not above the value of fifty pounds, were tried and determined; and if the council of the Marches held plea for debts above that sum, &c. a prohibition might be awarded. Hill. 14 Car. 1. Cro. Car. 384.

Marchet, (marchetum) Consuetudo pecuniaria, in mancipiorum sive abus maritandis. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 8. This custom with some variation, is observed in some parts of England and Wales, as also in Scotland and the isle of Guernsey: And in the manor of Dinoror in the county of Caermarthen, every tenant at the marriage of his daughter pays 10 s. to the lord, which in the British language is called Gwaschwr Marched, i. e. a maid's fee. The custom for the lord to lie the first night with the bride of his tenant was very common in Scotland, and the North of England: But it was abrogated by Mahom the Third, at the instance of his Queen; and instead thereof a mark was paid to the lord by the bridegroom; from whence it is denominated marcheta mulieris. See Black. Com. 2 V. 83. and tit. Maiden Rents.

Marchlare, To adjoin to, or border upon. Cowell.

Marculus, A hammer, a mallet. Id.

Marden, alias Mawarden in Herefordshire, its meadow and pasture how provided for. 3 Jac. 1. c. 11.

Mares. See Horses.

Marshal. See Marshall.

Marcetum, (Fr. marez, a fen or marsh) Signifies marshy ground, overflowed by the sea or great rivers. Co. Litt. 5.

Marinarius, A mariner or seaman: And marinarius capitaneus was the Admiral or warden of the ports; which offices were commonly united in the same person; the word Admiral not coming into use, till the latter end of the reign of King Ed. 1. before which time the King's letters ran thus:—Rex capitaneo marinariorum & eisdem marinariis salutem. Paroch. Antiq. 322.

Who accountable for losses.

The mariners of a ship are accountable to the master; the master to the owners; and the owners to the merchant, for all damages by negligence, or otherwise. Lex Mercat. or Merch. Compan. 66. It has been held, that if goods are stolen from a master of a ship, whilst his ship is in the river of Thames, he is chargeable; though not when he is gone out of the realm, for a robbery committed at sea: But it is otherwise adjudged, where it was proved there was no negligence in the master. Mitch. 22 Car. 2. 1 Mod. Rep. 85.

What subjects a mariner, to the loss of his wages.

If a mariner be hired, and he deserts the service before the voyage is ended, by the law marine, and by the Common law, he shall lose his wages: And if a ship is lost by tempest, &c. the mariners lose their wages, as well as the owners their freight; and this is to oblige them to use their utmost endeavours to preserve the ship. Leg. Oleron. 1 Sid. 179.

Provision for a wounded mariner.

Where a mariner is wounded in the service of a ship, he is to be provided for, at the charge of the ship; and if his illness is very violent, he shall be left ashore with necessary accommodations, and the ship is not to stay for him; if he recovers, he is intitled to his full wages, deducting what the master expended for him. Leg. Ol. c. 7.

Of the recovery of mariners wages, and other matters, relative thereto.

The Common law hath jurisdiction for mariners wages; and in the Admiralty they may all join, 1 Vent. 146. Perforating mariners and receiving their wages; and forging letters of attorney, &c. or falsely taking out letters of administration, for the receipt of seamen's wages, incurs a forfeiture of 200 l. &c. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 41. A late act hath ordained, That no master of a ship shall retain any seaman or mariner, without a contract in writing for his wages, on pain of forfeiting 5 l. And if a mariner refuse to proceed afterwards on the voyage, he shall forfeit his wages; and on complaint to a justice of peace, he may commit the offender to the house of correction, to be kept to hard labour, not exceeding thirty days, &c. Also mariners absenting from ships, incur a forfeiture of two days pay, for every day's absence, to the use of Greenwich hospital; and leaving the same before discharged in writing, forfeit one month's wages: But this shall not debar any mariner, belonging to a merchant ship, from entering into the King's service, &c. On the arrival of any ship, the master is to pay his men their wages in thirty days, or at the time of their discharge (deducting the penalties imposed) on pain of 20 s. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 36. No persons shall pay to any mariner or common seaman, for a certain time, by any ways or means whatsoever, nor may any such mariner take more wages, than after the rate of 35 s. a month, on pain of forfeiting treble the value of the sum agreed; but but this extends not to seamen hired in voyages, from any parts beyond the seas, to other parts there, or to Great Britain, by 14 Geo. 2. c. 35.

Provisions for shipwrecked seamen, &c.

Masters of British and Irish ships, trading to the chief ports of Spain, are to pay a certain tonnage duty, to persons there on the freight of goods and merchandise; as a contribution for relief of seamen shipwrecked; and other distressed subjects, &c. 9 Geo. 2. c. 25.

A like duty to be paid by all masters of vessels, &c. going from any part of his Majesty's dominions to Leghorn, for relieving mariners that are shipwrecked, and taken in war, by Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 24.

Of exemption from pressing, and relief of seamen's widows and children, &c.

Mariners serving in merchant ships, exempted from being pressed into the King's service, for two years from their first going to sea, and apprentices three years, &c. By the Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 38. for the relief and support of maimed and disabled seamen, and the widows and children of such as shall be killed, slain or drowned in the merchants service, reciting that there is no pension for seamen disabled, &c. in the merchants service, and that they are willing to allow sixpence per month out of their wages for the relief of such as shall be disabled, &c. and the widows and children of such as shall be killed, &c. a corporation is erected, by the name of the president and governors for the relief and support of, &c. who may purchase lands for building an hospital, and are to provide for disabled seamen therein, and to allow pensions to such as they shall think proper, their widows and children. Seamen, who have not served five years in the merchants service, and contributed sixpence per month, not to have any benefit of this act. Seamen in the merchants service to pay sixpence per month, and the master of the ship to retain the same, out of their pay, and pay it over to the receiver of the corporation. Mariners in the East-India company's service, are exempted from the duty, and excluded the benefit of this act. See 13 Geo. 2. c. 17. And see Navy.

Mariners, Wandering up and down, and who shall not settle themselves to work, or have not a testimonial under the hand of a justice, shewing where they landed, and whether to go, &c. Or having such testimonial, if they exceed the time limited more than fourteen days, not being sick in their passage home, &c. it is felony by the Statute 39 Eliz. c. 17. But if they cannot work for want thereof, the two next justices upon their complaint shall take order that they may be provided of work; or otherwise may tax the whole hundred, till relief shall be had. Stat. Ibid. And every parish may be charged for relieving mariners, as for maimed soldiers; and they shall be relieved by the treasurer of the county, &c. 43 Eliz. c. 3. See Black. Com. 4 V. 165.

Marine Forces, While on shore regulated and subjected to Martial law, and to be furnished with quarters, &c. 28 Geo. 2. c. 11. 29 Geo. 2. c. 6. 30 Geo. 2. c. 11.

Mariscus, Is a word used in Domesday-Book, and signifies pains, or locus paludosus, a marshy or fenny ground.

Maritagio amisso per defaultam, Is a writ for the tenant in frank-marriage, to recover lands, &c. whereof he is desorced by another. Reg. fol. 171.

Maritagium, That portion which is given with a daughter in marriage. See Gloss. v. In alio modo accipitur des secundum leges Romanas, secundum quas proprie appellatur dos, id quod cum muliere datur viro, quod vulgariter dicitur maritragium. Lib. 2. c. 18.

Maritagium, or marriage, strictly taken, is that right which the lord of the fee had, to marry the daughters of his vassals after their death; Others tell us, it was that profit which might accrue to the lord, by the marriage of one under age, who held his lands of him by knight's service. This seems plain by the Statute of Merton, c. 7. Maritagium est quod qui infra matrem est, de vero jure pertinet ad dominum fidei.

Maritagium habere, To have the free disposal of an heir in marriage, a favour granted by the Kings of England, while they had the custody of all wards or heirs in minority. Corwell.

Maritime, (maritimus) Signifies sea affairs: any thing belonging to the sea.

Maritima Angliæ, The profit and emolument arising to the King from the sea, which anciently was collected by sheriffs; but it was afterwards granted to the Lord Admiral. Richardus de Lucy dicitur habere maritimam Angliæ. Pat. 8 H. 3. m. 4.

Mark, (marca, Sax. mearc.) Of silver, is now thirteen shillings and four pence: Tho' in the reign of Hen. 1. it was only six shillings and a penny in weight; and some were coined, and some only cut in small pieces; but those that were coined, were worth something more than the others. In former times, money was paid, and things valued oftentimes by the mark; Assignavimus Regin. pro dote sua mille marcas argenti annuatim, 13 s. 4 d. computatis pro marca. Patm. 3 Job. m. 17. We read of a mark of gold of eight ounces, of 6 l. in silver; or as others write 6 l. 13 s. 4 d. Stow's Annal. 32. Rot. Mag. Pipæ, Ann. 1 Hen. 2.

Mark to Goods, Is what ascertains the property or goodness thereof, &c. And if one man shall use the mark of another, to the intent to do him damage, action upon the case lieth. 2 Cro. 471. A penalty is inflicted in this case, by 23 Eliz. c. 8.

Market, (mercatus, from mercando, buying and selling) Is the liberty by grant or prescription, whereby a town is enabled to set up and open shops, &c. at a certain place therein, for buying and selling, and better provision of such victuals as the subject wanteth: it is less than a fair; and usually kept once or twice a week. Brad. lib. 2. cap. 24. v. Inst. 220. And according to Bradon, one market, ought to be distant from another sex leucas (vel miliaria) & dimidium, & tertiam partem dimidia: If one hath a market by charter or prescription, and another obtains a market near it, to the nuisance of the former; the owner of the former may avoid it, 1 Inst. 406. Also where a man has a fair or market, and one erects another to his prejudice, an action will lie: And so it is said of a ferry, 2 Roll. 140. 1 Mod. 69.

The fair or market is taken for the place where kept: And formerly it was customary for fairs and markets to be kept on Sundays; but by statute 27 H. 6. c. 5. no fair or market to be kept upon any Sunday, or upon the feasts of the Ascension, Corpus Christi, Good Friday, All Saints, &c. except for necessary victuals, and in time of harvest: And they ought not to be held in church yards, by 13 Ed. 1. c. 6. All fairs are markets: And there may be a market without an owner; tho' where there is an owner, a butcher cannot prescribe to sell meat in his own house upon a market day; for the market must be in an open place, where the owner may have the benefit of it. 4 Inst. 272. No market shall be held out of the city of London within seven miles: Tho' all butchers, victuallers, &c. may hire stalls and standings in the markets there, and sell meat and provisions, on four days in a week, &c. Cit. lib. 101. In the country, things sold in the markets are to be in the usual place appointed for the sale: But in London every shop is a market overt, for such goods as are put there to be sold, by the trade of the owner; tho' if the sale be in a warehouse, and not publickly in the shop, the property is not altered. 5 Rep. 83. Moor 300. Sed quæ? Sale upon a Sunday, tho' in a fair or market, will not alter the property of the thing sold. This means as to goods stolen, and not the property of the person selling, and which he hath not any legal authority to sell. See inst. Persons that dwell in the country, may not sell wares by retail in a market town, but in open fairs: But countrymen may sell goods in gross there. Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 7.

All contracts for any thing vendible in markets, &c. shall be binding, and sales alter the property, if made according to the following rules, viz. 1. The sale is to be in a place that is open, so that any one that passeth by may see it, and be in a proper place for such goods. 2. It must be an actual sale, for a valuable consideration. 3. The buyer is to know, that the seller hath a wrongful possession of the goods sold. 4. The sale must not be fraudulent, betwixt two, to bar a third person of his right. 5. There is to be a sale, and a contract, by persons able to contract. 6. The contract must be originally, and wholly in the market overt. 7. Toll ought to be paid, where where required by statute, &c. 8. The sale is not to be in the night, but between sun and sun; (tho' if the sale be made in the night it may bind the parties.) A sale thus made shall bind the parties, and those that are strangers, as have a right. 5 Rep. 83.

But it shall not bind the King, for any of his goods sold in market overt; tho' regularly it bindeth infants, feme covert, men beyond sea, and in prison, persons Non compos, &c. 2 Inst. 713. And yet if a sale be made by an infant, or feme covert, where they appear, or are known to be such, (except by a woman covert for such things as she usually trades for, by her husband's consent) it bindeth not. 5 Rep. 83. Sale of goods stolen in London to brokers, &c. alters not the property. 1 Jac. 1. c. 21. And the statutes which ordain, that toll-takers shall be appointed in markets and fairs, to enter in their books the names of the buyers, sellers, vouchers and prices of horses sold, and deliver a note thereof to the buyer, &c. secure the property of stolen horses to the owner, although sold in a fair or market, if he repays what was bona fide paid for the horse. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 7. and 31 Eliz. c. 12.

Every one that hath a market, shall have toll for things sold, which is to be paid by the buyer, and by ancient custom may be paid for standing of things in the market, tho' nothing be sold; but not otherwise: A piepowder court is incident as well to a market as a fair; and proprietors of markets ought to have a pillory and tumbrel, &c. to punish offenders. 2 Inst. 221. 4 Inst. 272. 1 Inst. 281. Keeping a fair or market, otherwise than it is granted, as by keeping them upon two days, when only one is granted; or on any other day than appointed; extorting toll or fees where none are due, &c. are causes of forfeiture. Finch 164. And if a person erects stalls in a market, and does not leave room for the people to stand and sell their wares, so that they are thereby forced to hire such stalls, the taking money for the use of them, in that case, is extortion. 1 Ld. Raym. 149.

Market-Towns, Penalty on persons living in the country, and selling by retail in market-towns. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 7.

Marktzeid, or Marktzeid, Signifies toll of the market; the word Zeid denoting a payment—Et valent per ann. le shreteward & le marktzeid, xviii's in omni terra pertinen. ad honorem de Haulton. Ex Cod. MS. in Bibl. Cotton.

Mark-penny, Was a penny anciently paid at the town of Maldon, by those who had gutters laid or made out of their houses into the streets. Hill. 15 Ed. 1.

Marlborough, The honour of Woodstock granted to the Duke of Marlborough in reward of the victory at Blenheim, &c. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 6. The honours settled upon his posterity, 5 Ann. c. 3. An annuity from the post-office settled on the Duke of Marlborough, 5 Ann. c. 4. For paying the arrears due for building Blenheim-house, 1 Geo. 1. st. 1. c. 12. sect. 34.

Marle, (marla, from the Sax. margel, i. e. medullia) Otherwise called Malin, is a kind of earth or mineral; which in divers counties of this kingdom is used to fertilize land. 17 Ed. 4. cap. 4.

Marleberge, Statutes made there, 52 Hen. 3.

Marlerium, or Marlicum, A marle pit.—Sciatis quod habens libertatem in marleris, &c. Et quod capiant marlam ad terram suam marland. Chart. Roger de la Zouch.

Marque, (from the Saxon mearec signum.) We use the word in the same sense to this day, when we say, Give such a thing a mark or sign; but in our ancient statutes it signifies as much as reprisals, as in stat. 4 H. 5. cap. 7. where marque and reprisals are used as synonyma; and letters of marque are found, in the same signification, in the same chapter. Cowell.

The law of marque in what cases to be used, 27 Ed. 3. st. 2. c. 17. Letters of request and letters of marque shall be granted by the Chancellor to those that are grieved against us, 4 Hen. 5. c. 7. Goods taken on board enemies ships, to be lawful prize, though belonging to foreigners in amity, 14 Hen. 6. c. 7. See Reprisal. See Black. Com. 1 P. 258.

Marquess, or Marquis, (Marchio) Is now a title of honour before an Earl, and next to a Duke: And by the opinion of Hotoman, the name is derived from the German March, signifying originally Cyffus Limitis, or Comes & praefectus limitis. In the reign of King Rich. 2. came up first the title of Marquis, which was a governor of the marches; for before that time, those that governed the marches were called commonly Lords Marches, and not Marquesses, as judge Doderidge has observed in his law of Nobility and Peerage. Seldon's Mare claus. lib. 2. c. 19. A Marquis is created by patent; and anciently by circumference of sword, mantle of state, &c.

Marriage, (maritgium) Is a civil and religious contract, whereby a man is joined and united to a woman, for the ends of procreation; and signifies not only the lawful joining of a man and wife, but also the interest of bestowing a ward or widow in marriage, in our ancient law. Magn. Chart. c. 6.

Maritgium is likewise applied to land given in marriage; and that portion which the husband receives with his wife. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 34. Glanv. lib. 7. c. 1. In this sense there are divers writs, De maritagio, &c. Reg. 171.

There's further a term called Duty of Marriage, signifying an obligation on women to marry; who formerly held lands, charged with personal services, in order to render them by their husbands. Cowell.

Marriage is generally the conjunction of man and woman, in a constant society, and agreement of living together; 'till the contract is dissolved by death or breach of faith, or some notorious misbehaviour, destructive of the end for which it was intended. It is one of the rights of human nature; and was instituted in a state of innocence, for preservation thereof: And nothing more is requisite to a compleat marriage, by the laws of England, than a full, free, and mutual consent between parties, not disabled to enter into that state, by their near relation to each other, infancy, precontract or impotency.

As to the solemnization of marriage, this is regulated by the laws and customs of the nation where we reside; and every state allows such privileges to the parties as it deems expedient, and denies legal advantages to those who refuse to solemnize their marriage, in the manner the state requires; but they cannot dissolve a marriage celebrated in another manner, marriage being of divine institution, to which only a full and free consent of the parties is necessary. Before the time of Pope Innocent III. there was no solemnization of marriage in the church; but the man came to the house where the woman inhabited, and led her home to his own house, which was all the ceremony then used. See 1 Roll. Abr. 359. 1 Sid. 64.

Marriages by Romish Priests, whose orders are acknowledged by the church of England, are deemed to have the effects of a legal Marriage in some instances; but marriages ought to be solemnized according to the rites of the church of England, to intitle to the privileges attending legal marriage, as dower, thirds, &c. And by the statute, popish recusants convicted, married otherwise than according to the orders of the church of England, by a minister lawfully authorized, and in some open church, &c. shall be disabled, the man to be tenant by the curtesy, and the woman to claim her dower, jointure, or widow's estate, &c. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5.

Marriage at Common law, is either in right, or in possession; and marriage de facto, or in reputation, as among Quakers, &c. is allowed to be sufficient to give title to a personal estate. 1 Leon. 53. Wood's Inst. 59. But in the case of a Disseiner, married to a woman by a minister of the congregation, who was not in orders; it was held that when a husband demands a right to himself as husband, by the Ecclesiastical law, he ought to prove himself a husband by that law, to intitle him to it: And notwithstanding the wife, and the children of this marriage, may intitle themselves to a temporal right by such marriage; yet the husband shall not, by the reputation of the marriage, unless he hath a substantial right: And this marriage is not a mere nullity, because by the law of nature the contract is binding; for tho' the positive law of man ordains marriage to be made by a priest, that law only makes this marriage irregular, and not expressly void. 1 Salk. 119. But this is, in some cases, altered by the marriage riage act, viz. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33. The substance of which see infra. Marriages contracted between lawful persons, being solemnized in the face of the church, and consummated, were declared valid, notwithstanding any pre-contract, not consummated, by Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 38. But this was repealed by 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 23. And all marriages solemnized by justices of peace during Oliver's usurpation, were ordained to be good and valid, as if solemnized according to the rites and ceremonies of the church. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 33.

The marriages that are made in an ordinary course, are to be by asking in the church, and other ceremonies appointed by the book of common prayer. 23 Ed. 6. c. 21. By the ordinances of the church, when persons are to be married, the banns of matrimony shall be published in the church where they dwell three several Sundays or holidays, in the time of divine service; and if at the day appointed for their marriage, any man do alledge any impediment; as pre-contract, consanguinity, or affinity, parents not consenting, where under age, &c. why they should not be married, (and become bound with sufficient oaths to prove his allegation,) then the solemnization must be deferred until the truth is tried. Rubrick. And no minister shall celebrate matrimony between any persons without a faculty or licence, except the banns of marriage have been first published as directed, according to the book of Common Prayer, on pain of suspension per triennium; nor shall any minister, under the like penalty, join any persons in marriage, who are so licensed, at any unreasonable times, or in any private place, &c. Canon 62. Also on the granting of licences, bond is to be taken, that there is no impediment of pre-contract, consanguinity, &c. Nor any suit or controversy depending in any Ecclesiastical court, touching any contract of marriage of either of the parties, with any other; that neither of them are of better estate, than is suggested; and that the marriage be openly solemnized in the parish church where one of the parties dwelleth, or the church mentioned in the licence, between the hours of eight and twelve in the morning: Oath is to be likewise made before one of the Doctors of the Commons, that the man and woman live at such a place, are willing to marry, and as to there being no impediment, &c. Licences to the contrary shall be void; and the parties marrying are subject to punishment as for clandestine marriages. Can. 102.

But notwithstanding the canons aforementioned, marriages, especially of persons of quality, are frequently in their own houses, out of canonical hours, in the evening, and often solemnized by others in other churches, than where one of the parties lives, and out of time of divine service, &c.

Parsons, vicars or curates, marrying any persons, or employing other ministers to do it, without publishing the banns of matrimony according to law, or without a licence for the marriage first had and obtained, shall forfeit 100 l. the person so married 10 l. and parish clerks, &c. assisting, knowing it to be so, 5 l. Stat. 2 & 3 W. 3. c. 35. And by a subsequent act, the preceding statute is confirmed; and extends to privileged places; so that if a parson offending be a prisoner in any place, on conviction he shall be removed to the county gaol, there to remain in execution charged with the said penalty of 100 l. &c. 10 Ann. c. 19. Before these statutes, an information was exhibited against certain persons for combination, in procuring a clandestine marriage in the night, without banns or licence, between a maid-servant and a young gentleman who was heir to an estate, the person being in liquor; and they were fined 100 marks, and ordered to be committed till paid; but it doth not appear that the marriage could be made void. Cro. Car. 557.

Marriages are prohibited in Law, and on fasting days, because the mind attending them is not suitable to the humiliation and devotion of that time; yet persons may marry with licences in Law, altho' the banns of marriage may not then be published. And formerly, in popish times, priests were restrained from marriage, and their issue accounted bastards, &c. But on the Reformation, laws were made, declaring that the marriage of priests should be lawful, and their children legitimate; tho' the preambles to those statutes set forth, that it would be better for priests to live chaste, and separate from the company of women, that they might with the more fervency attend the ministry of the gospel. 2 & 3, and 5 & 6 Ed. 6.

All persons of the age of consent to marry, (viz. a man of fourteen and a woman at twelve) who are not prohibited by the Levitical degrees, or otherwise by God's law, may lawfully marry; i. e. subject to the regulations of 26 Geo. 2. c. 33. but marriages made within the degrees, are incestuous and unlawful. 1 Inst. 24. 2 Inst. 684. Marriage is forbidden to those who are of kindred lineally; also between such as are kin in the transverse or collateral line, until the fourth degree be past. So in respect of affinity, which arises betwixt those that are married and the kindred of one of them, as between the husband and the relations of the wife; but this prohibits marriage only to the persons contracted, &c. for the consanguinity to my wife, are of affinity to me only, and not to my brothers, or children by a former wife. 2 Shep. Abr. 414. The son of a father by another wife, and daughter of a mother by another husband, cousin Germans, &c. may marry with each other: a man may not marry his brother's wife, or wife's sister; an uncle his niece, an aunt her nephew, &c. But if a man take his sister to wife, they are baron and feme, and the issue are not bastards, till a divorce. Lewis. c. 18, 20. 2 Inst. 683. 1 Roll. Abr. 340, 357. 5 Mod. 448.

A libel was exhibited against a person for marrying his wife's sister; the defendant suggested for a prohibition, that his wife was dead, and he had a son by her, to whom an estate was descended as heir to his mother; yet the ecclesiastical court proceeded to annul the marriage, and to bastardise the issue: but a prohibition was granted quoad the annulling the marriage, and bastardising the issue, and giving leave to proceed to punish the incest. 2 Salk. 543. 4 Mod. 182. A person may not marry his sister's daughter: and a sister's bastard daughter is said to be within the Levitical law of affinity; it being morally as unlawful to marry a bastard as one born in wedlock, and 'tis so in nature; and if a bastard doth not fall under the prohibition ad penumbram sanguinis non accedat, a mother may marry her bastard son. 5 Mod. 168. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1161.

There are persons within the reason of the prohibition of marriage, tho' not mentioned, and must be prohibited; as the father from marrying his daughter, the grandson from marrying the grandmother, &c. 2 Nelf. ibid. Vaugh. 321.

The temporal courts by the Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 7. are to determine what marriages are within or without the Levitical degrees; and prohibit the spiritual courts if they impeach any persons, for marrying within these degrees. Vaugh. 206. 3 Vent. 9. And it is said, were it not for that statute, we should be under no obligation to observe the Levitical degrees. Ibid. When there is a perpetual impotency; fear or imprisonment, so that there can be no consent; or where persons are pre-contracted; a man or a woman have a wife or husband living, &c. in such cases the marriages are to be adjudged void, as prohibited by God's law. 1 Inst. 235. 2 Inst. 687.

The marriage of a lunatic, or one not of sound mind, is also now void. 15 Geo. 2. c. 30. And altho' matrimonial causes have been for a long time determinable in the ecclesiastical courts, they were not so from the beginning, for as well causes of matrimony as testamentary, were civil causes, and appertained to the jurisdiction of the civil magistrate, until King allowed the clergy cognisance of them. Davie's Rep. 51. If persons married are infra annos nuptiales, the ecclesiastical judges are to judge as well of the assent, whether sufficient, &c. as of the first contract; and where they have cognisance, the Common law judges ought to give credit to their sentences, as they do to our judgments. 7 Rep. 23.

Loyalty or invalidity of marriage is always to be tried by the bishop's certificate; or inquisition taken before him, and examination of witnesses, &c. Dyer 303. If the right of marriage come naturally in question, as in dower, &c. the jurisdiction of marriage is to be tried by the bishop's certificate; but in a personal action, where the right of marriage is not in question, it is triable by a jury.

a jury at Common law. 1 Lev. 41. Whether a woman is married, or she is the wife of such a person, is triable by a jury: and in personal actions it is right to lay the matter upon the fact of the marriage, to make it issuable and triable by a jury, and not upon the right of the marriage, as in real actions and appeals. 1 Inst. 112. 3 Salk. 64. If the marriage of the husband is in question, marriage in right ought to be, and that shall be tried by certificate. 1 Leon. 53. But if on covenant to do such a thing to another upon the marriage of a man's daughter, the party alleges that he did marry her, &c. this shall be tried per pais; for the marriage is only in issue, and not whether he was lawfully espoused. Cro. Car. 102.

Conditions against marrying generally, are void in law: and if a condition is annexed to a legacy; as where money is given to a woman, on condition that she marries with consent of such a person, &c. such a condition is void by the Ecclesiastical law, because the marriage ought to be free without coercion; yet it is said it is not so at the Common law. 2 Nels. Abr. 1162. Poph. 58, 59. 2 Lill. 192.

If persons are married before the age of consent, they may at that age disagree and marry again, without any divorce; tho' if they once give consent when at age, they cannot afterwards disagree; and where they are married before, there needs not a new marriage, if they agree at that age. 1 Inst. 33. 2 Inst. 182. A man at the age of consent, and the woman not; or the woman of age, and the man not; he or she may disagree to the marriage at the other's coming of age to consent, as well as the other, for there is a mutual power of disagreement. 3 Inst. 88. 6 Rep. 22. 1 Danv. Abr. 699. A woman cannot disagree within her age of twelve years, till which the marriage continues; and before her disagreement is void. 1 Danv. 699. Tho' if a man marries a woman under that age, and afterwards she within her age of consent, disagrees to the marriage, and at her age of twelve years marries another; now the first marriage is absolutely dissolved, so that he may take another wife; for altho' the disagreement within the age of consent, was not sufficient, yet her taking another husband at the age of consent, and cohabiting with him affirms the disagreement, and so the first marriage is avoided. Moor 575, 764. If after disagreement of the parties, at the age of consent they agree to the marriage, and live together as man and wife, the marriage hath continuance, notwithstanding the former disagreement; but if the disagreement had been before the ordinary, they could not afterwards agree again to make it a good marriage. 1 Danv. Abr. 699.

If either party be under seven years of age, contracts of marriage are absolutely void; but marriages of Princes made by the state in their behalf, at any age, are held good; tho' many of those contracts have been broken through. Swinb. Matrimon. Contr.

A man contracts to marry with A. and after marries B. whereupon A. sues him in the Spiritual court, and sentence is given that he shall espouse A. and cohabit with her, which he doth, and they have issue, such issue shall inherit, tho' there was no divorce from the marriage of B. Moor 169. 1 Danv. Abr. 700.

By the laws of England, where a mutual contract of marriage in words of present time can be proved, the Ecclesiastical courts will compel the parties to solemnize their marriage, altho' either or both of them are married elsewhere, and children have been the fruits of it; and the children of such marriages are deemed bastards. Reed. Stat. 4 Vol. 192. If the contract is made in words of future time, and this is not carried into execution by consummation, &c. and parties marry elsewhere, the marriage is good. A contract of marriage in the present time is when it is said, I marry you; You and I are man and wife, &c. And such contract is a marriage, and not releasable: but a contract of marriage in future time, which is, where it is said, I will marry you, or I promise to marry you, &c. is releasable. Easter Term, 2 Ann. B. R. Holt Ch. Just. held, that if a contract was in words of future time, as I will take thee, &c. and the man does take her accordingly, and cohabit with her, 'tis a marriage; and the Spiritual Court cannot punish for fornication. Mich. 5 Ann. 2 Salk. 477, 478. And it has been adjudged on a promise of future marriage, if the parties afterwards lie together, the contract passes thereby into a real marriage, in construction of law. Swinb. I will take, and I do take, are words of contract in the future and present time; and the words, I will take thee from henceforth, &c. are as much as I do take thee, and an absolute marriage: If it is demanded of a man, whether he will take the woman to his wife, and he answers, I will; and it is demanded of the woman, if she will take the man to her husband, and she answers, I will; by this marriage, and not spousals, is said to be contracted. Ibid. It is not necessary in contracts of marriage, that both parties use the same words or expressions; for if one party says, I will marry thee, and the other answers, I am content, &c. hereby spousals de futuro are contracted: and if a man say to a woman, I promise to marry thee, and if thou art content to marry me, kiss me, or give me thy hand, if the woman do kiss or give her hand, spousals are contracted. Swinb. p. 210. Also if a ring be solemnly delivered by a man, and put on the woman's fourth finger; if she accepts and wears it, without any words, the parties are presumed to have mutually consented to marriage. Ib. And where the promise of the man is proved, but no actual promise on the woman's side; if she carry herself as one consenting and approving the promise of the man, it is evidence that the woman likewise promised. Pasch. 3 Ann. 3 Salk. 16.

In contracts, it is not necessarily required, that the parties contract matrimony at the same instant, by answering one another; but if there be some distance of time betwixt the promise of the one and the other, the contract may be good, if the party first promising continues in the same mind, until the other party hath promised; but where persons are under age to consent, this is not matrimony, but spousals, if it be either, because at their ages they may dissent; and when the words of the contract are only conditional on one side, and on the other absolute; or if the words are spoken in jest, they are not obligatory. Swinb. If a father or mother promise marriage for their child, the silence of the child being present and hearing the same, hath been adjudged a consent to the contract. Ibid. 69. And contracts of marriage may be by absent parties by mediation of their proctors, or by messengers, or letters; when by proxy, it is by special power of attorney to contract matrimony or spousals for the party in his name, with such a woman, &c. And the proctor says, I do contract matrimony with thee, in the name of such a one, whose proctor I am, &c. or that such a man doth contract matrimony with thee by me his proctor; to which the woman answers, I do take him to my husband, by thee being his proctor; and both parties are to continue in the same mind until the contract is finished, for before that the proctor may be revoked, and then the contract will be void. Swinb.

A promise or contract of marriage, by messenger or letter is good; unless it appear the party dissents before the other consents thereto, and the mutual consent of the other party ought to be sent immediately, or shortly after, or it will not be good. Ibid.

Of the new statute relative to marriage.

By the Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 33. All marriages are to be either in pursuance of banns published, of a licence, or of a special licence. A marriage in pursuance of banns must be solemnized in one of the churches or chapels, where the banns were published. A marriage in pursuance of a licence (except a special licence) must be solemnized in such church or chapel in which the licence shall be granted; all marriages solemnized in any other place than a church or such chapel, unless by special licence, or without publication of banns or a licence of marriage from a person having authority to grant the same, shall be void; and all marriages solemnized by licence, where either of the parties, not being a widower or widow, shall be under the age of 21 years, which shall be had without the consent of father, guardian, &c. shall be void. No parson, vicar, &c. shall be obliged to publish banns of matrimony, unless the persons to be married shall seven days before the time required for the first publication, deliver to him a notice in writing of their true names, and of the house or houses of their respective abode, within such parish, &c. and of the time time they have dwelt in such house or houses. All banns shall be published upon three Sundays next preceding the marriage in the parish church, &c. where the persons to be married shall dwell. If they dwell in divers parishes, then in the parish church, &c. where each of them shall dwell; if in an extraparochial place, then in the parish church, &c. adjoining.

After solemnization of any marriage under a publication of banns, it shall not be necessary in support of such marriage, to give any proof of the actual dwelling of the parties in the respective parishes, &c. wherein the banns of marriage were published, nor shall any evidence be received to the contrary, in any suit touching the validity of such marriage. No licence of marriage shall be granted by any archbishop, bishop, &c. to solemnize any marriage in any other church, &c. than in the parish church, &c. within which, the usual place of abode of one of the parties shall have been, for four weeks immediately before the granting such licence. If both or either of the parties shall dwell in an extraparochial place, then in some parish church adjoining: nothing herein contained shall extend to prevent the archbishop of Canterbury from granting special licences.

Where any marriage is by licence, it shall not be necessary to give any proof, that the usual place of abode of one of the parties, for four weeks as aforesaid, was in the parish, &c. where the marriage was solemnized; nor shall any evidence be received to the contrary, in any suit touching the validity of such marriage: All marriages by licence, where either of the parties, not being a widower, or widow, shall be under the age of 21 years, which shall be had without the consent of his or her father if living, or if dead, of his or her guardian, and if no guardian, of his or her mother if living and unmarried; and if no mother living and unmarried, then of the guardian appointed by the court of Chancery, shall be void. (If guardian or mother be non compos mentis, beyond sea, or refuses to consent, and the Lord Chancellor shall declare it to be a proper marriage, that shall be as effectual as if the guardian, or mother had consented.) All marriages shall be solemnized in the presence of two or more witnesses besides the minister. No minister, &c. solemnizing marriage between persons, both or one of whom shall be under the age of 21 years, after banns published, shall be punishable by ecclesiastical censure for solemnizing such marriage, without consent of parents or guardians, whose consent is required by law, unless such parson, &c. shall have notice of such dissent. And in case such parent or guardian shall openly declare in the church, &c. at the time of such publication, his dissent to such marriage, such publication of banns shall be void.

If any person shall solemnize matrimony in any other place than a church, &c. where banns have been usually published, unless by special licence, or shall solemnize matrimony without publication of banns, unless licence of marriage be first had and obtained, from some person having authority to grant the same, every such person knowingly so offending, shall be transported for 14 years. The prosecution to be within three years. No suit shall be in any ecclesiastical court to compel a celebration of marriage, by reason of any contract whether per verba de presenti, or de futuro. This act not to extend to Jews, Quakers, or Scotland, nor to the marriages of any of the Royal Family.

Of the effect of marriage, by operation of law.

By marriage with a woman, the husband is intitled to all her estate real and personal; and the effects of marriage are, that the husband and wife are accounted one person, and he hath power over her person as well as estate, &c. 1 Inst. 357. The marriage of two persons both knit them so fast together, that the husband cannot give any thing to his wife by deed, during the coverture; but by will and devise he may. 2 Inst. 11. But notwithstanding marriage, in some cases the husband and wife are considered as divers persons; and so one of them may perform an act to another: as when they do it in iure dicitur, where a feoffment is made to one of them, and letter of attorney to the other to give livery to the feoffee, &c. Perk. Sect. 169. And it is the same, if the wife have power to sell land by will; she may sell the same to her husband; and being an executrix, may pay a legacy to him: 1 Inst. 187. All the goods and chattels personal of the wife, are by the marriage given to the husband by law; so that he may dispose of, sell or keep them whilst he lives, and give them away when he dies: and that whether he survives her, or not. 1 Inst. 299. And all the chattels real, she hath in possession in her own right, by the intermarriage the man shall have, and these by act executed in his life-time he may give, grant, &c. and in case he survives her, he will have them absolutely. 2 Shep. Abr. 419 Co. L. 46. b. 300. a. 351. a.

But the husband cannot devise a chattel real, which he had in right of his wife. Co. Lit. 351. a. 1 Rol. 344. l. 15. Pl. Com. 418. b. R. Poph. 5.

If the husband does not dispose of the chattel real, of his wife, and she survive him, she shall have it. Co. L. 46. b. 351. a. 1 Rol. 349. c.

It is observed, that altho' all the husband hath before the coverture is his own, be it goods or lands; and the wife has immediately nothing therein, yet all that is the wife's by their marriage together, is made the husband's. Ibid. The husband shall be tenant by the curtesy of the wife's land, after her death, where he hath issue by her, that might inherit; and the wife shall have dower in her husband's lands, after the death of the husband, &c. Litt. 35. 36. Also as the wife doth partake of the name, so of the nature and condition of the husband by the marriage; for if she be an Earl's wife, she is a Countess, if a Knight's wife, a Lady; and if he be an alien and made a denizen, the wife is so likewise. 39 H. 6. 45. 4 H. 7. 31. Bre. 499.

There being divers advantages by marriage, to the man and the woman; therefore on promise of marriage, damages may be recovered, if either party refuse to marry; but the promise must be mutual on both sides, to ground the action. 1 Salk. 24. And if there be reciprocal promises of marriage, as the woman's promise to the man is a good consideration to make his obligatory; so his promise to her is a sufficient consideration to make hers binding: and though no time for marriage be agreed on, if the plaintiff aver that he had offered to marry the woman, and she refused, action lies against her, and damages are recoverable. Caribow 467. But that averment must be proved.

If a man and a woman make mutual promises of intermarriage, and the man gives the woman 100 l. in satisfaction of his promise of marriage, it is a good discharge of the contract. Mod. Caf. 156. By Statute 29 Car. 2. c. 3. No action shall be brought upon any agreement on consideration of marriage, except it be put in writing, and signed by the party to be charged, &c. And where an agreement relating to marriage must be in writing after a year; and when it need not, vide Skinn. 353. Observe the words, they are, upon any agreement on consideration of marriage, which is essentially different from mutual promises of the parties, to marry each other. —And which latter, are not within the statute. A promise of a father by letter to give money in marriage with his daughter, is a sufficient promise in writing, within the statute. 2 Vent. 361. Where a person promises to give his daughter wedding clothes on the marriage, she shall have two suits, one for the wedding day, and the other for the time of feasting afterwards, according to the dignity of the person. Cro. Car. 53.

Contracts and bonds for money to procure marriage between others, have been held void in equity; and where ever a parent or guardian insists upon private gain, on the marriage of children; covenant or obligation for it, shall be set aside in Chancery as extorted from the husband. 3 Lev. 41. 1 Salk. 156.

If a man before marriage gives bond and judgment to the wife, to leave her worth 1000 l. at his death, in consideration of a marriage portion, this shall be made good out of the husband's estate, and be satisfied before any debts; provided a judgment be not obtained against him, with her consent. An intended husband, in consideration of a marriage, covenanted with the intended wife, that if she would marry him, and she should happen to survive him, he would leave her worth 500 l. The marriage took effect, and the wife survived, and he did not leave her her worth that money; she married a second husband, and he brought an action of debt against the administrator of the first husband for the 500*l*. To which it was objected, that this being a personal action, it was suspended by the marriage, which was a release in law, and so extinct; but the plaintiff had judgment, for the action is not suspended, because during the coverture, there was no cause of action: Nothing in this case is due whilst the coverture takes place, and the debt arises by the death of the husband. Palm. 99. 2 Sid. 58.

A bond was given by a man, reciting, he was to marry A. S. and that if the marriage took effect, and he did survive her, then within three months after her decease, he would pay to the obligee 300*l*. for such uses as the said A. S. by any writing under hand and seal, subscribed and published in the presence of two witnesses should direct and appoint; this marriage bond was adjudged good. 3 Cro. 376. Yelv. 226, 227. A man and a woman intending to intermarry, he enters into articles with her before their marriage, by which he agreed to settle such lands upon her, &c. And in pursuance of those articles she marries him; if he dies before any settlement made, the widow in equity shall have the articles executed, and hold the lands for life, &c. 2 Ventr. 243.

In case articles are entered into before marriage, and afterwards a settlement is made different therefrom, the court of Chancery will set up the articles against it; but where both are finished before the marriage had, at a time when all parties are at liberty, such settlements will be taken as a new agreement between them: This is the general rule, unless the deed of settlement is expressly mentioned to be made in pursuance of the marriage articles, &c. whereby the intent may still appear to be the same. Falbot's Cas. 20. Articles of marriage were made for settling lands on the husband and wife, and the heirs male and female of the body of the husband by the wife, &c. and a settlement was drawn contrary to these articles, long after which the husband suffered a recovery, and devised the land to others; it was here held to be no bar to the heirs female, who were decreed to have the land. 2 Peera Williams 349, 355. Yet it is said, where relief is to be given in Equity on a settlement, it must be only to the persons who claim as purchasers, as the first and other sons; and all remainders after to the husband's heirs of his body, or his right heirs, are voluntary and not to be aided. Abr. Cas. Eq. 385.

Tho' a term to raise daughters portions, payable at the age of eighteen or day of marriage in a marriage settlement is limited in remainder, to commence after the death of the father generally; or if it be in case he die without issue male of his wife, and she dies first without such issue, leaving a daughter, &c. In equity the term is saleable during the life-time of the father, when the daughter is eighteen years old, or married; because every thing hath happened and is past which is contingent, for 'tis impossible there should be issue male of the wife when she is dead; and as to the father's death, that is not contingent, but certain, by reason all men must die: But if there is a contingency not yet happened, as if the daughters are to be unmarried, or not provided for at the time of the father's death, &c. it is otherwise. 1 Salk. 159.

Upon marriages, the settlements generally made of the estate of the husband, &c. are to the husband for life, after his death to the wife for life for her jointure, and to their issue in remainder, with limitations to trustees, to support contingent uses, and leases, to trustees for terms of years, to raise daughters portions, &c. And they are made several ways, by lease and remainder, fine and recovery, covenant to stand seised to uses, &c. Accomp. Cases. 143. These settlements the law is ever careful to preserve, especially that part of them which relates to the wife; of which she may not be divested, but by her own free: And if a woman about to marry, to prevent her husband's disposal of her land, conveys it to friends in trust, and they with the husband after marriage make sale of the same; The court of Chancery will decree the purchaser to reconvey to her. Tobill 43.

Where a woman on marriage, by the man's consent makes over her estate, to be at her own disposal, the product or increase thereof, she can also dispose of: And if the wife has a separate maintenance settled on her by the husband; she may by writing in the nature of a will, give away what she saves, if she dies before the husband; and shall have the same herself, in case she outlives him, and it shall not be liable to his debts. Preced. Canc. 255, 44. But where a settlement is made on the wife, in consideration of her whole fortune and equivalent to it; here the wife's portion, tho' it be out on bonds, &c., which upon the death of the husband by law survive to the wife, shall in equity be subject to the husband's bond-debts, after his decease, to ease the real estate of the heir. Ibid. 63. And it has been likewise held, that if after the wife's death, debts of her's appear; the husband shall be answerable for the debts of the wife, so far as he had any money or estate of hers. Ibid. 256.

If a man in mean circumstances, marry a woman of fortune, upon suggestion of lunacy in the wife by her friends, the court will order her estate to be so settled, that she may not be wrought on by her husband to give it to him from her children, by him or any other husband, &c. Skin. 110.

N. B. She cannot give it to her husband by will. It must be by deed, aided by a fine, or common recovery.

Marriage is dissolved by the natural death of the husband or wife, or by divorce; and where a marriage is dissolved by the death of the husband, dower, &c. survives to the wife, where no settlement is made of the husband's lands, &c. See Baron and Feme and Chancery.

See a very excellent marriage settlement, at the end of Blackstone's Analysis, and in the Appendix to the 2d Vol. of his Commentaries.

By statute, to steal or take away any woman, having an estate in lands or goods, or that is her apparent, against her will, and marry or defile her, is felony. 3 H. 7. cap. 2. And if any persons married, do marry any other person, the former husband or wife being alive, it is felony: But where a husband or wife are abroad beyond sea, &c. seven years, the one not knowing the other to be living; or there is a divorce of the husband and wife, &c. they are excepted out of the act 1 Jac. 1. c. 11. A husband being absent seven years in New England or Ireland, this is beyond the sea, and within the words of the exception of the act, yet in the King's dominions: And if the husband or wife, be abroad seven years, tho' the party marrying here hath notice, that he or she is alive, 'tis no felony; but if the absent person be living in England, Wales or Scotland, and the other party hath notice, 'tis felony by the statute. Hale's Hist. P. C. 693. And in these cases, the first and true wife, is not allowed as a witness against the husband, but the second wife may be admitted to prove the second marriage; for she is not in-law his wife. Ibid. If the first marriage were beyond sea, and the latter in England, the party may be indicted for it here; the latter marriage making the crime: Tho' if the first marriage be in England, and the latter beyond sea, the offender cannot be indicted here. 1 Sid. 171. Kel. 80. If a married man pretend himself to be a single person, and make love to a single woman and marry her; for this injury in the loss of her credit, &c. as to the marriage of any other man, action lies. Skinner's Rep. 119. See Forcible Marriage, &c. Clandestine marriages made void, 26 Geo. 2. c. 33. Suits to compel celebration of marriage discharged, Ibid.

Bartram, Was a lawyer of great account in Henry VIII's days, whose learned readings are extant, but not in print. Lamb. Biremech. lib. 1. cap. 10.

Marshall, (marſcallus) Is a French word, signifying as much as Tribunus militum, with the ancient Romans; and marſcallus may also come from the German marſchalk, i. e. Equitum magister, which Holman in his feuds under verb. Marſchaleu derives from the old word marſch, which signifies a horse; and others make it of the Sax. mar i. e. Equus & ſcaleh, praefectus.

In France there are Marshals of the Camp, called Marſchals of France: And of the nobility and knights, in Poland, &c.

With

With us there are several officers of this name; the chief whereof is the Earl Marshal of England, mentioned in the stat. 1 Hen. 4. c. 7. and 13 R. 2. c. 2. &c. whose office consists especially in matter of war and arms, as well in this kingdom as in other countries; this office is very ancient, having formerly greater power annexed to it than now; it has been long hereditary in the family of the Duke of Norfolk. Vide Lupanus de Magistratibus Francia, lib. 1. c. Mariballus, and Tikus, lib. 2. c. De Constabili Mariballo, &c.

The next is the Marshal of the King's House, otherwise called Knight Marshal; his authority is exercised in the King's palace, in hearing and determining all pleas of the crown, and suits between those of the King's house and other persons within the verge, and punishing faults committed there, &c. 18 Ed. 3. c. 7. 27 Ed. 3. Stat. 2. c. 6. and 2 H. 4. c. 13. Crompt. Jurisd. 192.

Fleta mentions a Marshal of the King's Hall, to whom it belongs, when the tables are prepared, to call out those of the household and strangers, according to their rank and quality, and properly place them. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 15.

There are other inferior officers called Marshal, as Marshal of the Justice in Eyre. Anno 13 Ed. 1. cap. 19. Marshal of the King's Bench, Stat. 5 Ed. 3. c. 8. who hath the custody of the prison called the King's Bench Prison in Southwark. This officer gives attendance upon the court, and takes into his custody all prisoners committed by the court; he is sueable for his absence, and non-attendance is a forfeiture of his office. Hill. 21 & 22 Car. 2. Grants of the King's Bench and Fleet Prisons to be inrolled. 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 27. Office of Marshal and warden of the King's Bench and Fleet, to be executed by those who have the inheritance of those prisons. Ibid. Power of appointing the Marshal of the King's Bench, vested in the crown. 27 Geo. 2. c. 17.

There is also a Marshal of the Exchequer, to whom that court commits the custody of the King's debtors, for securing the debts; he likewise assigns sheriffs, customs and collectors, their auditors, before whom they shall account. Stat. 51 Hen. 3. 5.

Marshall of England, Shall not hold plea of matters touching the Common law, & Ric. 2. c. 5. shall be restrained by superfideas under the privy seal, 13 Ric. 2. st. 1. c. 2. See Constable.

Marshal and Steward of the King's Household and Marshalsea, Of what things they shall hold plea. Art. super Cartas, 28 Ed. 1. st. 3. c. 3. 8 R. 2. c. 5.

Marshalsea, (Marescallia,) Is the court or seat of the marshal; of whom see Crompt. Jur. 120. It is also used for the prison in Southwark; the reason whereof may be, because the marshal of the King's house was wont perhaps to sit there in judgment, or keep his prison. See the stat. 9 Ric. 2. c. 5. and 2 Hen. 4. c. 23. King Charles the First erected a court by letters patent under the great seal, by the name of Curia Hospitalii Domini Regis, &c. which takes cognizance more at large of all causes than the marshalsea could; of which the knight marshal or his deputy are judges. Cowell. See Court of Marshalsea, and Marshal and Steward of the King's Household and Marshalsea.

Marthes and sens, laws concerning them. Vide Fens.

Mart, A great fair for buying and selling goods, holden every year. 2 Inst. 221.

Martial Law, Is the law of war, that depends upon the just but arbitrary power and pleasure of the King, or his lieutenant; for tho' the King doth not make any laws but by common consent in parliament, yet in time of war, by reason of the necessity of it to guard against dangers that often arise, he useth absolute power, so that his word is a law. Smith de Repub. Angl. lib. 2. c. 4.

But the Marshal Law, (according to Chief Justice Hale,) is in reality, not a law, but something indulged rather than allowed as a law; and it relates only to members of the army, being never intended to be executed on others, who ought to be ordered and governed by the laws to which they are subject, tho' it be a time of war. Hale's Hist. L. 39/ And the exercise of Martial Law, whereby any person might lose his life or member, or liberty, may not be permitted, in time of peace; when the King's courts are open for all persons to receive justice. Ibid. 40. Alien enemies invading the kingdom, &c. shall be dealt with and executed by Martial Law. H. P. C. 10, 15. Also soldiers are punished for desertion, &c. in a court Martial by various statutes. See Law of Arms.

Martilagium, For Martyrologium. Monast. tom. 2. pag. 322.

Martyrology, (Martyrologium) A book of Martyrs containing the lives, &c. of those men who die for their religion. Also a calendar or register kept in religious houses, wherein are set down the names and donations of their benefactors, and the days of their death, that upon every anniversary they may commemorate and pray for them: Several benefactors have made it a condition of their beneficence, to be inserted in the Martyrology. Paroch. Antiq. 189.

Martyn waterworks, The shares how taxable. 30 Geo. 2. c. 3.

Maslagium, Anciently used for messuagium, a messuage. — Et unum maslagium in Villa de M. &c. Pat. 16. R. 2.

Masks, The penalty of selling or keeping visor masks. 3 Hen. 8. c. 9.

Masons. To plot confederacies amongst masons, is declared felony by an old statute; and such as assemble thereon shall suffer imprisonment, and make fine and ransom. Stat. 3 H. 6. c. 1.—This was when the nature and secrets of masonry were known only to few. They are now known to many thousands, who are members of the society, and dispersed all over the Christian world.

Masls. See Rapist.

Masser, A priest that says mass. Blount.

Masse Priests. In former times secular priests, to distinguish them from the regulars, were called Masse-Priests, and they were to officiate at the mass, or in the ordinary service of the church: Hence Masse Priest in many of our Spain canons, for the parochial minister; who was likewise sometimes called Masse Theologie, because the dignity of a priest in many cases was thought equal to that of a Thein or lay lord. But afterwards the word Masse-Priest was restrained to stipendiaries retained in chantries, or at particular altars, to say so many masses for the souls of the dead.

Mast, (Gland, pesson) The acorns and nuts of the oak, or other large tree.—Glandis nomine continentur glandes, castanea, fagina, ficus & nucis, & alia quaeque quae eduntur pasci poterunt praeter herbam. Bract. lib. 4. Tempus pasci often occurs for mast-time, or the season when mast is ripe; which in Norfolk they call shacking-time.—Quia habeat decem porcos in tempore de pascion in bosco meo, &c. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. pag. 113, 231. There is a tree called Mast tree; and a mast or sail of a ship.

Master, (magister) Signifies in a general a governor, teacher, &c. And also in many cases an officer. See Servant.

Master and servant. The relation between a master and a servant, from the superiority and power which it creates on the one hand, and duty, subjection, and as it were allegiance on the other, is in many instances applicable to other relations, which are in a superior and subordinate degree; such as lord and bailiff, principal and attorney, owners and matters of ships, merchants and factors, and all others having authority to enforce obedience to their orders, from those whose duty it is to obey them; and whose acts, being conformable to their duty and office, are deemed the acts of their principals.

If a man gives money to his servant to buy goods, and the servant buys upon credit, the master is chargeable. So, a promissory note of a servant will charge his master, if his money came to the master's use, tho' he was not intended to give such note. Ld. Raym. 134.

A master is liable for a nuisance done by his servant. Id. 234.

Tresspass will not lie for taking a Negro. Ib. 146. Nor, Doe, 117, 1274.

For the difference between a servant, and an apprentice, see ib. 1117. An apprentice must be bound and discharged by deed. ib.

Master of the Armory, (Magister Armorum & Armaturæ Regis) Is an officer who hath the care of his Majesty arms and armory, mentioned in the stat. 39 Elix. c. 7.

Master of the Ceremonies, (Magister Admissionum) Is one who receives and conducts ambassadors and other great persons to audience of the King, &c. This office was instituted by King James I. for the more magnificent reception of ambassadors and strangers of the greatest quality.

Master of, or, in Chancery, (Magister Cancellaria) In the Chancery there are Masters, who are assistants to the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, and Master of the Rolls: Of these there are some ordinary, and some extraordinary; the Masters in ordinary are twelve in number, of whom the Master of the Rolls is chief; and some sit in court every day, during term, and have referred to them interlocutory orders for stating accounts, computing damages, and the like; they also administer oaths, take affidavits, and acknowledgments of deeds and recognisances: The extraordinary Masters are appointed to act in the country, in the several counties of England, beyond ten miles distance from London; by taking affidavits, recognisances, acknowledgments of deeds, &c. for the ease of the suitors of the court. By the stat. 13 Car. 2. a publick office was ordained to be kept near the Rolls, for the Masters in Chancery; in which they, or some of them, are constantly to attend, for the administering oaths, caption of deeds, and dispatch of other business: And their fees for taking affidavits, acknowledgment of deeds, exemplifications, reports, certificates, &c. are ascertained by that act; and to take more, incurs disability for such Master to execute his office, and a forfeiture of 100 l. &c.

To empower the high Court of Chancery, to lay out upon government securities, a sum of money therein mentioned, out of the common and general cash in the Bank of England, belonging to the suitors of the said court; and to apply the interest arising therefrom, towards augmenting the incomes of the masters of the said court, 5 Geo. 3. c. 28.

Master of the Court of Wards and Liveries, Was the chief officer of that court, assigned by the King; to whose custody the seal of the court was delivered, &c. as appears by the stat. 33 H. 8. c. 33. But as this court was abolished by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. this office of course dropped with it.

Master of the Faculties, (Magister facultatum) Is an officer under the Archbishop of Canterbury, who grants licences and dispensations, &c. 22 & 23 Car. 2.

Master of the Horse, Is he who hath the ordering and government of the King's stables; and of all horses, racers, and breeds of horses belonging to his Majesty: He has the charge of all revenues appropriated for defraying the expence of the King's breed of horses; of the stable, letters, sumpter-horses, coaches, &c. and has power over the equeries and pages, grooms, coachmen, farriers, smiths, saddlers, and all other artificers working to the King's stables, to whom he administers an oath to be true and faithful: But the accounts of the stables, of liveries, wages, &c. are kept by the avener; and by him brought to be passed and allowed by the court of Green Cloth. The office of Master of the Horse is of high account, and always bestowed upon some great nobleman; and this officer only has the privilege of making use of any horses, footmen, or pages belonging to the King's stables: At any solemn cavalcade he rides next to the King, with a led horse of state. He is the third great officer of the King's household; being next to the Lord Steward, and Lord Chamberlain; and is mentioned in the statute 39 Elix. c. 7. and 1 Ed. 6. c. 5.

Master of the Jewel Office, An officer of the King's household, having the charge of all plate used for the King or Queen's table, or by any great officer at court; and also of all the royal plate remaining in the Tower of London, and of chains and jewels not fixed to any garment. 39 Elix. c. 7.

Master of the Household, (Magister Hospitii Regis) Otherwise called Grand Master of the King's Household, now styled Lord Steward of the Household, which title this officer hath bore ever since Anno 32 H. 8. But under him there is a principal officer still called Master of the Household, who surveys the accounts, and has great authority.

Master of the King's Musters, Is a martial officer in the King's armies, to see that the forces are compleat, well armed and trained; and to prevent frauds, which would otherwise waste the Prince's treasure, and weaken the forces, &c.

Master of the Mint, Is an officer who receives the silver of the goldsmiths, and pays them for it, and oversees every thing belonging to the Mint; he is at this day called Warden of the Mint.

Master of the Ordnance, A great officer, to whose care all the King's ordnance and artillery is committed. 39 Elix. c. 7.

Master of the Posts, Was an officer of the King's court, who had the appointing, placing, and displacing of all such thro' England, as provided post-horses, for the speedy passing of the King's messages, letters, packets, and other business; and was to see that they kept a certain number of good horses of their own, and upon occasion that they provided others for furnishing of those persons who had a warrant from him to take and use post-horses, either from or to the seas, or other places within the realm. He likewise paid their wages, settled their allowances, &c. 2 Ed. 6. c. 3. The stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 34. for erecting one General Post-Office in London, ordains, that there shall be a Master of the Post-Office, appointed by the King, by letters patent, (and of late this office is executed by two jointly) who and his agents, and the persons employed by them, have the sending and carriage of all letters at certain rates; and the post-master is to continue constant posts, and provide persons riding post with post-horses, under penalties, taking 3 d. per mile for the horse, and 4 d. for the guide, every stage, &c. Vide Stat. 9 Ann. c. 10. By the Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 25. Any person may let to hire chaises, or furnish horses for chaises at any stage upon any post-road notwithstanding stat. 9 Ann. c. 10. See Post.

Master of the Revels, An officer to regulate the diversions of dancing and masking, used in the palaces of the King, Inns of Court, &c. and in the King's court is under the Lord Chamberlain.

Master of the Rolls, (Magister Rotulorum) Is an assistant to the Lord Chancellor in the High Court of Chancery, and in his absence hearth causes there, and also at the chapel of the Rolls, and makes orders and decrees. Crompt. Jurisd. 41. His title in his patent is, Clericus parvus. Bagæ, Custos Rotulorum, &c. And he has the keeping of the Rolls of all patents and grants which pass the Great Seal, and the records of the Chancery. He is called Clerk of the Rolls, stat. 12 R. 2. c. 2. and in Forrestue, c. 24. and no where Master of the Rolls, until the 11 H. 7. c. 20. In which respect Sir Tho. Smith, says, he may not unfitly be styled Custos Archivorum. Master of the Rolls enabled to grant leases of the houses belonging to the Rolls. 12 Car. 2. c. 36. Construction of the power, 20 Geo. 2. c. 34. His judicial authority confirmed. 3 Geo. 2. c. 30. In his disposition are the offices of the six clerks, and the clerks of the petty bag, examiners of the court, and clerks of the chapel. 14 H. 8. c. 1. See Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 25. Whereby 1200 l. per Annum is directed to be paid to the Master of the Rolls.

Master of the Temple. The founder of the order of the Knights Templars, and his successors, were called Magni Templi Magistri; and probably from hence he was the spiritual guide and director of the Temple. The Master of the Temple here was summoned to parliament Anno 49 H. 3. And the chief minister of the Temple Church in London, is now called Master of the Temple. Dugd. Warw. 706.

Master of the Wardrobe, (Magister Garderobæ) Is a considerable officer at court, who has the charge and custody of all former Kings and Queens ancient robes remaining maining in the Tower of London; and all hangings, bedding, &c. for the King's houses: He hath also the charge and delivery out of all velvet or scarlet cloth allowed for liveries, &c. And of this officer mention is made in the Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 7. The Lord Chamberlain has the oversight of the officers of the wardrobe.

Mastinus, A great dog, called a mastiff.—Cane & mastini per omnes forellas Angliæ occiduntur. Knyght. lib. 2. cap. 15.

Masts. See Ships and Stores.

Masure, An old decayed house, according to Domesd.

Masure terræ. Sunt in eisdem masuris 60 domus plus quam ante fuerunt. Domesday. In Fr. masure de terre is a quantity of ground, containing about four oxgangs; with us it is taken for Domicilium cum fundo, vel pro fundo cum domicilio competent.

Materia, A great beam, or timber proper for building. Dedi illis materiam & ligna ad omnia necessaria sua, & ad domos suas Edificand. Mon. Ang. Tom 1. pag. 821.

Matricula, A register; as in the ancient church there was matricula clericorum, which was a catalogue of the officiating clergy; and matricula pauperum, a list of the poor to be relieved: Hence to be entered in the register of the universities, is to be matriculated, &c.

Matrimonial causes, Or injuries respecting the rights of marriage, are a branch of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. See Black. Com. 3 V. 92.

Matrimonium, Is sometimes taken for the inheritance descending to a man ex parte matris.—Cum omni hereditate patrimonii & matrimonii sui, &c. Blount.

Matrimony. See Marriage.

Matris Ecclesia, The mother church; and is either a cathedral, in respect of the parochial churches within the same diocese; or a parochial church, with respect to the chapels depending on it, and to which the people resort for sacraments and burials. Leg. H. 1. c. 19.

Matrons, Jury of. When a widow feigns herself with child, in order to exclude the next heir, and a supposititious birth is suspected to be intended; then upon the writ de ventre inspiciendo, a jury of women is to be impanelled to try the question, whether with child, or not. Cro. Eliz. 566. So if a woman is convicted of a capital offence, and being condemned to suffer death, pleads in stay of execution, that she is pregnant, a jury of matrons is impanelled to enquire into the truth of the allegation; and if they find it true, the convict is respited, 'till after her delivery.

Mars and Coverts, &c. In the county of Norfolk, by what persons made. See Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 24.

Matter in Dred, and Matter of Record, Are often mentioned in law proceedings, and differ thus: the first seems to be nothing else but some truth or matter of fact to be proved by some specialty, and not by any record; and the latter is that which may be proved by some record: For example; If a man be sued to an exigent, during the time he was abroad in the service of the King, &c. this is matter in deed, and he that will alledge it for himself, must come before the seire facias for execution be awarded against him; but after that, nothing will serve but matter of record, that is, some error in the process appearing upon the record. There is also a difference between matter of record and matter in deed, and nude matter; the last being a naked allegation of a thing done, to be proved only by witnesses, and not either by record or specialty. Old Nat. Br. 19. Kitch. 216.

Maugre, (From the Fr. Mal, and gre, i. e. Animo iniquo) Signifies as much as to say with an unwilling mind, or in despite of another; as where it is said, that the wife shall be remitted, maugre the husband, that is, whether the husband will or no. * Lit. Sess. 672.

Maum, A soft brittle stone in some parts of Oxfordshire; and in Northumberland they use the word maum for soft and mellow. Plot's Nat. Hist. Oxfordsh. p. 63.

Maund, A kind of great basket or hamper, containing eight bales, or two fats: It is commonly a quantity of eight bales of unbound books, each bale having one thousand pounds weight. Book Rates, pag. 3.

Maundy Thursday, The Thursday before Easter. See Mandati Dies.

Maupigginuin, An old sort of broth or pottage. Cowell.

Maxims in law, Are positions and theses, being conclusions of reason, and universal propositions, so perfect, that they may not be impugned or disputed. For principia probant, non probantur, therefore contra negantem principia non est disputandum. Cowell. Co. Lit. 343.

A maxim is a sure foundation or ground of art, and a conclusion of reason, so called quia maxima est ejus dignitas & certissima autoritas, atque quod maxime probetur, so sure and uncontrollable as that it ought not to be questioned; and what is elsewhere called a principle, and is all one with a rule, a common ground, postulatum or axiom. Co. Lit. 10. b. 11. a.

Maxims are the foundations of the law, and conclusions of reason; therefore ought not to be impugned; but always to be admitted; but they may by reason be conferred and compared the one with the other, tho' they do not vary; or it may be discussed by reason which thing is nearest the maxim, and the mean between the maxims; and which is not; but the maxims can never be impeached or impugned, but ought always to be observed, and held as firm principles and authorities of themselves. Pl. C. 27. b.

The alterations of any of the maxims of the Common law are dangerous. 2 Inst. 210.

The laws of all nations are doubtless raised out of the Civil law, as all governments are sprung out of the ruins of the Roman empire; and it must be owned, that the principles of our law are borrowed from the Civil law, therefore grounded upon the same reason in many things. 12 Mod. 482.

Maxims are principles and authorities, and part of the general customs or Common law of the land; and are of the same strength as acts of parliament; when the judges have determined what is a maxim; which belongs to the judges, and not a jury. Terms de Ley. Doct. & Stud. Dial. 1. c. 8. A maxim in law is said to be a proposition of all men; confessed and granted, without argument or discourse. Maxims of the Law are holden for law; and all other cases that may be applied to them, shall be taken for granted. 1 Inst. 11. 67. 4 Rep. The maxims in our books, which are many and various, are such as the following, viz. It is a maxim, That land shall descend from the father to the son, &c. It is a maxim, That as no estate can be vested in the King, without matter of record, so none can be divested out of him, but by matter of record; for things are dissolved as they are contracted. Rep. 1. Cholmley's case. Another, that an obligation, or other matter in writing, cannot be discharged by an agreement by word. And Argumentum ab autoritate fortissimum est in lege. Co. on Lit. 141. It is also a maxim, That if a man have issue two sons by divers wives, and the one of them purchase lands in fee, and die without issue, the other brother shall never be his heir, &c.

Mayor, (Præfatus urbis, anciently meyr, comes from the Brit. mæct, i. e. custodire, or from the old English word maer, viz. potestas, and not from the Lat. major) Is the chief governor or magistrate of a city or town; as the Mayor of London, the Mayor of Southampton, &c. King Rich. 1. anno 1189, changed the bailiffs of London into a mayor; and from that example King John made the bailiff of King's Lynn a mayor, anno 1204. Tho' the famous city of Norwich obtained not this title for its chief magistrate, till the seventh year of King H. 5. anno 1419, since which there are few towns of note, but have had a mayor appointed for government. Spelm. Gloss.

Mayors of corporations are justices of peace pro tempore, and they are mentioned in several statutes; but no person shall bear any office of magistracy concerning the government of any town, corporation, &c. who hath not received the sacrament, according to the church of England, within one year before his election; and who shall not take the oaths of supremacy, &c. Stat. 13 Car. 2. cap. 1. The 10 Ann. cap. 2. prohibited mayors and officers of corporations from going to conventicles, under the penalty of 40 l. &c. But this is altered by 5 Geo. 1. cap. 6. tho' the gown, mace, or other ensigns of magistracy, may not be worn or carried to a conventicle, on pain of disability to enjoy any office, &c. If any one intrudes into, and thereupon executes the office of mayor, a quo warranto information may be brought against him; and he shall be ousted and fined, &c. And no person who hath been or shall be in an annual office in any corporation for one year, shall be chosen into the same office the next year, and obstructing the choice of a successor incurs the penalty of 100 l. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 20. Also if no mayor be elected in a corporation, on the day appointed by charter, by the proper officers, the next in place is to hold a court, and elect one the day following, &c. or in default thereof, the court of King's Bench may compel the electors to choose one, &c. by writ of mandamus, requiring the members who have a right to vote, to assemble themselves on a day prefixed, and proceed to election, or shew cause to the contrary; and mayors, &c. voluntarily absenting on the day of election, shall be imprisoned six months, and be disabled to hold any office in the corporation. 11 Geo. 1. c. 4.

The authority of mayors is contained in the following particulars: The statute 2 Ed. 3. c. 3. gives power to mayors to arrest persons carrying offensive weapons in fairs, markets, &c. to make affrays, and the disturbance of the peace. By Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 4. Mayors, &c. have power to set the price of ale and beer: And they are authorized to convict persons selling ale without licence; and also to levy the penalties on the offender by distress, &c. 3 Car. 1. c. 3. And they are to cause quart and pint pots for the selling of ale, to be examined whether they hold their full measure; and to mark them, under the penalty of 5 l. 11 Geo. 2. c. 15. Mayors, bailiffs, and lords of leets, are to regulate the assize of bread, and examine into the goodness thereof; and if bakers make unlawful bread, they may give it to the poor, and pillory the offenders, &c. 5 Hen. 3. ft. 6. And the 8 Ann. c. 18. and 1 Geo. 1. c. 26. direct, that mayors and chief magistrates of towns, &c. may in the day-time enter into any house, shop, bakehouse or warehouse, of any baker or seller of bread, to search for, view, and try all or any of the bread there found; and if the bread be wanting in goodness, deficient in baking, under weight, or not truly marked; or shall consist of any other sort than what is allowed, the same bread shall be seized and distributed to the poor: And the former statute imposes a penalty of 40 s. for want of weight, or not being marked as appointed, &c. but this is made 5 s. for every ounce wanting in weight, and 2 s. 6 d. if under an ounce, (complaint being made, and the bread weighed before a magistrate within twenty-four hours) by the 1 Geo. 1. c. 26. And bakers selling their large bread at a higher price than set by mayors, &c. shall forfeit 10 s. to the informer, to be evied by distress, &c. See 31 G. 2. c. 29.

Mayors, &c. are empowered to make enquiry into offences committed against the Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2. which requires that the common prayer be read in churches; and that the churchwardens do their duty in presenting the names of such persons as absent themselves from church on Sundays, &c. Head officers of corporations are to appoint and swear overseers or searchers to examine into defects of northern cloth, &c. and the overseers shall fix a seal of lead to cloths, expressing the length and breadth; and if they find any faulty, or sealed with a false seal, &c. they are to present the same at the next quarter-sessions.

Mayors, &c. neglecting their duty, are liable to a penalty of 5 l. 39 Eliz. cap. 20. Mayors may determine whether coin offered in payment be counterfeited or not; and tender an oath to determine any question relating to it. 9 Geo. 3. c. 21. Chief magistrates of ports, where goods are conveyed away, which are liable to customs, before entry made, and the duties agreed, are to grant their warrants for the apprehension of the offender, &c. 12 Car. 2. c. 4. By 23 Eliz. c. 9. Mayors, &c. may call before them and examine dyers, suspected to use logwood in dying; and if they find cause, may bind them over to the quarter-sessions, where on conviction, they are liable to a forfeiture of 20 l. But see Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 11. and by the late act 13 Geo. 1. c. 24. Mayors and head officers of corporations, are to punish drunkenness, by imposing a fine of 5 s. on view, confession, or proof by one witness, or cause the offender to be put in the stocks for six hours. 4 Jac. 1. c. 5. 21 Jac. 1. c. 7. And persons sitting tipling in an alehouse, inn, &c. are liable to punishment by mayors, who may levy 3 s. 4 d. on such offenders, for every offence, for the use of the poor, or cause them to be set in the stocks four hours; and the alehouse-keepers, &c. suffering tipling in their houses, are subject to a penalty of 10 s. Ibid.

Head officers and justices of peace in corporations, may inquire of forcible entries, commit the offenders, and cause the tenements to be seized, &c. within their franchises, in like manner as justices of peace in the county. 8 H. 6. c. 9. Mayors, &c. shall enquire into unlawful gaming, against the Stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 9. They are to search places suspected to be gaming-houses, and levy penalties, &c. and they have power to commit persons playing at unlawful games. Horses stolen, found in a corporation, may be redeemed by the owner, making proof before the head officer of the corporation of the property, &c. 31 Eliz. c. 12. Mayors and head officers in corporate and market-towns, and lords of liberties and their stewards, are to appoint and swear two skilful persons yearly, to be searchers and sealers of leather; and they are to appoint triers of insufficient leather, and of leather wares: Searchers not doing their duty to forfeit 40 s. and triers 5 l. 1 Jac. 1. cap. 22. Persons robbing orchards, hedge-breakers, &c. are punishable by mayors; and a person on conviction by the oath of one witness, shall pay to the person injured such damage as the mayor, &c. shall think fit, or be whipped. 43 Eliz. c. 7.

Mayors, &c. on receipt of precepts from sheriffs, (when writs are issued for elections) requiring them to choose burgesses or members of parliament, by the citizens, &c. are to proceed to election, and make returns by indenture between them and the electors; and making a false return, shall forfeit 40 l. to the King, and the like sum to the party chosen, not returned, &c. 23 H. 6. c. 14. See the Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 24.

In time of sickness, a tax may be laid on inhabitants of corporations, for relieving such persons as have the plague, by mayors, &c. who are to appoint searchers and buriers of the dead: And if any infected persons shall go abroad with sores upon them, after an head officer hath commanded them to keep at home, it is felony; and if they have no sores about them, they are punishable as vagrants. 1 Jac. 1. c. 31.

The Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. which directs that the father, grandfather, mother, grandmother, and children, of every poor person, shall be assessed towards their relief by justices, and which impowers justices of peace to order a poor's rate or tax, and overseers of the poor, &c. to place forth apprentices, and sets forth the office of overseers; gives the like authority to the head officers in corporate towns, as justices of peace have in their counties; which said justices are not to intermeddle in corporations for the execution of this law.

Mayors, bailiffs, and other head officers of corporate towns, &c. are to make proclamation for rioters to disperse as follows: Our Sovereign Lord the King charges and commands all persons assembled, immediately to disperse themselves, and peaceably depart to their habitations, upon pain of imprisonment, &c. And if the rioters being travels in number, do not disperse within an hour after, it is felony without benefit of clergy, &c. 1 Geo. 1. ft. 2. c. 5.

Matters relating to servants, and apprentices, may be determined by mayors; who have power to compel persons to go to service, &c. 5 Eliz. c. 4. Mayors may arrest soldiers departing without licence: And they are to be present at musters; quarter and billet soldiers, &c. 18 Hen. 6. c. 18. 1 Geo. 1. c. 47, &c. Persons using games on a Sunday forfeit 3 s. and 4 d. to the use of the poor; carriers, &c. travelling on that day 20 s. and persons doing any worldly labour thereon 5 s. all leviable by warrant from mayors and head officers of corporations, as well as other justices. 1 Car. 1. c. 1. 3 Car. 1. c. 2. 29 Car. 2. c. 7. And by 3 Car. 1. c. 4. If any person shall profanely swear or curse in the presence of a mayor, &c. or be convicted thereof before him, by the oaths of two witnesses, he shall forfeit for every offence 1 s. to the use of the poor, or be set in the stocks three hours: but the statute 6 & 7 W. 3. confines the forfeiture of 1 s. to servants, labourers, &c. other persons being ordered to pay 2 s. and double, treble, &c. on repeating the offence.

Vagrants, or other idle and disorderly persons, blind, lame, &c. or pretending to be so, begging in streets, a mayor or constable may cause them to be whipped. 12 Ann. ft. 2. c. 25. By former statutes, mayors are empowered to make passes of vagrants; and justices in liberties and corporations are to issue warrants to constables, &c. to make a search for and apprehend vagrants before the quarter-sessions.

Mayors are to set the rates and prices of coopers vessels; and appoint searchers and gaugers of vessels for fish, &c. 11 H. 7. c. 4. 8 Eliz. c. 9. In every city, town, &c. there is to be a common balance, and sealed weights, under divers penalties: there is also to be a common bushel sealed. 8 Hen. 6. c. 5. 11 H. 6. c. 8. And mayors, &c. are to provide a mark for the sealing of weights and measures, being allowed 1 d. for sealing every bushel and hundred weight; and a half-penny for every other measure and half-hundred weight, &c. Mayors and head officers of corporations, &c. shall view all weights and measures once a year, and punish offenders using false weights; and they may break or burn such weights and measures, and inflict penalties, &c. If they permit persons to sell by measures not sealed, they shall forfeit 5 l. Sealing weights not agreeable to the standard, is liable to the same penalty; and refusing to seal weights and measures, subjects them to a forfeiture of 40 s. 7 H. 7. See 31 Geo. 2. c. 17. s. 9. Mayors, &c. are to inspect and order the size of faggot, billet, tale wood, &c. 43 Eliz. c. 14. See Corporation.

Meal. May be exported duty-free. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 20. How many sacks of meal may be carried at one load in London and Westminster. 6 Geo. 1. c. 6.

Meal-Rents, Certain rents heretofore paid in meal by the tenants of the honour of Clun, to make meat for the lord's hounds; they are now payable in money.

Meals. The shelves of land, or banks on the sea coasts of Norfolk, are called the Meals and the Males. Cowel.

Mean, (medius) Signifies the middle between two extremes; and that either in time or dignity: In time it is the interim betwixt one act and another; and applied to mean profits of lands between a dissolvin and recovery, &c. As to dignity, there is a lord mean or mesne, that holds of another lord; and mean tenant, &c. Mesne likewise signifies a writ, which lies where there is lord mesne and tenant; and the tenant is disfranchised by the superior lord, for the right or service of the mean, who ought to acquit him to the other lord, then the tenant shall have his writ of mesne; and if the mean lord appear not, he shall lose the service of the tenant, and be fore-judged of his seignior, and the tenant shall immediately become tenant to the chief lord. Also in such case, the tenant by writ may recover damages if he be disfranchised; and the mean lord be compelled to pay the rent, and do the services. F. N. B. 135. 13 Ed. 1. c. 9. If a man bring a writ of mesne where he is not disfranchised, yet it is maintainable, but then he shall not have damages; for it is brought only to be acquitted, &c. And tenant for life, where the remainder is over in fee, shall have this writ against the mesne. 7 H. 4. 12. 15 H. 6. New Nat. Br. 330. One brought a writ of mesne against a man, because he did not acquit the plaintiff of a rent-charge demanded, &c. when he by his deed bound himself and his heirs to warrant and acquit him; and it was held good: And if a man have judgment to recover in this writ, if he be not afterwards acquitted, he may have a disfranchising ad acquitandam against the mesne; and scire facias against the lord. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 9. 14 Ed. 3. See Mesne.

Messuage, (messuagium) A messuage or dwelling-house. Kitchen, 139. and F. N. B. 2. Stat. Hibernie, 14 H. 3. and 21 H. 8. 13. Also a measure of herrings, containing five hundred; the half of a thousand is called mease or messe. Merch. Dict.

Maison-dieu, In French Maison de dieu, Domus Dei; a house of God, a monastery, religious house or hospital; the word is mentioned 2 & 3 P. & M. cap. 23. 39 El. 5. and 15 Car. 2. 7.

Measure, (mensura) Is a certain quantity or proportion of any thing sold; and in many parts of England, is one bushel. The learned Blackstone, in treating of the King's prerogative, says, "the regulation of weights and measures, for the advantage of the public, ought to be universally the same throughout the kingdom; being the general criterions which reduce all things to the same or an equivalent value. But, as weight and measure are things in their nature arbitrary and uncertain, it is therefore expedient that they be reduced to some fixed rule or standard: which standard it is impossible to fix by any written law, or oral proclamation; for no man can, by words only, give another an adequate idea of a foot-rule, or a pound weight. It is therefore necessary to have recourse to some visible, palpable, material standard; by forming a comparison with which, all weights and measures may be reduced to one uniform size: and the prerogative of fixing this standard, our ancient law ascribed in the crown; as in Normandy it belonged to the Duke. (Gr. Custom. c. 15.) This standard was originally kept at Winchester: and we find, in the laws of King Edgar, (cap. 8.) near a century before the conquest, an injunction that the one measure, which was kept at Winchester, should be observed throughout the realm. Most nations have regulated the standard of measures of length by comparison with the parts of the human body; as the palm, the hand, the span, the foot, the cubit, the, ulna, (or arm) the pace, and the fathom. But, as these are of different dimensions in men of different proportions, our ancient historians (Will. Malmob. in vita Hen. 1. Spelm. Hen. 1. apud Wilkins 799.) inform us, that a new standard of longitudinal measure was ascertained by King Henry the First; who commanded that the ulna or ancient ell, which answers to the modern yard, should be made of the exact length of his own arm. And, one standard of measures of length being gained all others are easily derived from thence; those of greater length by multiplying, those of less by subdividing, the original standard. Thus, by the statute called compositio ulnarum et peticarum five yards and a half make a perch and the yard is subdivided into three feet, and each foot into twelve inches; which inches will be each of the length of three grains of barley. Superficial measures are derived by squaring those of length; and measures of capacity by cubing them.—The standard of weights was originally taken from corns of wheat, whence the lowest denomination of weights we have is still called a grain; thirty-two of which are directed, by the statute called compositio menjurarum, to compose a penny weight, whereof twenty make an ounce, twelve ounces a pound, and so upward. And upon these principles the first standards were made; which, being originally so fixed by the crown, their subsequent regulations have been generally made by the King in parliament. Thus, under King Richard I. in his parliament holden at Westminster, A. D. 1197, it was ordained, that there should be only one weight and one measure throughout the kingdom, and that the custody of the assise or standard of weights and measures should be committed to certain persons in every city and borough; (Hoved. M. lib. Paris.) from whence the antient office of the King's weigher seems to have been derived, whose duty it was, for a certain fee, to measure all cloths made for sale, till the office was abolished by the stat. 11 & 12 H. 3. c. 20. In King John's time this ordinance of King Richard was frequently dispensed with for money; (Hoved. d. D. 1201.) which occasioned a provision to be made for enforcing it, in the great charters of King John and his son. (9 H. 3. c. 25.) These original standards were called pondus regis, and mensura domini regis; and are directed by a variety of subsequent statutes to be kept in the Exchequer, and all weights and measures to be conformable thereto. But, as Sir Edward Coke observes, (2 Inst. 41.) tho' this hath so often by authority of parliament been enacted, yet it could never be effected; so forcible is custom with the multitude." Black. Com. 1 V. 274, &c. and see the Preceptor, Vol. 2. p. 384, &c. Magna Charta, c. 25. ordains, "that there shall be but one measure throughout England, according to the standard in the Exchequer." Which standard, was formerly kept in the King's palace, and in all cities, market-towns and villages, it was kept in the churches. 4 Inst. 273. By 17 Car. 1. c. 19. there is to be one weight and measure, and one yard according to the King's standard; and whoever shall keep any other weight or measure, whereby any thing is bought or sold, shall forfeit for every offence 5 s. And by 22 Car. 2. c. 8. Water measure, as to corn or grain, or salt, is declared to be within the stat. 17 Car. 1. And if any sell grain, or salt, &c. by any other bushel, or measure, than what is agreeable to the standard in the Exchequer, commonly called Winchester-Measure; he shall forfeit 40 s. &c. Notwithstanding these statutes, in many places and counties, there are different measures of corn and grain; and the bushel in one place is larger than in another; but the lawfulness of it is not well to be accounted for, since custom or prescription is not allowed to be good against a statute. Dalt. 250.

We have three different measures, viz. one for wine, one for ale and beer, and one for corn: in the measure of wine, eight pints make a gallon, eight gallons a firkin, sixteen gallons a kilderkin, half barrel or rundlet, four firkins a barrel, two barrels a hoghead, two hogheads a pipe, and two pipes make a tun. 15 R. 2. cap. 4. 11 H. 7. c. 4. 12 H. 7. c. 5.

In measure of corn eight pounds or pints of wheat make the gallon, two gallons a peck, four pecks a bushel, four bushels a sack, and eight bushels a quarter, &c. And in other measure; three barley corns in length make an inch, twelve inches a foot, three feet a yard, three feet and nine inches an ell, and five yards and a half, which is sixteen feet and half, make the perch, pole or rod. 27 Ed. 3. c. 10. Selling by false measure, being an offence by the Common law, may be punished by fine, &c. upon an indictment at Common law, as well as by statute. See the Stat. 11 Hen. 7. cap. 4. which inflicts particular fines for offences, pillory, &c.

Meceria, Is a mead house, or place where mead or metheglin is made. Cartular. Abb. Glas. MS. 29.

Mecete, A bribe or reward; and used for a compensation where things exchanged are not of equal value; It is said to come from the word meed, which signifies merit.

Mecia & infimæ manus homines, Men of a mean and base condition, of the lower sort. Blount.

Mecianus, Is a word used for middle size; medianus homo, A man of middle fortune.

Mediators of Questions, Were six persons authorized by statute, who upon any question arising among merchants, relating to unmercatale wool, or undue packing, &c. might before the mayor and officers of the staple upon their oath certify and settle the same; to whose order and determination therein, the parties concerned were to give entire credence and submit. 27 Ed. 3. stat. 2. c. 24.

Medietas Lingua, or Medietate Lingua, Jury de, Signifies a jury or inquest impanelled, whereof the one half consists of natives, and the other strangers; and is used in pleas wherein the one party is a stranger, the other a denizen: And this manner of trial was first given by the Stat. 27 Ed. 3. cap. 8. Before which, this was obtained by the King's grant. Staudf. P. C. lib. 3. cap. 7. He that will have the advantage of trial per medietatem linguæ, must pray it; for (it is said) he cannot have the benefit of it by way of challenge. S. P. C. 158. 3 Inst. 127. In petit treason, murder and felony, medietas linguæ is allowed; but for high treason, an alien shall be tried by the Common law, and not per medietatem linguæ. H. P. C. 261. And a grand jury ought not to be de medietate linguæ, in any case. Wood's Inst. 623. Egyptians are excluded from this trial, by 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 4. But we read, That Solomon de Standford a Jew, had a cause tried before the sheriff of Norwich, by a jury of sex probos & legales homines, & sex legales Judæus de Civitate Norwici, &c. Medio acquietando, Is a judicial writ to distrain a lord for the acquitting of a mean lord from a rent, which he formerly acknowledged in court not to belong to him. Reg. Judic. 129. See Mean.

Mediterranean, Is that which passeth through the midst of the earth; hence the sea which stretcheth itself from west to east, dividing Europe, Asia, and Africa, is called the Mediterranean Sea. The counterfeiting of Mediterranean passes for ships to the coast of Barbary, &c. or the seal of the admiralty office to such passes, is felony without benefit of clergy. Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 18.

Mediese, (From the Fr. Mesler) Is that which Bracon calls Medietum, and signifies quarrelling or brawling. Bracl. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 35.

Medicta, A sudden scolding at, and beating one another. Bracl. l. 3. c. 35.

Meditppp, A harvest-supper, or entertainment given to the labourers at harvest-home. Placit. 9 Ed. 1. Cowell.

Medmap ribet, Pilots thereon how to be licensed, 5 Geo. 2. c. 20. It was called Vaga by the Britons; the Saxons added Med. See Vaga.

Meer, (merus) Tho' an adjective, is used as a substantive to signify meer right. Old Nat. Brw. 2. in these these words. This writ hath but two issues; viz. joining the mise upon the meere, and that is to put himself in the Great Affise of our Sovereign Lord the King, or to join battle. Cowell. See Mise.

Meigne, Is the same with maignada. Mon. Ang. Tom. 2. p. 219.

Meldseoth, (Sax.) Was the recompence due and given to him who made discovery of any breach of feodal laws, committed by another person; called the promoter or informer's fee. Leg. Ina, cap. 20.

Melius Inquirendum, Is a writ that lieth for a second inquiry, where partial dealing is suspected; and particularly of what lands or tenements a man died seized, on finding an office for the King. F. N. B. 255. It has been held, that where an office is found against the King, and a melius inquirendum is awarded, and upon that melius, &c. it is found for the King, if the writ be void for repugnancy, or otherwise, a new melius inquirendum shall be had; But if upon the first melius, it had been found against the King, in such case he could not have a new melius, &c. for then there would be no end of these writs: And if an office be found for the King, the party grieved may traverse it; and if the traverse be found against him, there is an end of that cause; and if for him, it is conclusive. 8 Rp. 169. 2 Nelf. 1008. If there is any defect in the points which are found in an inquisition, there may not be a melius inquirendum; but if the inquisition finds some parts well, and nothing is found as to others, that may be supplied by melius inquirendum. 2 Salk. 469. A melius inquirendum shall be awarded out of B. R. where a coroner is guilty of corrupt practices; directed to special commissioners. 1 Vent. 181. Vide Mod. 82. Mich. 22 Car. 2. B. R. Anon. See 15 Vin. Abr. tit. Melius inquirendum.

Members of Parliament, i. e. Members of the House of Commons, the representatives of the people, elected and deputed in the place of the people, to repeal old and useles laws, make new ones, and grant money, when requisite, for the service of government.

Memorials, Are some kind of remembrances or obsequies for the dead, in injunctions to the clergy. 1 Ed. 6.

Memozy, (time of.) Hath been long ago ascertained by the law to commence from the reign of Richard the First; and any custom may be destroyed by evidence of its non-existence in any part of the long period, from his days to the present. See Black. Com. 2 V. 31.

Menagium, A family: Mentioned in Trivet's Chronicle, p. 677. and in Walsingham, pag. 66.

Mendlefe, Mentioned in Crom. Justice of Peace, 193. Is that which Bracton calleth medletum, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 35. It signifies quarrels, scuffling or brawling. Cowell.

Mentials, (From menia, the walls of a castle, house or other place) Are household servants who live under their lord or master's roof; mentioned in the stat. 2 H. 4. c. 21.

Mensa, Comprehends all patrimony, or goods and necessities for livelihood.—Dominicum est propriis terra ad mensam assignata.

Mensalia, Such parsonages or spiritual livings, as were united to the tables of religious houses, and called menial benefices among the Canonists: And in this sense it is taken, where mention is made of appropriations, ad mensam suam. Blount.

Mensura, Is taken for a bushel of corn, &c.

Mensura Regalis, The King's standard measure, kept in the Exchequer, according to which all others are to be made. See Stat. 17 Car. 1. and tit. Measure.

Mer, or Merre: Words which begin or end with those syllables signify fenny places. Cowell. See Mara, or Mere, a lake or great pond.

Mera noctis, Midnight. Id.

Mercennarius, A hireling or servant. Cartular. Abbat. Glasf. p. 115.

Merchant, (mercator) Is one who buys and trades in any thing: And as merchandise includes all goods and wares exposed to sale in fairs or markets; so the word merchant formerly extended to all sorts of traders, buyers, and sellers. But every one who buys and sells is not at this day under the denomination of a merchant; only those who traffick in the way of commerce, by importation or exportation, or carry on business by way of emption, vendition, barter, permutation or exchange, and who make it their living to buy and sell, by a continued assiduity, or frequent negotiation, in the mystery of merchandising, are esteemed merchants. Those who buy goods, to reduce them by their own art or industry, into other forms than they are of, and then to sell them, are artificers, not merchants: Bankers, and such as deal by exchange, are properly called merchants. Lex Mercat. 23.

Merchants were always particularly regarded by the Common law; tho' the municipal laws of England, or indeed of any one realm, are not sufficient for the ordering and determining the affairs of traffick, and matters relating to commerce; merchandise being so universal and extensive that it is impossible; therefore of the Law Merchant (so called from its universal concern) all nations take special knowledge; and the common and statute laws of this kingdom leave the causes of merchants in many cases to their own peculiar law. Ibid.

The law of England, as a commercial country, pays a very particular regard to foreign merchants in innumerable instances. By Magna Charta, c. 30. it is provided, That all merchants (unless publicly prohibited beforehand) shall have safe conduct to depart from, to come into, to tarry in, and to go thro' England, for the exercise of merchandize, without any unreasonable imposts, except in time of war; and, if a war breaks out between us and their country, they shall be attached (if in England) without harm of body or goods, till the King or his chief justiciary be informed how our merchants are treated in the land with which we are at war; and, if ours be secure in that land, they shall be secure in ours.—This seems to have been a common rule of equity among all the northern nations; for we learn from Stiernbook, (de jure Sueon. l. 3. c. 4.) that it was a maxim among the Goths and Swedes, "quam legem exteri nobis posuere, eandem illis ponemus." But it is somewhat extraordinary, that it should have found a place in Magna Charta, a mere interior treaty between the King and his natural-born subjects: which occasions the learned Montesquieu to remark with a degree of admiration, "that the English have made the "protection of foreign merchants one of the articles of "their national liberty." But indeed it well justifies another observation which he has made, "that the English "know better than any other people upon earth, how to "value at the same time these three great advantage, "RELIGION, LIBERTY, and COMMERCE." Black. Com. 1 V. 260.

In the reign of King Ed. 4. a merchant stranger made suit before the King's Privy Council, for several bales of silk feloniously taken from him, wherein it was moved, that this matter should be determined at Common law; but was answered by the Lord Chancellor, that as this suit was brought by a merchant, he was not bound to sue according to the law of the land. 13 Ed. 4. In former times it was conceived, that those laws that were prohibitory against foreign goods, did not bind a merchant stranger: but it has been a long time since ruled otherwise; for in the leagues that are now established between nation and nation, the laws of either kingdom are accepted; so that as the English in France or any other foreign country in amity are subject to the laws of that country where they reside; so must the people of France, or any other kingdom, be subject to the laws of England when resident here. 19 Hen. 7.

English merchants are not restrained to depart the kingdom without licence, as all other subjects are: they may depart, and live out of the realm, and the King's obedience, and the same is no contempt, they being excepted out of the statute 5 R. 2. c. 2. And by the Common law, they might pass the seas without licence; tho' not to merchandise. Mich. 12 and 13 Eliz. Dyer 206.

If any disturbance or abuse be offered them, or any other merchants in a corporation, and the head officer there do not provide a remedy, the franchise shall be seized; and the disturber shall answer double damages and suffer one year's imprisonment, &c. by Stat. 9 Ed. 3. c. 1. All merchants (except enemies) may safely come into England with their goods and merchandise. 14 Ed. 3. Merchant strangers may come into this realm, and depart at their pleasure; and they are to be friendly entertained. 5 R. 2. c. 1. And merchants alien shall be used in this kingdom, as denizens are in others, by the statute 5 Hen. 4. cap. 7.

If a difference arise between the King and any foreign state, alien merchants are to have forty days notice, or longer time, to sell their effects and leave the kingdom. 27 Ed. 3. cap. 17. All merchants may buy merchandises of the staple: And any merchant may deal in more merchandises than one; he may buy, sell and transport all kinds of merchandise. 27 Ed. 3. c. 3. and 38 Ed. 3. c. 2.

All the King's subjects are to have a free trade to and from France, Spain and Portugal. 3 Jac. 1. c. 6. It shall be lawful for merchants to transport iron, armour, pistols, muskets, saddles, swords, bridles, &c. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 4. Merchants, &c. corrupting or adulterating wine, or selling the same adulterated, are liable to penalties, by 1 W. & M. Stat. 1. c. 34. On importation of tobacco, merchants have an allowance of 8 per cent. &c. 12 Ann. cap. 8. Vide Custom of Merchants.

Various restraints are laid on merchants, especially to prevent their carrying of gold and silver out of the nation, &c. by the statute law, vide 18 Ed. 2. c. 21. 4 H. 4. c. 15. 5 H. 4. c. 9. 8 H. 6. c. 24. 3 H. 7. c. 8. 1 R. 3. c. 9. 1 Eliz. c. 11.

If a person, who is otherwise no merchant, being beyond sea, takes up money and draws a bill upon a merchant, he cannot in an action brought upon this bill against him as the drawer thereof, plead that he was no merchant; for the very taking up the money and drawing the bill makes him a merchant to this purpose. Comb. 152.

Merchant includes all sorts of traders as well and as properly as merchant adventurers. D. 279. b. cites Spelm. Guild. A merchant taylor is a common term; per Holt Ch. J. 2 Salk. 445.

The custom of merchants is part of the Common law of this kingdom, of which the judges ought to take notice; and if any doubt arise about the custom, they may send for merchants to know the custom; per Hubart Ch. J. Winch. 24.

The Lex mercatoria, is allowed for the benefit of trade, to be of the utmost validity in all commercial transactions: for it is a maxim of law, that "cuiuslibet in sua arte credendum est." Black. Com. 1 V. 75. See 3 New Abr. tit. Merchants.

There are companies of merchants in London for carrying on considerable joint trades to foreign parts, viz. The merchant adventurers, the company established in England for the improvement of commerce; which was erected by patent by King Ed. 1. merely for the exportation of wool, &c. before we knew the value of that commodity, and at a time when we were in a great measure strangers to trade. The next company was that of the Barbary merchants, incorporated in the reign of King Hen. 7. A company of merchants trading to the north, called the Muscovy or Russia Company, was established by King E. 6. and encouraged with additional privileges, by Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth, &c. The Barbary merchants decaying towards the latter end of Queen Elizabeth's reign, out of their ruins arose the Levant or Turkey Company; who first trading with Persia, and then with Turkey, furnished England that way with the East India commodities: This company hath very considerable stations, at Constantinople, Smyrna, Aleppo, &c. From the flourishing state of the Levant or Turkey Company, in the reign his wife of Queen Elizabeth sprung the Old East India Company, who having fitted out ships of force, brought from thence at the best hand, the Indian commodities, formerly sold to England by distant Europeans; and then, having obtained many charters, and grants from the crown, in their favour, were sole masters of that advantageous trade: until at last a new company was incorporated by King Will. 3. Anno 9 W. 3. on their lending government twenty millions of money; and both these companies after the expiration of a certain term, were by articles united.

In the 21st year of Queen Elizabeth, the Eastland Company of Merchants was erected; and in King Charles the Second's time, that company was confirmed, with full power to trade in Norway, Sweden, Poland, and other Eastland countries. The Royal African Company had their charter granted them in the 14th year of King Char. 2. And by 9 & 10 W. 3. they are to maintain all forts, &c. King Charles 2. also by commission under the Great Seal of England, constituted his Royal Highness James Duke of York, (afterwards King Jam. 2.) Edward Earl of Clarendon, and others, to be a council for the Royal Fishery of England, and declared himself to be the protector of it; and in the 29th year of his reign, he incorporated them into a company. King Will. 3. in the fourth year of his reign, established a Greenland Company. By Stat. 9 Ann. to pay the debts of the army, navy, &c. amounting to near ten millions, the South-Sea Company of Merchants was erected; who having advanced that money, the duties upon wines, vinegar, tobacco, &c. were appropriated as a fund for payment of the interest, after the rate of 6 l. per cent. &c. The company is to have the sole trade to the South-Seas; and others trading thither shall forfeit their ships and goods, and double value: and the corporation is to continue for ever; but the funds are subject to redemption by parliament. This company had their capital stock very much enlarged in the reign of King Geo. 1. And to raise money lent, were empowered to make calls or take in subscriptions, &c. as they thought fit; and on this foundation, the late South-Sea scheme was executed: but to retrieve credit, afterwards part of the stock of the South-Sea company was ingrafted into the capital stock of the East-India company and the Bank of England; and after that, half the stock was converted into annuities at 4 l. per cent. Since which a farther reduction thereof hath been made.

This short history of our Companies of Merchants, which have ever had many and great privileges, and are at length become of double use, i. e. to enlarge commerce, and supply the necessities of the state, in some measure, shews the progress and increase of our trade, and the wealth of the nation: tho' we must nevertheless observe, that they are a kind of monopolies erected by law; and if the power granted them is abused, are of fatal consequence; for which we need only instance the ever memorable year 1720, when the sub-governor and directors of the South-Sea company incurred a forfeiture of their estates by statute, and were disabled to hold any offices, &c. for their vile conduct, which tended to the ruin of the publick. Over and above these companies, there are the Dutch Merchants; those who trade to the West-Indies; the Canary Merchants; Italian Merchants, who trade to Leghorn, Venice, Sicily, &c. The French and Spanish Merchants, &c.

Mercenlage, (Merciorum Lex) Was the law of the people here called the Mercians. Camden in his Britannia says, That in the year 1016, this kingdom was divided into three parts; whereof the West Saxons had one, governing it by the laws called West Saxon-lage, which contained Kent, Sussex, Surrey, Berks, Hampshire, Wilts, Somerset, Dorset, and Devon: The Danes had the second, containing York, Derby, Nottingham, Leicestershire, Lincoln, Northampton, Bedford, Bucks, Hertford, Essex, Middlesex, Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge and Huntingdon; which was governed by the laws called Dane-lage: And the third part was in the possession of the Mercians, whose law was called Mercenlage; and contained Gloucester, Worcester, Hereford, Warwick, Oxford, Chester, Salop and Stafford: from which three, King Will. 1. chose the best, and with other laws ordained them to be the laws of the kingdom. Camden. Brit. 94. See Molatun Law.

Mercet, (Mercectum.) A fine or composition paid by inferior tenants, to the lord, for liberty to dispose their daughters in marriage. No baron, or military tenant could marry his sole daughter and heir, without such leave purchased from the King, pro maritanda filia. And many of our servile tenants could neither send their sons to school, nor give their daughters in marriage, without express express licence from the superior lord. See Kennet's Glossary in Maritagium. See Marchet.

Mercia, Is used in many places in the Monastic. for ameriement.

Specimoniatum Anglie, Was of old time used for the impost of England upon merchandise.

Mercuricus, Or venders of printed books or papers. Vide Hawkers.

Mercey, The arbitrament of the King or judge, in punishing offences, not directly censured by the law. 11 H. 6. c. 2. See Miseriordia.

Merget, Is where a lesser estate in lands, &c. is drowned in the greater: as if the fee comes to tenant for years, or life, the particular estates are merged in the fee: but an estate-tail cannot be merged in an estate in fee; for no estate in tail can be extinct, by the accession of a greater estate to it. 2 Rep. 60, 61. If a lord, who hath the fee, marries with the lessee for years; this is no merger, because he hath the inheritance in his own, and the lease in right of his wife. 2 Plowd. 418. And where a man hath a term in his own right, and the inheritance descends to his wife, so as he hath a freehold in her right, the term is not merged or drowned. Cro. Car. 275. Vide 15 Vin. Abr. tit. Merger.

Merscum, A lake; from the Sax. mere, lacus. Maneria, molendina, mersca, & marisca. Ingulph. p. 861.

Mersc-ware, (Sax. Insula paludum) So the inhabitants of Romney Marsh in Kent were antiently called. Cowell.

Mertlage, Seems to be a corruption of, or a Law-French word for martyrology. See Hill. 9 Hen. 7. 14. b. for it being asked what was meant by meritlage, the book says, Ceo est Kalender universal in l'Eglise de cest realm, les queux priests sont lies d'observer & ne pluiz. A church kalendar or rubrick. Cowell.

Merton, Statutes made there, 20 Hen. 3.

Mesne, (medius) Signifies him who is a lord of a manor, and so hath tenants holding of him; yet himself holds of a superior lord. Cowell. See 15 Vin. Abr. tit. Mesne.

Forejudger by default given the writ of mesne. Process in the writ of mesne regulated, and remedies provided for the tenant peravalle, St. West. 2. 15 Ed. 1. c. 9. See Meun.

Mesnalty, (medietas) Signifies the right of the mesne, as the mesnalty is extinct. Old Nat. Br. 44. If the mesnalty descend of the tenant. Kitchin, 147.

Messarius, (from messis) The chief servant in husbandry, or harvest-time, now called a bailiff in some places. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 832. Also this word is used for a mow or reaper; one that works harvest-work. Flea, lib. 2. c. 75.

Messenger, Is a carrier of messages, particularly employed by the Secretaries of State, &c. and to these commitments may be made of state prisoners; for tho' regularly no one can justify the detaining a person in custody out of the common gaol, unless there be some particular reason for it; as if the party be so dangerously sick, that it would hazard his life to send him thither, &c. yet it is the constant practice to make commitments to messengers; but it is said, it shall be intended only in order to carrying the offenders to gaol. 1 Salk. 347. 2 Hawk. P. C. 118. An offender may be committed to a messenger, in order to be examined before committed to prison; and tho' such commitment to a messenger is irregular, it is not void; and a person charged with treason, escaping from the messenger, is guilty of treason, &c. Skin. 599.

Messengers of the Exchequer, Are officers attending that court; they are four in number, and in nature of pursuivants to the Lord Treasurer.

Messe Thane, Signifies a priest. The Saxons called every man thane, who was above the common rank; so messe thane was he who said mass; and vorules thane was a secular man of quality. Cowell.

Messina, Reaping time, harvest. Id. ib.

Messuage, (Messuagium) Is properly a dwelling-house, with some adjacent land assigned to the use thereof. West. Symb. tit. Fines, sect. 26. Braet. lib. 5. cap. 28. and Plowden, 169, 170. where it is said, that by the name of a messuage may pass also a curtilage, a garden and orchard, a dove-house, a shop, a mill, a cottage, a toft, a chamber, a cellar, &c. yet they may be demanded by their single names. Messagium in Scotland, signifies the principal place or dwelling-house within a barony, which we call a manor-house. Skene de verbo. signif. verb. Messuagium. In some places it is called the site of a manor. A præcipe lies not de domo, but de messuagio. Co. Lit. cap. 8.

Mestilo, Mesline, or rather mesellane, that is, wheat and rye mingled together.—Et nonam garbam frumenti, mellilonis, siliginis & omnis generis bladi. Pat. 1 Ed. 3. par. 1. m. 6.

Metal. The exportation of iron, brads, copper, latin, bell and other metal, antiently restrained. 28 Ed. 3. c. 5. 33 Hen. 8. c. 7. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 37. But permitted by 5 W. & M. c. 17. Metal prepared for battery, to what duties liable. 4 W. & M. c. 5.

Metecorn, A measure or portion of corn, given out by the lord to customary tenants, as a reward and encouragement for their duties of labour. Stipendia & metecorn, ac cetera debita servitia in monasterio prædicto solvantur. Ryley's Plac. Parl. 391.

Metegabel, (Sax. cibi gablum. seu wedigal) A tribute or rent paid in victuals; which was a thing usual in this kingdom, as well with the King's tenants as others, till the reign of King Hen. 1.

Meter of coals in London, &c. from metior, to mete or measure a thing. Vide Measurer.

Metheglin, (Brit. Meddiglin) An old British drink made of honey, &c. and still continues in repute in England; it is mentioned in the Statute 15 Car. 2. cap. 9.

Metteshep, Mettenshep, Was an acknowledgment paid in a certain measure of corn; or a fine or penalty imposed on tenants, for their defaults in not doing their customary services, of cutting the lord's corn. Paroch. Antiq. 495.

Meyum & Tuum, Are Latin words used for the proper guides of right; and which being misunderstood, have been the ground of many controversies.

Mey, A mey or mow of corn, as antiently used; and in some parts of England they still say mei the corn, i. e. put it on an heap in the barn.—Cariabunt Bladum per unum diem cum una carecta, & inveniunt unum hominem ad faciendum meyas in grangio. Blount. Ten. 130.

Micel-gemotes, Micel-synods, The great councils in the Saxon times of King and noblemen, were called Wittena-gemotes, and after Micel-synods and Micel-gemotes, i. e. Great and general assemblies. Cowell. See Black. Com. 1 V. 147.

Micel Synoth, Same with Micel-gemote, or Micel-gemote, which see, and also Black. Com. 1 V. 147.

Middlesex, The sessions of the peace how often to be held, 14 H. 6. c. 4. In actions triable by Middlesex jurors, they shall be called the fourth day, &c. 8 Ed. 4. c. 3. Inhabitants of Westminster exempt from serving on juries at the sessions for the peace, 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32. sect. 9. Deeds and wills to be registered there, 7 Ann. c. 20. No juror to be returned at the Nisi prius in Middlesex, who hath been returned in two preceding terms or vacations, 4 Geo. 2. c. 7. sect. 2. Leaseholders qualified to serve as jurors in Middlesex 4 Geo. 2. c. 7. f. 3. But one county rate to be made for Middlesex, 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. f. 15.

Mill, (molendinum) Is a house or engine to grind corn, and either a water-mill, wind-mill, horse-mill, hand-mill, &c. And besides corn and grist-mills, there are paper-mills, fulling or tucking-mills, iron-mills, oil-mills, &c. 2 Inst. 621. The toll shall be taken according to the strength of the water, ordin. pro pistor. incerti temp. Prohibition shall not go in suit for tithe of a new mill. Art. cler. 9 Ed. 2. stat. 1. c. 5.

Magistrates may search mills for adulterated meal, &c. 31 Geo. 2. c. 29. stat. 29. Miller, baker, &c. not to act as magistrate under this act, 31 Geo. 2. c. 29. s. 32. See 15 Vin. Abr. tit. Mill.

Milleate, (mentioned in Stat. 7 Jac. cap. 19.) A trench to convey water to or from a mill. Cowell.

Millet, (milium) A small grain so termed from its multitude. Litt. DiB.

Mina, A corn measure of different quantity, according to the things measured by it: and minage was a toll or duty paid for selling corn by this measure. Cowell. According to Littleton, it is a measure of ground, containing one hundred and twenty foot in length, and as many in breadth. Also it is taken both for a coin and a weight. Litt. DiB.

Minare, To mine or dig mines.—Minator a miner. Record. 16 Ed. 1.

Minator carucae, A ploughman. Cowell.

Mineral, Is any thing that grows in mines, and contains metals. Shep. Epis.

Mineral Courts, (curiae minerales) Are peculiar courts for regulating the concerns of lead mines; as Stannary Courts are for tin. See Berghmote.

Mine-Adventurers, A company established by statute, governed by the Duke of Leeds. &c. Vide 9 Ann. c. 24.

Mines, (mineriae) Quarries or places whereout any thing is digged; they are likewise the hidden treasure dug out of the earth. The King by his prerogative hath all mines of gold and silver to make money; and where gold and silver in mines is of the greater value; they are called Royal mines. Plowd. But by statute, no mine of copper or tin shall be adjudged a Royal mine, tho' silver be extracted. 1 W. & M. c. 30. And persons having mines of copper, tin, lead, &c. shall enjoy the same, altho' claimed to be royal mines; but the King may have the ore, (except in Devon and Cornwall), paying to the owners of the mines, within thirty days after it shall be raised, and before removed, 16*l.* per tun for copper ore, washed and made merchantable; for lead ore, 9*l.* per tun; tin or iron, 40*s.* &c. Stat. 5 W. & M. c. 6. If a man hath lands where there are some mines open and others not, and he lets the land with the mines therein, for life or years, the lessee may dig in the open mines only, which is sufficient to satisfy the words in the lease; and hath no power to dig the mines unopened: but if there be no open mine, and the lease is made of the lands, together with all mines therein, thens the lessee may dig for mines and enjoy the benefit thereof; otherwise those words would be void. 1 Inst. 54. 5 Rep. 12. 2 Lev. 184. To dig mines is waste, where lessees are not authorized by their leases: tho' a mine is not properly so called till it is opened; being but a vein of iron or coals, &c. before. 1 Inst. 54. v. 2 Mod. 193.

For relief of the creditors of the company of mine adventurers. See 9 Ann. c. 24. If any person maliciously set on fire any mine, or pit of coal, he shall suffer death as a felon, by Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. And damaging such mines, or any coal-works, by conveying water therein, or obstructing sewers from draining them, &c. shall forfeit treble damages. 13 Geo. 2. cap. 21. 24 Geo. 2. c. 57. Mines how taxable, 30 Geo. 2. c. 3.

A man opens a mine in his land, and digs till he digs under the soil of another; he may follow his mine there; but if the owner digs there also he may stop his farther progress; and said to be the use in Cornwall. 2 Vent. 342. per Wilde J. on a case referred to him by Lord Bridgman, 22 Car. 22.

It was said by the Solicitor General, that there was a great difference between pits and mines; for if a mine be opened, he that may work the mine is not obliged to pursue the vein of ore under ground; but he may sink pits in pursuit of it which are necessary to come at the ore, and as many as he thinks proper; and Lord Chancellor said, it had been so resolved before Powell J. on great consideration, and consulting and examining the most able miners. Cases in Equity in Lord King's time, 79. Nov. 10, 1729. Clavering v. Clavering.

If a man demises lands for life or years, in which there is a coal-mine open, the lessee may dig in it; for the mine being open, it shall be intended by his demising all the land, that his intent is as general as his demise; but if the mine was not opened at the time of the demise, the lessee by lease of the land is not empowered to make new mines; but in such case if he leases his land and all mines therein, the lessee may dig for mines there; resolved, 5 Rep. 12 Trin. 41 Eliz. C. B. Saunderson's case.

A question was, if copyholder of inheritance may dig mines in his land? The court seemed to think he might; for that otherwise, mines there would never be opened; as in the case of a glebe of a parson. Sid. 152. Trin. 15 Car. 2. B. R. in the case of Rutland (Lord) v. Gie.

As to tenant in tail working mines, vide 2 Wms.'s Rep. 388. Clavering v. Clavering.

If a person breaks up, or even attempts, or threatens to break up mines which he ought not to do, that is a reason for coming into Chancery to have an injunction; per Lord Chancellor. Barn. Chan. Rep. 497. Pasch. 1741. in the case of Gibson v. Smith.

Entering mines of black lead with intent to steal, felony. 25 Geo. 2. c. 10.

Mines, In another signification are caves or trenches dug under ground, whereby to undermine the walls of a city or fortification.

Miniments, or Muniments, (munimenta, from munio, to defend) Are the evidences and writings concerning a man's possession or inheritance, whereby he is enabled to defend the title of his estate; and this word includes all manner of evidences, deeds, charters, &c. Terms de Ley. Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 8. and 35 H. 6. c. 37.

Ministers. If a minister is disturbed in the execution of his office in the church; the punishment upon conviction is a fine of 10*l.* And upon non-payment three months imprisonment, &c. 2 & 3 Ed. 5. c. 1. And disturbing a licensed minister incurs a forfeiture of 20*l.* by 1 W. & M. c. 11.

Ministri Regis, Extend to judges of the realm; as well as to those who have ministerial offices in the government. 2 Inst. 208.

Minor, One under age; more properly an heir male or female, before they come to the age of twenty-one years; during which minority they are generally incapable to act for themselves.

Monks, Friars Minorites, of the order of St. Francis that had no prior; they washed each other's feet, and increased very much in the year 1207. Matt. Westm.

Minstrel, (Minstrellus & minestrallus, from the Fr. monestrier.) A musician, fidler, or piper; mentioned 4 Ed. 4. cap. 27. pat. 24 April 9 Ed. 4. Quod mariscalci & minstrelli pradiati per se forant & esse debent unum corpus & una communitas perpetua, &c. Upon a quarranto, 14 H. 7. Laurentius Dominus de Dutton clamat, quod omnes minstrelli infra civitatem Cestrie & infra Cestriam manentes, vel officia ibidem exercentes, debent convenire coram ipso vel Senescalco suo apud Cestriam, ad festum Nativitatis S. Johannis Baptiste annuatim, & dabunt sibi ad dictum festum quatuor lagenas vini & unam lanceam; & insuper quilibet eorum dabit ei quatuor denarios & unum obolum ad dictum festum, & habere de qualibet meretrice infra comitatum Cestrie, & infra Cestriam manente, & officium suum exercente, quatuor denarios per annum ad festum pradiatum, &c. And where by the statute of 39 Eliz. cap. 4. Fiddlers are declared to be rogues, yet there is a proviso therein, exempting those in Cheshire licensed by Dutton of Dutton. The musicians of England, incorporated by King Charles II. anno 1670. See Claus. 9 Edw. 2. m. 26 Dors. an ordinance super mensuratione ferculorum & menestralorum. It was usual for these minstrels, not only to divert princes, and the nobility, with sports, but also with musical instruments, and with flattering songs, in praise of them and their ancestors. The office and power of the King of the minstrels, is mentioned in the Monastic. 1 tom. 355. Cowell. See Vagrants, and Black. Com. 2 V. 96.

Mint, (officina monetaria. monetarium) Is the place where the King's money is coined; which is at present and long hath been in the Tower of London, tho' it appears by divers statutes, that in antient times the Mint has also been at Calais, and other places. 2 R. 2. c. 16. and 9 H. 5. c. 5. The Mint-master is to keep his assay, and receive silver at the true value, &c. 2 H. 6. c. 12. And gold and silver delivered into the Mint is to be assayed, coined, and given out, according to the order and time of bringing in; and persons shall receive the same weight of coin, or so much as shall be finer or coarser than the standard, &c. Stat. 18 Car. 2. c. 5. All silver and gold extracted by melting and refining of metals, shall be employed for the increase of monies, and be sent to the Mint, where the value is to be paid. 1 W. & M. c. 30. By the Stat. 18 Car. 2. 3000*l.* a year was granted out of certain duties on wine, beer, &c. imported, to defray the expence of the Mint; but this was increased by the Stat 4 & 5 Ann. c. 22. and much augmented by 1 Geo. 1. c. 43. by which statute it may be a sum not exceeding 15,000*l.* per ann. for England and Scotland, &c.

The officers belonging to the Mint have not always been alike; they are now the following, viz. the warden, who is the chief of the rest, and is by his office to receive the silver and bullion of the goldsmiths to be coined, and take care thereof, and he hath the overseeing of all the other officers. The master worker receives the silver from the warden, and causes it to be melted, when he delivers it to the moniers, and taketh it from them again after made into money. The comptroller, who is to see that the money be made to the just assize, and controul the officers if the money be not made as it ought. The master of the assay, who weigheth the silver, and examineth whether it be according to the standard. The auditor takes account of the silver, &c. The surveyor of the melting, who is to see the silver cast out, and that it be not altered after the assay master hath made trial of it, and it is delivered to the melters. The clerk of the irons, who seeth that the irons be clean and fit for working. The graver, whose office is to engrave the stamps for the money. The melters, who melt the bullion, &c. The blanchers do anneal and cleanse the money. The moniers, who are some to shear the money, others to forge and beat it broad, some to round, and some to stamp or coin it. The provost to provide for all the monies, and oversee them, &c. Vide Coin, Money.

Mint, A pretended place of privilege in Southwark, near the King's Bench, put down by statute. If any persons within the limits of the Mint shall obstruct any officer in the serving of any writ or process, &c. or assault any person therein, so as he receive any bodily hurt, the offenders shall be guilty of felony, and transported to the plantations, &c. Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 28. See Privileged Places.

Misnuete, To let blood; misnuetio, blood-letting. This was a common old practice among the regulars, and the secular priests or canons, who were the most confined and sedentary men. In the Register of statutes and customs belonging to the cathedral church of St. Paul's in London, collected by Ralph Baldock, dean, about the year 1300; there is one express chapter De minutione. Cowell.

Minute Tithes, (minuta five minores decimae) Small tithes, such as usually belong to the vicar, as of wool, lambs, pigs, butter, cheese, herbs, seeds, eggs, honey, wax, &c. See 2 Inst. 649. and Udal and Tindal's case, Hill. 22 Jac. where the tithe of wood was adjudged minuta decima. Cro. Rep. fol. 21. See Tithes.

Mistracula, A superstitious sport or play, practised by the popish clergy for gain and deceit; prohibited by bishop Groshead in the diocese of Lincoln. Cowell.

Mis: This syllable added to another word signifies some fault or defect; as, misprison, misdicere, i. e. to scandalize any one; misdocere, i. e. to teach amiss. Si presbyter populum suum misdoceat. Cowell.

Missa, A compact or agreement, a form of peace, or compromise. Id. ib.

Misadventure, (Fr. misadventure, i. e. infortunium) Has an especial signification for the killing a man, partly by negligence and partly by chance. S. P. C. lib. 1. c. 8. And Britton distinguishes between adventure and misadventure; the first he makes to be mere chance; as if a man, being upon or near the water, be taken with some sudden sickness, and so fall in and is drowned; or into the fire, and is burnt; misadventure he says is, where a person comes to his death by some outward violence, as the fall of a tree, the running of a cart-wheel, stroke of a horse, or such like. Britt. c. 7. Staundford construes misadventure more largely than Pritton understands it; and says, it is where one thinking no harm carelessly throws a stone, where-with he kills another, &c. West defines misadventure to be, when a man is slain by mere fortune, against the mind of the killer; and he calls it homicide by chance mixed, when the killer's ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance. West. Symb. sect. 48, 49. See Chancemedley, Homicide, and Black. Com. 4 V. 182.

Miscasting or miscalculating. Assumpsit to pay 12*l.* Jury found a promise to pay 7*l.* the judgment was reversed; because it is not the same assumpsit. D. 219. b. Marg. pl. 11, cites 10 Eliz. Billingley's case.

Debt; and declared, that the defendant had bargained with him to give him for the pasturing of every horse by the night 2*d.* and for every ox 1*d.* half-penny, and sheweth, that he had pastured 70 horses and 300 oxen; Et ideo actio accrevit to demand, &c. and he demanded more than upon his own shewing it appeared he should have; for the number of the horses and oxen did not amount to the sum he had counted; and this was alledged in arrest of judgment after verdict found for the plaintiff; but judgment was given for the plaintiff notwithstanding. Cro. Eliz. 22. Mich. 25 Eliz. in C. B. Moore's case. Mich. 25 Eliz. C. B. cited in Moore's case, per Fenner, as Anglow's case. See 15 Vin. Abr. 402—405.

Miscognisant, Ignorant or not knowing. In the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 9. against champerty and maintenance, it is ordained that proclamation shall be made twice in the year of that act, to the intent no person should be ignorant or miscognisant of the penalties therein contained, &c.

Miscalculating, In covenant for payment of rent, the miscasting of the sum due doth not make it ill; and if more be laid, it shall be abated as surplus: but is otherwise in debt for rent. Dyer 55.

Discontinuance, Signifies the same with discontinuance. Kitch. 231. Tho' 'tis generally said to be, where a continuance is made by undue process. Jenk. Cent. 57.

Misdemeanor, or Misdemeanor. This word, in the laws of England, signifies a crime.—Every crime is a misdemeanor, yet the law hath made a distinction between crimes of an higher and a lower nature, the latter being denominated misdemeanors, the former felonies, &c. For the understanding of which distinction, we shall give the following definition from Mr. Justice Blackstone's Commentaries, 4 P. 5.

A crime or misdemeanor, is an act committed or omitted, in violation of a public law, either forbidding or commanding it. This general definition comprehends both crimes crimes and misdemeanors; which, properly speaking, are mere synonymous terms; tho' in common usage, the word "crimes," is made to denote such offences as are of a deeper and more atrocious dye; while smaller faults, and omissions of less consequence, are comprized under the gentler name of "misdemeanors" only.

And as he farther observes in the same page, in making the distinction between public wrongs and private, between crimes and misdemeanors, and civil injuries: "Public wrongs, or crimes and misdemeanors, are a breach and violation of the public rights and duties, due to the whole community, considered as a community, in its social aggregate capacity."

This term may be considered as, and in fact is, a genus, which contains under it a great number of species, almost as various in their nature as human actions; and which, to enumerate, would be a work of infinite labour: we are inadequate to that labour, nor will the nature and compass of this work admit of such an enumeration.—We must therefore refer the reader to our several codes of criminal jurisprudence, particularly to Hale's History of the Pleas of the Crown, and Hawkin's Pleas of the Crown, for further satisfaction, on this very extensive subject. Vide tit. Misprison.

Misfe, (a French word, written in Latin missum, and sometimes missa) Is a law term signifying expences, and it is so commonly used in the entries of judgments, in personal actions; as when the plaintiff recovers, that recuperet damna sua to such a value, and pro missis & custagiis, for costs and charges so much, &c. This word hath also another signification in the use made of it by law; which is where it is taken for a word of art, appropriated to a writ of right, so called because both parties have put themselves upon the mere right, to be tried upon the grand assize; so as that in which all other actions is called an issue, in a writ of right is termed a mise; but if in the writ of right, a collateral point be tried, there it is called an issue. To join the mise upon the meer is as much as to say, to join the mise upon the clear right, i. e. to join upon this point, which hath the more right, the tenant or demandant. 1 Inst. 294. 37 Ed. 3. c. 16. See Black. Com. 3 V. App. v.

Misfs, Are taken for taxes or tallages, &c. An honorary gift or customary present, from the people of Wales to every new King and Prince of Wales, antiently given in cattle, wine and corn, but now in money, being 5000*l.* or more, is denominated a mise: so was the usual tribute or fine of 3000 marks, paid by the inhabitants of the county palatine of Chester, at the change of every owner of the said earldoms for enjoying their liberties. And at Chester they have a mise-book, wherein every town and village in the county is rated what to pay towards the mise. The 27 Hen. 8. c. 26. ordains, that "Lords shall have all such misses and profits of their lands as they had in times past, &c." And mise is sometimes corruptly used for mease in Law French mees, a messuage; as a mise place in some manors is such a messuage or tenement as answers the lord a heriot at the death of its owner. 2 Inst. 528.

Mise-money, Was money given by way of contract or composition to purchase any liberty, &c. Blount Ten. 162.

Miserere, The name and first word of one of the Penitential Psalms, and is most commonly that which the ordinary gives to such guilty malefactors as are admitted to the benefit of clergy; being therefore called the Psalm of Mercy.

Misericordia, Is in law, used for an arbitrary or discretionary amercement imposed for an offence; and where the plaintiff or defendant in any action is amerced, the entry is ideo in misericordia, &c. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 5. cap. 6. Kitch. 78. It is called misericordia, because it ought to be but small, and rather less than the offence, according to Magna Charta, c. 14. Sometimes misericordia is to be quit of all manner of amercements. Crompt. Jurisd. 196.

If a man be unreasonably amerced in a court not of record, as in a court baron, &c. there is a writ called moderata misericordia, directed to the lord, or his bailiff, commanding them that they take moderate amercements according to the quality of the fault. Sometimes misericordia is to be quit and discharged of all manner of amercements that a man may fall into in the forest. See Crompt. Jur. 196. See Amerciament, Fines for Offences, Mercy, and Moderata Misericordia. He shall be in the great mercy of the King. Westm. 1. cap. 15.

Misericordia in cibis & potu, Exceedings, or over-commons, or any gratuitous portion of meat and drink given to the religious above their ordinary allowance.—Hic quoque procuravit—ut detestabiles ingurgitationes misericordiarum (in quibus profecto non erat misericordia) prohiberentur. Mat. Par. Vit. Abb. S. Albani, pag. 71. In some convents they had a stated allowance of these over-commons upon extraordinary days, which were called misericordia regularis, as — In minutionibus vero misericordiarum regularibus duo & duo unam justam de cellario tam ad prandium quam ad cenam.—Monast. Angl. tom. 1. pag. 149. b.

Misericordia communis, Is when a fine is set on the whole county, or hundred. Mon. Angl. 1 tom. pag. 976. Ac de murther ac de communi misericordia quando contigerit, videlicet, comitatus & hundredi coram nobis vel aliquibus iusticiariis nostris, &c.

Misfeventre, To succeed ill; as, where a man is accused of a crime, and fails in his defence or purgation. Et si compellatio fit & emendando misfeveniat, fit in episcopi potestas. Lex Canut. 78. apud Brompton.

Misfeasance, A misdeed or trespass.—Jury to inquire of all purprestures and misfeasance. Cro. Car. 498.

Misfeasor, Is a trespasser. 2 Inst. 200.

Misfortune, or Chance, A deficiency of the will, or committing of an unlawful act, by misfortune or chance, and not by design. In such case the will observes a total neutrality, and does not co-operate with the deed, which therefore wants one main ingredient of a crime. See Black. Com. 4 V. 26.

Miskennung, (miskennunga) Is derived from mis, and San. cennan, i. e. citare. Leg. H. 1. c. 12. Iniqua vel injusta in jus vocatio; inconstanter loqui in curia, vel invariare. It is mentioned among the privileges granted and confirmed to the monastery of Ramsay by S. Edward the Confessor. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. pag. 237. Et in Civitate London in nullo Placito miskennagium. Chart. H. 2.

Misketing. Hoc est quietus esse pro querelis coram quibuscunque in transumptione probata. MS. LL. in Bibl. Cotton, fol. 261.

Misnomer, compounded of the Fr. mes, signifying amisi, and nomen, i. e. nominare) Is the using one name for another, a misnaming. Nomen est quasi rei notamen, and was invented to make a distinction between person and person; and where a person is described, so that he may be certainly distinguished and known from other persons, the omission or in some cases the mistake of the name shall not avoid the grant. 11 Rep. 20, 21. A grant to a man by a wrong name may be good, si constet de persona, but the demonstratio de persona must appear upon the face of the grant. Ld. Raym. 304. Yet a grant to a Knight by the name of Esquire, is void. Ib. 303. And if the name of a party is mistaken, the judges ought to mould a small mistake therein, to make good a contract, &c. and so as to support the act of the party by the law. Hob. 125. But the Christian name ought always to be perfect; and the law is not so precise as to surnames, as it is of Christian names. Popb. 57. 2 Lill. Abr. 199. Misprisions of clerks in names are amendable: and Peter and Piers have been adjudged one and the same name. 2 Cro. 67, 425. 1 Leon. 146. And so Saunders and Alexander; and Garret and Gerald are but one name: but Ranulph and Randolph; Isabel and Sybil, &c. are several names, and must be named right. 1 Roll. Abr. 135. 1 And. 211.

Where a christian name is quite mistaken, as John for Thomas, &c. it may be pleaded, that there was no such man in verum natura. Dyer 349. If a person pleads, that he was never called by such a name, it is ill; for this may be true, and yet he might be of that name of baptism. 1 Salk. 6. One whose name is Edmund is bound in a bond bond by the name of Edward; tho' he subscribes his true name, that is no part of the bond. 2 Cro. 640. Dyer 279. If a person be bound by the name of W. R. he may be sued by the name of W. R. alias dictus W. B. his true name; not W. B. alias dictus W. R. 3 Salk. 238. If a person be indicted by two christian and surnames, it will be quashed; for he cannot have two such names. 1 Ld. Raym. 562. A lady, wife to a private person, ought to be named according to the name of her husband, or the writ shall abate; so if the son of an Earl, &c. be sued as a Lord, and not as a private person by the name of his family. Dyer 76. 2 Salk. 451. Where a man's title is mistaken in a writ, &c. it shall abate, and he must be arrested again. 1 Vent. 154. And the plaintiff is to confess the misnomer, and pray an abatement of his writ before he proceeds to a new one. Trin. 2 Ann. 1 Salk. 129.

But if a person's title of Lord, &c. be mistaken in a lease or demise, on Not guilty pleaded, the issue is not, whether the person making the lease is a Lord, or not; so that it is sufficient if 'tis the same person who demised, tho' misnamed. Allen 58. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1172. Misnomer of corporations may be pleaded in abatement. 1 Leon. 159. 5 Mod. 327. 2 Salk. 451. And if there be any mistake in the name of a corporation, that is material in their leases and grants; they will be void. 2 Bendl. 1. Anders. 196. Judgment against a corporation by a wrong name is void. Ld. Raym. 119. A defendant may avoid an outlawry, by pleading a misnomer of name of baptism or surname; or misnomer as to additions of estate, of the town, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 460.

Tho' misnomer of a surname may not be pleaded on an indictment; in an appeal it may: And any other misnomers, and defective additions, are as fatal in an indictment as an appeal. Ibid. 130. A misnomer must be pleaded by the party himself who is misnamed. 1 Lutw. 35. Plea of misnomer by attorney may be refused, but it is no cause of demurrer. Ld. Raym. 509. If a man is taken upon a Cop. Excons. who is not of the name in the writ, he has no day in court to plead this matter to be discharged; but must bring an action of trespass for false imprisonment. 1 Mod. 70. If defendant omits to plead a misnomer, he may be taken in execution by the wrong christian name. 2 Strange 1218. Misnomer of the defendant may be pleaded after a full defence, but not after a general appearance and defence. Ld. Raym. 118. What words in a plea of misnomer shall be considered as a special imparlance, see Wils. par. 1. 261.

If issue is joined on a plea in abatement for a misnomer in an action upon the case on promises, and found against the defendant, the judgment shall be peremptory, therefore the jury ought to assess the damages. Wils. par. 2. 367.

What foundation will support a name by reputation, see Ld. Raym. 301, 304.—Note, names of persons not christened are surnames only. Id. 303. See Abatement and Addition.

It may not be improper, (for the information of the student,) to observe, that for the addition or omission of a letter or two, not making any material alteration in the sound, 'tis not proper to plead a misnomer. The courts of law discourage, (and that justly,) dilatory pleas, as much as they can, as tending to the delay of justice. However, the curious reader, who chooses to pursue his enquiries on this subject, will find it fully treated of by Campy, in the first Vol. of his Digest, tit. Abatement. Also vide 2 Hawk. P. C. 230, &c. 3 New Abr. tit. Misnomer and Addition.

Mispleading. If, in pleading, any thing be omitted, that is essential to the action or defence, as if the plaintiff does not merely state his title in a defective manner, but sets forth a title that is wholly defective in itself, or if to an action of debt (i. e. on bond, contract, &c.) the defendant pleads Not guilty instead of nil debet, these cannot be cured by a verdict for the plaintiff, in the first case, or for the defendant in the second. Salk. 365. Cro. Eliz. 778. Black. Com. 3 P. 394, &c.

When an issue is joined on an immaterial point, or such a point, as, after trial, the court cannot give judgment, the court regularly awards a repleader. See New Abr. 4 P. 126. And Campy's Digest, 5 P. 136.

Misprision, (mispriso, from the Fr. mespris, contemptus) Signifies a neglect or oversight: As for example; misprision of treason, is a negligence in not revealing treason where a person knows it to be committed. Staudf. P. C. lib. 1. c. 19. If a man knoweth of any treason or felony and conceals the same; it is misprision: In a larger sense, misprision is taken for many great offences, which are neither treason nor felony, or capital, but very near them; and every great misdemeanor, which hath no certain name appointed by the law, is sometimes called misprision. 3 Inst. 36. H. P. C. 127. Wood 406, 408. When one knows another hath committed treason, and doth not reveal it to the King or his Privy Council, or some magistrate, that the offender may be secured and brought to justice, it is high treason by the ancient Common law; for delay in discovering treason was deemed an assent to it, and consequently high treason: But there must now be an actual assent to some outward act to make it treason. Bratton 118. S. P. C. 37. 3 Inst. 138, 140. And by stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10. a bare concealment of any high treason, shall be only misprision of treason. A person having notice of a meeting of conspirators against the government, goes into their company and hears their treasonable consultation, and conceals it, this is treason; so where one has been accidentally in such company, and heard such discourse, if he meets such company a second time; for in these cases the concealment is attended with circumstances which shew an approbation thereof. H. P. C. 127. Kel. 17, 21. And a man who hath knowledge of a treason cannot secure himself by discovering generally that there will be a rising, without disclosing the persons intending to rise; nor can he do it by discovering these to a private person, who is no magistrate. S. P. C. H. P. C. 127. But where one is told in general, that there will be a rising or rebellion, and doth not know the persons concerned in it, or the place where, &c. this uncertain knowledge may be concealed, and it shall not be treason or misprision. Kel. 22. 1 H. P. C. 36. If high treason is discovered to a clergyman in confession, he ought to reveal it; but not in case of felony. 2 Inst. 629.

Concealers of Bulls of absolution from Rome are guilty of misprision of treason. 13 Eliz. a. 2. There is a misprision of treason in counterfeiting the Great Seal; forging and uttering counterfeit money brought from another kingdom, &c. 14 Eliz. c. 3. And misprision being included in every treason or felony, where a man hath committed treason or felony, the King may cause him to be indicted and arraigned of misprision only, if he please. S. P. C. 32. But if a person is indicted of misprision as for treason; tho' he be found guilty, the judges shall not give judgment thereon, he not being indicted of the misprision. Jank. Cent. 217. Information will not lie for misprision of treason, &c. but indictment, as for capital crimes: And there must be two witnesses upon indictments as well as trials of misprision of treason, by the statute 7 W. 3. c. 3. 2 Hawk. P. C. 258, 260. In all cases of misprision of treason, the offender shall be imprisoned for life; and forfeit all his goods and chattels, and the profits of his lands during life. H. P. C. 128. 3 Inst. 36, 218. See Black. Com. 4 P. 120.

Misprision of Felony. Is not only where a man knows of any felony committed, and concealeth or procures the concealment thereof; but under this title of misprision, that of theft may be reduced; which is where one knowing of a felony, takes his goods again, or amends for the same. 3 Inst. 134, 139. H. P. C. 130. Tho' the bare taking goods again which have been stolen is no offence, unless some favour be shewn the thief. 1 Hawk. P. C. 125. The stat. 3 H. 7. c. 1, provides against concealments of felonies by sheriffs, coroners and bailiffs, &c. And for misprision of felony, the offenders shall be punished by fine and imprisonment, and remain in prison till the fine is paid. See Black. Com. 4 P. 121.

Misprision at large. Are when persons contemn the King's prerogative, by refusing to assist the King according to law; or by speaking or writing against his person or government; receiving a pension from a foreign prince, without his leave; refusing to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy; and contempts against the King's palace; for the courts of justice, &c. H. P. C. 3 Inst. 139, 149. See Black. Com. 4 V. 119.

Misprisions of Clerks, Relate to their neglects in writing, or keeping records; and here misprison signifies a mistaking. 14 Ed. 3. c. 6.

Misrecital of deeds or conveyances, will sometimes hurt a deed, and sometimes not. Hob. 18, 19, 129.

If a thing is referred to time, place and number, and that is mistaken, all is void. Arg. Pl. C. 392. b. Trin. 13 Eliz. in the case of the Earl of Leicester v. Heydon.

Misrecital in an immaterial point, and where it is only an additional flourish in things circumstantial, shall not avoid a grant; as where the husband has a term in right of his wife, and this term is recited as made to the husband. Per Archer J. Cart. 149. Mitch. 18 Car. 2. C. B. in the case of Foot v. Berkley.

A misrecital in the beginning of a deed, which goes not to the end of a deed, shall not hurt, but if it goes to the end of a sentence, so that the deed is limited by it, it is void. Per Archer J. Cart. 149. in case of Foot v. Berkley. See Lease.

Missa, The mass, at first used for the dismissal or sending away of the people: And hence it came to signify the whole church service or Common Prayer; but more particularly the communion service, and the office of the sacrament, after those who did not receive it were dismissed. Litt. Dig.

Missal, missale, The mass-book, containing all things to be daily said in the mass. Lindw. Provincial. lib. 3. cap. 2.

Missaticus, A messenger. Cowell. Domesday in Chemb.

Missa Presbyter, Signifies a priest in orders. Blount.

Missura, Singing the Nunc Dimittis, and performing other ceremonies to recommend and dismiss a dying person. And in the statutes of the church of St. Paul in London, (collected by Ralph Baldock, dean about the year 1295. in the chapter de Frateria, of the fraternity or brotherhood, who were obliged to a mutual communication of all religious offices,) it is ordained—Ut fiat commendatio & missura & sepultura omnibus sociis coadunantibus & assistantibus. Liber Stat. Eccles. Paulinæ, M. S. fol. 25.

Missurium, A dish for serving up meat to a table; whence a messe, or portion of any diet;—But Vossius tells us 'tis called mess, quia dono Mitti soleat a principibus. Thorn's Chron. pag. 1762.

Mistake. It was pleaded, that A. the husband of B. died the 20th of February, 39 Eliz. and that afterwards, viz. the 21st of November, 39 Eliz. B. did marry C. so that the (afterwards) is sufficient. Arg. Bridg. 45. Mitch. 13 Jac. in the case of Smallman v. Agborrow.

Summons to appear Tuesday the 17th of April, (where Friday was the 17th) before justice of peace on a penal statute, the time being impossible, it was as if no summons had been. 1 Salk. 181. Trin. 2 Ann. B. R. Qucen v. Dyer.

The words of a deed were, that "after the death, &c. "the tenements aforesaid shall revert," instead of "re-main" to J. S. yet it is a good remainder; because, as it seems, every one's deed shall be taken most strongly against himself. Br. Fajis, pl. 26. cites 21 Ed. 3. 49.

Refrain for distrain, if rent be arrear, not being limited to any thing which should be restrained, as on the cattle, or on the land, and so shall not be taken to mean distrain. Col. R. 330, 367. Hill. 31. and Pascb. 14 Jac. B. R. Moody v. Garnon.

But there are mistakes of other kinds, i. e. of manual acts, committed unintentionally, or affecting one person, when intending to affect another, &c. According to Blackstone, ignorance or mistake is a defect of the will: As when a man intending to do a lawful act, does that which is unlawful. For here the deed and the will acting separately, there is not that conjunction between them, which is necessary to form a criminal act. But this must be an ignorance or mistake of fact, and not an error in point of law. See the Commentaries. 4 V. 27.

Mistarium, for Mistarium, Mon. Angl. 3 tom. pag. 102.

Mistrial, A false or erroneous trial; where it is in a wrong county, &c. 3 Cro. 284. And consent of parties cannot help such a trial, when past. Hob. 5. See Trial.

Misuser, Is an abuse of any liberty or benefit; as he shall make fine for his misuser. Old Nat. Br. 149. By misuser, a charter of a corporation may be forfeited: So also an office, &c. See Black. Com. 2 V. 153.

Mitred Abbots, Were those governors of religious houses, who obtained from the Pope the privilege of wearing the mitre, ring, gloves, and crozier of a bishop. The mitred Abbots, says Cowell, were not the same with the conventual prelates, who were summoned to parliament as spiritual lords, tho' it hath been commonly so held; for the summons to parliament, did not any way depend on their mitres, but on their receiving their temporals from the hands of the King. See Abbot.

Mitta, (from the Sax. mitten, mensura) An ancient Saxon measure; its quantity doth not certainly appear, but it is said to be a measure of ten bushels. Domesday. Tit. Wirefcire. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 262. And mitta, or mitcha, besides being a sort of measure for salt and corn, is used for the place where the caldrons were put to boil salt—Calderias quoque ad sal conficiendum cum propriis sedibus quæ vulgo mitche vocantur. Gale's Hist. Brit. 767.

Mittendo manuscriptum pedis finis, Was a judicial writ directed to the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer, to search for, and transmit, the foot of a fine, acknowledged before justices in Eyre, into the Common Pleas, &c. Reg. Orig. 14.

Mittimus, A writ for removing and transferring of records from one court to another; as out of the King's Bench into the Exchequer, and sometimes by Certiorari into the Chancery, and from thence into another court: But the Lord Chancellor may deliver such record with his own hand. Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 15. 28 & 29 H. 8. Dyer 29, 32. Mittimus is also a precept in writing, under the hand and seal of a justice of peace, directed to the gaoler, for the receiving and safe keeping of an offender until he is delivered by law. 2 Inst. 590. One must be committed by lawful mittimus; or breach of prison will not be felony, &c.

Mittre a large, Is generally to set or put at liberty. Law Fr. Dig. And there is a mittre le estate, and de droit, mentioned by Littleton; in case of releases of lands by jointenants, &c. which may sometimes pass a fee, without words of inheritance. 1 Inst. 273, 274. As to mitter le droit. See Black. Com. 2 V. 325. And as to mitter le estate. Id. 324.

Mixed Actions, Suits partaking of the nature of real, and personal, wherein some real property is demanded, and also personal damages for a wrong sustained.

Mixed Larceny, or compound larceny, is such as hath all the properties of simple larceny, but is accompanied with one, or both, of the aggravations of a taking from one's house or person.

Mixed Tithes, Are those of cheese, milk, and young beasts, &c. 2 Inst. 649. See Tithes. And Black. Com. 2 V. 24.

Mistilio. See Mistilo.

Mistum. This word is often mentioned in our Monkish historians; it sometimes signifies a breakfast, but always a certain quantity of bread and wine. Cowell.

Mothadocs, Stuffs made in England, and other countries; mentioned in the stat. 23 Eliz. c. 9.

Moderata Misericordia, A writ (founded on Magna Charta) which lies for him who is amerced in a court not of record, for any transgression, beyond the quality or quantity of the offence: It is directed to the lord of the court or his bailiff, commanding them to take a moderate amercement of the parties. If a man be amerced in a Court-Baron, on presentment by the jury, where he did not any trespass, he shall not have this writ, unless the amercement be excessive and outrageous; And if the steward of the court of his own head, will amerce any tenant or other person without cause, the party ought not to sue for his writ of moderata misericordia, if he be distrained for that amercement; but he shall have action of trespass. New Nat. Br. 167. When the amercement which is set on on a person is affected by his peers, this writ of moderata misericordia doth not lie; for then it is according to the statute. See F. N. B. 76. 4to edit. 176.

Modiatio, Was a certain duty paid for every tierce of wine. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 994.

Modius, A measure, usually a bushel; but various according to the customs of several countries.

Modius Tertæ vel Agri. This phrase was much used in the ancient charters of the British Kings, and probably signified the same quantity of ground as with the Romans, viz. One hundred foot long, and as many broad. — Sciendum est quod dedit illas pedum quatuor modiorum agri cum omni censu suo, &c. Mon. Angl. tom. 3. p. 200.

Modo & forma, Are words of art in law pleadings, &c. and particularly used in the answer of a defendant, whereby he denies to have done the thing laid to his charge, modo & forma declarata. Kitch. 232.

Where modo et forma are of the substance of the issue, and where but words of form, this diversity is to be observed; where the issue taken goeth to the point of the writ or action, there modo et forma are but words of form, as in the case of the writ of entry in casu proviso. But otherwise it is, when a collateral point in pleading is traversed; as if a feoffment be alleged by two, and this is traversed modo et forma, and it is found the feoffment of one, there modo et forma is material. So if a feoffment be pleaded by deed, and it is traversed absque hoc quod feoffavit modo et forma, upon this collateral issue modo et forma are so essential as the jury cannot find a feoffment without deed. Co. Lit. 281. b. See Br. Labourers, pl. 46. cites 38 H. 6. 22.

Modo et forma do not put the day nor place in issue; but only the matter and substance of the plea. Reg. Plac. 188. c. 5.

Where a traverse is with a modo et forma, &c. that will put the manner, as well as the matter in issue, where the manner is material, as the time, the fact, and other circumstances, when they are the effect of the issue. Reg. Plac. 189. c. 5.

Modus Decimandi, Is when lands, tenements, or some certain annual sum, or other profit, hath been given time out of mind to a parson and his successors, in full satisfaction and discharge of all tithes in kind, in such a place. 2 Rep. 47. And see 2 Inst. 490. And it may be paid in cities and towns, as in London, for houses in lieu of the tithe of the lands on which the houses were built: And there may be a modus decimandi for personal tithes. 2 Inst. 657, 659. A modus ought to be for the benefit and advantage of the parson; and is supposed to be of the full value of the tithes, at the time of the original composition; and if it doth not now come up to that value, it shall be intended that the tithes are improved, or that money is become of less value than it was at the time of the modus agreed on. 13 Rep. 152. Hob. 40.

But one tithe must not be paid in consideration of another; it is to be something different from the thing that is due, where the tithes are due of common right; and not by custom only; and it must be something as certain and durable as the tithe: All which are necessary to make a good prescription. 1 Roll. Abr. 650. 1 Cro. 276, 446, 475. Hob. 40.

A modus arises either by composition, custom or prescription; a composition is an agreement entered into by deed, executed under hand and seal, that such and such lands shall be discharged of tithes, paying some annual payment, or doing something for the benefit and advantage of the parson, &c. which is a legal exemption from payment of tithes for ever, if made before the stat. 13 Edw. c. 10.

Custom is what gives a right to a whole county, city, town or parish, and must be common to all within the limits where it is asserted to be; and prescription is that which gives a right to some particular person, with respect to some particular house, farm, &c. And the Ecclesiastical laws allow forty years to make a good custom and prescription; but by the Common law, it must be beyond the memory of man. 1 Roll. Abr. 653. Comm. Pars. Comp. 159. A Layman, Lord of a manor, may prescribe de modo decimandi, for himself and tenants; also a private person for his own lands, or part thereof, &c.

Tho' in cases of prescription, 'tis only to be discharged of a particular sort of tithes; for a prescription de non decimando generally, would undo the clergy, therefore it is not good where there is not sufficient left for their maintenance; as it may be where there is a competent livelihood for the parson. 2 Rep. 47. 1 Cro. 784. 1 Roll. Abr. 653.

A layman cannot prescribe by the Common law de non decimando; but he may be discharged of tithes for lands in his own hands, by grant from parson, patron and ordinary. 2 Rep. 44. A parish, &c. may not prescribe de non decimando, though it may prescribe de modo decimandi. 1 Roll. Abr. 653. But tithes due by custom only, are not within the rule against prescription in non decimando by laymen; for by the like custom persons may be discharged from the payment of such tithes. Wood's Inst. 179. And spiritual persons and corporations may prescribe de non decimando, to be discharged absolutely of tithes, and pay nothing in lieu thereof; so also may their tenants. 2 Rep. 44. 1 Roll. Abr. 653, 654. 1 Cro. 512.

A parson may sue in the Spiritual court for a modus decimandi, or rate tithe; but if the modus is denied, or a custom is to be tried, it must be tried in the Common law courts: And where a modus is pleaded in the Spiritual court to a demand of tithes in kind, a prohibition lies upon supposition that the Spiritual court will not admit of any plea against tithes. 2 Ed. 6. c. 13. Wood 178. Where land is converted to other uses, as hay ground to tillage, &c. or the thing is altered or destroyed; as when a fulling-mill is made a corn-mill, or a corn-mill is come to ruin, &c. a modus made on good consideration may be discharged, and then tithes shall be paid in kind. 1 Danv. Abr. 607, 608. So by the non-payment of the consideration; or by payment of tithes in kind, for so long time, that the prescription for a modus decimandi cannot be proved: Tho' short interruption 'tis said shall not destroy it. 1 Roll. 932. Hob. 43. A payment of different sums, is evidence that there is no modus. A custom of paying tithe of wool by the pound, and not by the fleece, is no modus. 2 Strange 783. See Black. Com. 2 V. 29.

Mohair Varn. See Manufactures, Silk.

Moitie, (medietas, Fr. moitie, i. e. consequa vel media pars) Is the half of any thing; and to hold by moities, is mentioned in our books, in case of jointenants, &c. Litt. 125.

Molasses. See Melasses.

Molendinum, A mill of divers kinds. See Mill.

Molitura, Was commonly taken for the toll or mulcture paid for grinding corn at a mill, and sometimes called molta, Fr. molta, molitura libera, free grinding or liberty of a mill, without paying toll; a privilege which the lord generally reserved to his own family — Salva mihi & heredibus meis molitura libera familie nostre quæta in dicto molendino. Paroch. Antiq. 236.

Molitor manus imposuit. Several justifications in trespass, i. e. actions of assault, are called by this name, from the words gently laid his hands upon him used in the plea; as where the defendant justifies an assault by shewing that the plaintiff was unlawfully in the house of defendant, making a disturbance, and being requested to cease such disturbance, and depart, he refused and continued therein, making such disturbance, he, the defendant, gently laid his hands on the plaintiff, and removed him out of the house. So in various other instances, as for separating two persons, fighting, in order to preserve the peace, so in the legal exercise of an office, &c. See Black. Com. 3 V. 121.

Molman, A man subject to do service; applied to the servants of a monastery. Prior. Lewis, p. 21. Spelm. Gloss.

Molmurat, or Molmuratius Laws. Were the laws of Dunwille Molmuratius, sixteenth King of the Britains, who began his reign above four hundred years before the Birth of our Saviour, and were famous in this land till the time of William the Conqueror. This King was the first who published laws in Britain; and his laws, (with those those of Queen Mercia,) were translated by Gildas out of the British into the Latin tongue. Usher's Primord. 126.

Molueda, Molueda, A mill-pool or pond. Paroch. Antiq. 135.

Molta, The duty or toll paid to the lord by his vassals, to grind corn at his mill. Concedo sancto Amando moltam suam & moltam similiter omnium civium St. Amandi. Monastic. 2 tom. p. 97.

Monarchy. That form of government, where the sovereign power is entrusted in the hands of a single person.

Monasteries and abbeys, &c. dissolved by K. H. 8. See 27 H. 8. c. 28. and Abbot, and the Tables to the Statutes, tit. Monasteries.

Monetarium, Signified a certain tribute paid by tenants to their lord every third year, that he should not change the money which he had coined, formerly when it was lawful for great men to coin money current in their territories; but not of silver and gold: It was abrogated by the Stat. 1 Hen. 1. c. 2. The word monetarium is likewise used for a mintage, and the right of coining or minting money. Jus & artificium cudendi monetas.

Moneta, (moneta) Is that metal, be it gold or silver, which receives authority by the prince's imprints to be current; for as wax is not a seal without a print, so metal is not money without impression. Co. Litt. 207. Money is said to be the common measure of all commerce, thro' the world, and consists principally of three parts; the material whereof it is made, being silver or gold; the denomination or extrinsic value, given by the King, by virtue of his prerogative; and the King's stamp thereon. 1 Hale's Hist. P. H. 188.

It belongs to the King only, to put a value, as well as the impression on money; which being done, the money is current for so much as the King hath limited. 2 Inst. 575. Any piece of money coined is of value as it bears a proportion to other current money, and that without proclamation; and tho' there is no act of parliament, or order of state for guineas, as they are taken; yet being coined at the mint, and having the King's insignia on them, they are lawful money, and current at the value they were coined and uttered at the mint. 2 Salk. 446. But it has been observed, that guineas were originally coined for 20 s. according to the twenty shilling pieces of money, and that legally, no more ought to be demanded for them: Also that in legal proceedings, they should be mentioned as pecias auri, vocat. guineas, valoris, &c. 5 Mod. 7. If an action is brought for damages, the value of guineas may be given in evidence to the jury: but if the action be for so many guineas, the value ought to be set forth in the declaration, to ascertain the debt. Carthow. 255.

Gold and silver coin, &c. is not to be exported without licence, on pain of forfeiture. Stat. 9 Ed. 3. cap. 1. And money of silver melted down, is to be forfeited, and double value. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 31. But by old statutes, foreign money may be melted down; and no money shall be current but the King's own, &c. 27 Ed. 3. cap. 14. 17 R. 2. c. 1. See Coin and Exchange, and Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 11. See the Table to the Statutes, tit. Money, Coin, &c. See Black Com. 1 V. 276. 4 V. 84, 88.

Money, lending it abroad. The King by proclamation may at any time prohibit all his subjects, not exceeding one year, to lend or advance money to any foreign prince or state, without licence under the Great or Privy Seal; and if any person knowingly offend in the premises, he shall forfeit treble the value of the money lent, &c. two-thirds to the King, and the other to the informer: but persons may deal in foreign stocks, or be interested in any bank abroad, established before issuing his Majesty's proclamation. Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 5.

Money in Court. In law proceedings, money demanded is oftentimes brought into the court, either by a rule of court, or by pleading a prossert in curiam of the money; and then if the money is not paid into court, the plea will not be received; for money is not allowed to be paid into court, after plea pleaded. Wils. par. 1. 157. The money must be brought into court, upon a plea of tender: And the defendant may at any time, pending an action on bond with a penalty, bring the money and costs into court; and it shall be a good satisfaction and discharge; by stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. If a defendant pay money, or part, into court, and it is struck out of the declaration, tho' the plaintiff is nonsuit, he shall not take the money out of court; for by paying into court, the defendant admitted that so much was due; but if the defendant brings money into court, upon a tender and uncore priss, and the plaintiff takes issue upon the tender, and it is found against him, then the defendant shall have the money out of court. 2 Salk. 597. Money may be brought into court upon an action of debt for rent: in replevin, when the defendant avows for so much rent arrear, the plaintiff hath been admitted to bring it into court: And in covenant, &c. where a breach is assigned for non-payment of rent, the defendant may bring the money due into court. Ibid. In a quantum meruit it hath been denied; tho' it was granted in such case, Pasch. 5 Ann. In trover the defendant cannot bring the goods and costs into court. Wils. par. 1. c. 23.

If an action for the mesne profits after a recovery in ejectment, the defendant shall not have leave to pay money into court. Ib. Par. 2. 115.

And it is said, where an action is brought by an executor or administrator, the defendant cannot bring the money into court. 2 Salk. 296. Sed quid?

Monger, A little sea vessel which fishmen use. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 11. And when a word ends with monger, as ironmonger, &c. it signifies merchant, from the Sax. man-ger, i. e. Mercator.

Monks, or Monayers, Monetarii, Are ministers of the Mint, who make and coin the King's money. Reg. Orig. 262. and 1 Ed. 6. 15. It appears in ancient authors, that the Kings of England had Mints in several counties; and in the Tract in the Exchequer, written by Oakham, we find, that whereas sheriffs were usually obliged to pay into the King's Exchequer the King's sterling money, for such debts as they were to answer; those of Cumberland and Northumberland were admitted to pay in any sort of money, so it were silver: And the reason there given is, because those two shires Monetarios de antiqua institutione non habent; quod abbas & monachi prædicti habeant unum monetarium & unum cunsum apud Rading ad monetam ibidem, tam ad obolos & sterlingos quam ad sterlingos prout moris est fabricand. & faciend. Memorand. Scacc. de Anno 20 Ed. 3. inter Record. de Trin. Rot. Of later days the title of moniers hath been given to bankers, that is, such as make it their trade to deal in monies upon returns. Corwell.

Monks, (Monachus) From the Gr. Mónos, solus, qui soli, i. e. Separati ab aliorum consortio vivunt, because the first monks lived alone in the wilderness. They were after divided into three ranks; Canobitarum, i. e. a society living in common in a monastery, &c. under the government of a single person; and these were under certain rules, and afterwards called Regulars, Anachoretæ or Bremite, those monks who lived in the wilderness on bread and water. And Sarabites, monks living under no rule, that wandered in the world. St. Jerom tells us, that of the Anachoretæ Paulus fuit Auditor, Antonius illustrator, Jobannes Baptista princeps.

Monkery. The profession of a monk, mentioned in Whitlock's readings upon the Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13.

Monks' Clothes, Made of a certain kind of coarse cloth. Vide 20 H. 6.

Monopoly, (From Mónos unus & πωλόν vendo) Is an allowance of the King by his grant, commission, or otherwise, to any person or persons, for the sole buying, selling, making, working or using of any thing, by which other persons are restrained of any freedom or liberty that they had before, or hindered in their lawful trade. 3 Inst. 181. It is defined to be where the power of selling any thing is in one man alone; or when one shall ingross and get into his hands such a merchandise, &c. as none may sell or gain by them but himself. 11 Rep. 86.

And a monopoly hath three incidents mischievous to the publick: 1. The raising of the price. 2. The commodity will not be so good. 3. The impoverishing of poor artificers. Ibid. All monopolies are against the ancient and fundamental laws of the realm: A by-law, which makes a monopoly, is void; so is a prescription for a sole trade to any one person or persons, exclusive of all others.

• Moor 591. Monopolies by the Common law are void, as being against the freedom of trade and discouraging labour and industry; and putting it in the power of particular persons to set what prices they please on a commodity. 1 Hawk. P. C. 231. Upon this ground it hath been held, that the King's grant to any corporation of the sole importation of any merchandise, is void. 2 Roll. Abr. 214. 3 Inst. 182. The grant of the sole making, importing and selling of playing cards, was adjudged void. 11 Rep. 84. Moor 671. And the King's grant of the sole making and writing of bills, pleas, and writs in a court of law, to any particular person, hath been resolved to be void. 1 Jones 231. 3 Mod. 75.

The King may grant to particular persons the sole printing of the holy scriptures, and law books. 1 Hawk. 231. All matters of this nature ought to be tried by the Common law, and not at the council-table, or any other court of that kind; and the making use of or procuring any unlawful monopoly, is punishable by fine and imprisonment at Common law. 3 Inst. 181, 182.

By statute, all monopolies, grants, letters patent, and licences, for the sole buying, selling and making of goods and manufactures, are declared void, except in some particular cases; and persons grieved by putting them in use, shall recover treble damages and double costs, by action on the statute; and delaying such action, before judgment, by colour of any order, warrant, &c. or delaying execution after, incurs a præmunire: But this does not extend to any grant or privilege granted by act of parliament; nor to any grant or charter to corporations or cities, &c. or to grants to companies or societies of merchants, for enlargement of trade; or to inventors of new manufactures, who have patents for the term of fourteen years; grants or privileges for printing; or making gunpowder; casting ordnance, &c. 21 Jac. 1. c. 3.

As to inventors of new manufactures, &c. it has been adjudged on this statute, that a manufacture must be substantially new, and not barely an additional improvement of any old one, to be within the statute; it must be such as none other used at the granting the letters patent; and an old manufacture in use before, cannot be prohibited in any grant of the sole use of any such new invention. 3 Inst. 184. Yet a grant of a monopoly may be to the first inventor, by the Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 3. notwithstanding the same thing was practised before beyond sea; because the statute mentions new manufactures within the realm, and intended to encourage new devices useful here; and it is the same thing whether acquired by experience or travel abroad, or by study at home. 2 Salk. 447. It is said, a new invention to do as much work in a day by an engine, as formerly used to employ many hands, is contrary to the statute; by reason it is inconvenient, in turning so many men to idleness. 3 Inst. 184. Sed qu? See Black. Com. 4 V. 115, 159, 449.

• Monster, One who hath not human shape, and yet is born in lawful wedlock: And such may not purchase or retain lands; but a person may be an heir to his ancestor's lands, tho' he be determined in some part of his body. Co. Lit. 7.

A monster thewn for money is a misdemeanor. 2 Chan. Ca. 110. Trin. 34 Car. 2. Harring v. Walrood. It was a child that had four legs, and four arms and two heads and but one belly, where the two bodies were conjoined; the child died and was embalmed to be kept for shew, but was ordered by Lord Chancellor to be buried in a week. Ibid.

• Monstrans de droit, Is a showing a right, and signifies a writ out of Chancery to be restored to lands and tenements that are a man's in right, tho' by some office found to be in the possession of one lately dead; by which office the King would be intitled to the said lands, &c. It is given by the Stat. 34 Ed. 3. c. 14. and 36 Ed. 3. 13. Staundf. Prærog. c. 21. 4 Co. Rep. 54. Lessee of an outlaw, cannot maintain trespass, but must be relieved by Monstrans de droit. Ld. Raym. 307. See Traverse.

• Monstrans de faits ou records, Showing of deeds or records is thus; upon an action of debt brought upon an obligation, after the plaintiff hath declared, he ought to shew his obligation; and so it is of records. And the difference between monstrans de faits and oyer de faits, is, this; he that pleads the deed or record, or declares upon it, ought to shew the same; and the other, against whom such deed or record is pleaded, may demand oyer of the same. Cowell.

Where a man pleads a deed, which is the substance of his plea or declaration, if he doth not plead it with a profert in curia, his plea or declaration is naught upon a special demurrer, showing it for cause: And if he doth plead it with a profert in curia, if the other party demands a sight of it, he cannot proceed till he hath shewn it, and when the defendant hath had a sight of it, if he demands a copy of the same, the plaintiff may not proceed until a copy is delivered unto him. Stat. 4, 5 Ann. c. 16. 2 Lill. Abr. 201, 202. Vide Profert in Curia.

• Monstraverunt, Is a writ which lies for tenants in ancient demesne, who hold land by free charter, when they are distrained to do unto their lords other services and customs than they or their ancestors used to do: Also it lieth where such tenants are distrained for the payment of toll, &c. contrary to their liberty, which they do or should enjoy. F. N. B. 14. 4 Inst. 269. This writ is directed to the sheriff, to charge the lord that he do not restrain them for such unusual services, &c. And if the lord nevertheless distrains his tenants, for other services than of right they ought to do, the sheriff may command the neighbours, who dwell next the manor, or take the power of the county, to resist the lord, &c. And the tenants in such case may likewise sue an attachment against their lord, returnable in C. B. or B. R. to answer the contempt and recover damages. New Nat. Br. 32. But the lord shall not be put to answer the writ of attachment sued against him upon the monstraverunt, before the court is certified by the treasurer and chamberlains of the Exchequer, from the book of Domesday, whether the manor be ancient demesne; so that it is requisite that the plaintiff in the monstraverunt, do sue forth a special writ for the certifying of the same. Ibid. 35. The writ of monstraverunt may be sued for many of the tenants, without naming any of them by their proper names, but generally monstraverunt nobis homines de, &c. But in the attachment against the lord the tenants ought to be named; tho' one tenant may sue it in his own name, and the name of the other tenants by general words, Et homines, &c. 2 H. 6. 26. See Ne injuste Vexes. Sed qu? If action of trespass is not preferable.

• Monstrum, Is sometimes taken for the box in which relics are kept. Item unum monstrum cum ossibus Sr. Petri, &c. Monast. 3 tom. pag. 173. Monstrum is also taken for what we call corruptly mustering foldiers. Cowell.

• Month, or Moneth, Sax. Monath, (Menſis à mensione, lunæ cursus) Signifies the time the sun goes thro' one sign of the zodiac, and the moon thro' all twelve; properly the time from the new moon to its change, or the course or period of the moon, whence 'tis called month from the moon. Litt. Diſt. A month is a space of time containing by the week twenty-eight days; by the kalendar sometimes thirty, and sometimes thirty-one days: And Julius Cæsar divided the year into twelve months, each month into four weeks, and each week into seven days. The month by the Common law is but twenty-eight days; and in case of a condition for rent, the month shall be computed at twenty-eight days; so in the case of enrolment of deeds, and generally in all cases where a statute speaks of months: But where the statute accounteth by the year, half year, or quarter of a year, then it is to be reckoned according to the kalendar. 1 Inst. 135. 6 Rep. 62. Cro. Jac. 167. A twelve-month, in the singular number, includes the whole year, according to the kalendar: But twelve months, six months, &c. in the plural number, shall be accounted after twenty-eight days to every month; except in case of presentations to benefices, to avoid lapse, &c. which shall be in six kalendar months. 6 Rep. 61. Cro. Jac. 141. And if an agreement is to pay 50 s. for the interest of 100 l. at the end of six months, it is said the computation must be by kalendar months; because if it was by lunar months, the interest would exceed the rate allowed by the statute. Wood's Inst. 433.

• Monstrale, A duty of two-pennies Scots upon beer there, 6 Geo. 1. c. 7. 7 Geo. 2. c. 5.

Monument, An heir may bring an action against one that injures the monument, &c. of his ancestor; and the coffin and shroud of a deceased person belong to the executors or administrators; but the dead body belongeth to none. 3 Inst. 202, 203. See Black. Com. 2 V. 428.

Moots, In the Isle of Man, who summon the courts for the several sheadings, are the lords bailiffs, called by that name; and every moot has the like office with our bailiff of the hundred. King's Descrip. Isle of Man.

Moot, (From the Sax. Motian, placitare, to treat or handle) Is a term well understood in the Inns of Court, and signifies the exercise or arguing of cases which young barristers and students perform at certain times, the better to enable them for the practice and defence of clients causes. The place where moot-cases were argued, was anciently called the Moot-hall: And in the Inns of Court there is a bailiff of the moot yearly chosen by the benchers, to appoint the mootmen for the Inns of Chancery; and keep accounts of the performances of exercises, both there and in the house. Orig. Juridical. 212.

Mootmen, Those who argue the reader's cases, called moot-cases, in the Inns of Chancery, in the term-time, and in vacations.

Moor, A moor, or barren and unprofitable ground, derived from the Sax. mor, signifying also marshland. Mon. Ang. Tom. 2. pag. 50. 1 Inst. 5. Also a heath. Item de pannagio, herbagio, &c. & de omnibus exitibus boscorum, morarum, &c. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 71.

Moor, A watery or boggy moor; and such in Lancashire they call mosses; moressa is used in the same sense. Mon. Ang. Tom. 2. pag. 306.

Morat in Leges, Is the same with demorat, and signifies as much as he demurs; because the party goes not forward in pleading, but rests or abides upon the judgment of the court in a certain point, as to the sufficiency in law of the declaration or plea of the adverse party, who deliberate and take time to argue and advise thereupon, and then determine it. *Co. Mort-dancestoz, A writ now seldom used, mentioned in the statutes 53 H. 3. & 6 Ed. 1. See Assise of Mort-dancestoz, and Black. Com. 3 V. 185.

Mortgage, (Mortgagium, vel mortuum vadium,) Is compounded of two French words, viz. mort, i. e. mors, and gage, i. pignus, and signifies a pawn of land or tenement, or any thing immoveable, laid or bound for money borrowed, to be the creditor's for ever, if the money be not paid at the day agreed upon; and the creditor holding land and tenement upon this bargain, is called tenant in mortgage. Of this we read in the Grand Customary of Normandy, cap. 113. which see. Glanvill likewise, lib. 10. cap. 6. defineth it thus; Mortuum vadium dicitur illud, cujus fructus vel redditus interim percepti in nullo se acquiescant. So that it is called a dead gage, because whatsoever profit it yieldeth, yet it redeemeth not itself by yielding such profit, except the whole sum borrowed be paid at the day. See Skene de verb. signif. verbo mortgage. He who pledgeth this pawn or gage, is called the mortgagor, and he who taketh it the mortgagee. West. Symbol. part. 2. tit. Pines, sect. 145. This, if it contain excessive usury, is forbidden by 37 H. 8. cap. 9. But 'tis called mortgage, because, if the money is not paid at the day, the land moritur to the debtor, and is forfeited to the creditor. Cowell.

1. Of the original and several kinds of mortgages.
2. What shall be deemed a mortgage, or an estate redeemable; and of the distinct interests of mortgagor and mortgagee.
3. Of the equity of redemption and foreclosure; and of the manner of redeeming and foreclosing.

1. Of the original and several kinds of mortgages.

The notion of mortgaging and redemption seems to be of Jewish extraction, and from them derived to the Greeks and Romans; the plan of the Mosaic law constitutes a just and equal agrarian, that the lands may continue in the same tribes and families, and the people might not be diverted by any exoticick acts and inventions from the exercise of agriculture, in which innocent employment they were to be continually educated; therefore whoever were compelled by want to sell, could transfer no estate in the lands, farther than to the next general jubilee, which returned once in 50 years; wherefore they computed till the jubilee, that according to the distance from thence, such was the interest that could be transferred to the buyer; but the vendor had power at any time to redeem, paying the value of the lands to the jubilee; but tho' he did not redeem it at the year of jubilee, yet the lands came back again free to the vendor and his heirs. Cumeus 11, 12.

But our notion of mortgaging and redemption seems to have come more immediately from the Civil law, therefore it will be necessary herein to consider the distinctions in that law between pledges and things hypothecated. Justin. 592.

The pignus or pledge was, when any thing was obliged for money lent, and the possession passed to the creditor.

The hypotheca was, when the thing was obliged for money lent, and the possession remained with the debtor. Now in case of goods pignorated, the creditor was obliged to the same diligence in keeping them, as he used about his own; so that if the goods were lost by the negligence of the creditor, an action lay as for a deposit; for the property being transferred to the creditor for a particular purpose, he was to keep them as his own. See Bailment. Also see the case of Coggs and Bernard, 2 L. Ray. 909, &c. where the case of bailment, is very fully and learnedly handled, and its several species shewn in a very judicious manner.

If the debtor did not redeem the thing pledged, the creditor was to foreclose the redemption of the debtor; and if the money was not paid, the creditor had his actio pignoratitia, or hypothecaria, which, when he had pursued, and obtained sentence thereon, he might sell as his own property; but there was this difference between the actio pignoratitia and hypothecaria; that the actio pignoratitia was only against the person of the debtor to foreclose him, because the pignus was already in the possession of the creditor; but the actio hypothecaria was tam in rem, quam in personam, and was given ad pignus prosequendum, contra quemcumque possessorem; because herein the creditor had not the possession of the pledge, but it remained to the debtor; and 'till sentence was obtained in these actions, the creditor could not obtain the property of the pledge; and if the money was paid before sentence, the pledge was subject to redemption; and where the same thing was pledged to several, those were said to be potiores in pignore, to whom the things were first hypothecated. Digest. lib. 20. tit. 6. Corvin. 269, 270, 271.

If the money was tendered or paid to the creditor, the contract of pignoration was dissolved, and the debtor might have the pledge back, as a thing lent; which seems to have introduced the notion among us of the debtor's right to redemption, and with them the usucaption, or the right of prescription, did not extinguish the pledge, unless a stranger had held it for thirty years, or the debtor had held it for 40 years. Digest. lib. 20. tit. 6.

In the feudal law the rule was, Feudalia, invito domino, aut agnatis, non recte subijciuntur hypotheca, quamvis fructus posse esse receptum est; and the reason of this rule was, because the feud was filled with a tenant from the lord's original bounty, on whom he depended for his personal service in war and peace; therefore the feudary could not obtrude a tenant on him without his leave, who might be less capable of those services; therefore as the tenant could not originally alien without licence, so he could not mortgage. Corvin. 268.

But when a licence of alienation was given about the time of Hen. 3. and it became a maxim in law, that the purity of a fee-simple imported a power of disposing of it as the owner pleased; there were two ways of mortgaging lands introduced, which Littleton distinguishes by the names of vadium vivum and vadium mortuum. 9 H. 3. 32. 18 Ed. 1.

The vadium vivum is, where a man borrows 100*l.* of another, and makes an estate of lands to him, 'till he hath received the said sum of the issues and profits of the lands; and it is called vadium vivum, because neither the money nor the land die; for the lands are constantly paying off the money, and the lands are not left as a dead pledge, in case the money be not paid. This seems to be the ancient way of pledging lands; for they held, that lands could not be hypothecated; therefore they used to subject the usufructus, which continued originally during the life of the feudary; but when there was a free liberty given of alienation, then the feudary could pledge the usufructus of the land at pleasure; but because by this way of pledging, the lender received his money by degrees, and in small parcels, which was very troublesome; and those that lend money to usury, are generally willing to receive the whole in a gross sum; therefore this way of pledging is now out of use. Co. Lit. 205. See Madd. Formul. 136.

The vadium mortuum is so called by Littleton, because it is doubtful, whether the feoffor will pay the money at the day limited or not; and if he do not pay, then the land, which is but in pledge upon condition, for the payment of the money, is taken from him for ever, and so dead to him; and if he do pay it, then the pledge is dead to the tenant of the land. Lit. sect. 332. Co. Lit. 205. But vide Division 3.

Of these mortgages there are again two sorts; 1st, Of the freehold and inheritance; and 2dly, Of terms for years. Maddox 318, 319.

1st, Of the freehold and inheritance, and here the ancient way was to make a charter of feoffment, on condition, that if the feoffor or his heirs paid the sum to the feoffee or his heirs, he should re-enter and re-possess; and sometimes the condition was contained in the charter of feoffment, and sometimes it was defeazanced by another charter, as may be seen in the old forms. Maddox 318, 319.

For as a man might annex a condition to his feoffment, for cujus est dare, ejus est disponere, so he might annex a condition by another deed, bearing date, and executed at the same time; for being executed at the same time, it is really but one and the same disposition, quae incontinenti sunt inesse videntur; but a defeazance or condition annexed after the feoffment executed comes too late; because the livery coram paribus attesting the infeudation, in which there is no condition, the tenant must hold the land according to the tenure of the investiture; but rents, annuities or warranties that are things executory, may be defeated by defeasances made at the time of their creation, or any time after; because there is not any necessity of the notoriety of livery to make an investiture; therefore being created by deed only, they may be defeated or destroyed by deed alone. Co. Lit. 226, 227.

These sorts of conveyances were subject to these inconveniencies; that if the money were not paid at the day, so that the estate became absolute, the estate was thenceforth subject to the dower of the feoffee, and all other his real charges and incumbrances; for tho' if the feoffor performed the condition, then he might re-enter, and re-possess himself in his former estate, and consequently was in above all the charges and incumbrances of the feoffee; yet if he did not literally perform the condition by payment of the money at the day, then the estate was legally subject to the charges and incumbrances of the feoffee, tho' the money was afterwards paid, and the estate reconveyed to the feoffee. Ib. 221, 222.

But the courts of equity, as they grew in power, have set this matter right, and have maintained the right of redemption, not only against tenant in dower, and the persons who come in under the feoffee, but even against the tenant by the curtesy, and lord by escheat, that are in the post; because the payment of the money doth, in the consideration of equity, put the feoffor in statu quo, since the lands were originally only a pledge for the money lent. Hard. 465.

As to mortgages by way of creating terms, this was formerly by way of demise and re-demise. As for example; A. borrowed money of B. thereupon A. would demise the lands to B. for a term of 500, &c. years absolutely, with common covenants against incumbrances, and for farther assurance, and then B. would the day after re-demise to A. for 499 years, with condition, to be void on non-payment of the money at the day to come; this manner of mortgaging came in after the 21 H. 8. for falsifying recoveries, when there was a fixed interest settled in terms for years; and was esteemed best for the mortgagor, to avoid all manner of pretension from the incumbrances and dower of the feoffee in mortgage; and was reputed best for the mortgagee, to avoid the wardship and feudal duties of the tenure, and was only inconvenient in this; that if the second deed were lost, there appeared to be an absolute term in the mortgagee. 3 New Abr. 633.

And this is now the common method, viz. by a demise of the land for a term, under a condition to be void on the payment of the mortgage money and interest; and a covenant is inserted at the end of such deeds, that till the default shall be made in the payment of the money, that the mortgagor shall receive the rents, issues and profits without account. 3 New Abr. 633.

This has been ruled to create a tenancy at will to the mortgagor; but if the mortgagor dies, the tenancy at will is determined till there is a receipt of interest from the heir, which seems to make him also tenant at will to the mortgagee. Raym. 147.

But now the last and best improvement of mortgages seems to be, that in the mortgage deed of a term for years, or in the assignment thereof, the mortgagor should covenant for himself and his heirs, that if default be made in the payment of the money at the day, that then he and his heirs will, at the costs of the mortgagee and his heirs, convey the freehold and inheritance of the mortgaged lands to the mortgagee and his heirs, or to such person or persons (to prevent merger of the term) as he or they shall direct and appoint; for the reversion, after a term of 50 or 100 years, being little worth, and yet the mortgagee for want thereof continuing but a termor, and subject to forfeiture, &c. and not capable of the privileges of a freeholder; therefore where the mortgagor gagor cannot redeem the land, 'tis but reasonable the mortgagee should have the whole interest and inheritance of it, to dispose of as absolute owner. 3 New Abr. 633.

2. What shall be deemed a mortgage, or an estate redeemable; and of the distinct interests of mortgagor and mortgagee.

Herein we may observe in general, that whatever clauses or covenants there are in a conveyance, tho' they seem to import an absolute disposition or conditional purchase; yet, if upon the whole, it appears to have been the intention of the parties, that such conveyance should only be a mortgage, or pass an estate redeemable, a court of equity will always construe it so. 1 Vern. 183, 268, 394.

As where the condition of a mortgage is, that the mortgagor should redeem during his life, or that the mortgagor, and the heirs of his body, should redeem, yet equity will admit the general heir of such mortgagor to a redemption; because this can be no purchase, since there is a clause of redemption; and when the land was originally only a pledge for money, if the principal and interest be offered, the land is free; and it would be very hard, that it should be in the power of the scrivener, or griping usurer, by such impertinent restrictions, to elude the justice of the court. 1 Vern. 33, 190. 2 Chan. Ca. 147. S. C. Howard ver. Harris.

But if a man borrows money of his brother, and agrees to make him a mortgage, and that if he has no issue male, his brother should have the land; such an agreement made out by proof, will be decreed in equity. 1 Vern. 193. per North Lord Keeper.

A. in consideration of 1000*l.* made an absolute conveyance to B. of the reversion of certain lands after two lives, which, at that time, were worth little more; and by another deed of the same date, the lands are made redeemable any time during the life of the grantor only, on payment of 1000*l.* and interest; A. died, not having paid the money; and it was held by Lord K. Nottingham, that his heir might redeem, notwithstanding this restrictive clause, and that it was a rule, once a mortgage, and always a mortgage, and that B. might have compelled A. to redeem in his life-time, or have foreclosed him; but on a re-hearing, Lord North reversed the decree on the circumstance of this case; for it appeared by proof, that A. had a kindness for B. and that he married his kinswoman, which made it in the nature of a marriage settlement; he likewise held, that B. could not have compelled A. to redeem during his life, which made it the more strong. 1 Vern. 7, 214, 232. Newcomb. ver. Bonham. 2 Vent. 364. S. C. where it is said, that Lord North's decree was affirmed in the house of Lords.

If A. mortgage lands to B. worth 15*l.* per annum, for securing 200*l.* and at the same time B. enters into a bond conditioned, that if the 200*l.* and interest is not paid within a year, then he to pay A. his executors or administrators, the further sum of 78*l.* in full for the purchase of the premises, &c. and A. dies within the year, and the money is paid the next day after, the mortgage is forfeited to his administrator; yet A's heir may redeem, paying the 200*l.* and likewise the 78*l.* that was paid to the administrator. 1 Vern. 488. Willet ver. Winnel.

So where A. for 550*l.* made an absolute assignment of a church lease for three lives to B. and B. by writing under his hand agreed, that if A. paid 600*l.* at the end of the year, B. would convey; B. died, leaving C. his son and heir; two of the lives died, and the lease was twice renewed by C. and his father; and tho' it was near twenty years since the conveyance was made, yet the Master of the Rolls decreed a redemption on payment of 550*l.* and the two fines. 2 Vern. 84. Mantlove v. Ball.

A. lends money to B. to carry on certain buildings, and takes a mortgage from him to secure 1600*l.* with interest; and by another deed executed at the same time, takes a covenant from B. that he should convey to him, if he thought fit, ground-rents to the value of 1600*l.* at the rate of 20 years purchase; and on a bill brought to redeem, the Master of the Rolls decreed a redemption on payment of principal, interest and costs, without regard to that agreement, but set aside the same as unconscionable; for a man shall not have interest for his money, and a collateral advantage besides for the loan of it, or clog the redemption with any bye-agreement. 2 Vern. 520. Jennings v. Ward.

But tho' these and such like restrictions are relieved against, to make them answer the primary intention of the parties; yet if A. on a mortgage, lends money at 5*l.* per cent. but agrees in the deed, that if the money were paid within three months after it became due, that he would accept of 4*l.* per cent. and the mortgagor neglects to pay the interest within the time, equity will not relieve him, but he must pay 5*l.* per cent. for tho' the court relieves against unreasonable penalties, yet this is not so, for the mortgagee might have refused to lend his money under 5*l.* per cent. Preced. Chan. 160. Jory v. Cox. 1 P. W. 653.

So if the mortgagee devises, that the mortgagor should be remitted part of his mortgage money, provided he pays the principal and interest within three days after his decease; if the condition be not performed, the remittance is lost; because being a voluntary bounty, and not ex debito justitiæ, the party must take it as it is limited, for cujus est dare, ejus est disponere; and the court cannot relieve in this case after the day. 1 Chan. Ca. 52.

But where in a mortgage there was a proviso, that if the interest was behind six months, that then the interest should be accounted principal, and carry interest; this by Lord Cowper was decreed to be a vain clause, and of no use; and he said, that no precedent had ever carried the advance of interest so far, and that an agreement made at the time of the mortgage, will not be sufficient to make future interest principal; but to make interest principal, it is requisite that interest be first grown due, and then an agreement concerning it may make it principal. 2 Salk. 499.

The mortgagor before forfeiture, and whilst it remains uncertain, whether he will perform the condition at the time limited or not, hath the legal estate in him; also after forfeiture he hath an equity of redemption; so that he is still considered as owner and proprietor of the estate, until the equity of redemption be foreclosed; therefore may make leases or any settlement thereof, which will bind his equity of redemption. It is said, that a tenant in tail of an equity of redemption may devise it for payment of debts. 1 Vern. 41. Turner v. Guim.

Therefore if a man mortgages his land, and, (as is usual,) still continues in possession, and levies a fine, and five years pass, yet the mortgagee is not barred; for tho' the mortgagee be in reality out of possession, yet when that is done by consent of both parties, and the nature of the contract requires it should be so while the interest is paid, it is against the original design of the contract, that any act of the mortgagor, (except the payment of the money,) should deprive the mortgagee of his security, and is no less than fraud; which the law will not countenance. 1 Sid. 460. 1 Vent. 82. Carth. 101, 414. 2 Keb. 522.

And as the mortgagor, being considered only as tenant at will to the mortgagee, cannot, by his act, defeat the interest of the mortgagee, otherwise than by payment of the mortgage money; so neither can the mortgagee defeat the mortgagor of his equity of redemption; therefore if a mortgagee in fee suffers a recovery, this, even at law, shall not bind the mortgagor's right of entry, upon performance of the condition; but if the mortgagor had been a party to the recovery, then his right had been bound, not only on account of the recompence in value, but because he is estopped by the recovery to claim the land against the recoverer or his heirs, when he was called in before the judgment given to defeat his title, and could not do it. Palm. 135. Cro. Jac. 593.

So if a mortgagee be disseised, and the disseisor levies a fine, and five years pass after the proclamations, tho' the mortgagee is hereby barred, yet if the mortgagor pays or tenders his money, he has five years to prosecute his his right, by the second saving in the statute 4 Hen. 7. cap. 24. because his title did not accrue 'till payment of the money. Plow. 373. a.

And as the mortgagor, 'till the equity of redemption be foreclosed, is considered as owner of the land, it was ruled, where a bill for a redemption was brought against a mortgagee in possession, and a decree accordingly, that the mortgagee before the account taken, having presented to a church that become void, should revoke his presentation, and present such a person as the mortgagor or his vendee (he having contracted to sell) should appoint. Preced. Chan. 71. 2 Vern. 401.

By the 7 W. & M. cap. 25. it is enacted, "That no person or persons shall be allowed to have any vote in election of members to serve in parliament, for or by reason of any trust estate or mortgage; unless such trustee or mortgagee be IN ACTUAL POSSESSION, or receipt of the rents and profits of the same, but that the mortgagor, or cestui que trust in possession, shall and may vote for the same, notwithstanding such mortgage or trust.

And by the 9 Ann. cap. 7. which requires, that knights of the shire should have 600 l. per ann. and every other member 300 l. per ann. it is enacted, "That no person shall be qualified to sit in the House of Commons, within the meaning of the act, by virtue of any mortgage, whereof the equity of redemption is in any other person, unless the mortgagee shall have been in possession of the mortgaged premises for seven years before the time of election.

The condition must at law be strictly performed, otherwise the mortgagor loses all benefit of redemption; but if upon a mortgage a tender be made of the money at the place, at any time of the day specified in the condition, and the mortgagee refuses, the condition is saved for ever. 7 Ed. 4. 3. 9 H. 6. 12. 22 H. 6. 37. 47 Ed. 3. 26. Plow. 173. 5 Co. 114. Co. Lit. 209.

3. Of the equity of redemption and foreclosure; and of the manner of redeeming and foreclosing.

Altho', after breach of the condition, an absolute fee-simple is vested at Common law in the mortgagee; yet a right of redemption being still inherent in the land, till the equity of redemption be foreclosed, the same right shall descend to and is invested in such persons as have a right to the land, in case there had been no mortgage or incumbrance whatsoever; and as an equitable performance as effectually defeats the interest of the mortgagee, as the legal performance doth at Common law, the condition still hanging over the estate, till the equity is totally foreclosed; on this foundation it hath been held, that a person who comes in under a voluntary conveyance, may redeem a mortgage; and tho' such right of redemption be inherent in the land, yet the party claiming the benefit of it, must not only set forth such right, but also shew that he is the person intitled to it. Hard. 465. 1 Vern. 182, 193.

As the heir at law is regularly intitled to the benefit of redemption, he is also intitled to the assistance of the personal estate of the mortgagor for that purpose; according to the doctrine established in the courts of equity, that the personal estate, in the hands of the executor, shall be employed in case of the heir, by whatever means the heir becomes indebted as heir; for the personal estate having received the benefit by contracting the debt, and the real considered only as a pledge for it; according to the common rule, Qui sentit commodum sentire debet & onus. Prec. in Chanc. 477.

And on this foundation it hath been frequently held, that if a man mortgage lands, and covenants to pay the money, and dies, the personal estate of the mortgagor shall, in favour of the heir, be applied in exoneration of the mortgage. 2 Salk. 449.

Also it is held by some opinions, that this benefit shall not only extend to the heir at law, or heir natus, but also to an heir factus, from a presumption, that it is the intention of the testator, that he should have all the privileges of the heir natus; and some even held, that an ordinary devisee shall have this benefit; but as to this last point it hath been held otherwise; and that if a man mortgages his land, and devises it to J. S. or to A. for life, the remainder in fee, to B. that there the charge doth pass with the estate, there appearing no intention of the testator, that he should have it discharged. 2 Chan. Ca. 84. 1 Vern. 36. 1 Chan. Ca. 271.

So if the mortgagor conveys away the equity of redemption, the purchaser shall not have the benefit of the personal estate, but must take it cum onere. 2 Salk. 450. 1 Vern. 37.

It has likewise been held, that the heir of the mortgagor shall have the benefit of the personal estate to pay off the mortgage, tho' there be no covenant in the mortgage-deed for the payment thereof; because the mortgage-money is a debt, whether there be any express covenant for the payment of it or not. 2 Salk. 449. 1 Vern. 436. Preced. Chan. 61. 3 Preced. 360.

But where a mortgage in fee was made redeemable at Mich. 1702, or any other Mich. day following, on six months notice; and there was no covenant for payment of the mortgagee money; it was held by Lord Chancellor Cowper, that the mortgagor having devised his personal estate to his wife and daughter, and having during his life paid the interest of the mortgage, the personal estate should not be applied in ease and exoneration of the real estate for the benefit of the heir at law; for, being no covenant for paying of the money, there was no contract at all between them, neither express nor implied; nor would any action lie against the mortgagor to subject his person, to compel him to pay this money; but this was in nature of a conditional purchase, subject to be defeated on payment by the mortgagor, or his heirs, of the sum stipulated between them, at any Mich. day, at the election of the mortgagor, or his heirs; for here was an everlasting subsisting right of redemption, descendible to the heirs of the mortgagor, which could not be forfeited at law like other mortgages; therefore there could be no equity of redemption, or any occasion for the assistance of this court; but the plaintiffs might even at law defeat the conveyance, by performing the terms and conditions of it; which were not limited to any particular time, but might be performed on any Michaelmas day, to the end of the world; and since there was no covenant or contract, either express or implied, to charge the personal estate of the mortgagor, he thought there was no reason to lay the load of this debt upon that which was given to other persons. Preced. Chan. 423. 2 Vern. 701.

By the Stat. 4 & 5 W. 3. cap. 16. it is enacted, That if any person shall borrow any money, or for any other valuable consideration for the payment thereof voluntarily give, acknowledge, permit or suffer to be entered against him or them, one or more judgment or judgments, statute or statutes, recognizance or recognizances, to any person or persons, creditor or creditors; and if the said borrower or borrowers, debtor or debtors, shall afterwards take up or borrow any other sum or sums of money of any other person or persons, or for other valuable consideration become indebted to such person or persons, and for securing the repayment and discharge thereof shall mortgage his, her or their lands or tenements, or any part thereof, to the second or other lender or lenders of the said money, creditor or creditors, or to any other person or persons in trust for or to the use of such second or other lender or lenders, creditor or creditors, and shall not give notice to the said mortgagee or mortgagees, of the said judgment or judgments, statute or statutes, recognizance or recognizances, in writing under his, her or their hand or hands, before the execution of the said mortgage or mortgages; unless such mortgagor or mortgagors, his, her or their heirs, upon notice to him, her or them given by the mortgagee or mortgagees of the said lands and tenements, his, her or their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, in writing, under his, her or their hands and seals, attested by two or more sufficient witnesses, of any such former judgment or judgments, statute or statutes, recognizance or recognizances, shall within six months pay off and discharge the said judgment or judgments, statute or statutes, recognizance or recognizances, and all interest and charges due thereupon, and cause and procure the same to be vacated, or discharged by record; that then the mortgagor or mortgagors gagors of the said lands and tenements, his, her or their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, shall have no benefit or remedy against the said mortgagee or mortgagees, his, her, or their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, or any of them, in equity or elsewhere, for redemption of the said lands and tenements, or any part thereof; but the said mortgagee or mortgagees, his, her or their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, shall and may hold and enjoy the said lands and tenements for such estate and term therein, as were or was granted and settled to the said mortgagee or mortgagees against the said mortgagor or mortgagors, and all person and persons lawfully claiming from, by or under him, her or them; freed from equity of redemption, and as fully, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, as if the same had been purchased absolutely, and without any power or liberty of redemption.

And it is further enacted, That if any person shall mortgage any lands or tenements to any person or persons, for security of any money lent, or otherwise accrued or become due, or for other valuable considerations; and if the said mortgagor or mortgagors shall again mortgage the same lands or tenements, or any part thereof, to any other person or persons for valuable considerations (the said former mortgage being in force and not discharged,) and shall not discover to the said second or other mortgagee or mortgagees, or some or one of them, the former mortgages, or mortgages, in writing under his or their hands; that then, and in these cases also, the said mortgagor or mortgagors, his, her or their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, shall have no relief or equity of redemption, against the said second or after mortgagee or mortgagees, his, her or their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, upon the said after mortgage or mortgages; but such mortgagee or mortgagees, his, her or their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, shall and may hold and enjoy such more than once mortgaged lands and tenements, for such estate and term therein, as were or was granted and conveyed by the said mortgagor or mortgagors, against him, her or them, his, her or their heirs, executors or administrators respectively, freed from equity of redemption, and as fully, to all intents and purposes, as if the same had been an absolute purchase, and without any power or liberty of redemption. Provided always, and be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That, nevertheless, if it so happen there be more than one mortgage at the same time made, by any person or persons, to any person or persons, of the same lands and tenements, the several late or under mortgagees, his, her or their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, shall have power to redeem any former mortgage or mortgages, upon payment of the principal debt, interest, and costs of suit, to the proper mortgagee or mortgagees, his, her or their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns.

Provided always, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed, deemed or extended to bar any widow of any mortgagor of lands or tenements from her dower and right in or to the said lands, who did not legally join with her husband in such mortgage, or otherwise lawfully bar or exclude herself from such her dower or right.

It hath been held, that if a man mortgages certain lands to one man, and mortgages those lands with some others to another, tho' this seems to be a case omitted out of the above statute against clandestine mortgages; yet if it appears to be a contrivance to evade it, as if an acre or two of land were only added, this will not exempt it; also a person, who will take advantage of the statute, must be an bonest mortgagee; therefore, if a man has used any fraud or practice in obtaining a second mortgage, he shall not have the benefit of the statute. 2 Vern. 589, 590.

The methods of redemption and foreclosing being dilatory, expensive, and inconvenient, not only to the mortgagee but also to the mortgagor, the same seem now remedied by the 7 Geo. 2. cap. 20. which enacts, That where any action shall be brought on any bond for the payment of the money secured by such mortgage, or performance of the covenants therein contained; or where any action of ejectment shall be brought by any mortgagee or mortgagees, his, her or their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, for the recovery of the possession of any mortgaged lands, tenements or hereditaments, and no suit shall be then depending in any of his Majesty's courts of equity, in that part of Great Britain called England, for or touching the foreclosing or redeeming such mortgaged lands, tenements or hereditaments; if the person or persons having right to redeem such mortgaged lands, tenements or hereditaments, and who shall appear and become defendant or defendants in such action, shall, at any time pending such action, pay unto such mortgagee or mortgagees, or in case of his, her or their refusal, shall bring into court, where such action shall be depending, all the principal money and interest due on such mortgage, and also all such costs as have been expended in any suit or suits at law or in equity upon such mortgage, (such money for principal, interest and costs, to be ascertained and computed by the court where such action is or shall be depending,) the monies so paid to such mortgagee or mortgagees, or brought into such court, shall be deemed and taken to be in full satisfaction and discharge of such mortgage; and the court shall and may discharge every such mortgage, or defendant of and from the same accordingly; and shall and may, by rule or rules of the same court, compel such mortgagee or mortgagees, at the costs and charges of such mortgagor or mortgagors, to assign, surrender or re-convey such mortgaged lands, tenements and hereditaments, and such estate and interest, as such mortgagee or mortgagees have or hath therein, and deliver up all deeds, evidences and writings in his, her or their custody, relating to the title of such mortgaged lands, tenements and hereditaments, to such mortgagor or mortgagors, who shall have paid or brought such monies into court, his, her or their heirs, executors or administrators, or to such other person or persons as he, she or they shall for that purpose, nominate or appoint.

By sect. 2. it is further enacted, That where any bill or bills, suit or suits shall be filed, commenced or brought, in any of his Majesty's courts of equity in that part of Great Britain called England, by any person or persons having or claiming any estate, right or interest in any lands, tenements or hereditaments, under or by virtue of any mortgage or mortgages thereof, to compel the defendant or defendants in such suit or suits, (having or claiming a right to redeem the same,) to pay the plaintiff or plaintiffs in such suit or suits, the principal money and interest due on any such mortgage, together with any sum or sums of money due on any incumbrance or specialty, charged or chargeable on the equity of redemption thereof; and in default of payment thereof, to foreclose such defendant or defendants of his, her or their right of equity of redeeming such mortgaged lands, tenements or hereditaments; and upon his, her or their admitting the right and title of the plaintiff or plaintiffs in such suit, such court and courts of equity may and shall, at any time or times before such suit or cause shall be brought to hearing, make such order or decree therein, as such court or courts might or could have made therein, in case such suit or cause had been regularly brought to hearing before such court or courts; and all parties to such suit or suits shall be bound by such order or decree so made, to all intents and purposes, as if such order or decree had been made by such court at or subsequent to the hearing of such cause or suit; any usage to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding.

Provided always, That this act, or any thing herein contained, shall not extend to any case, where the person or persons, against whom the redemption is or shall be prayed, shall (by writing under his, her or their hands, or the hand of his, her or their attorney, agent or solicitor, to be delivered before the money shall be brought into such court at law to the attorney or solicitor for the other side) insist either that the party praying a redemption has not a right to redeem, or that the premises are chargeable with other or different principal sums than what appear on the face of the mortgage, or shall be admitted on the other side; nor to any cause where the right of redemption to the mortgaged lands and premises in question, in any cause or suit, shall be controverted or questioned, by or between different defendants in the same cause or suit; nor shall be any prejudice to any subsequent mortgagee or mortgagees, or subsequent incumbrancer; any thing in this act to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding.

We have been very full under this head, as it is a title of great use.

Mortgago; Is he who mortgages or pawns the lands; and he to whom the mortgage is made is called the mortgagee.

Mortmain, (manus, mortua, compounded of two French words, mort, i. e. dead, & maine, i. e. manus) Signifies an alienation of land and tenements to any guild, corporation or fraternity, and their successors, as bishops, parsons, vicars, &c. which may not be done without the King's licence, and the lord of the manor, or of the King alone, if it be immediately holden of him. The reason of the name may be deduced from hence, because the services, and other profits due, for such lands as escheats, &c. should not without such licence come into a dead hand, or into such a hand as it were dead, and so dedicated unto God, or pious uses, as to be abstractedly different from other lands, tenements or hereditaments, and is never to revert to the donor, or any temporal or common use. Magna Charta, cap. 36. and 7 Ed. 1. commonly called The statute of mortmain, and 18 Ed. 3. cap. 3. and 15 Rich. 2. cap. 5. Polydore Virgil, in the seventeenth book of his Chronicles, mentions this law, and gives this reason of the name, Et legem hanc manum mortuam vocarunt, quod res semel datae collegiis sacerdotum, non utique rursus venderentur velut mortuae, hoc est, usui aliorum mortalium in perpetuum adeptae essent. Lex diligenter servatur, sic ut oibilibus possessionum ordini sacerdotali a quoquam detur, nisi regis permisso: but the fore-mentioned statutes are in some manner abridged by 39 Eliz. cap. 5. by which the gift of lands, &c. to hospitals is permitted, without obtaining licences in mortmain. Hottoman, in his Commentaries De verbis Feudalibus, verbo Manus mortua, hath these words; Manus mortua locatio est, quae usurpatur de iis, quorum possessio (ut ita dicam) immortalis est, quia nunquam haereditatem habere desinunt: Quia de causa res nunquam ad priorem dominum revertitur, nam manus pro possessione dicitur mortua per antiphrasin pro immortalis, &c. Petrus Belluga in speculo Principum, fol. 76. Jus amortizationis est licentia capiendi ad manum mortuam: To the same effect read Cassan. de Consuet. Burgund. p. 348, 387, 1183, 1185, 1201, &c. Shene de verb. Signif. faith, Dimittere terras ad manum mortuam est idem atque dimittere ad multitudinem sive universitatem, quae nunquam moritur, idque per antiphrasin, seu a contrario sensu, because commonalties never die. Cowell.

William the Conqueror, demanding the cause why he conquered the realm by one battle, which the Danes could not do by many; Frederick, abbot of St. Alban's, answered, that the reason was, because the land which was the maintenance of martial men, was given and converted to pious employments, and for the maintenance of holy votaries: To which the Conqueror said, that if the clergy be so strong, that the realm is infeebled of men for war, and subject by it to foreign invasion, he would aid it. Therefore he took away many of the revenues of the abbot, and of others also. Speed. 418. b.

'Tis proper here to observe, that because the Lords had nothing from the alienees; for by alienation in mortmain they lost their escheats, and many services which were heretofore due to them, as bodies politick never die, nor can perform personal service, commit treason or felony, &c. This occasioned the statutes of mortmain, by virtue whereof the King, or other Lord of whom the land is holden, may enter into lands so aliened. 1 Inst. 2. 2 Inst. 75. The foundation of all the statutes of mortmain was Magna Charta. By the 9 H. 3. c. 36. it is declared, "That it shall not be lawful for any to give his lands to any religious house, and to take the same land again to hold of the same house, &c. upon pain that the gift shall be void, and the land shall accrue to the lord of the fee." This statute is interpreted to extend to lands, which a religious house kept in their own hands, tho' they gave them not back again to hold of the same house. 2 Inst. 75.

But ecclesiastical persons found means to creep out of the statute, by purchasing lands holden of themselves, or by making leases for a long term of years, &c. wherefore by 7 Ed. 1. commonly called the Statute of Mortmain, or de Religiosis, no persons religious, or others whatsoever, shall buy or sell any lands or tenements, or under the colour of any gift or lease, or by reason of any other title, receive the same, or by any other craft shall appropriate lands in any wise to come into mortmain, on pain of forfeiture; and within a year after the alienation, the lord of the fee may enter; and if he do not, then the next immediate lord, from time to time may enter in half a year; and for default of all the lords entering, the King shall have the lands so alienated for ever, and may enfeof others by certain services, &c.

As this statute extended only to gifts, alienations, &c. made between ecclesiasticks and others, they found out an evasion also of this statute; for pretending a title to the land, which they meant to gain, they brought a feigned action against the tenant of the land, and he by consent and collusion was to make default, and thereupon they recovered the land, and entered by judgment of law: so that the Stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 32. was thought necessary; by which it is to be inquired by the country whether the demandant had a just title to the land; and if so, then he shall recover seisin; but if otherwise, the lord of the fee shall enter, &c. And by 34 Ed. 1. Lands shall not be alienated in mortmain, where there are mean lords, without their consent declared under hand and seal; nor shall any thing pass where the donor reserves nothing to himself.

Notwithstanding all these statutes, ecclesiastical persons (not being able to get lands, by purchase, gift, lease, or recovery) procured lands to be conveyed by feoffment, or in other manners to divers persons and their heirs, to the use of them and their successors, whereby they took the profits. 2 Inst. 75. To bar this, the Stat. 15 R. 2. c. 5. was made, which statute enacts, "That no feoffment, &c. of any lands and tenements, advowsons or other possessions, to the use of any spiritual persons, or whereof they shall take the profits, shall be made without licence of the King, and of the Lords, &c. upon pain of forfeiture." And by 23 H. 8. c. 10. against superflitious uses, forfeitures, fines, recoveries, grants, devises, &c. of lands, in trust to the use of any parish church, or to have perpetual obits, or a continual service of a priest for ever, or for sixty years, &c. to the prejudice of the King and other lords, as in case of lands alienated in mortmain, shall be void: tho' this last act extends not to corporations, where there is a custom to devise lands in mortmain; as in London, a freeman that pays scot and lot, may devise all his lands in the city in mortmain, without licence. 1 Roll. Abr. 556.

And notwithstanding this, or any of the statutes, any man at this day may give lands, tenements, &c. to any persons and their heirs, for finding a preacher, maintenance of a school, reparation of churches, relief of the poor, &c. or for any like charitable uses: tho' it is good policy on every such estate to reserve a small rent to the feoffor and his heirs, when the feoffees shall be seized to their own use, and not to the use of the feoffor; or if a consideration of a small sum be expressed, the 23 H. 8. cannot by any pretence make void the use. 1 Rep. 24. 11 Rep. 70. Wood's Inst. 303.

By the Stat. 39 Eliz. cap. 5. The gift of lands, &c. to hospitals is permitted without obtaining licences of mortmain. Owners of impropriations may annex them to the parsonage or vicarage where they lie, or settle them in trust for the curates, where the parsonage is impropriate, and no vicarage endowed, without licence of mortmain: and if the settled maintenance of any benefice with cure shall not amount to 100*l.* per annum, the incumbent may purchase to him and his successors, &c. without licence in mortmain. 17 Car. 2. c. 7. By ancient statutes, the King's licence may be had for authorizing of lands, and the writ of ad quod dampnum is to issue out of Chancery to inquire concerning the same. 27 Ed. 1. ff. 2. Prelates, clerks, &c. shall not be impeached for purchasing lands in mortmain, on producing the King's charter of licence. 18 E. 3. ff. 3. c. 3. And it is declared lawful for the King to grant to any person, body politick or corporate, their heirs and successors, licence to alien in mortmain; and purchase and hold in mortmain in perpetuity, &c. without incurring any forfeiture, by Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 37.

A grant of an advowson in fee, or an appropriation of an advowson, hath been adjudged a mortmain; but an appropriation of tithes, which are things merely spiritual, or a grant of an annuity, that chargeth the person only, cannot be mortmain, to be forfeited. 1 Inst. 2, 304. 2 Inst. 361. 5 Rep. 56. 9 Rep. 96. A late statute has ordained, that no manors, lands, &c. shall be given, granted to, or settled on any persons, bodies politick or corporate, for any estate whatsoever, or charged in trust for charitable uses, unless done by deed indented, and sealed at least twelve months before the death of the donor or grantor, and inrolled in Chancery, within six months after executed, &c. and except the same be to take effect in possession immediately; and without any power of revocation, &c. And if otherwise made, shall be void: but not to extend to purchases for a valuable consideration; nor to the two universities, or colleges of Eaton, Winchester, &c. Mortuary, (Mortuarium, mortarium.) Is a gift left by a man at his death to his parish church, for the recompence of his personal tithes and offerings not duly paid in his life-time. A mortuary is not properly and originally due to ecclesiastical incumbents from any, but those only of his own parish, to whom he ministers spiritual instruction, and hath right to their tithes. But by custom in some places of this kingdom, they are paid to the parsons of other parishes, as the corps passeth thro' them. See the statute 21 H. 8. c. 6. before which statute mortuaries were payable in beasts; the best to the lord for a heriot, the second for a mortuary. Nor was it only de meliori avaria, sed de meliori ra. Mortuarium (says Lindwood) fit dictum est quia relinquitur ecclesie pro anima defuncti. Custom did so prevail, that mortuaries being held as due debts, the payment of them was enjoined as well by the statute De circumspiciendis agatis, in 13 Ed. 1. ff. 4. as by several constitutions, &c. A mortuary was anciently called Sanlesceat, which signifies pecunia sepulchralis, or symbolum anime. After the conquest it was called a corse-present, (because the beast was presented with the body at the funeral,) and sometimes a principal; of which see a learned discourse in the Antiquities of Warwickshire, fol. 679. and see Selden's History of Tithes, pag. 287. There is no mortuary due by law, but by custom. 2 Inst. 491. See Spelm. de Council. tom. 2. 390. This is likewise proved out of Fleta, lib. 2. c. 60. par. 30. Item si rector petat mortuarium ubi dari consuevit. See Nonagium, Principal, and Pretium sepulchri. In the Irish canons 'tis called Pretium sepulchri, and Sedatium, viz. Omne corpus sepultum habet in jure suo vaccam & equum & vestimentum & ornamenta lecti sui, &c. Canon. Hibern. lib. 19. c. 6. And in another place, Rogas principem loci, i. e. the bishop, ut basilicum ejus federet, &c. & reddat amicum pretium ejus & sedatium commune. The word mortuarium was sometimes used in a civil as well as an ecclesiastical sense, and was payable to the lord of the fee, as well as to the priest of the parish. — Debentur domino (i. e. manerii de Wrechwyke) nomibus heriotii & mortuarii dua vacca pret. xii sol. Paroch. Antiqu. pag. 470. Corwell.

Mr. Selden tells us, that the usage anciently was, bringing the mortuary along with the corps when it came to be buried, and to offer it to the church as a satisfaction for the supposed negligence and omission the defunct had been guilty of in not paying his personal tithes, and from thence it was called a corse-present. Wass. Comp. Incumb. 8va. 1053. cap. 53. cites Selden's Hist. of Tithes 287.

Stat. 13 Ed. 1. ff. 4. enacts, That a prohibition shall not lie for mortuaries, in places where mortuaries used to be paid.

By the 21 H. 8. c. 6. Mortuaries are to be paid as follows, viz. He who dies possessed of moveable goods to the value of 40 l. or above, (his debts first paid) is to pay 10 s. He that dieth possessed of goods of 30 l. value and under 40 l. is to pay 6 s. 8 d. And dying possessed of goods to the value of 6 l. 13 s. 4 d. and under 30 l. to pay 3 s. 4 d. But if the goods are under 6 l. 3 s. 4 d. value, no mortuary is to be paid; and no mortuary is to be paid by any feme-covert or child, persons not keeping house, &c. If one happens to die in a place where he does not reside, by this statute the mortuary shall be paid in the place where he had his usual abode; no person shall pay mortuaries in more places than one, or more than one mortuary; and no mortuary shall be demanded of any but in such places where mortuaries are due by custom, and have used to have been paid: Also there is a proviso in the statute, that in places where mortuaries have been of less value than as aforesaid, no person shall pay any more than has been accustomed. If a parson, vicar, &c. take or demand more than is allowed by the statute for a mortuary, he shall forfeit all he takes beyond it, and 40 s. more to the party grieved, to be recovered by action of debt, &c. Stat. Ibid. Since this statute, whereby mortuaries are reduced to a certainty, an action of debt will lie upon the said statute in the courts of Common law, for recovery of the sum due for a mortuary, being by custom as aforesaid, altho' before that statute they were recoverable only in the Spiritual court: But as such actions have never been brought, it is said, they are still recoverable in that court only. Wass. Clergym. Law 475. Count. Pars. Campan. 140. Where by custom a mortuary hath not been usually paid, if a person be libelled in the Spiritual court, he shall have a prohibition by virtue of the statute 21 H. 8. c. 6. And upon a prohibition the custom may be tried, &c. 2 Lutw. 1066. 3 Mod. 268. No suit in equity lies for a mortuary. 2 Strange 715. Mortuaries in Wales taken away, 12 Ann. stat. 2. c. 6. Mortuaries in the archdeaconry of Chester taken away, and a recompence made to the bishop of Chester, 28 Geo. 2. c. 6.

Mote, (Mota, Sax. gemot; curia, placitum, convencus.) As Mota de Hereford, i. e. Curia vel placita comitatus de Hereford. In the charter of Maud the Empress, daughter of King Henry the First, we read thus; Sciatis me fecisse Milonem de Gloucester, Comitum de Hereford, & dedisse ei motam Herefordie cum toto castello, &c. Hence Burge-mote, curia vel convencus burgi; Swainmote, curia vel convencus ministrorum, scil. foreste, &c. From this also we draw our word mote and moot, to plead. The Scots say, to mote, as the Mute-hill at Seane, i. e. Mons placiti de Seane. We commonly apply the word moot to that arguing of cases used by young students in the Inns of Court and Chancery. In the charter of peace between King Stephen and Duke Henry, afterwards King, it is taken to signify a fortress, as Turris de London, & mota de Windsor, the the tower of London, and fortrefs of Windsor. Mote also signifies a standing pool of water to keep fish in.

It likewise signifies a great ditch encompassing a castle or dwelling-house.—*Hæc indentura, &c. testatur quod prædictus Rogerus tradidit p. æfate Thome tria signa & unam motam piscariam existen. intra manerium, &c. Motion in Court, In the courts of Chancery, King's Bench, &c. Motion are made by barristers for what concerns their clients causes: And where any motion is made in Chancery, that is not of course, generally an affidavit of the facts alledged must be read in court: And if motions are founded on the general rules or usage of the court, and are not of course, but granted or denied as the court thinks fit, on hearing counsel on both sides, notice is to be given in writing to the solicitor of the other party, or his clerk in court, expressing every thing to be moved for, which must be served two days at least before the day on which the motion is to be made, whereof affidavit must also be made. Præfif. Solic. 17.

In B. R. one ought not to move the court for a rule for a thing to be done, which by the common rules of practice may be done without moving the court: Nor shall the court be moved for doing what is against the practice of the court: One ought not to move for several things in one motion; and where a motion hath been denied, the same matter may not be moved again by another counsel, without acquainting the court thereof, and having their leave for the same: But every person who makes a solemn argument at the bar is allowed by the court a motion for his argument. 2 Lill. Abr. 209, 210. But counsel cannot move for his argument in a matter of course in the paper, in B. R. Wilj. par. 1. 76.

If there be divers rules of court made in a cause, and the party intends to move thereon, he must produce the rule last made in the cause, and move upon that: But it is necessary to have all the rules and copies of the affidavits, to satisfy the court how the cause hath been proceeded in, and how it stands in court; tho' the last rule is the most material; and where a motion is made to set aside a rule grounded on an affidavit, a copy of the affidavit must be produced, that the court may be informed upon what grounds the rule was made, and judge whether there be cause shewn upon the motion sufficient to set aside the rule. Pasch. 13 Car. B. R. Hill. 1649.

If any thing be moved to the court upon a record, the record is to be in court, or the court will make no rule upon such motion. Hill. 22 Car. B. R. One party ought not to surprize another by a motion in court, but to move in convenient time, that the other party may have time to be heard. Pasch. 23 Car. It is against the practice of the court to move for an attachment, or any matters in law, upon the last day of the term, except the case is peremptory. Monday is a special day for motions in B. R. by the ancient course; but they are made upon any day, as the business of the court will permit: The three or two last days of the term are days appointed to hear motions, and Crown-office causes; and the last day chiefly for motions to prepare business against the next term or sittings. 2 Lill. 208, 210. The courts of law generally on motions which are not of course, grant rules to shew cause at a future day, why the thing asked for should not be granted a copy of which being served on the attorney of the adverse party, counsel may shew cause on the day expressed in the rule, which if not done, the party on whose behalf the rule is was obtained, may by counsel on the subsequent day, move to make that rule absolute, which motion being made, counsel on the other side, may oppose it by shewing cause. See farther as to the practice of B. R. relative to motions, 1 Burr. 9, 57, 58, 334, 651. 2 V. 250, 259, 801. And Black. Com. 3 V. 304. In the Chancery, during term, every Thursday is a day for sealing, and motions; and Tuesdays and Saturdays are days for motions, as are the first and last days of the term: In vacation, only seal days appointed by the Lord Chancellor, are days of motion. Præfif. Solic. 17.

After motion in arrest of judgment, no motion shall be for a new trial, but after motion for a new trial, one may move in arrest of judgment. 2 Salk. 647. Turberville v. Stamp.

One ought not to move the court for a thing against which they have delivered their opinions. Trin. 22 Car. B. R. But ought to rest satisfied with the judgment of the court, and submit thereunto. 2 L. P. R. 208. See 15 Vin. Abr. tit. Motion.

Mulier, As used in our law, seems to be a word corrupted from melior, or the Fr. melior; and signifies the lawful issue, born in wedlock, (tho' begotten before) preferred before an elder brother born out of matrimony. 9 Hen. 6. c. 11. Smith's Republ. Angl. lib. 3. c. 6. But by Glanvil, the lawful issue are said to be mulier, not from melior, but because begotten 2 muliers, and not ex concubina; for he calls such issue filios mulieratos, opposing them to bastards. Glanv. lib. 7. c. 1. It appears to be thus used in Scotland also; Skene saying, mulieratus filius is a lawful son, begotten of a lawful wife. If a man hath a son by a woman, before marriage, which is a bastard and unlawful, and after he marries the mother of the bastard, and they have another son, this second son is mulier and lawful, and shall be heir to his father, but the other cannot be heir to any man; and they are distinguished in our old books with this addition. Bastard signe, and mulier puiſne. Co. Litt. 170, 243. Where a man has issue by a woman, if he afterwards marries her, the issue is mulier by the Civil law; tho' not by the laws of England. 2 Inst. 99. 5 Rep. 416. Of ancient time, mulier was taken for a wife, as it is commonly used for a woman, particularly one, not a maid; and sometimes for a widow; but it has been held, that a virgin is included under the name mulier. Multiplication of Gold and Silver, Was prohibited and declared to be felony by statute, 5 Hen. 4. c. 4. Which statute was made on a presumption that persons skilful in chymistry, could multiply or augment these metals, by changing other metals into gold or silver; and the endeavours of some persons in making use of extraordinary methods for the producing of gold and silver, and finding out the philosopher's stone, were found to be so prejudicial to the publick, from the lavish waste of many valuable materials, and the ruin of many families by such useless expences, that they occasioned the statute 5 Hen. 4. But the restraint thereby having no other effect, from the unaccountable vanity of those who fancied those attempts practicable, than to send them beyond sea to try their experiments with impunity in other countries, the 5 Hen. 4. c. 4. was at last repealed by 1 W. & M. c. 30. Dyer 88. 1 *Hawk. Mutage, (Muragium) Is a reasonable toll, to be taken of every cart and horse coming laden thro' a city or town, for the building or repairing the publick walls thereof, due either by grant or prescription: It seems to be a liberty granted to a town by the King, for the collecting of money towards walling the same. 3 Ed. 1. c. 30. 2 Inst. 222. The service of work and labour done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants in building or repairing the walls of a city or castle, was called murarum operatio; and when this personal duty was commuted into money, the tax so gathered was called Mutage. *Paroch. Murder, (Murdram, from the Sax. Morth, whence, (as it is said,) comes the barbarous Latin Mordrum, & Murdram; in French Meurdre, tho' the word Murdare, evidently comes from the Latin Morti dare.) Is a word in use long before the reign of King Canutus, which some would have to signify a violent death; and sometimes the Saxons expressed it by morthdaed & morthweorc, a deadly work: But the Sax. morth relates generally to mors. See Black. Com. 3 V. 321. upon this word murdram, where he justly observes, that it was necessarily framed to express a particular offence, since no other word in being, was sufficient to express the intention of the criminal, or quo animo the act was perpetrated. Anciently murder signified only the private killing of a man, as appears by the laws of King Hen. 1. And it was not murder, except the party slain was an Englishman, and no foreigner; tho' by the stat. 14 Edw. 3. c. 4. the killing of any Englishman or foreigner, living under the King's protection, thro' malice prepense, and whether committed openly or secretly, is declared to be murder, S. P. C. lib. 1. c. 1. And doubtless the makers of the statute of 23 H. 8. c. 1. which excludes all wilful murder from the benefit of clergy, intended to include open, as well as private homicide within the word murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. 78.

By murder at this day, we understand the wilful and felonious killing of any man whatsoever, upon malice forebought; so as the party wounded or hurt die within a year and a day after the fact: And if one dies in that time, thro' disorderly living, it shall be no excuse, the wound will be judged the principal cause of his death; but if one wounded die after that time, the law will presume he died a natural death. 3 Inst. 53. H. P. C. 55. Kel. 26. If a man receive a wound that is not mortal; but either for want of help, or by neglect, it turns to a fever, &c. which causes the the party's death, it is murder: So it is, where a man has some disease, which possibly would terminate his life in half a year, and another wounds him, that it hastens his end, &c. But if by ill applications of the party, or those about him, of unwholesome medicines, the wounded person dies; if this plainly appears, it is not murder, by Hale. Hist. P. C. 428.

Murder may be committed by weapon, poison, crushing, bruising, smothering, strangling, starving, &c. And where a person having malice to another, strikes or shoots at him, but misseeth him and kills one not intended; or if one lays poison to kill a person, and another takes it, and dies, these are murder: Also if a sick man be laid in the cold, whereof he dieth, or an infant is laid under leaves or trees, &c. and suffered to be destroyed by vermin, they are killing. 3 Inst. 51. 9 Rep. 81. If a person stir up a dog accustomed to bite, knowing it to be such, and it kill a person; and if a man have an ox, or horse, which he knows to be mischievous, by being used to gore or strike at those who come near them, and do not tie them up, if they kill a man, (according to some opinions,) the owner may be indicted, as having himself feloniously killed him. Puit. 122. H. P. C. 53. 1 Hawk. P. C. 79.

Anotently it was holden that the causing an abortion, by giving a potion to, or striking a woman big with child, was murder: But it is said now to be a great misprison only, and not murder, unless the child be born alive, and die thereof. 1 Hawk. 80. If the death of a bastard child newly born be concealed, it shall be supposed to be murdered; if the mother doth not prove it was born dead. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 27. And if one by duress of imprisonment compel a man to accuse an innocent person, who on his evidence is condemned and executed; in judgment of law it is killing of the compeller, &c. S. P. C. 36. 3 Inst. 91.

All the above cases shew malice; so where a prisoner, by duress of the gaoler, comes to an untimely end; if one is executed contrary to the direction of the law; or if a person kill a man adjudged to death; or one who hath no authority shall execute the judgment; if a person sentenced to be whipped, is whipped with that rigour that he dieth of it, &c. But one under the age of discretion, or non compos mentis, cannot be guilty of murder; tho' it appears by circumstances that the infant did hide the body, &c. it is felony. H. P. C. 43. 3 Inst. 4, 6, 54. See the case of William York at Bury Summer assizes in 1748. Foster's Rep. 70, &c. before referred to in this work under Infants. If an infant under twelve years old, hath an extraordinary wit, that it may be presumed he knows what he does, and he kill another, it may be felony and murder; otherwise it shall not. 3 H. 7. 13. Plowd. 191. See the case of William York before referred to. Foster 70, &c. It is malice makes the crime of murder, which is either express or implied; it is express, when it may be evidently proved there was formerly some ill will, and the killing is with a sedate mind, and formed design of doing it: And implied, where one kills another suddenly, having nothing to defend himself; as going over a stile, or the like. 3 Inst. 51. H. P. C. 47.

Murder occasioned thro' an express purpose to do some personal injury to him who is slain, is properly said to be of express malice: Such as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, principally intended for some other purpose, and not expressed in its nature to do a personal injury to him in particular that is killed, is most properly malice implied. Kel. 129, 130. He who doth a cruel and voluntary act, whereby death ensues, doth it of malice prepeted in the esteem of the law: And if a person in cool blood, maliciously and deliberately beats another in such a manner, beyond any apparent intent of chastisement, that he dieth, it is murder by express malice, altho' he did not design to kill him. H. P. C. 49, 50. Kel. 64, 127, 135. But if a person on any provocation beat another so, that it might plainly appear he meant not to kill, but only to chastise him; or if he restrains himself till the other hath put himself on his guard, and then in fighting with him killeth him, he will not be guilty of murder, but manslaughter. 1 Hawk. P. C. 82. See Foster's Rep. 262. When one executes his revenge, upon a sudden provocation, in such a cruel manner, with a dangerous weapon, as shews a malicious intention to do mischiefe; and death ensues, it is express malice and murder from the nature of the fact. Kel. 55, 61, 65, 130. A man chided his servant, and upon some cross answer given, he having a hot iron in his hand ran it into the servant's belly, of which he died, this was adjudged murder. Kel. 64.

If a person is trespassing upon another, by breaking his hedges, &c. and the owner upon sight thereof take up a hedge-stake, and give him a stroke on the head, whereof he dies, this is murder, because it is a violent act beyond the proportion of the provocation. H. P. C. And where a boy was upon a tree in a park cutting of wood, and the keeper bid him come down, which he did; and then the keeper struck him several blows with a cudgel, and afterwards with a rope tied him to his horse's tail, and the horse ran away with him and killed him; this was held to be murder out of malice, the boy having come down at the keeper's command. Cro. Car. 139. H. P. C.

A man's son was beaten, and complaining of it to his father, the father in anger beat the other boy with a cudgel whereof he died; the law shall adjudge it to be upon that sudden occasion, and stirring of blood, that he made the assault, and not upon malice unless it be found; and if the distance of the place where his son complained was a mile, it is not material, being all upon one passion. Cro. Jac. 296. And it is the same in case of a brother, cousin, servant, &c. it is only manslaughter, not murder. 2 Lill. 211.

If two having malice fight, and the servant of one of them, not knowing of the malice, killeth the other, this is murder in the master, and manslaughter in the servant: Tho' if there be a conspiracy to kill a man, but no malice against his servant; if the servant be slain, the malice against the master shall be construed to extend to his servant: and the killing the servant is murder. Dyer 128. 1 Moor. If two persons meet and fight, in cool blood, on a precedent quarrel, and one is killed: or if a person in a sudden quarrel appears to be master of his temper, and kills another, it is murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. 81. For where two persons fight, after a former quarrel, it may be presumed to be out of malice; and when two men fall out in the morning, and meet and fight in the afternoon, if one of them is killed, this is murder; their after-meeting is of malice. Plowd. 474.

If a man upon a quarrel with another, tells such other that he will not strike him, but will give him a pot of ale to strike first, and thereupon the other strikes him, and he kills the other, he is guilty of murder; this being only a cover to his malicious intention. H. P. C. 48. And where a person kills another, it shall be intended of malice; if he prove not the contrary. Kel. 27. A man assaults another person with malice, altho' he be afterwards driven by the other to the wall, and kill him there in his own defence, he is guilty of murder, in respect of his first intent. H. P. C. 47. Kel. 58, 129. But if the party assaulted flie to the wall, and being still pursued, kills the other, it is only manslaughter in his own defence. Bract. 3 Ed. 3. If one resolves to kill the next man he meets, and doth kill him, it is murder; here malice is implied against all mankind. Kel. 27.

By poisoning and where one killeth another without provocation, malice is implied; as where any magistrate or minister of justice is killed in the execution of his office; a sheriff, constable or watchman, doing their duty; or any other that comes in aid of the King's officer; and if a watchman be killed in staying of night walkers, it is said to be murder. 3 Inst. 51. Cro. Jac. 280. Kel. 60, 128. In these cases, it is a very high contempt of the laws, for a person to execute his revenge against those who have no way offended him but by doing their duty; and he cannot come off by alledging that what he did was in a sudden fury, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. 84.

And if a bailiff is killed in executing a lawful warrant, &c. it is murder: Nor is it any excuse to the person, that the process was erroneous: or that the arrest was in the night; that the officer did not tell him for what cause he arrested him; or that he did not shew his warrant, &c. being a bailiff commonly known. 9 Rep. 68, 69. Cro. Jac. 280, 486. But if a bailiff who is not executing his office is killed, it is not murder; for he ought to be duly executing executing his office, by serving the process of the law, wherein he is assisted cum potestate Regis & Legis. Cro. Car. 537. 2 Lill. Abr. 212. Therefore where the warrant by which he acts gives him no authority to arrest the party; as where a bailiff arrests a wrong person, or J. S. a baronet, by force of a warrant to arrest J. S. knight; or if a good warrant is executed in an unlawful manner; as if a bailiff be killed in breaking open a door, or window to arrest a man; or perhaps if he arrest one on a Sunday; since the stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 7. by which all such arrests are made unlawful, and he is slain; malice shall not be implied to make it murder, but shall be manslaughter only. H. P. C. 46. Cro. Car. 372. 12 Rep. 49. 1 Hawk. 86. If bailiffs come to a house to arrest a person, and the house being locked they attempt to break in, whereupon the son of the person intended to be arrested, shoots and kills one of them, it is not murder. Jones 429. See Foster's Rep. 135, 138, 270, 308, 312, 318, 321.

A person was arrested, and another not knowing the cause of the struggle, but seeing swords drawn, and to prevent mischief, came and defended the party arrested, and in the scuffle the bailiff was killed; it was resolved to be no murder in the person doing it, but that all that were present and assisting, knowing of the arrest, were principal murderers. Kel. 86. Tho' it has been held in such a case, that the person offending is guilty of murder, whether he knew that the person slain were an officer or not; for all fighting is unlawful, and he who seeing persons engaged in it, takes part with one side, and fights in the quarrel, without knowing the cause of it, especially where the fight is begun in opposition to the justice of the nation, shews a readiness to break thro' the laws on a small occasion, and must at his peril take heed what he doth. 1 Sid. 160. Noy 50. 1 Hawk. 85.

If one attack another to rob him, and by the resistance of the party kills him, this is murder. 3 Inst. 52. Dalt. 344. A person stands by and encourages or commands another to murder a man; or if he come with others on purpose to kill him, and stand by while the other persons commit the fact: It will be murder in them all. Plowd. 98. 11 Rep. 5. And if two or more persons come together to do an unlawful act, as to beat a man, rob a park, &c. and one of them kills a person, this is murder in all present, aiding or assisting, or that were ready to aid and assist: All will be said to intend the murder. 3 Inst. 56. Dalt. 347. H. P. C. 31. And such persons will be judged to be present who are in the same house, tho' in another room, or in the same park, altho' half a mile off, &c. H. P. C. 47. Kel. 87, 116, 127.

Several persons having conspired to enter the King's park, and to hunt and carry away deer, with design of killing any one that should oppose them; tho' the keeper's servant began the assault, and required them first to stand, whereupon they fled, and one of the keeper's men discharged a piece at them, and they continued their flight until he laid violent hands upon one of the offenders, and then, and not before, they killed one of the keeper's servants, this was held to be murder: as they were doing an unlawful act, the law implies malice, and they ought not to have fled, but to have surrendered themselves. Roll. Rep. 20.

By statute murder shall not be adjudged where it is found by misadventure, but when it is done with a felonious intent. 52 H. 3. c. 25. Offenders for murder and accessories being indicted, may be arraigned at any time within the year, at the King's suit, and if the principal or accessory be acquit, yet the justices shall not suffer them to go at large, but either remand them to prison, or let them be bailed, until the year and day be out, allowed for an appeal. 3 H. 7. c. 1. All trials for murder must be in the county where the fact was committed, by the Common law. Cro. Car. 247. But if a person be wounded by a stroke given in one county, and he dieth in another county, the indictment may be found in the county where the party dies, which shall be as well as if the stroke had been given in the same county. Statute 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 24. The killing must be in some county; for if the murder be done out of the realm, it cannot be determined by the Common law, but must be determined by the constable and marshal, &c. 3 Inst. 48. H. P. C. 54. But see the statute 2 Geo. 2. c. 21. And murder is to be expressly found, not by intendment, &c. And where the matters on the finding of the jury, are no more than weak evidence thereof, the court ought not to give judgment on that, but upon the facts arising from it. Fitzgib. 187. Mich. 4 Geo. 2. When one is murdered in the day-time, and the murderer escapes untaken, the township, that suffers it, shall be amerced. 3 H. 7. If one who sees a murder done, does not his best endeavours to apprehend the murderer: Or if where two are fighting, and others looking on do not endeavour to part them, if one is killed, the lookers on may be indicted and fined. 3 Inst. 53. Noy 50. And killing any person endeavouring to part others fighting, tho' without any evil intention against him is murder.

For the sentence to be passed on persons convicted of murder, see the end of the next head. See Duelling, Homicide, Manslaughter, &c. See also Trial. See Foster's discourse on murder per tot. Rep. fol. 307. And Black. Com. 4 V. 138, 194, 196, 393.

Form of an indictment for murder.

Wilts, ff. THE jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their oath present, that A. B. late of M. in the said county, yeoman, not having the fear of God before his eyes, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the Devil, on the—day of, &c. in the—year of the reign of, &c. about the hour, &c. in the evening of the same day, at M. aforesaid in the said county, with force and arms made an assault in and upon one C. D. then and there bring in the peace of God, and of our said Lord the King; and that the said A. B. did then and there, to wit, at M. aforesaid in the said county, feloniously, wilfully and of his malice forethought strike and wound the said C. D. with a sword, of the value of three shillings, which the said A. B. then and there had and held drawn in his right hand, and did feloniously and of his malice forethought, then and there, to wit, at M. aforesaid in the said county, give to the said C. D. one mortal wound with the sword aforesaid, in and upon the right part of his thigh, of the length of three inches, and of the depth of two inches, of which said mortal wound the said C. D. at M. aforesaid in the said county, instantly died; and so the said jurors upon their oath aforesaid say, that the said A. B. on the said—day of, &c. in the year abovementioned, at M. aforesaid in the said county, did feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice forethought, kill and murder the said C. D. in manner and form aforesaid, against the peace of our said Sovereign Lord the now King, his crown and dignity, &c.

Murder, or homicide justifiable. There is a killing that is justifiable; as if a person attempts to commit murder, robbery or other felony, a man or any of his servants may lawfully kill him. 2 Inst. 316. See statute, 24 H. 8. c. 5. If a person in defence of the possession of a room in a public house kill another who attempts to turn him out of it, killing the assailant hath been holden to be justifiable. Kel. 51. 1 Hawk. 85. In the defence of the possession of a man's goods, against him that would wrongfully take them away, killing cannot be justified; except he be a thief. Wood's Inst. 361. If a woman kills a man attempting to ravish her, it is justifiable. H. P. C. 39.

Those who are engaged in a riot, or forcible entry, &c. standing in opposition to a justice's command, or lawful warrant: Or if trespassers in a forest or park, will not surrender, but defend themselves: If a felon will not suffer himself to be arrested, and refusing to obey any arrest on lawful warrant, defends himself; or if one either with or without a warrant pursues a felon upon hue and cry, and he flies for it: If a prisoner assaults those who conduct him to gaol, or his gaoler, in endeavouring to escape; or a person arrested, resist the sheriff, &c. the killing these is justifiable; but a sheriff cannot kill one who flies from the execution of a civil process: And as no private person hath this authority, upon an arrest in a civil matter, as he hath upon an arrest for felony; so neither neither hath the sheriff this power in criminal cases, but upon a necessity; as when an offender cannot be taken without killing, &c. for if he might be taken without killing him, it will be esteemed murder. 3 Inst. 56, 221. H. P. C. 37. Dalt. 150, 355. Kel. 28.

When one in danger of drowning, thrusts another from a plank, whereby he is drowned; this is justifiable. Bac. Max. 25. And there is a homicide or killing excusable, where a man kills another merely in his own defence, called se defendendo. A person indicted for intending to murder the Master of the Rolls, Term. Mich. 16 Car. 2. and for offering a sum of money to another person to do it, saying, at the same time, that "if he would not perpetrate the crime, he would do it himself;" upon his conviction, the court declared that this was a heinous offence, and not only indictable, but fineable, and the offender was fined one thousand marks, committed to prison for three months, and ordered to find sureties for his good behaviour during life. 1 Lev. 146. Firing a pistol out of a chaise into the street, and by accident, death ensuing, held manslaughter. Strange 481. A defendant arrested, strikes at the officers, they afterwards kill him, held manslaughter. Strange 499.

By Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 37. Persons found guilty of wilful murder shall be executed on the day next but one after sentence passed, unless the same happens on a Sunday, and then on the Monday. The body, (if executed in London or Middlesex,) to be delivered to the surgeons company to be anatomized, if in any other county, to such surgeon as the judge shall direct for that purpose. The sentence to be pronounced in open court immediately after conviction with the time for execution and the marks of infamy hereby directed.

If there be reasonable cause, the judge may stay execution. The judge may order the body of the murderer to be hung in chains, but in no case to be buried, unless after dissection. After conviction the prisoner to be confined separate and apart from other prisoners, and no person but the gaoler, &c. to have access to the prisoner without licence from the judge, sheriff or under-sheriff. Where the judge shall see cause to respite execution, he may relax the said restraints. And after sentence until execution the prisoner to be fed with bread and water, except on receiving the sacrament, and in case of violent wounds or sickness, &c. Vide Homicide.

Murozum operatio. The service of work and labour done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants in building or repairing the walls of a city or castle. From which duty some were exempted by special privilege. So King Henry the Second granted to the tenants within the honour of Wallingford.—Ut quieti sint de operationibus castellorum & murorum. Paroch. Antiq. pag. 114. When this personal duty was commuted into money, the tax so gathered, was called murage. Cowell.

Muscovy Company of Merchants, established by King Ed. 6. This company trades to Russia and the north; and any subject of England, on request may be admitted into it, and enjoy all privileges, paying only the sum of 5*l.* by Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 6. In order to open a trade to Persia thro' Muscovy, a late statute has ordained, that all persons free of this company may import from any place in Russia, raw silk or other commodities of Persia, purchased by barter with woollen manufactures exported from England, &c. 14 Geo. 2. cap. 36.

Musicians. The musicians of England, were incorporated by King Charles 2. anno 1670. And of late years all foreign music, opera's, &c. have very much increased, thro' the management of this corporation, and the softness and politeness of our modern gentry. See Minstrels.

Musters. For the duties on, and other matters relating to them, see Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 3. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 4. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 11. 7 Geo. 1. c. 21. 10 Ann. c. 29. See Lines.

Mussa. (Lat.) A moss or marsh ground; also a place where sedge grows; a place over-run with moss. Cowell. Mon. 1 tom. pag. 126.

Muster. (From the Fr. Mustre) Is to shew men, and their arms, that are soldiers, and enrol them in a book. Term. de Ley. Faire montre general de tout son armis, is as much as muster an army; the signification being well known to muster an army: And mustered of record is to be enrolled in the number of the King's soldiers. Stat. 18 H. 6. c. 19. If any men commanded to muster, by those who have authority, absent themselves, or do not bring their best arms, they shall be imprisoned ten days, or pay a fine of 40*s.* by 4 & 5 P. & M. 3. See Soldiers.

Muster-Master general, Mentioned in the 35 Eliz. c. 4. See Master of the King's Musters.

Muta Canum. (Fr. Mente de Chiens) Signifies a kennel of hounds, in ancient records: And the King at a bishop's and abbot's decease, had six things. 1. Optimum equum sive palefridum ipsius episcopi, &c. 2. Unum chlamydem sive cloacam cum capella. 3. Unum cibum cum cooperatorio. 4. Unum pelvem cum lavatorio. 5. Unum annulum aureum. 6. Necnon mutam canum; quæ ad dom. regem, rationes prerogative sue spectant & pertinent. Hill. 2 Edw. 2. in Stat. post Mortem Episc. Bath & Willens. & Claus. 30 Ed. 1. M. 16. Vide Mortuary, and *Black. Mutare. To mew up hawks, in the time of their molting or casting their plumes. In the reign of King Ed. 2. the manor of Broughton in Com. Oxon. was held — Per serjeantiam mutandi unum hostrium domini regis. &c. Paroch. Antiq. 560. Mutatus accipiter is a mewed hawk: And hence the Mews (Muta Regia) near Charing-Cross, London, now the King's stables, was formerly the falconry or place for the King's hawks.

Mutatoarius, Change of apparel. Mat. Par. Ann. 1107.

Mute. (Mutus) One dumb, who cannot or refuses to speak. And by our law a prisoner may stand mute two ways: 1. When he speaks not at all, and it shall be enquired whether he stand mute out of malice, or by the act of God; and if by the latter, then the judge ought to enquire whether he be the same person, and of all pleas which he might have pleaded in his defence, if he had not been mute. 2. When the prisoner pleads not directly, or will not put himself upon the inquest to be tried; and a person feigning himself mad, and refusing to answer, shall be taken as one who stands mute. 2 Inst. H. P. C. 226.

Also if a prisoner on his trial peremptorily challenge above the number of jurors allowed by law, this being an implied refusal of a legal trial, he shall be dealt with as one who stands mute, and according to some opinions be hanged. H. P. C. 259. Kel. 36. 2 Hawk. 327. A felon obstinately standing mute is to be put to the penance of pains forte & dure: In case of high treason where the offender stands mute, he shall have judgment and forfeit lands and goods, as if he had been attainted; likewise in the case of felony and petit treason, if a person by standing mute do not avoid being attainted for such crimes, he shall forfeit his lands and goods in the same manner as on other attainders: tho' whenever a person standing mute is adjudged to his penance for felony, and thereby prevents that attainer which otherwise he might have incurred, he forfeits his chattels only, and not his lands. 2 Hawk. P. C. 330, 331.

It is said by Sir Math. Hale, that an appellee of felony standing mute shall be executed, and not have judgment of penance; but the contrary hath been held by others. H. P. C. 226. S. P. C. 150. 2 Inst. 178. Kel. 37. One who stands mute shall have the benefit of clergy, unless it be otherwise specially provided by some statute. And altho' it be enacted by 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9. That if any person shall be indicted of any offence, for which by virtue of any former statute, he is excluded from the benefit of his clergy, if he had been thereof convicted by verdict or confession, if he stand mute he shall not be admitted to the same; yet appeals, and offences excluded from the benefit of clergy, by subsequent statutes, seem not within that act: And a statute taking away the benefit of clergy generally from those who are convicted of a crime, doth not take it away from those who stand mute on an indictment or appeal. 2 Hawk. 332.

Hawkins says, that the manner of inflicting this punishment may be best found from the books of entries and other law books, all of which generally agree, that the prisoner shall be remanded to the place from whence he came, and put into some low dark room, and there laid laid on his back without any manner of covering, except for the privy parts, and that as many weights be laid upon him as he can bear, and more, and that he shall have no manner of sustenance but the worst bread and water, and that he shall not eat the same day in which he drinks, nor drink the same day on which he eats, and that he shall so continue till he die. But that it is said that anciently the judgment was not, that he should continue until he should die, but until he should answer, and that he might save himself from the penance by putting himself upon his trial, which he cannot do at this day after judgment of penance once given. 2 Hawk. Pl. C. 330. cap. 30. f. 16. And there in the margin, the serjeant, as to the remanding him to the place whence he came, cites H. P. C. 227. S. P. C. 150 (E). Keilw. 70. a. 4 Ed. 4. 11. pl. 18. 14 Ed. 4. 8. pl. 17. Abr. Br. Corone 160. 2 Inst. 178. Ra. Ent. 385. pl. 17. 8 Ed. 4. 1. pl. 2. And as to the words in some low dark room, he says, that this clause is omitted in Keilw. 70. a. 4 Ed. 4. 11. pl. 18. But is mentioned in all the other books above cited, but with this difference, that 14 Ed. 4. 11. pl. 17. says only he shall be put in a chamber, without adding that it shall be low or dark. And as to the words there laid on his back, &c. he says, that in this all the books above cited seem to agree. And 14 Ed. 4. 8. pl. 17. and S. P. C. 150 (E), and 2 Inst. 178. add, that he shall lie without any litter or other thing under him, and that one arm shall be drawn to one quarter of the room with a cord, and the other to another, and that his feet shall be used in the same manner. But that these clauses are wholly omitted in all the other books above cited, except H. P. C. which takes notice of the latter of them only. And Ra. Ent. 385. pl. 2. adds, that an hole shall be made for the head. And Keilw. 70. a. says, that the head shall not touch the earth; but none of the other mention either of these clauses. And as to the words, that as many weights shall be laid upon him as he can bear and more, &c. he says, that in this all the books above cited agree. And as to the word bread, he says, that 14 Ed. 4. 8. pl. 17. S. P. C. 150 (E), and 2 Inst. 178. are, that he shall have three morsels of barley bread a day. Keilw. 70. a. that he shall have only rye bread, and Ra. Ent. 385. pl. 2. and 2 Hen. 4. 1. pl. 2. generally, that he shall have the worst bread. And as to the word water, he says, that in 14 Ed. 4. 8. pl. 17. S. P. C. 150 (E), 2 Inst. 178. and 8 Hen. 4. 1. pl. 2. and Keilw. 70. a. are, that he shall have the water next the prison, so that it be not current; but Ra. Ent. 385. pl. 5. is general, that he shall have the worst water. And as to the words, not eat the same day in which he drinks, nor drink the same day on which he eats, &c. he says, this is omitted in Keilw. 70. a. and in 8 Hen. 4. 1. pl. 2. And as to the words till he die, he says, this is omitted in none of the books above cited, except 14 Ed. 5. [4.] 11. and H. P. C. 227. But that neither of these books give the whole judgment at large. Hawk. Pl. C. 330, 331. cap. 3.

Nacka, Nacka, A small ship, yacht, or transport vessel. Chartular. Abbat. Rading. MS. fol. 51.

Nam, or Naam, (namium from the Sax. niman, i. e. capere) Signifies the taking or distraining another man's moveable goods. And lawful naam, which is a reasonable distress, proportionable to the value of the thing distrained for, was anciently called either wif or mort, quick or dead, as it consisted of dead or quick chattels; and it is when one takes another man's beasts damage-feasant, in his ground, or by a person's particular fact, by reason of some contract made; as for default of payment of an annuity, it shall be lawful to distrain in such or such lands, &c. And there is a naam unlawful mentioned in our books. Horn's Mirror, lib. 2.—Nemo namium capit in comitatu vel extra comitatum, priusquam ter in bundrade suo rectum sibi perquisierit. Leg. Canut. c. 18. Non licebit namium sumere vel vadimonium, nec averia sua imparchiare. Spelm. Gloss.

Namatiou, (namation) A taking or distraining; and in Scotland it is used for impounding: Namatus, distrained. Charta Hen. 2. See Vetitum Namium, and Withernam.

Name, (nomen, Fr. nomme, or nom) By which any person is known or called. There is a name of persons, bodies politic, and places; and of baptism and surname; also names of dignity, &c. In some cases a name by reputation is sufficient; but it is not so of a thing, if the matter and substance be not right. 11 Rep. 21. 6 Rep. 65. 4 Rep. 170. What foundation will support a name by reputation. See Ld. Raym. 301, 304. Vide Misnomer.

Namium vetitum, Is an unjust taking the cattle of another, and driving them to an unlawful place, pretending damage done by them. In which case the owner of the cattle may demand satisfaction for the injury, which is called placitum de namio vestito.

Nappera, (From the Ital. naperia, i. e. lintamina domestica.) linen cloth, or household linen. Stat. 2 R. 2. c. 1.

Narr, An abbreviation of narratio, used to signify a declaration in a cause.

Narrator, (Lat.) A pleader or reporter; and formerly serviens narrator was a serjeant at law.—Et ulterius in curia regis pro aliquo narrare non audietur, nisi pro semetipso si narrator fuerit. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 37.

Nassabrough, Its justices, where empowered to determine appeals, 9 Geo. 1. c. 7.

Nasse or Nesse, (From the Sax. Nase, i. e. Promontorium.) The name of the port or haven of Orford in Suffolk, mentioned in stat. 4 Hen. 7. cap. 21.

Natale, The state and condition of a man.—Si quis de homicidio accusatur, & idem se purgare velit secundum natale suum. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 64.

Nathwyte, Seems to be derived from the Sax. nath, i. e. lewdness; and so to signify the same with lair-wite.

National Debt, the money owing by government, for which it pays interest, part to our own people, part to foreigners, and which forms our national funds. In January 1765, the national debt amounted to upwards of 145,000,000*l.* and the annual interest to about four millions and three quarters. Vide this subject very fully explained and judiciously treated of, Black. Com. 1 V. 325, &c. and 4 V. 433.

Natibi de stipite. In the survey of the dutchy of Cornwall, there is mention of native de stipite, and nativi conventionarii; the first were villeins or bondmen, by birth or stock; the other by contract or agreement. LL. Hen. 1. cap. 76. And in Cornwall it was a custom, that a freeman marrying nativam, if he had two daughters one of them was free, and the other villein. Brañ. lib. 4. c. 21, 22.

Nativity, (natiuitas) birth, or the being born in a place. The casting the nativity, or by calculation seeking to know how long the Queen should live, &c. was made felony, by 23 Elix. cap. 2. Natiuitas was anciently taken for servitude, bondage or villinage. Leg. Will. 1.

Natibo habendo, A writ that lay to the sheriff for a lord who claimed inheritance in any villein, when his villein was run away, for the apprehending and restoring him to the lord: and the sheriff might seize the villein, and deliver him unto his lord, if he confessed his villinage; but if he alledged that he was a freeman, then the sheriff ought not to seize him, but the lord was to sue forth a pone to remove the plea before the justices of C. B. &c. And if the villain purchased a writ de libertate probanda before the lord had taken out the pone, it was a superfideas to the lord, that he proceeded not on the writ of natibo habendo. Reg. Orig. 7, 8. F. N. B. 77. New Nat. Br. 171, 172. This writ natibo habendo was in nature of a writ of right, to recover the inheritance in the villein; upon which the lord was to pursue his plaint, and declare thereupon, and the villein to make his defence, so as the freedom was to be tried. New Nat. Br. 171, 173.

Nativus. He who is born a servant, and so differs from him who suffers himself to be sold, of which servants there are three sorts, bondmen, natives, and villains; bondmen were those who bound themselves by covenants to serve, and took their name from the word bond; natives we spoke of just before; and villains were such who belonging to the land, tilled the lord's demesnes, nor might depart thence without the lord's licence. Spelman's Gloss. See Chart. R. 2. Quia omnes manumittit a bondage in com. Hertf. Walsingham, pag. 254. Cowell. See Servi Nativus, and Nef. But now there are not in England any such persons, as those mentioned here.

Natural Affection, (naturalis affectio) Is a good consideration in a deed; and if one without expressing any consideration, covenant to stand seized to the use of his wife, child, or brother, &c. Here the naming them to be of kin, implies the consideration of natural affection, whereupon such use will arise. Cart. 138. See Consideration.

Naturalization, (Naturalizatio) Is where a person who is an alien, is made the King's natural subject by act of parliament; whereby one is a subject to all intents and purposes, as if he were born so: for by naturalization, a person's issue, before the naturalization, shall inherit. 1 Inft. 8, 129. A stranger naturalized by act of parliament, may have lands by descent, as heir at law, as well as have them by purchase: But until naturalized or made denizen, a stranger is not generally under the King's protection, to have the benefit of the law; also no person is to be naturalized, until he has received the sacrament, and taken the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, &c. And strangers when naturalized, are disabled to be of the Privy Council, to hold offices, &c. 7 Jac. 1. cap. 2. 12 W. 3. cap. 2. but see 1 Geo. 1. cap. 4. By the stat. 7 Ann. cap. 5. it was declared, that all persons born out of the King's allegiance, taking the oaths, &c. should be deemed natural born; tho' this was repealed, but not to prejudice persons naturalized, or children of natural-born subjects, born out of allegiance, by 10 Ann. c. 5. And all children born out of the ligeance of the crown, whose fathers were, or shall be natural subjects of Great Britain, at the time of their birth, are adjudged to be natural-born subjects of this kingdom, except children of parents attainted of treason, or in the actual service of foreign princes in enmity with England, &c. by the 4 Geo. 2. c. 21. All foreigners who shall live seven years or more, in any of our American plantations, and not be absent therefrom above two months at one time, shall on taking the oaths be deemed natural subjects, as if they had been born here; but not be capable of enjoying any place of trust, &c. 13 Geo. 2. c. 7. This by the stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 44. is extended to protestants who scruple the taking an oath upon their making and subscribing the declaration of fidelity, and taking and affirming the effect of the abjuration oath, and making and subscribing the profession of their Christian Belief, appointed by the stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 4. &c. Great numbers of foreigners are every year naturalized by private acts of parliament. And vide 25 Ed. 3. stat. 2. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 20. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 6. 25 Geo. 2. c. 39. 13 Geo. 2. c. 3. and 22 Geo. 2. c. 45. See Alien.

Natura Pudenda, Privities.—Pensandum autem est, per visum accusantibus visum concubitus propensus advertendum, ut scilicet ipsas eorum naturas viderint committeri. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 83.

Nabagium, A duty incumbent on tenants, to carry their lord's goods in a ship: Liberi sint ab omni cariagio, navagio, &c. Mon. Angl. Tom. 1 pag. 922.

Nabal, Signifies any thing belonging to the sea, or maritime affairs. Merch. Dict.

Naval Stores. Persons stealing or imbezilling any of the King's naval stores, to the value of 20*l.* are guilty of felony, without benefit of clergy. 22 Car. 2. cap. 5. And the treasurer and commissioners of the navy are empowered to inquire of naval stores imbezilled, and appoint persons to search for them, &c. who may go on board ships, and seize such stores; and the commissioners, &c. may imprison the offenders, and fine them double value, the stores being under the value of 20*l.* 1 Geo. 1. cap. 25. None but the contractors with the commissioners of the navy, shall make any stores of war, naval stores, &c. with the marks commonly used to his Majesty's stores, upon pain of forfeiting 200*l.* And persons in whose custody such stores shall be found concealed, are liable to the same penalty. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 41. The Stat. 3 Ann. c. 10. was made for the encouragement of the importation of naval stores, from the plantations in America, and for preservation thereof in those countries; inflicting penalties for cutting down pine, or pitch trees, under such and such fines, &c. To the like purpose, and for the making the same more effectually is the Stat. 8 Geo. 1. cap. 12. Also naval stores are imported here from Scotland, under an encouragement by statute; and a premium is given for the importing of naval stores from America and North Britain, of 1*l.* per ton, for masts and pitch, &c. 2 Geo. 2. cap. 35. See Ships, Stores.

Naufrage, A sea term for shipwreck. Merch. Dict.

Navigatio,

Navigatio, Is the art of sailing at sea, also the manner of trading: And a navigator is one who understands navigation, or imports goods in foreign bottoms. Ibid. See Black. Com. 1 V. 417. 4 V. 432.

Navigable Rivers, Divers statutes relating to them. See Rivers.

Navis Ecclesiæ, The nave or body of the church, as distinguished from the choir, and wings, or aisle: It is that part of the church where the common people sit, Du Cange.

Navis, Navicula, A small dish to hold frankincense before put into the thuribulum, censer or smoking pot; and seems to have its name from the shape, resembling a boat or little ship: we have several of these boat-cups in silver, &c. for various uses. Paroch. Antiq. 598.

Navithalamus, A ship or barge that noblemen use for pleasure, with fine chambers and other stately ornaments. Law Lat. Dict.

Navy, Signifies the fleet or shipping of a prince or state; or an armament at sea. The navy of England it has been observed, excels all others for three things; viz. beauty, strength, and safety; for beauty our ships of war are so many floating palaces; for their strength so many moving castles; and for safety, they are the most defensive walls of the land: and as our naval power gains us authority in the most distant climates, so the superiority of our fleet above other nations, renders the British monarch the arbiter of Europe.

The Kings of England in antient times commanded their fleet in person; and the renowned King Arthur, (famous for his warlike achievements) vindicated the dominion of the seas, making ships of all nations salute our ships of war by lowering the top-sail, and striking the flag, as in like manner they shall do to the forts upon land, by which submission they are put in mind that they are come into a territory, wherein they are to own a sovereign power and jurisdiction, and receive protection from it: and this duty of the flag, which hath been constantly paid to our ancestors, serves to imprint reverence in foreigners, and adds new courage to our seamen; and reputation abroad, is the principal support of any government at home.

King Edgar, successor to Arthur, stiled himself sovereign of the narrow seas; and having fitted out a fleet of four hundred sail of ships, in the year 937, sailing about Britain with his mighty navy, and arriving at Chester, was there met by eight Kings and Princes of foreign nations, come to do him homage; who as an acknowledgment of his sovereignty, rowed this monarch in a boat down the river Dee, himself steering the boat; a marine triumph which is not to be paralleled in the histories of Europe.

Canutus, (Edgar's successor,) laid the antient tribute called Danegeld, for guarding the seas, and sovereignty of them; with the following emblem expressed, viz. Himself sitting on the shore in his royal chair, while the sea was flowing, speaking, Tu mæ ditionis es, & terra in qua sedes est, &c.

And Egbert, Athred and Elfbred kept up the dominion and sovereignty of their predecessors; nor did the succeeding princes of the Norman race, waive this great advantage, but maintained their right to the four adjacent seas surrounding the British shore: the honour of the flag King John challenged, not barely as a civility, but a right to be paid cum debita reverentia, and the persons refusing, he commanded to be taken as enemies: and the same was ordained not only to be paid to whole fleets, bearing the royal standard, but to those ships of privilege that wear the Prince's ensigns or colours of service; this decree was confirmed and bravely asserted by a fleet of five hundred sail, in a royal voyage to Ireland, wherein he made all the vessels which he met with in his way, in the eight circumfluent seas, to pay that duty and acknowledgment, which has been maintained by our Kings to this day, and was never contested by any nation, unless by those who attempted the conquest of the intire empire.

Trade gave occasion to the bringing mighty fleets to sea; and on the increase of trade, ships of war were necessary in all countries for the preservation of it, in the hands of the just proprietors.

In antient times the several counties of England were liable to a particular taxation for building ships of war, and fitting out fleets, every one in proportion to their extent and riches; so that the largest counties were each of them to furnish a first rate man of war, and the others every one to build one in proportion; but this method has been long disused, and the fitting out our navy for many ages has been always thrown into the publick charge.

King Edw. 3. in his wars with France, had a fleet of ships before Calais, so numerous, that they amounted to seven hundred sail: but King Hen. 6. it is said, was the first who began to build a royal navy in England; he built a ship called the Great Henry of one thousand tuns, the largest ship that had been then seen in this kingdom, (tho' now our first rate ships of war contain at least two thousand tuns, are mounted with above one hundred canon, and carry above one thousand men.) He fitted out a royal fleet, constituted a Navy Office &c. And in this King's reign, and the reign of Queen Elizabeth, our navy was in a most flourishing condition, being mostly commanded by our valiant nobility; and it is remarkable, that there are lists of the fleets of Queen Elizabeth, which make it appear there was but one private gentleman a captain, all the rest being Lords and Knights: so high was the esteem for service at sea in those days, when our Princes ruled with the most consummate glory: but the opinion of serving at sea in late times having been very much lessened, it has since been declined by the nobility and gentry.

The navy is at this time in a very flourishing state; for number of shipping, and strength of force of the ships, it was never, perhaps, more formidable than now; and when compleat, is divided into three squadrons, distinguished by the different colours of the several flags, viz. red, white, and blue; the principal commander whereof bears the title of Admiral, and each has under him a Vice-Admiral, and a Rear-Admiral, who are likewise flag officers. There are belonging to his Majesty's navy, six great yards, Chatham, Deptford, Woolwich, Portsmouth, Sheerness, and Plymouth; fitted with several docks, and furnished with store of timber, masts, anchors, cables, &c. And for the management of the royal navy, there are several officers of trust and authority, besides the Commissioners of the Admiralty; as the Treasurer, Controller, Surveyor, Commissioners of the Navy, Commissioners of Victualling-Office, &c. the principal whereof hold their offices by patent under the Great Seal. By Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 37. the sum of 570,000*l.* was appropriated for the building of twenty-seven ships of war, with their guns, rigging, &c. And the 6 Ann. c. 13. enacts, That over and above the ships for the line of battle, forty-three ships of war shall be employed as cruisers and convoys, for the better preserving such ships as shall be made use of in the trade of Great Britain; four of these ships are to be third-rates, and sixteen fourth rates, and the rest of sufficient force to guard our commerce: they are to attend in certain stations; and the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty may direct the Commissioners of the Navy, or some one or more persons resident at such places as his Majesty shall appoint, to superintend and oversee every thing relating to those cruisers; also the Commissioners of the Admiralty have power to order any of the said ships to be employed in the line of battle, in case of necessity.

This statute likewise empowers the commissioners of the Admiralty, during war, to grant commissions to privateers and commanders of ships, for the taking and seizing ships and goods of enemies. For the furnishing of mariners for the Fleet; by 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 21. it is enacted, That all seamen, watermen, &c. above the age of eighteen years, and under fifty, capable of sea service, who shall register themselves voluntarily for the King's service in the royal navy, to the number of thirty thousand, shall have paid to them the yearly sum or bounty of 40*s.* besides their pay for actual service, and that whether they be in service or not; and none but such mariners, &c. as are registered, shall be capable of preferment to any commission, or be warrant officers in the navy: and such registered persons are exempted from serving on juries, parish offices, &c. also from service aboard the age of fifty five years, years, unless they go voluntarily; and when by age, wounds, or other accidents, they are disabled for future service at sea, they shall be admitted into Greenwich hospital, and there be provided for, during life: and the widows of such seamen as shall be slain or drowned, not of ability to provide for themselves, shall be likewise admitted into the hospital; and their children educated, &c. But if any registered seaman shall withdraw himself from the King's service, in his ships or navy; or if any such mariner relinquish the service, without consent of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, he shall for ever lose the benefit of the act, and be compelled to serve in his Majesty's fleet for six months without pay. See 9 Ann. c. 21. s. 23. By a subsequent statute, 4 Ann. c. 19. s. 18. Watermen plying on the Thames between Gravesend and Windsor, on notice given by the Commissioners of the Admiralty to the company of watermen, are to appear before the said company, to be sent to his Majesty's fleet, or on refusal, they shall suffer one month's imprisonment, and be disabled working on the Thames for two years: The registering seamen is the grand nursery for the fleet; but there are other means of supplying mariners for the royal navy, and training up persons in the sea service: for the Stat. 2 Ann. c. 6. provides, That poor boys, whose parents are chargeable to the parish, may by churchwardens and overseers of the poor, with consent of two justices of peace, be placed out apprentices to the sea service, until the age of twenty-one years, they being thirteen years old, at the time of their placing forth: those at eighteen years of age may be impressed for service in the fleet, when the owners or masters of such of them as shall prove qualified, shall have able seamen's wages; and all masters and owners of ships, from thirty to fifty tons burden, are required to take one such apprentice, one more for the next fifty ton, and one more for every hundred ton above the first hundred, under the penalty of 10*l*. Masters of apprentices placed out by the parish may, with the consent of two justices, turn over such apprentices to masters of ships for the remainder of their terms: lewd and disorderly servants, vagabonds, &c. are to be taken up and sent to his Majesty's fleet, and poor prisoners for debt, who were to have the benefit of 4 & 5 Ann. appearing on their release to be able bodied seamen, were to enter themselves in the service. Thus is the navy recruited with mariners; nor to mention particularly the manner of pressing in cities and populous towns, on extraordinary occasions.

By a late statute, encouragement is given to seamen to enter into his Majesty's service voluntarily: volunteers entering their names with any commission officer of the fleet, and forthwith proceeding on board their ships, on certificate thereof shall be entitled to wages from the date of the certificate, and be allowed the usual conduct money, and also be paid an advance of two months wages, &c. And if any volunteer is transferred to another ship, he shall receive, over and above his wages due, the like advance of two months pay, and not serve in a lower degree than he did before. Persons listed on board ships of war, are not to be taken thereout by any process at law, unless it be for a criminal matter; or where the debt amounts to 20*l*. When seamen die on board, the commander of the ship shall, as soon as may be, make out tickets for their pay, which shall be paid to their executors, &c. without carrying for the ship's return; and seamen's pay shall not be bargained and sold; but tickets may. Governors and consuls in foreign parts, are to provide for shipwrecked mariners at 6*l*. per head each, and put them on board the first ships of war, &c. and on sending bills of disbursement with vouchers to the Commissioners of the Navy, they shall be paid. 1 Geo. 2. c. 14.

Also the pay and wages of one man in a hundred, of every ship of war, and value of his victuals, shall be applied for relieving poor widows of officers of the navy, by the 6 Geo. 2. c. 25. A late statute has ordained, that able seamen who voluntarily enter on board ships of war, shall receive 3*l*. besides their wages, and ordinary seamen 3*l*. And if any seaman, under a commission or warrant officer, who enters into the service, be killed or drowned, his widow, on certificate to the Commissioners of the Navy that she is such, is to have, by way of bounty, one year's wages, according to the pay for which he served. 14 Geo. 2. c. 38.

The Commissioners of the Navy, &c. have power to examine and punish all persons who make any disturbance, fighting or quarrelling in the yards, and offices, &c. of the navy: and in the 13th year of King Charles II. an act passed for the regulating the government of the fleet; and also an act 22 Geo. 2. c. 33. which contains the particular excellent articles and orders following.

1. Officers are to cause publick worship, according to the liturgy of the church of England, to be solemnly performed in their ships, and take care that prayers and preaching by the chaplains be performed diligently, and that the Lord's Day be observed. 2. Persons guilty of profane oaths, cursing, drunkenness, uncleanness, &c. to be punished as a court martial shall think fit. 3. If any person shall give or hold intelligence or or with an enemy without leave, he shall suffer death. 4. If any letter or message from an enemy be conveyed to any in the fleet, and he shall not in twelve hours acquaint his superior officer with it, or if the superior officer being acquainted therewith, shall not reveal it to the commander in chief, the offender shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall impose. 5. Spies and persons endeavouring to corrupt any one in the fleet, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall impose. 6. No person shall relieve an enemy with money, victuals or ammunition, on like penalty. 7. All papers taken on board a prize shall be sent to the Court of Admiralty, &c. on penalty of forfeiting the share of the prize, and such punishment as a court martial shall impose. 8. No person shall take out of any prize any money or goods, unless for better securing the same, or for the necessary use of any of his Majesty's ships, before the prize shall be condemned; upon penalty of forfeiting his share, and such punishment as shall be imposed by a court martial. 9. No person on board a prize shall be stripped of his cloaths, pillaged, beaten, or ill treated, upon pain of such punishment as a court martial shall impose. 10. Every commander, who, upon signal or order of fight, or sight of any ship which it may be his duty to engage, or who, upon likelihood of engagement shall make necessary preparations for fight, and encourage his inferior officers and men to fight, shall suffer death or such punishment as a court martial shall deem him to deserve. And if any person shall treacherously or cowardly yield or cry for quarter, he shall suffer death. 11. Every person who shall not obey the orders of his superior officer, in time of action, to the best of his power, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall deem him to deserve. 12. Every person, who, in time of action, shall withdraw or keep back, or not come into the fight, or do his utmost to take or destroy any ship which it shall be his duty to engage, and to assist every ship of his Majesty or his allies, which it shall be his duty to assist, shall suffer death. 13. Every person, who thro' cowardice, &c. shall forbear to pursue the chase of any enemy, &c. or shall not assist or relieve a known friend in view, to the utmost of his power, shall suffer death. 14. If any person shall delay or discourage any action or service commanded, upon pretence of arrears of wages, or otherwise, he shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall deem him to deserve. 15. Every person who shall desert to the enemy, or run away with any ship, ordnance, &c. to the weakening of the service, or yield up the same cowardly or treacherously to the enemy, shall suffer death. 16. Every person who shall desert, or induce others so to do, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall think fit. If any commanding officer shall receive a deserter, after discovering him to be such, and shall not with speed give notice to the captain of the ship to which he belongs, or if the ship is at a considerable distance, to the Secretary of the Admiralty, or Commander in Chief, he shall be punished. 17. Officers and seamen of ships appointed in convoy or merchant ships, or of any other, shall diligently attend upon that charge according to their instructions; and whosoever shall not faithfully perform their duty, and defend the ships in their convoy, or refuse to fight in their defence, or run away cowardly and submit the ships in their convoy to hazard, or exact any reward for for conveying any ship, or misuse the master or mariners, shall make reparation of damages, as the court of Admiralty shall adjudge; and be punished criminally by death, or other punishment, as shall be adjudged by a court martial. 18. If any officer shall receive or permit to be received on board any goods or merchandise, other than for the sole use of the ship, except gold, silver or jewels, and except goods belonging to any ship which may be shipwrecked, or in danger thereof, in order to the preserving them for the owners, and except goods ordered to be received by the Lord High Admiral, &c. he shall be cashiered, and rendered incapable of further service. 19. Any person making or endeavouring to make any mutinous assembly shall suffer death. Any person uttering words of sedition or mutiny shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall deem him to deserve. If any officer, mariner, or soldier, in or belonging to the fleet shall behave himself with contempt to his superior officer, being in the execution of his office, he shall be punished according to the nature of his offence by the judgment of a court martial. 20. Any person concealing any traitorous or mutinous practice or design, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court-martial shall think fit. Any person concealing any traitorous or mutinous words, or any words, practice, or design, tending to the hindrance of the service, and not forthwith revealing the same to the commanding officer, or being present at any mutiny or sedition, shall not use his utmost endeavours to suppress the same, shall be punished as a court martial shall think he deserves. 21. Any person finding cause of complaint of the unwholesomeness of victuals, or upon other just ground, he shall quietly make the same known to his superior, who, as far as he is able, shall cause the same to be presently remedied; and no person upon any such or other pretence shall attempt to stir up any disturbance, upon pain of such punishment as a court-martial shall think fit to inflict. 22. Any person striking any his superior officer, or drawing or offering to draw or lift up any weapon against him, being in the execution of his office, shall suffer death. And any person presuming to quarrel with any his superior officer, being in the execution of his office, or disobeying any lawful command of any his superior officer, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as shall be inflicted upon him by a court-martial. 23. Any person quarrelling or fighting with any other person in the fleet, or using reproachful or provoking speeches or gestures, shall suffer such punishment as a court martial shall impose. 24. There shall be no wasteful expence or embezzlement of any powder, shot, &c. upon penalty of such punishment as by a court martial shall be found just. 25. Every person burning or setting fire to any magazine, or store of powder, ship, &c. or furniture thereunto belonging, not then appertaining to an enemy, shall suffer death. 26. Care is to be taken that there be wilfulness or negligence no ship be stranded, run upon rocks or sands, or split or hazarded; upon pain of death, or such punishment as a court martial shall deem the offence to deserve. 27. No person shall sleep upon his watch, or negligently perform his duty, or forsake his station, upon pain of death, or such punishment as, &c. 28. Murder. 29. And buggery or sodomy shall be punished with death. 30. Robbery shall be punished with death, or otherwise as a court martial shall find meet. 31. Every person knowingly making or signing, or commanding, counselling or procuring the making or signing any false muster, shall be cashiered, and rendered incapable of further employment. 32. Provost martial refusing to apprehend or receive any criminal, or suffering him to escape, shall suffer such punishment as a court martial shall deem him to deserve. And all others shall do their endeavours to detect and apprehend all offenders, upon pain of being punished by a court-martial. 33. If any flag-officer, captain, commander or lieutenant, shall behave in a scandalous, infamous, cruel, oppressive or fraudulent manner, unbecoming his character, he shall be dismissed. 34. Every person in actual service and full pay, guilty of mutiny, desertion, or disobedience, in any part of his Majesty's dominions on shore, when in actual service relative to the fleet, shall be liable to be tried by a court-martial, and suffer the like punishment as if the offence had been committed at sea. 35. Every person in actual service and full pay, committing upon shore, in any place out of his Majesty's dominions, any crime punishable by these articles, shall be liable to be tried and punished as if the crime had been committed at sea. 36. All other crimes not capital, not mentioned in this act, shall be punished according to the laws and customs used at sea. No person to be imprisoned for longer than two years. Court martial not to try any offence (except the 5th, 34th, and 35th articles) not committed upon the main sea, or in great rivers beneath the bridges, or in any haven, &c. within the jurisdiction of the admiralty, or by persons in actual service and full pay, except such persons and offences, as in 5th article; nor to try a land officer or soldier on board a transport ship. The Lord High Admiral, &c. may grant commissions to any officer commanding in chief of a fleet, &c. to call courts martial, consisting of commanders and captains. And if the commander in chief shall die or be removed, the officer next in command may call courts martial. No commander in chief of a fleet, &c. of more than five ships, shall preside at any court martial in foreign parts, but the officer next in command shall preside. If a commander in chief shall detach any part of his fleet, &c. he may empower the chief commander of the detachment to hold courts martial during the separate service. If five or more ships shall meet in foreign parts, the senior officer may hold courts martial and preside thereat. Where it is improper for the officer next to the commander in chief to hold or preside at a court martial, the third officer in command may be empowered to preside at or hold a court martial. No court martial shall consist of more than ~~thirteen~~ thirteen, or less than five persons. Where there shall not be less than three, and yet not so many as five of the degree of a Port Captain or superior rank, the officer who is to preside may call to his assistance as many commanders under the degree of a Port Captain, as together with the Port Captains, shall make up the number five, to hold the court martial. After trial begun, no member of a court martial shall go on shore, until sentence, except in case of sickness, upon pain of being cashiered. Proceedings shall not be delayed, if a sufficient number remain to compose the court, which shall sit from day to day (except Sunday) till sentence be given. The Judge Advocate, and all officers constituting a court martial, shall be upon oath. Persons refusing to give evidence may be imprisoned. Sentence of death within the Narrow Seas (except in case of mutiny) shall not be put in execution till a report be made to the Lord High Admiral, &c. Sentence of death beyond the Narrow Seas, shall not be put in execution but by order of the commander in chief of the fleet, &c. Sentence of death in any squadron, detached from the fleet, shall not be put in execution (except in case of mutiny) but by order of the commander of the fleet, or Lord High Admiral, &c. And sentence of death passed in a court martial, held by the senior officer of five or more ships met in foreign parts (except in case of mutiny) shall not be put in execution but by order of the Lord High Admiral, &c. The powers given by the said articles shall remain in force with respect to crews of ships wrecked, lost, or destroyed, until they be discharged or removed into another ship, or a court martial shall be held to inquire of the cause of the loss of the ship. And if upon inquiry it shall appear, that all or any of the officers and seamen did their utmost to save the ship, and behaved obediently to their superior officers, their pay shall go on: as also shall the pay of officers and seamen taken by the enemy, having done their best to defend the ship, and behaved obediently. If any officer shall receive any goods on board, contrary to the 18th article, he shall further forfeit the value of such goods, or 500*l.* at the election of the informer; one moiety to the informer, the other to Greenwich hospital. See Seamen's Ships.

De submitas, Is a writ directed to the bishop for the plaintiff or defendant, where a quare impedit or assize of darrein presentment is depending, when either party fears that the bishop will admit the other's clerk during the suit between them: it ought to be brought within six kalendae lendar months after the avoidance, before the bishop may present by lapse; for 'tis in vain to sue out this writ when the title to present is devolved unto the bishop. Reg. Orig. 31. F. N. B. 37. Writ of Ne admittas doth not lie, if the plea be not depending in the King's court by quare impedit, or darrein presentment; therefore there is a writ in the register directed to the Chief Justice of C. B. to certify the King in the Chancery, if there be any plea before him and the other judges between the parties, &c. So that the writ should not be granted until that be done: But yet it maybe had out of the Chancery before the King is certified that such plea of quare impedit is depending; and then the party grieved may require the Chief Justice to certify, &c. New Nat. Br. 83, 84. The writ runs, prohibemus vobis, Ne admittas, &c.

Necessity. The law charges no man with default where the act is compulsory, and not voluntary, and where there is not a consent and election; therefore if there be an impossibility for a man to do otherwise, or so great a perturbation of the judgment and reason, as in presumption of law he cannot overcome, such necessity carries a privilege in itself. Bac. Elem. 25.

Necessity is of three sorts; necessity of conservation of life, necessity of obedience, and necessity of the act of God or of a stranger.

And first of conservation of life: If a man steal viands to satisfy his present hunger, this is no felony nor larceny. Ibid. But if such necessity be owing to his unthriftiness, surely it is far from being an excuse. Hawt. Pl. C. 93. cap. 33. sect. 20. So if divers be in danger of drowning by the casting away of some boat or barge, and one of them get to some plank, or on the boatside to keep himself above water, and another to save his life, thrusts him from it, whereby he is drowned, this is neither se defendendo, nor by misadventure, but justifiable. Ibid.—S. P. Hawk. Pl. C. 73. cap. 28. sect. 26.

So if divers felons be in goal, and the goal by casualty is set on fire, whereby the prisoners get forth, this is no escape nor breaking of prison. Bac. Elem. 19.

So upon the statute, that every merchant selling his merchandise on land without satisfying the customer or agreeing for it, (which agreement is construed to be in certainty) shall forfeit his merchandise, and it is so that by tempest a great quantity of the merchandise is thrown over-board, whereby the merchant agrees with the customer by estimation, which falls out short of the truth, yet the over quantity is not forfeited; where note, the necessity dispenses with the strict letter of a statute-law. Ibid. sect. 26.

So if a man have right to land, and do not make his entry for terror of force, the law allows him a continual claim, which shall be as beneficial unto him as any entry.

The second necessity is of obedience; therefore where baron and feme commit felony, the feme can neither be principal nor accessory, because the law intends her to have no will, in regard of the subjection and obedience she owes to her husband.

So one reason among others, why ambassadors are excused of practices against the state where they reside (except it be in point of conspiracy, which is against the law of nations and society) is, because vis officii whether they have it in mandatis, and that they are excused by necessity of obedience. Ibid.

The third necessity is of the act of God, or of a stranger; as, if I be tenant for years of a house, and it be overthrown by tempest, or by floods, or invasion of enemies, or if I have belonging to it some cottage which has been infected, whereby I can procure none to inhabit them, nor workmen to repair them, and so they fall down; in these cases I am excused in waste; but of this last learning when and how the act of God, and strangers do excuse, there be other particular rules. Bac. Elem. 26, 27.

Yet necessity is a privilege only quoad jura privata; for in all cases if the act that should deliver a man out of the necessity be against the commonwealth, necessity is no excuse; for privilegium non valet contra rempublicam; and another says, necessitas publica major est quam privata; for death is the last point of particular necessity, and the law imposes upon every subject, that he prefer the urgent service of his prince and country, before the safety of his life; as if in danger of tempest those who are in the ship throw over other men's goods, they are not answerable; but if a man be commanded to bring ordnance or munition to relieve any of the King's towns that are distressed, then he cannot for any danger or tempest justify throwing them over board; for there it holds which was spoken by the Roman, when he alledged the same necessity of weather to hold him from embarking, necesse est ut tam, non ut vivam. So in the case put before of husband and wife, if they join in committing treason, the necessity of obedience does not excuse the offence, as it does in felony; because it is against the commonwealth. Bac. Elem. 27.

So if a fire happen in a street, I may justify pulling down the wall or house of another, to prevent the fire from spreading; but if I be assailed in my house in a city or town, and distressed, and to save my life I set fire to my house, which spreads and takes hold of other houses adjoining, this is not justifiable, but I am subject to their action upon the case, because I cannot rescue my life by doing any thing which is against the commonwealth; but if it had been but a private trespass, as the going over another's ground, or breaking his inclosure, when I am pursued, for the safeguard of my life, it is justifiable. Bac. Elem. 27, 28.

The common case proves this exception; that is, if a madman commit felony, he shall not lose his life, because his infirmity came by the act of God; but if a drunken man commit felony, he shall not be excused, because his infirmity came by his own default; for the reason that loss or deprivation of will, and election by necessity, and by infirmity, is all one, for the lack of arbitrium liberum is the matter; therefore as infirmus culpabilis excuses not, no more does necessitas culpabilis. Bac. Elem. 29. See Black Com. 4 V. 27, 178.

Ne exeat Regno. Is a writ to restrain a person from going out of the kingdom without the King's licence. F. N. B. 81. It may be directed to the sheriff to make the party and surety, that he will not depart the realm; and on his refusal, to commit him to prison; or it may be directed to the party himself; and if he then goes, he may be fined. 2 Lut. 178. And this writ is granted on a suit being commenced in Chancery, when the plaintiff fears the defendant will fly to some other country, and thereby avoid the equity of the court; which hath been sometimes practised: when thus granted, the party must give bond to the Master of the Rolls in the penalty of 1000*l.* or some other large sum, for yielding obedience to it; or satisfy the court by answer, affidavit, or otherwise, that he hath no design of leaving the kingdom, and give security therefore. Practis. Solis. 129. A Ne exeat Regnum has been granted to stay a defendant from going to Scotland; for 'tis not out of the kingdom, yet it is out of the process of the court, and within the same mischief. 2 Salk. 702. 3 Mod. 127, 169. 4 Mod. 179. If the writ be sued for by the King, the party against whom sued may plead licence by letter patent, &c. which shall discharge him: But where any subject goes beyond sea with the King's licence, and continues longer than his appointed time, it hath been held, he loses the benefit of a subject. 4 Lew. 29. And if a person beyond sea refuses to return to England on the King's letters under his Privy Seal, commanding him upon his allegiance to return; being certified into the Chancery, a commission may be awarded to seize his lands and goods for the contempt; and so it is if such person's servants hinder a messenger from delivering his message, on affidavit of it, &c. *Yerk. Negative, Is a proposition by which something is denied; also a particle of denial, as, not. An affirmative includes a negative; for every statute limiting any thing to be done in one form, altho' it be spoke in the affirmative, includes a negative; as the statute of Westm. cap. 4. of a quod ei de forcat is, that the demandant shall vouch at si teneas esset in priori breve, includes a negative, viz. and not otherwise. Plow. 206. b. 207. a. Arg. Ubi plura, in case of Stradling v. Morgan.

A negative cannot be proved or testified by witnesses, only an affirmative. 2 Inst. 662. Tho' a negative is incapable of being proved directly; yet indirectly 'tis otherwise: for in case one accuses B. to have been at York, and there had committed a certain fact, in proof of which he produces several witnesses; here B. cannot prove that he was not at York, against positive evidence that he was; but shall be allowed to make out the negative by collateral testimony, that at that very time he was at Exeter, &c. in such a house, and in such company. Fortescue 37.

Two negatives may be construed as a negative in grants, but not in pleas; for they are to be in Latin, and must be construed as Latin ought to be. Per. cur. 1 Salk. 328. Trin. 2 Ann. B. R. Dillon v. Harper.

Negative may be implied by an affirmative, but not necessarily contra. As the saying, that a papist, unless he conforms, shall not take by devise, does not necessarily imply that if he does conform, he shall take by devise, &c. 2 Wms's Rep. 9. Pasch. 1722. in case of Hill v. Felkin.

Where a trust of a term for raising portions for daughters directs a particular method for raising them, it implies a negative, that they shall not be raised any other way. 2 Wms's Rep. 19. Pasch. 1722. in case of Ivy v. Gilbert & al.

An affirmative oath was made to ground an attachment upon; if the person against whom the motion is, denies the charge by oath positively and fully, the negative oath shall be preferred; and this is the only case in which it shall be so. 8 Mod. 81. Trin. & Geo. The King v. Ackworth & al.

Negative pregnant, (negativa pregnans) Is a negative, implying also an affirmative: As if a man being impleaded to have done a thing on such a day, or in such a place, denieth that he did it modo & forma declarata, which implieth nevertheless, that in some sort he did it: or if a man be said to have alienated land in fee, and he saith he hath not aliened in fee, that is a negative pregnant; for tho' he hath not aliened in fee, yet it may be, he hath made an estate in tail. Dyer 17. num. 95. and Bract hoc titulo, and Kitchen 232. and Terms of the Law. We read also in some Civilians of affirmativa pregnans, and that is, que habet in se inclusivam negativam, & hoc importare videntur dictiones (solum & tantum) que implicant negativam. Pacianus de Probationibus, lib. 1. cap. 31. num. 16. fol. 93.

A negative pregnant is a fault in pleading; and there must be a special demurrer to a negative pregnant plea, &c. for the court will intend every pleading to be good, till the contrary doth appear. Mich. 23 Car. 1. B. R. See 2 Leon. 248. Vide Bro. Issues join. pl. 81. Heath's Max. 53. 2 Lee 199. Dighton v. Clark. Cro. Jac. 559, 560. Lee v. Lushell. 15 Vin. Abr. tit. Negative pregnant.

Negligence, Is where a person neglects or omits to do a thing which he is by law obliged to. And where one has goods of another, to keep till such a time, and hath a certain recompence or reward for the keeping, he shall stand charged for injury by negligence, &c. But if he hath nothing for keeping them, he is not bound to answer. Doct. & Stud. 269. A man who finds another's goods, if they are after hurt by wilful negligence, 'tis held he is chargeable to the owner; tho' it is otherwise when they are lost by casualty, as in case they are laid in a house that is accidentally burnt, or if he deliver them to another to keep, who runs away with them, &c. Ibid. It is held if an accountant be robbed, and it is without his default and negligence, he shall not be answerable for the money. 1 Inst. 89. A right may be lost by negligence; as where an action is not brought in the time appointed by the statute of limitations, &c. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. See 2 Williams's Rep. 665. Cowper v. Earl Cowper. Tot. 76. Kemp v. Palmer. Chan. Rep. 10. Earl of Oxford's Case. Chan. Proc. 583. Ivey v. Gilbert.

Negro, By the laws of Virginia, and the plantations in general, Negro servants are saleable; and where a Negro is sold here, in action indebitat assumpsit for the money, the declaration ought to be, that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff for the Negro sold here at London, but the said Negro at the time of sale was in Virginia, and that by the laws and statutes of Virginia, Negroes are saleable as chattels. Per Holt, Ch. Just. 2 Salk. Rep. 666. In action of trover for a Negro, and verdict and damages for the plaintiff; it was moved in arrest of judgment, that trover lay not for a Negro, for the owner had not an absolute property in him: But the court seemed to think that in trespass quare captivum suum cepit, the plaintiff might give in evidence that the party was his Negro, and he bought him. Ibid. See Stat. 13 Geo. 1. c. 9. Neif, (Fr. naif, i. e. naturalis, nativa) Was a bond woman, or the Villein, born in one's house, mentioned in the stat. 9 R. 2. c. 2. If a bond woman married a free man, she was thereby made free; and being once free, and discharged of bondage, she could not be neif after, without some special act done by her, as by divorce, confession in court, &c. And a free woman taking a villein to her husband, was not thereby bond; but their issue were villeins as their father was; tho' this is contrary to the Civil law, which says, partus sequitur ventrem. Terms de Ley. Anciently lords or manors sold, gave or assigned their bondmen and neifs, as appears by the following deed of gift. *Sciant quod ego Radulphus de C. Miles Dominus de L. Dado Domino Roberto de D. Beatricem filiam Will. H. de L. quendam nativam meam, cum tota sequela sua & omnibus catallis suis perquisitis & perquirendis & habund & censibus, pradiis & beaticem cum tota sequela sua & omnibus catallis suis & omnibus redditibus suis perquisitis & perquirendis pradiis Domino Roberto vel suis assignatis, libere, quiete, bene & in pace imperpetuum, &c. Ne injuste tenet, A writ founded on Magna Charta, c. 10. that lies for a tenant distrained by his lord, for more services than he ought to perform; and is a prohibition to the lord not to distress or vex his tenant: In a special use, it is where the tenant hath prejudiced himself, by doing greater services, or paying more rent, without constraint, than he needed; for in this case, by reason of the lord's settin, the tenant cannot avoid it by survay, but is driven to his writ for remedy. Reg. Orig. 4. F. N. B. 10. And if the lord distrains to do other services, or to pay other rent than due, after the prohibition delivered unto him, then the tenant shall have an attachment against the lord, &c. and when the lord cometh thereon, the tenant shall count against him, and put himself upon the grand assise, &c. whereupon judgment shall be given. New Nat. Br. 22. This writ is always anterior, what the tenant and his ancestors have holden of the lord and his ancestors; and the lord hath incroached any rent, &c. A feoffee shall not avoid feoffa of rent had by incroachment of his feoffor, nor have the writ Ne injuste tenet; also a man shall not have a writ of Ne injuste tenet against the grantee of the feigniory. Mich. 18 Ed. 2. 10 Ed. 3. C. 61, 80. One may be bound to the good behaviour for being a nightwalker; and common nightwalkers and haunters of bawdy-houses are to be indicted before justices of peace, &c. 1 Harol. 132. 2 Harol. 40. Latch. 173. Deph. also. But 'tis held not lawful for a constable, &c. to take up any woman, as a nightwalker, on bare suspicion only, of being of ill fame; much less be guilty of a breach of the peace, or some unlawful act, and ought to be found mistaking. Hob. 148. See 2 Hol. a night. P. C. 89. See Black. Com. 4 V. 224.

Detachable, or Detachable, or Detachable. Is the judgment given against the plaintiff in an action, either in bar of his action, or in abatement of his writ or bill, &c. Co. Lit. 364.

Detachable, or Detachable, is a common plea to an action of debt, where the money is paid: But 'tis no plea in covenant, or breach of covenant for non-payment of rent, &c. 3 Lev. 170. This action of debt be brought against a sheriff or

The statute of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 30. having ordained, "that all pleas in either bench, which require only an easy examination, shall be determined in the court before justices of assize, by virtue of the writ appointed by that statute, commonly called the writ of Wig. et. 1. 1." It has been held, that an issue joined in the King's Bench

Shedder, is the name of a writ, issuing out of Chancery, returnable in the Exchequer, given by James Wylm. 2. 23 Ed. 2. c. 36. By virtue of which Statute, where any one having right to approve waste, pollard, &c. makes and erects a ditch or an hedge, and it is thrown down in the right time, and it cannot be known by a verdict of ~~the~~ or a jury, by whom : if the neighbouring vills will not indict such as are guilty, they shall be distrained to make again the hedge or ditch at their own costs, and to answer damages. 2 Inst. 476. And the Noctanter writ thereupon is directed to the sheriff of the county, commanding him by the oath Proborum & legalium hominum com' predict' inquirer. qui malefactores pacis Dom. Regis perturbatores apud, &c. Serps & Fossata A. B. ibidem per ipsum nuper levat' Noctanter aut tali tempore quafacta eorum sciri non credebant profranger, ad dampnum pred. A. B. & contra pacem Dom. Regis, &c. And on the return of this writ by the sheriff, that the same is found by inquisition, and the jury are ignorant who did it; the return being filed in the Crown Office, there goes out a writ of inquiry of damages, and a Disfringe to the sheriff to distrain propinquas villas sepes & Kensturas pred. circumadjacentes sepes, &c. prostrat. levare ad vestis suos proprios, and also to restore the damages, &c.

The circumadjacent vills intended by the statute, are the contiguous vills round the place; and if they are not contiguous, they are not guilty, and may plead so; And when other vills near of as great value, by favour or negligence of the sheriff are not summoned, &c. they may plead as tenants do, where all are not summoned. As to the pleadings to this writ, where more damages are found than there ought to be; the defendants may by prostration deny the fact, or confess and aver that the damages were but small; and traverse that the party ~~pleaded~~ dam to the sum found, or any other sum beyond what they admit; or may plead Not guilty, and in their defence say matter which will be a bar to the prostrator, but satisfaction. 2 Lill. Abr. 277.

Here if the vills repair, damages ought not to be given to the value of the repairs; and if the vills which are liable there to have repaired, it ought to be to help them in the trial of the quantum damificatus, that the other damages ought only to be considered; Id. The charges of the defence for the several vills must be raised by agreement; and if they cannot agree, each vill is to bear their own charges, as in case of a suit against a diversed vill execution; and then the statute of 27 Edw. hath provided a remedy.

The writ of Noctanter, by the better opinion, lies for the prostration as well of all inclosures as those repaired out of Commons; but if it be not in the right, this writ will not lie: And there ought to be a commencement time (which the court is to judge of) before the writ is brought for the country to inquire of, and within the return, which Sir Edw. Coke says should be a year and a day. 2 Inst. 476. Cro. Jac. 400. 11 Feb. 1655. And if any one of the offenders be indicted, the defendants must plead it, &c.

The word Noctanter is so necessary in an indictment of burglary, that it hath been adjudged insufficient without it. Cro. Eliz. 483.

Notus & Notus de Notis. In the book of Druid day we often meet with Notus de Notis, or Notus de Notis; which is understood of an agreement of men and drink for so many nights: For in the district of the Notus Saxons, time was computed not by days, but nights; and so it continued till the reign of King Edw. 1. as appears by his laws, cap. 66, 76. And from hence it is still usual in law & Notus, i. e. before sunset for a week; and a Notus for two weeks, &c. Notus de Notis.

Notus de Notis. (Sax.) The ancient Notus de Notis is derived from the old Saxon word, Notus, de Notis, and Notus de Notis in Saxon is Notus, and Notus de Notis in Saxon is Notus. But by Notus it is said to come from the Saxon word, that is Notus; and was used for the Notus de Notis.

Notus de Notis. (Sax.) The ancient Notus de Notis is derived from the old Saxon word, Notus, de Notis, and Notus de Notis in Saxon is Notus, and Notus de Notis in Saxon is Notus. But by Notus it is said to come from the Saxon word, that is Notus; and was used for the Notus de Notis.

the plaintiff: This was held erroneous; for the plaintiff ought also to be amerced. 8 Rep. 58.

Where there are two defendants, and one pleads Not guilty, and the other another plea; if on demurrer there is judgment for the plaintiff against one on the demurrer, and a nolle prosequi for the other, there it ought to be eat sine die, or it is ill; and the entry of Quid eat sine die is a discharge to the defendant. Cro. Jac. 439. Hob. 180.

In an action brought against three persons, one of them pleads the general issue, and the others specially; the plaintiff demurs on the special plea, and tries the general issue, on which he hath a verdict and judgment; but before judgment on the demurrer he enters a nolle prosequi as to the demurrer: and it was adjudged that if the nolle prosequi had been entered before verdict and judgment, it had discharged the whole action; being in nature of a release in law to the other: So also if judgment had been against all the defendants, and the plaintiff had entered the nolle prosequi for two; for nonsuit or release, or other discharge of one, discharges the rest. Hob. 70.

But in trespass against two, one pleaded Not guilty, the other justified; and both issues being found for the plaintiff, and several damages and joint costs assessed; the plaintiff then entered a nolle prosequi against one, and took judgment against the other for damages found against him, and the costs; upon which it was insisted on for error, that the entry of a nolle prosequi before judgment as to one, is a release to him, and quasi a release to both: The Court, saying an absolute release, but as it were an agreement that the plaintiff will not proceed against the one; and as to him it is a bar, but he may proceed against the other; and where they sever by pleas, there may be proceedings against one, and a nolle prosequi against the other. Cro. Jac. 400. 243. 2 Lill. 220. It has been held, in trespass against three defendants; if a nolle prosequi were entered against two, before judgment against any of them, it had not amounted to a release to them all; only to a waiver of suit: And the three defendants cannot join in a writ of error; for those against whom the nolle prosequi is entered, are not damaged. Jenk. Cent. 309.

A nolle prosequi does not amount to a retraxit or release, where there are more defendants. Ld. Raym. 599.

If there are divers issues, or an issue and demurrer in one cause against one person, joined between the parties, the plaintiff may enter on the roll a nolle prosequi, that he will not proceed on one or more of the issues, or demurrer joined; and may notwithstanding go to trial upon the rest of the issues, or argue the demurrer. Hill. 23 Car. 2. 2.

The King may enter a nolle prosequi on an information; but it shall not stop the proceedings of the informer. Law. 119. And if an informer cause a nolle prosequi to be entered, the defendant shall have costs, &c. by stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 15. & M. c. 18. Kobbe mentions a nolle prosequi entered by attorney. 3 Kob. 332. Also the King may, by his Attorney General, enter a nolle prosequi on an indictment.

And the clerk of the Crown cannot enter a nolle prosequi on an indictment, without leave of the Attorney General. Ld. Raym. 599.

Notus de Notis. One who opens the etymologies of words, interpreted Notus de Notis by the learned Notus, Notus.

Notus de Notis. (Sax.) The ancient Notus de Notis is derived from the old Saxon word, Notus, de Notis, and Notus de Notis in Saxon is Notus, and Notus de Notis in Saxon is Notus. But by Notus it is said to come from the Saxon word, that is Notus; and was used for the Notus de Notis.

Notus de Notis. (Sax.) The ancient Notus de Notis is derived from the old Saxon word, Notus, de Notis, and Notus de Notis in Saxon is Notus, and Notus de Notis in Saxon is Notus. But by Notus it is said to come from the Saxon word, that is Notus; and was used for the Notus de Notis.

subservant to the nominator, being contrary to his dignity. Hugh's Pars. Law 76, 77. Right of nomination may be forfeited to the crown as well as presentation; where the nominator corruptly agrees to nominate within the statute of Simony, &c.

Nomina Villarum. Edw. 2. sent his letters to every sheriff in England, requiring an exact account and return into the Exchequer of the names of all the villages, and possessors thereof in every county; which being done accordingly, the returns of the sheriffs all joined together are called Nomina Villarum, still remaining in the Exchequer. Anno 9 Ed. 2.

Nomine Pene. A penalty incurred for not paying rent, &c. at the day appointed by the lease or agreement for payment thereof. 2 Lill. 221. If rent is reserved, and there is a nomine pene on the non-payment of it, and the rent be behind and unpaid, there must be an actual demand thereof made, before the grantee of the rent can distrain for it; the nomine pene being of the same nature as the rent, and issuing out of the land out of which the rent doth issue. Hob. 82; 133. And where a rent-charge was granted for years, with a nomine pene and clause of distress, if it was not paid on the day; on the rent's being behind, and the term expired, the court was moved that the grantee might distrain for the nomine pene; but it was held that he could not, because the nomine pene depended on the rent and the distress was gone for that, and by consequence for the other. 2 Nels. Abr. 1182. See stat. 8 Ann. c. 17.

When any sum nomine pene is to be forfeited for non-payment of the rent at the time, &c. the demand of the rent ought to be precisely at the day, in respect of the penalty: And debt will not lie on a nomine pene, without a demand. 7 Rep. 28. Cre. Elix. 383. Style 4. If there is a nomine pene, of such a sum for every day after rent becomes due, it has been a question whether there must be a demand for every day's nomine pene, or one demand for many days: And by the better opinion it hath been holden, that for every day there ought to be a demand; and that one will not be sufficient for the whole: But where a nomine pene of 40 s. was limited quolibet die proximo the feast-day on which the rent ought to be paid, it was adjudged that there was but one 40 s. forfeited; because the word proximo must relate to the very next day following the rent day; so likewise when the rent became due and unpaid at the next rent day after that, and so on. Palm. 207. 2 Nels. 1182. An assignee is chargeable with a nomine pene incurred after the assignment, but not before. Moor 357. 2 Lill. Abr. 221. Tho' forfeiture is mentioned to be nomine pene, on not paying of a collateral sum; it is no nomine pene, if it be not of a rent. Lutw. 1156.

Non-ability. Is an exception taken against the plaintiff in a cause, upon some just ground, why he cannot commence any suit in law; as premunire, outlawry, excommunication, &c. F. N. B. 35, 65. Vide Disability.

Pone & Decime. Payments made to the church by those who were tenants of church farms; where there was a rent or duty for things belonging to husbandry, and decime were claimed in right of the church. Formerly a ninth part of moveable goods was paid to the clergy in the death of persons in their parish, which was called maragium; and claimed on pretence of being distributed to pious uses. Blount.

Non-age. In general understanding is all the time of a person's being under the age of one and twenty; and in a special sense, where one is under fourteen, as to marriage, &c.

Non Assumpsit. A plea in personal actions, whereby a man denies any promise made, &c. See Assumpsit.

Non Assumpsit infra sex Anos. Where a defendant by virtue of the statute of Limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. pleads that he did not undertake or promise within six years before the commencement of the action: As a plea of Non accituit infra sex annos is pleaded by virtue of the same statute. This last plea is proper where the cause of action does not accrue, at the time of the promise made, as in the case of a note, payable at some time, specified, but subsequent to the date.

N. B. The commencement of the action is the actual taking out of the plaintiff's writ. And the computation is to be up to that day, tho' in vacation, and not to the test of the writ only.

Non-claim. Is an omission or neglect of one that claims not within the time limited by law, as within a year and a day, where continual claim ought to be made; or in five years after a fine levied, &c. By which a man may be barred of his right of entry. Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24. 32 H. 8. c. 33. See Claim.

Non compos mentis. Is where a person is not of sound mind, memory, and understanding. And there are four sorts of Non compos mentis. 1st, An idiot, or natural fool. 2^{dly}, A madman, or one who was of sane memory, but hath lost his understanding by sickness, accident or misfortune. 3^{dly}, A lunatick, sometimes of sane memory, at other times not so. 4^{thly}, A drunkard who deprives himself of his memory and understanding for a time. But tho' a drunken person is Non compos mentis, it shall give no privilege or benefit to him, as to acts done, &c. And his drunkenness shall not extenuate, but rather aggravate his offence, as well touching his life as his lands or goods. 1 Inst. 264. 4 Rep. 125.

A deed of feoffment, grant, &c. made by a person Non compos mentis is voidable; his heir as privy in blood, may shew the disability of his ancestor, and avoid his grants; and his executors, &c. as privies in representation may do the same, by setting forth the infirmity of the testator or intestate. 4 Rep. 126. Where a person of sane memory becomes Non compos mentis, and afterwards alienates his lands or goods; if he be found Non compos, and that he had alienated, the King may protect him, and take the profits of his lands, &c. to maintain him and his family. 4 Rep. 127. And he who hath the custody of a man of Non sane memory is accountable as bailiff to the Non compos, his executors or administrators, Ibid. A man Non compos mentis shall not lose his life for felony or murder, he cannot be guilty of murder. 3 Rep. 124. 3 Inst. 51, 54. Tho' if one who wants discretion or understanding, does any corporal hurt to, or trespass against another; he may be compelled by action to render damages. 35 H. 6. 1 Inst. 247. 1 Hawk. P. C. 2. Vide Idiot, Lunatick.

Non-conformists. The statutes, 1 Elix. and 13 Car. 2. were made for the uniformity of Common Prayer, and service in the church; and persons not conforming thereto are subject to penalties. Statute 10 Ann. c. 2. And it has been held, that a dissenting minister is not conforming to bear offices of charge, &c. in the government. 4 Mod. 273, 274. Non-conformists to be punished by imprisonment, and to submit in three months, or abjure the realm. 35 Elix. c. 1. Keeping a Non-conformist in the house after notice, subject to the penalty of ten pounds a month. 35 Elix. c. 1. Penalties on being at conventicles. 10 Car. 2. c. 4. 22 Car. 2. c. 1. Non-conformist ministers prohibited to come within five miles of a corporate town, &c. 17 Car. 2. c. 2. prohibited to teach school. 15 12 Ann. p. 2. c. 7.

The penal laws do not extend to Protestant dissenters. Protestant dissenting ministers freed from parish offices, and serving upon juries. 1 W. & M. c. 18. Penalty on disturbing their worship. 16 Dissenters permitted to qualify according to the toleration act, pending a petition. 10 Ann. c. 2. Toleration of the episcopal communion in Scotland. 10 Ann. c. 7. Penalty on magistrates being at conventicles in their habit. 5 Geo. 1. c. 4. Episcopal meeting houses in Scotland to be registered. 10 Geo. 2. c. 38. Penalty on unqualified ministers officiating in Scotland. 16 Episcopal ministers in Scotland, to be ordained by a bishop of England or Ireland. 16 23 Geo. 2. c. 33. Peers and others present at unlawful meeting houses in Scotland disqualified from voting. 10 Elix. c. 38. A form of affirmation to be taken instead of an oath by the members of the United Fraternity. 22 Geo. 2. Privileges granted to the members of the United Fraternity, who shall settle in America. Ib.

Non Culpaibilis. A plea of Not guilty to any action of trespass, or tort, or to an indictment, &c. See Non est culpaibilis.

Non damnificatus, Is a plea to an action of debt upon a bond, with condition to save the plaintiff harmless. 2 Lill. Abr. 224. If the condition of a bond be to save harmless only, Non damnificatus generally is a good plea; but if it be to discharge the plaintiff, &c. then the manner of the discharge is to be shewn. 1 Leon. 72. When one pleads a discharge, and that he saved another harmless, he ought to shew how he did it, that the court may judge thereof: Tho' a defendant may plead Non damnificatus, without shewing it: because he pleads in the negative, and then the other party shall shew damnification. Cro. Jac. 363. 2 Rep. 3, 4. March 121. It has been adjudged, where a condition of a bond is to save harmless from all suits in general, Non damnificatus may be pleaded; and if it is in a particular suit or thing, there the defendant must set forth how he hath saved harmless and discharged; but where a suit is upon a counter-bond, the plea of Non damnificatus is good. 8 W. 3. B. R. 5 Mod. 243.

Non Decimando. A custom or prescription: De Non decimando is to be discharged of all tithes, &c. See Modus Decimandi.

Non Distringendo, A writ not to distrain, used in divers cases. Table of Reg. of Writs.

Nones, (nona) of every month is, the seventh day of March, May, July, and October; and the fifth day of all the other months. By the Roman account the nones in the afore-mentioned months are the six days next following the first day, or the calends; and of others the four days next after the first, according to these verses,

*Sex Nonas Majus, October, Julius & Mars,

Tho' the last of these days is properly called Nones; for the others are reckoned backwards as distant from them, and accounted the third, fourth, or fifth nones, &c. And nones had their name from their beginning the ninth day before the ides. See Idea.

Non est Culpabilis, Or Non Cul. is the general plea to an action of trespass, whereby the defendant absolutely denies the fact charged on him by the plaintiff: Whereas in other special pleas, the defendant admits the fact to be done, but alleges some reasons why he lawfully might do it. And as the plea of Non Cul. is the general answer in actions of trespass, being actions criminal, civilly prosecuted; so it is likewise in all actions criminally followed, either at the suit of the King or any other, where the defendant denies the crime for which he is brought to trial. S. P. C. lib. 2. c. 63.

Non est factum, A plea where an action is brought upon a bond, or any other deed, and the defendant denieth that to be his deed whereon he is impleaded. Brake. In every case where a bond is void, the defendant may plead Non est factum: But when a bond is voidable only, he must shew the special matter, and conclude judgment Si assio, &c. 2 Lill. 226.

This plea is good in all cases where the bond or specialty was not executed.

Or, if it was executed, but was void ab initio: As, for default of capacity; if the obligor was a Monk, feme covert, &c. he may plead a special Non est factum.

It ought to conclude to the country; but if the plaintiff pleads over to the special matter, it will be well. 1 Salk. 274.

A special Non est factum puts the proof upon the defendant, which upon Non est factum generally, will be upon the plaintiff. Mod. Cas. 218.

If a deed is sued in a material part, by which it becomes void, the person bound by it may plead Non est factum, and give the matter in evidence; because it was not his deed at the time of the plea. 11 Rep. 27.

A bond was dated November the 10th, and so set forth in the plaintiff's declaration; the defendant pleaded Non est factum, and tho' it was found that it was not delivered till the eighteenth, the issue being upon a Non est factum, it appeared to be his deed: But it is said the defendant might have helped himself by pleading specially. Cro. Jac. 126.

The defendant pleads Quod factum prædict. was made and delivered without a date, and that the plaintiff put a date to it, and so Non est factum; this was held naught upon a demurrer, for the defendant confesses the deed, by saying factum prædict. and afterwards denies it; tho' he might have said generally, Non est factum. Cro. Eliz. 800. Where two are jointly bound in a bond, and an action is brought on it against one only, he cannot plead Non est factum, or demur in that case; but may have his plea in abatement of the writ. 5 Rep. 119. None but the party, his heirs, executors, &c. can plead Non est factum. Lutw. 662. For a stranger to the deed cannot plead a special Non est factum; but must say Nothing passed by the deed. 1 Roll. 188. See Com. Dig. 5 V. 222, 223.

Non est Inventus, The sheriff's return to a writ, when the defendant is Not to be found in his Bailiwick. And there is a return that the plaintiff Non invenit plegium, on original writs. Shep. Epit. 1129.

Nonfeasance. An offence of omission of what ought to be done; as in not coming to church, &c. which need not be alleged in any certain place; for generally speaking it is not committed any where; But nonfeasance will not make a man a trespasser, &c. 1 Hawk. 13. Hob. 251. 8 Rep. 146.

Non implacitando aliquem de Libero Tenemento sine Rege, A writ to prohibit bailiffs, &c. from distraining or impleading any man touching his freehold; without the King's writ. Reg. Orig. 171.

Non intromittendo, quando Breve Practise in Capite subdote imperatur, Was a writ directed to the justices of the Bench, or in Eyre, commanding them not to give one, who had, under colour of intitling the King to land, &c. as holding of him in capite, deceitfully obtained the writ called Practise in Capite, any benefit thereof, but to put him to his writ of right. Reg. Orig. 4. This writ having dependance on the court of Wards, since taken away, is now disused.

Nonjurors, Are persons who refuse to take the oaths to government, who are liable to certain penalties; and for a third offence to abjure the realm, by 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 1. Parsons, vicars, &c. are to take the oaths, and give their assent to the declaration 14 Car. 2. c. 4. or they shall not preach, under the penalty of 40 l. &c. Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 2. Ecclesiastical persons not taking the oaths on the revolution, were rendered incapable to hold their livings: but the King was impowered to grant such of the nonjuring clergy as he thought fit, not above twelve, an allowance out of their ecclesiastical benefices for their subsistence, not exceeding a third part. 1 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 8. Persons refusing the oaths, shall incur, forfeit, and suffer the penalties inflicted on Popish recusants, and the court of Exchequer may issue out process against their lands, &c. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 27. See the Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 55. and Oaths.

Non Spectandizando virtualia, Is a writ to justices of assize, to inquire whether the magistrates of such a town do sell virtuals in gross, or by retail; during the time of their being in office, which is contrary to an ancient statute; and to punish them if they do. Reg. Orig. 184.

Non Spectando, A writ that lies for a person who is molested contrary to the King's protection granted him. Reg. of Writs 184.

Non obstante, (Notwithstanding) Is a clause frequent in statutes and letters patent; and is a licence from the King to do a thing which at the Common law might be lawfully done; but being restrained by act of parliament, cannot be done without such licence, Vaugh. 347. Plowd. 501. It is ordained by the statutes of 2 E. 3. 14 E. 3. and 13 R. 2. that the King's pardon of notorious felonies, &c. should not be granted, altho' with the words Non obstante any statute; Yet patents of pardon of such offences, were allowed with a Non obstante, and notwithstanding any clause to defeat the same. Jenk. Cent. 308. The Stat. 18 Eliz. 1. 2. confirmed all grants of the Queen by letters patent, of any honours, castles, manors, lands, tenements, &c. and that they should stand and be good in law against the Queen, her heirs and successors, Non obstante any mis-naming, mis-recital, want of certainty, finding finding offices or inquisitions, livery of seisin, &c. By 14 Car. 2. c. 11. it was declared, that all grants of pensions, &c. and every Non obstante therein contained, should be void. And the 1 W. & M. c. 2. makes dispensations, Non obstante to statutes, void; unless allowed therein. See Dispensations and Grants of the King. And Black. Com. 1 V. 342. 2 V. 273. 4 V. 394.

Non omittas, Is a writ directed to the sheriff, where the bailiff of a liberty or franchise who hath the return of writs refuses or neglects to serve a process, for the sheriff to enter into the franchise and execute the King's process himself, or by his officer: Before this writ is granted, the sheriff ought to return, that he hath sent the bailiff, and that he hath not served the writ; but for dispatch, the usual practice is to send a Non omittas with a capias or latitat. F. N. B. 68, 74. 2 Inst. 453. If a sheriff return that he sent the process to the bailiff of a liberty, who hath given him no answer; a Non omittas shall be awarded to the sheriff: And if he returns that he sent the process to such bailiff, who hath returned a cepi corpus, or such like matter; and the bailiff bring not in the body, or money, &c. at the day, the bailiff shall be amerced, and a writ issue to the sheriff to distrain the bailiff to bring in the body. 2 Harok. 143. Writs of capias utlagatum, and of Quo minus out of the Exchequer, and it is said all writs whatsoever at the King's suit, are of the same effect as a Non omittas; and the sheriff may by virtue of them enter into a liberty and execute them. 2 Lill. Abr. 229. The Reg. of Writs mentions three sorts of this writ, which was given to prevent liberties being privileged to hinder or delay the general execution of justice: and the clause of the non omittas is, quod non omittas, propter aliquam libertatem (viz. of the liberty to which the sheriff hath made a mandavi ballivo, qui nullum dedit responsum) quin in eum ingrediari & capias A. B. Si, &c.

Non plevin, (non plevina) Is defined to be desaltam post desaltam; and in Hengham Magna, cap. 8. it is said, that the defendant is to replevy his lands seized by the King within fifteen days; and if he neglects, then at the instance of the plaintiff at the next court day, he shall lose his seisin, sicut per desaltam post desaltam: but by statute it was enacted, that none should lose his land, because of non-plevin, i. e. where the land was not replevied in due time. 9 Ed. 3. c. 2.

Non ponendis in Missis & Juratis, Is a writ granted for freeing and discharging persons from serving on assises and juries; and when one hath a charter of exemption, he may sue the sheriff for returning him. This writ is founded on the Stat. of Westm. 2. c. 38. And the Stat. Articuli Super Chartas, cap. 9. F. N. B. 165. 2 Inst.

127. 447.

Non procedendo ad Missam Rege inconsulto, A writ to stop the trial of a cause appertaining to one who is in the King's service, &c. until the King's pleasure be farther known. Reg. Orig. 220.

Non Pros, or Non Prosecutus. If a plaintiff in an action, doth not declare the defendant within reasonable time, a rule may be entered against him by the defendant's attorney to declare; and thereupon a non prof. &c. Pradis. Solic. 222. And a plaintiff may enter a non prof. against one defendant, where there are two who sever in their pleas, before the record of the cause is sent down by Nisi prius to be tried at the assises: but it is said there cannot be a non prof. on a trial at the assises. 3 Salk. 246. Tho' in action against several defendants, it has been ruled otherwise. 2 Salk. 456. Non pros have been frequent on informations; but never upon indictments, till the reign of Charles II. Ibid. See Nolle Prosequi, and Nonsuit.

Non-Residence, Is applied to those spiritual persons who are not resident, but wilfully absent themselves for the space of one month together, or two months at several times in one year, from their dignities or benefices, which is liable to penalties, by the statute against non residence. 21 H. 8. c. 13. But chaplains to the King, or other great persons, mentioned in this statute, and the 25 H. 8. c. 16. may be non-resident on their livings; for they are excused from residence whilst they attend those who retain them; and bishops are not punishable by statute for non residence; but if a bishop hold a deanery, parsonage, &c. in com-for non-residence on the same. Also where bishops are non-resident on their bishopricks, they are liable to ecclesiastical censure; and the King may issue a mandatory writ for their attendance thereon, and compel them to it by seizing their temporalities, a remarkable precedent whereof we have in the case of the bishop of Hereford, in the reign of Hen. III. 2 Inst. 625. See Residence.

Non Residentia pro Clericis Regis, Is a writ directed to the bishop, charging him not to molest a clerk, employed in the King's service, by reason of his non-residence; in which case he is to be discharged. Reg. Orig. 58.

Non sane Memory, (Non sane Memoria) Is used in law for an exception to an act, declared to be done by another, whereon the plaintiff in any action grounds his plaint; and the effect of it is, that the party who did that act, was not well in his senses when he did it, or when he made his last will and testament. New Book Entries. And sane memory for the making of a will is not always where the testator can answer Yes or No, or in some things with sense; but he ought to have judgment to discern, and be of perfect memory, or the will shall be void. Moor, c. 1051. See Non compos Mentis.

Nonsense. Where a matter set forth is grammatically right, but absurd in the sense and unintelligible, some words cannot be rejected to make sense of the rest, but must be taken as they are; for there is nothing so absurd but what by rejecting may be made sense; but where a matter is nonsense by being contradictory and repugnant to somewhat precedent, there the precedent matter which is sense shall not be defeated by the repugnancy which follows, but that which is contradictory shall be rejected; as in ejectment where the declaration is of a demise the 2d of January, and that the defendant posse, scilicet the 1st of January, ejected him; here the scilicet may be rejected as being expressly contrary to the posse, and the precedent matter; per Holt Ch. J. 1 Salk. 324. Trin. 2 Ann. B. R. Wyat v. Aland.—But per Powell J. Words unnecessary might in construction be omitted or rejected, tho' they are not repugnant or contradictory, but in caeteris omnibus agreed with the Ch. J. Ibid. See Mistake.

Non solvendo pecuniam, ad quam clericus multatur pro non residentia, Is a writ prohibiting an ordinary to take a pecuniary mulct, imposed upon a clerk of the King's for non-residency. Reg. of Writs, fol. 59.

Non-suit, (non est prosecutus, &c.) Is a renunciation of the suit by the plaintiff or defendant, most commonly, upon the discovery of some error or defect, when the matter is so far proceeded in, as the jury is ready at the bar to deliver their verdict. The Civilians term it Lists renunciationem. Cowell.

Where plaintiff is demanded and doth not appear, he is said to be nonsuit; this usually happens, where upon trial, and when the jury are ready to give their verdict, the plaintiff discovers some error or defect in the proceedings, or is unable to prove a material point, &c. and thereupon the plaintiff may be demanded, (as he must be) his default is recorded by the secondary, and the entry is in misericordia quia non prosecutus est breve suum; upon which defendant recovers his costs against him; but this arising from some supposed neglect or oversight, the plaintiff, except in some particular cases, is not barred from commencing a new action. For the form of the entry, see Cro. Jac. 213. 2 Leon. 177. 4 Mod. 86. 2 Salk. 456.

Where a plaintiff is nonsuit, if he will again proceed in the same cause, he must put in a new declaration; for by being nonsuit, it shall be intended that he had no such cause of suit as he declared in, so that declaration is void, and he hath no day in court. 2 Lit. Rep. 231. 3 Bar. Abr. 679.

1. Who may be nonsuit; in what action, and at what time there may be a nonsuit.

2. How far the nonsuit of one, shall be the nonsuit of another; and how far a nonsuit for part of the thing in demand shall be a nonsuit for the whole.

3. Of the effect of a nonsuit; and of its being a temporary bar.

1. Who may be nonsuit; in what actions, and at what time there may be a nonsuit.

It is agreed, that the King being in supposition of law always present in court, cannot be nonsuit in any information or action wherein he is sole plaintiff; but it is held, that any informer qui tam, or plaintiff in a popular action, may be nonsuit, as well in respect of the King as of himself. Bro. Nonsuit 68. Co. Lit. 139. b. 2 Roll. Abr. 131.

If an infant bring an assise by guardian, altho' the infant disavow the suit in proper person, yet no nonsuit shall be awarded. 39 Aff. pl. 1. 2 Roll. Abr. 130. S. C.

Where an executor need not name himself executor, he shall pay costs upon a nonsuit, and the naming himself executor shall not exempt him from it. 6 Mod. 181.

If an attorney of the Common Pleas sues an action there, he shall not be demanded, because he is supposed always present aiding the court. 2 H. 6. 44. b. 1 Roll. Abr. 581. S. C.

A person may be nonsuit in a writ of error. 2 Roll. Abr. 130. 1 Sid. 255. S. P.

A person may be nonsuit in a writ of false judgment. 20 H. 6. 18. b. 2 Roll. Abr. 130. S. C.

One cannot be nonsuit in an action in which he is not an actor or demandant; and tho' he afterwards becomes an actor, yet not being originally so, he cannot be nonsuit as an avowant; so of garnishees who become actors, but were not so originally. 22 Ed. 4. 10.

So if a person outlawed hath a charter of pardon, and sues a scire facias against the party, tho' hereby he is an actor, yet he cannot be nonsuit. 2 Roll. Abr. 130.

So if a man traverse an office he cannot be nonsuit, altho' he is an actor, for he hath no original pending against the King. 2 Roll. Abr. 130. Dyer 141. pl. 47. this is made a querela.

But in a petition of right against the King the plaintiff may be nonsuit. 11 H. 4. 52. 2 Roll. Abr. 130.

So in an audita querela, to avoid a statute, the plaintiff may be nonsuit, for he is plaintiff in this action. 47 Ed. 3. 5. b.

If to two nibils returned to a scire facias on a charter of pardon, the plaintiff does not appear, he shall be nonsuit; for the statute ordains, that upon his appearing, he ought to count against the defendant. 45 Ed. 3. 16.

At the Common law, upon every continuance, or day given over before judgment, the plaintiff was demandable, and upon his non-appearance might have been nonsuit. Co. Lit. 139. b. That if at Common law he did not like the damages given by the jury, he might be nonsuit. 5 Mod. 208.

But now by 2 Hen. 4. cap. 7. it is enacted in the words following: "Whereas, upon verdict found before any justice in assise of novel disseisin, mort d'ancestor, or any other action whatsoever, the parties before this time have been adjourned upon difficulty in law, upon the matter so found; it is ordained and established, that if the verdict pass against the plaintiff, the same plaintiff shall not be nonsuited."

Notwithstanding this statute, it hath been held, that the plaintiff may be nonsuited after a special verdict, or after a demurrer and argument thereon. Co. Lit. 139. 2 Jon. 1. 2 Roll. Abr. 131-2. 3 Leon. 28. and see 2 Harwk. P. C. 184.

If there be judgment to account, and auditors assigned, and thereupon a capias ad computandum, the plaintiff cannot be nonsuited on the original, because the original is determined by the judgment to account. 2 Roll. Abr. 131. See Co. Lit. 139. b.

Stat. 14 Geo. 2. cap. 17. Where issue is joined in an action at law, and the plaintiff shall neglect to bring such issue to be tried according to the course of the court; it shall be lawful for the judges on motion in open court (due notice having been given thereof) to give the like judgment for defendant as in cases of nonsuit; unless the judge shall on reasonable terms allow further time for trial of such issue; and if the plaintiff neglect to try such issue within the time allowed, then the judge shall give judgment as aforesaid.

All judgments given by virtue of the act, to be of the like effect as judgments upon nonsuit. The defendant shall upon such judgment be awarded his costs, in any action where he would upon nonsuit be intitled to the same. No indictment, information, or cause shall be tried at nisi prius before any judge of assise or nisi prius, or at the sittings in London or Westminster, where the defendant resides above 40 miles from the said cities respectively, unless notice of trial in writing has been given 10 days before. In case any party shall have given such notice of trial, and shall not afterwards duly countermand the same in writing six days before such intended trial, every such party shall be obliged to pay unto the party to whom notice was given, the like costs as if such notice had not been countermanded.

2. How far the nonsuit of one shall be the nonsuit of another; and how far a nonsuit of part of the thing in demand shall be a nonsuit of the whole.

In real or mixt actions, the nonsuit of one demandant is not the nonsuit of both; but he who makes default shall be summoned and seivered; but regularly in personal actions, the nonsuit of one is the nonsuit of both. Co. Lit. 139. 2 Inst. 563. 2 Roll. Abr. 132. Several cases to this purpose.

But in personal actions brought by executors, there shall be summons and severance, because the best shall be taken for the benefit of the dead; and so it is in action of trespass, as executors, for goods taken out of their own possession. Like law in account, as executors by the receipt of their own hands. Co. Lit. 139. a. See Executors.

In an audita querela concerning the personalty, the nonsuit of the one is not the nonsuit of the other; because it goeth by way of discharge, and freeing themselves, therefore the default of the one shall not hurt the other. Co. Lit. 139. In an audita querela, scire facias, attaint, the nonsuit of one shall not prejudice the other. 6 Co. 26.

In a quid juris clamat, the nonsuit of the one is the nonsuit of both; because the tenant cannot attorn according to the grant. Co. Lit. 139. a.

An appeal against divers, whether they plead the same or several issues, it hath been adjudged, that a nonsuit against one, at the trial of any one of the issues, is a nonsuit as to all, because a nonsuit operates in nature as a release of the whole. Cro. Eliz. 460. pl. 6. Dyer 120. 2 Roll. Abr. 133. 1 Sid. 378.

A latitavit was sued out against four defendants in trespass, the plaintiff was nonsuit for want of a declaration; and the defendant's attorney entered four nonsuits against him; and it was held to be irregular, because the trespass is joint; and tho' the plaintiff may count severally against the defendants, yet it remains joint till severed by the count. 2 Salk. 455. There is a nonsuit before appearance at the return of the writ, or after appearance at some day of continuance. Co. Lit. 138. b.

It is laid down as a general rule, that a nonsuit for part is a nonsuit for the whole; but it hath been held, that if a defendant plead to one part, and thereupon issue is joined, and demur to the other, the plaintiff may be nonsuit as to one part, and proceed for the other. 2 Leon. 177. Heb. 180.

If in debt the defendant acknowledges the action as to part, and joins issue as to the residue, and the plaintiff hath judgment for that which is confessed; but there is a cessat executio, by reason of the damages to be assessed by the jury; if the plaintiff be nonsuited in this issue, this shall be a nonsuit for the damages to be given, because that he had judgment. 2 Roll. Abr. 134.

If in trover the defendant pleads, that as to some of the goods they were fixed to his freehold, as to others that he had them of the gift of the plaintiff, and as to the rest Not guilty; and as to the first, the plaintiff enters non vult ulterius persequi; this amounts only to a retrahit, and is no nonsuit, so as to bar the plaintiff from proceeding on the other parts of the plea, on the rule, that a non-suit for part is a nonsuit for the whole. 2 Leon. 177. Sir John Sands v. Pascal Brocas.

3. Of the effect of a nonsuit; and of its being a temporary bar.

A nonsuit, as hath been observed, is regularly no peremptory bar; but the plaintiff may, notwithstanding, commence any new action of the same or like nature; but this general rule hath the following exceptions.

1. It is peremptory in a quare impedit; and in that action a discontinuance is also peremptory; and the reason is, for that the defendant had, by judgment of the court, a writ to the bishop; and the incumbent, that cometh in by that writ, shall never be removed; which is a flat bar to that presentation.

2. Nonsuit in an appeal of murder, rape, robbery, &c. after appearance, is peremptory, and this in favorem vite; but the nonsuit of the plaintiff in an appeal is not such an acquittal, on which the defendant shall recover damages against the abettors, by Westm. 2. cap. 12. unless, after the nonsuit, he were arraigned at the King's suit upon the appeal, and acquitted.

3. So if the plaintiff, in an appeal of mayhem, be nonsuit after appearance, it is peremptory; for the words therein are felonice mayhemavit.

4. A nonsuit after appearance is also peremptory in a nativo habendo, and the nonsuit of one plaintiff in that action nonsuits both in favorem libertatis; for in a libertate probanda such nonsuit is not peremptory, neither is the nonsuit of one plaintiff the nonsuit of both. Co. Lit. 139. a. Cro. Eliz. 881.

5. Such nonsuit is also peremptory in an attain, but a discontinuance in an attain is not; because there is a judgment given upon the nonsuit, but not upon the discontinuance. Co. Lit. 139. a.

Non sum informatus, Is a formal answer made of course by an attorney, who is not instructed or informed to say any thing material in defence of his client; by which he is deemed to leave it undefended, and so judgment passeth against his client. New Book Entries.

Non-tenure, Is a plea in bar to a real action, by saying, that he (the defendant) holdeth not the land mentioned in the plaintiff's count or declaration, or at least some part thereof. 25 E. 3. c. 16. 1 Mod. Rep. 250. And our books mention non-tenure general and special: general, where one denies ever to have been tenant of the land in question; and special is an exception, alledging that he was not tenant the day whereon the writ was purchased. West. Symb. par. 2. When the tenant or defendant pleads non-tenure of the whole, he need not say who is tenant; but if he pleads non-tenure as to part, he must set forth who is the tenant. 1 Mod. 181. Non-tenure in part, or in the whole is not pleadable after impleurment. 3 Lev. 55.

Non-term, (non terminus) Is the vacation between term and term; formerly called the time or days of the King's peace. Lamb. Archb. 126.

Non-user, Of offices concerning the publick, is cause of forfeiture. 9 Rep. 50. And if one have a franchise, and do not use it, he shall forfeit the same; which likewise may be lost by default, as well as non-user. Stat. 3 Ed. 2. c. 9. See Office.

Notary, (Notarius) Is a person (usually a scrivener) who takes notes, or makes a short draught of contracts, obligations, or other writings and instruments. Stat. 27 Ed. 3. c. 1. At this time we call him a notary publick, who publickly attests deeds or writings, to make them authentick in another country; but principally in business relating to merchants: they make protests of foreign bills of exchange, &c. And noting a bill is the notary's going as a witness, to take notice of a merchant's refusal to accept or pay the same. Merch. Dict.

Note of a fine, Is a brief of the fine made by the chirographer, before it is engrossed. West Symb. par. 2.

Notes promissory, For payment of money. See Bill of Exchange.

Not guilty, Is the general issue or plea of the defendant in any criminal action: and Not guilty is a good issue in actions of trespass on the case, and upon the case for deceits or wrongs; but not on a promise, &c. Palm. 393. If one hath cause of justification in trespass, and pleads Not guilty; he cannot give the special matter in evidence, but must confess the fact, and plead the special matter, &c. 5 Rep. 119. Vide Non est Culpabilis.

Notice, Is the making something known; that a man was or might be ignorant of before. And it produces divers effects; for by it the party who gives the same, shall have some benefit which otherwise he should not have had: By this means, the party to whom the notice is given, is made subject to some action or charge, that otherwise he had not been liable to; and his estate in danger of prejudice. Co. Litt. 309. Notice is required to be given in many cases by law, to justify proceedings where any thing is to be done or demanded, &c. But none is bound by law to give notice to another person of that which such other may otherwise inform himself, 22 Car. B. R. If one be bound by an assumpsit generally to do a thing to another, he to whom the promise is made must give notice when he will have him do it; but if he promise that another person shall do it, there he to whom the thing is to be done is not obliged to give notice to that third person when he will have it done, but the party must procure it at his peril; for he may not know that other person, and there is no privity of contract between them two, as there is betwixt the other two. 2 Lill. Abr. 239. And in case of a promise, it has been adjudged, that where a penalty is to be recovered, notice is requisite; but it is not so where damages are to be recovered; in which case the party hath sufficient notice by the action brought. 1 Bull. 12. If a person promise to pay so much to another at his day of marriage; the party at his peril is to take notice of the marriage. Cro. Car. 34, 35. And it is a necessary intendment, that when after the marriage the plaintiff requested payment of the money, that notice was given of the marriage. Cro. Jac. 228.

It was held, that if a collateral thing is to be done at or after marriage, there notice is to be given of it; tho' when money is to be paid, it is a debt due to the party by the the marriage, and may be recovered without any notice given. 2 Bulst. 254. Notice must be given to an heir at law of a condition annexed to his estate; or he is not bound to take notice of the condition. 1 Lutw. 809. 4 Rep. 82. 3 Mod. 28. Yet it is said, that the heir is bound to take notice of a proviso in a feoffment; and this difference has been taken, that where notice is required to be given by the original deed or agreement, it is hereditary, and descends to the heir; but if it is collateral to the father, it shall not bind his heir, without express notice. Winch 108. 2 Nely. Abr. 1186.

A man who is a stranger to a deed, that hath an estate by way of remainder, &c. shall not forfeit or determine his estate by virtue of any proviso in such deed, unless he hath notice of it. 8 Rep. 92. The feoffee of land, or bargainee of a reversion, shall not take advantage of a condition, for non-payment of rent reserved upon a lease, on demand made by them, without notice thereof given to the lessee. 9 Rep. 31. If a manor be conveyed or granted away, by deed of bargain and sale, &c. to another; the present lord must give notice of it to the copyholder, otherwise if he deny to pay his rent, it will be no forfeiture. 5 Rep. 13. And copyholders shall not forfeit their estates for not appearing at the lord's court, if they have no notice of the court, &c. 1 Leon. 104.

In a covenant to make assurance generally, notice must be given to the party to know what estate he would have made to him. Style 61. Where one is bound to another to make such an assurance as A. B. shall advise, the obligor is bound to make the assurance, without notice that A. B. had advised it; but if he had been bound to make such assurance as the counsel of the obligee should advise, notice ought to be given to the obligor, that the counsel of the obligee had advised it. 1 Leon. 105.

If I am bound to enfeoff such persons as the obligee should name, he is to give notice of those which he names, or I am not bound to enfeoff them. 2 Danv. Abr. 105. And if the condition of an obligation be to account before such auditors as the obligee shall assign, and the obligee assigns auditors; he is to give notice thereof to the obligor, or he will not be bound to account. Ibid. Notice is not to be given so strictly upon a covenant, as upon a bond; which is on the point of forfeiture. Cro. Jac. 391. If the agreement be, that a person shall pay so much as A. B. hath paid, the defendant is to inquire of him, and the plaintiff is not bound to give notice: but if the person or thing is altogether uncertain, the plaintiff to intitle himself to an action, must give notice. Cro. Jac. 432, 433.

If an act is to be done by a stranger, and not by the plaintiff, the cognisance thereof lies as well in the notice of the defendant as of the plaintiff; therefore the plaintiff need not lay a notice. Cro. Jac. 492. Cro. Car. 132. If a thing lies in the knowledge of the plaintiff, there ought to be notice given to the defendant. March 156. 4 Mod. 230. And when one may take notice, and not the other; notice is necessary. Latch. 15. It has been holden, that a defendant having undertaken to do a thing, undertakes to do all circumstances incident to the doing it, and that without notice; but if he had been ignorant of the thing to be done, then notice must be given. 2 Bulst. 143.

If one make a lease for years, with covenant that if the lessee, his executors and assigns, do not repair within six months after notice given, the lease to be void; and the lessee makes a lease for part of his term to another, and then the house is decayed, in this case the notice is to be given to the first lessee in person, and not to the under-tenant. 2 Cro. 9, 10.

A notice may not be pleaded to be given to executors, without averring the death of the testator. Hob. 93. In all writs of enquiry of damages, as well in real as personal actions, notice must be given to the other party to the suit. March Rep. 82. Want of notice, upon various occasions, has been often the cause of arrest of judgment in actions, &c.

Notice is to be given of trials and motions; of a robbery committed, to recover against the hundred; of a prior mortgage, on making a second; of an assignment of a lease, to charge the assignee, only on acceptance of rent; in cases of distress for rent, according to the statute; and of avoidances of churches, by resignation, deprivation, &c. to the patron that he may present, &c.

Novellæ. Those constitutions of the Civil law, which were made, after the publication of the Theodosian code, were called novellæ, by the Emperors, who ordained them: but some writers call the Julian edition only, by that name. Blount, and Black. Com. 1 V. 81.

Noyles. No persons shall put any flocks, noyles, thrums, &c. or other deceivable thing, into any broad woollen cloth; by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 18.

Nuces colligere, To gather hazle nuts, which was formerly one of the works, or services, imposed by lords upon their inferior tenants. Paroch. Antig. 495.

Nude contract, (nudum pactum) Is a bare naked contract, without a consideration. If a man bargains or sells goods, &c. and there is no recompence made or given for the doing thereof; as if one say to another, I sell you all my lands or goods, but nothing is agreed upon what the other shall give or pay for the same, so that there is not a quid pro quo of one thing for another; this is a nude contract, and void in law, and for the non-performance thereof, no action will lie; ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. Terms de Ley. The law supposes error in making these contracts; they being as it were of one side only.

Nude Matter, Is naked matter, or a bare allegation of a thing done, &c. Vide Matter.

Nudum pactum. See Nude Contract, and Black. Com. 2 V. 445.

Nul disseisin, plea of Is a plea in real actions, of no disseisin, and is one species of the general issue. See Black. Com. 2 V. App. xviii. 3 V. 305.

Nul tiel Record, Is the plea of a plaintiff that there is no such record, on the defendant's alledging matter of record in bar of the plaintiff's action. See Failure of Record. 'Tis sometimes the plea of a defendant, as in action on a judgment, &c.

Nul tort, plea of, A plea in a real action, i. e. of no wrong done, and is a species of the general issue. 3 V. 305.

Nullum Arbitrium, The usual plea of the defendant prosecuted on an arbitration bond, for not abiding by an award.

Nullity, Is where a thing is null and void, or of no force. Litt. Dig. And there is a nullity of marriage, where persons marry within the prohibited degrees, &c.

Numerum. Civitas Cant. Reddit 241. ad numerum, i. e. by number or tale, as we call it. Domesday.

Nummata, Signifies the price of any thing, generally by money; as denariata doth the price of a thing, by computation of pence; and librata by computation of pounds.

Nummata terræ, Is the same with denariatus terræ, and thought to contain an acre; Sciatus me (sc. Will. Longospee) decessit & concessit ecclesie S. Marie de Walsingham & canonicis ibidem Deo servientibus in perpetuum Eleemosynam 40 Nummatis terræ in Walsingham, quæ fuit archiepiscopi & Bruns fratris ejus de socca Wintoniæ, libere, quiete quiete & honorifice absque omni servitio & omni consuetudine. Spelman.

Nummus, A piece of money or coin among the Romans; and it is a penny according to Matt. Westm. sub Ann. 1095.

Nun, (nonna) A consecrated virgin or woman who by vow hath bound herself to a single and chaste life, in some place or company of other women, separated from the world, and devoted to the service of God by prayer, fasting, and such like holy exercises: it is an Egyptian word, as we are told by St. Hierome.

Nuncius, A nuncio, or messenger, servant, &c. And the Pope's nuncio is legatus pontificis.

Nuncupative Will, (Testamentum Nuncupatum) Is a will by word of mouth; it is a verbal declaration of the testator's mind before a sufficient number of witnesses; which being reduced into writing either before or after the death of the testator, is good to dispose of his personal estate, but not his lands. 2 Nels. Abr. 1191. Before the 29 Car. 2. c. 3. it was necessary not only to put a nuncupative will in writing, but to prove it likewise by witnesses in the spiritual court, and to have it under the seal of the ordinary; until which it hath been decreed in equity, that such will was not pleadable against an administrator. 1 Chanc. Rep. 122. And by that statute, no nuncupative will shall be good, wherein the estate bequeathed exceeds 30*l.* unless proved by three witnesses who were present at the making thereof, and bid by the testator to bear witness; nor except it be made in the time of the last sickness of the deceased, and in his house, or where he hath been resident for ten days before, unless surprized with sickness from home: and no evidence shall be received to prove such will, after six months after speaking of the testamentary words; if the same or the substance of it, be not committed to writing within six days after the making. Nor shall any probate of such nuncupative will pass the seals till fourteen days after the death of the testator; and until process hath issued to call in the widow or next of kin to the deceased, to contest it, if they think fit. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. And by the same act, no will in writing concerning personal estate, shall be repealed by any words or will by word of mouth, except the same be put into writing in the life-time of the testator, and read to and approved of by him, and proved to be so done by three witnesses, &c. All witnesses who are allowed to be good witnesses upon trials at law, shall be good witnesses to prove any nuncupative will, by Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. s. 14. See Black. Com. 2 V. 500.

Nuper obiit, Is a writ that lies for a sister and coheir, deforced by her coparcener of lands or tenements, whereof their father, brother, or any other common ancestor, died seised of an estate in fee-simple; for if one sister deforce another of land held in fee-tail, her sister and coheir shall have a formedon against her, &c. and not a nuper obiit; and where the ancestor being once seised, died not seised of the possession, but the reversion, in such a case a writ of rationabili parte lies. Reg. Orig. 226. F. N. B. 197. Terms de Ley. If one coparcener be deforced by another, and a stranger, she shall have a nuper obiit against her coparcener: and if two coparceners after the death of their ancestor enter and deforce a third sister, and afterwards they make partition betwixt them, and then one of the two aliens her part to a stranger in fee; yet the third shall have the writ nuper obiit against her two sisters, notwithstanding that alienation, and shall recover the third part of what the coparcener who did not alienate was seised, &c. And may sue an assise of mordantessor, or writ of ail, as the case is, in the name of the other coparcener, to recover her third part in the hands of the stranger. New Nat. Br. 437, 438. A nuper obiit ought to be brought by that coparcener who is deforced, against all the other coparceners; and altho' some of them have nothing in the tenancy. Ibid. And this writ lieth between sisters of the half blood; and likewise between coheirs in gavelkind, as well as between women parceners, &c. But qu. if an ejectment will not answer the purpose?

Nurture, Guardian for. There are guardians to infants, for nurture, which are, of course, the father or mother, 'till the infant attains the age of fourteen years; and in default of father or mother, the ordinary usually assigns some proper person. Co. Lit. 88. Moor 738. 3

Nuisance, (nocumentum, from the Fr. nuire, i. e. nocere) Particularly so called, is where one makes any encroachment on the King's lands, or the highways, common rivers, &c. 2 Inst. 272. If a man doth any thing upon his own ground, to the particular damage of his neighbour, &c. it is accounted a nuisance: and nuisance signifies not only a thing done to the annoyance of another, in his lands or tenements; but the assise or writ lying for the same. F. N. D. 183.

Nuances are publick and common, or private: a common nuisance is defined to be an offence against the publick, either by doing a thing which tends to the annoying of all the King's subjects, and is common against all; or by neglecting to do any thing which the common good requires. 2 Roll. Abr. 83. And annoyances in highways, as where a gate, hedge, &c. or ditches are made therein; of bridges and publick rivers, disorderly alehouses, bawdy-houses, gaming-houses, stages for rope-dancers, mountebanks, &c. brewing-houses erected in places not convenient; cottages with inmates; common scolds, evesdroppers, &c. are generally common nuisances. 2 Inst. 406.

If a man stops up the light of another's house; or builds so near to and hanging over mine, that the rain which falleth from his house, falls upon mine; the turning or diverting water, running to a man's house, mill, meadow, &c. or stopping up a way, leading from houses to lands; suffering the next house to decay to the damage of my house; and setting up or making a house of office, lincepit, dye-house, tan-house or butcher's shop, &c. and using them so near my house, that the smell annoys me, or is infectious; or if they hurt my lands or trees, or the corruption of the water of lime-pits spoils my water or destroys fish in a river, &c. These are in general private nuisances. 3 Inst. 231. 9 Rep. 54. 5 Rep. 101. 1 Roll. Abr. 88. 2 Roll. 140. 1 Danv. Abr. 173.

For a common nuisance, indictment lies at the suit of the King; and the party shall be fined and imprisoned, &c. No action lieth in this case, because if one man might have an action, all men may have alike; and the indictment must be ad commune nocumentum omnium ligearum, &c. 5 Rep. 73. 1 Inst. 56. 1 Vent. 208. But tho' action may not be brought for a common nuisance, but indictment or presentment; yet where the inhabitants of a town had by custom a watering place for their cattle which was stopped by another, it has been held, that any inhabitant might have an action against him, otherwise they would be without remedy; because such a nuisance is not common to all the King's subjects, and presentable in the leet, or to be redressed by presentment or indictment in the quarter-sessions. 5 Rep. 73. 9 Rep. 103.

And if any one person hath more particular damage by a common nuisance than another; as if by reason of a pit dug in a highway, a man for whose life I held lands is drowned; or my servant falling into it receives injury, whereby I lose his service, &c. for this special damage, which is not common to other persons, action lies. 5 Rep. 73. 4 Rep. 18. Cro. Car. 446. Vaugh. 341. 4 Bull. 344.

For private nuisances, action on the case lieth, or assise of nuisance by the party grieved; and on action for a private nuisance, if the plaintiff hath a verdict he shall recover damages for the injury sustained. 1 Roll. Abr. 391. 1 Vent. 208.

There is a difference between an assise for a nuisance, and an action on the case; for the first is to abate the nuisance, but the last is not to abate it, but to recover damages: therefore if the nuisance be removed, the plaintiff is intitled to his damages which accrued before; and tho' it is laid with a continuando for a longer time than the plaintiff can prove, he shall have damages for what he can prove, before the nuisance was removed. 2 Mod. 253.

A man may have an action for a nuisance, or he may abate or demolish the same; but if he destroy the nuisance himself, before he bring his action, he may not afterwards have an action for the wrong, nor recover any damages. 9 Rep. 55. F. N. B. 185. 2 Roll. Abr. 745. Sed qu. for the party's right of action attached before removal.

It is said both of a common and private nuisance, that they may be abated or removed by those who are prejudiced by them; and they need not stay to prosecute for their removal. 2 Lill. Abr. 244. Wood's Inst. 443. And it has been adjudged, that every person may remove a nuisance; and that the cutting a gate set across an highway is lawful. Cro. Car. 184, 185. Also if a house be on the highway, or a house hang over the ground of another, they may be pulled down; but no man can justify the doing more damage than is necessary, or removing the materials farther than requisite. 1 Hawk. 199.

A man builds a house so near mine that it is a nuisance; I may enter and pull it down; and a man indicted for a riot in such a case had only a small fine set on him. 2 Salk. 459. Where two houses, one whereof is a nuisance to the other, come both into one and the same hand, the wrong is purged. See Hob. 131. If a ship be sunk in a port or haven, and it is not removed by the owner, he may be indicted for it as a common nuisance, because it is prejudicial to the commonwealth in hindering navigation and trade. 2 Lill. 244.

Indictment lies for laying logs, &c. in the stream of a publick navigable river: it is a common nuisance to divert part of a publick navigable river whereby the current is weakened, and made unable to carry vessels of the same burden it could before: And if a river be stopped to the nuisance of the country, and none appear bound by prescription to cleanse it; those who have the piscary, and the neighbouring towns that have a common passage and easement therein, may be compelled to do the same. 1 Hawk. P. C. 198, 199, 200.

It is a common nuisance indictable, to divide a house in a town for poor people to inhabit in, by reason whereof it will be more dangerous in the time of sickness and infection of the plague. 2 Roll. Abr. 139. A common play-house, if it draws together such numbers of coaches and people as incommode and disturb the neighbourhood, may be a nuisance; but these places are not naturally nuisances, but become so by accident. 1 Roll. Rep. 102. 1 Hawk. 191.

A prohibitory writ was issued out of B. R. against Betterton and other actors, for erecting a new play-house in Little Lincoln's Inn Fields, reciting that it was a nuisance to the neighbourhood; and they not obeying the writ, an attachment was granted against them: but it was objected that an attachment could not be issued, and that the most proper method was to proceed by indictment, and then the jury would consider whether it were a nuisance or not; and this was the better opinion. 5 Mod. 142. 2 Nels. Abr. 1192.

One Hall having begun to build a booth near Charing-Cross for rope-dancing, which drew together many idle people, was ordered by the Lord Chief Justice not to proceed; he proceeded notwithstanding, affirming that he had the King's warrant and promise to bear him harmless; but being required to give a recognisance of 300 l. that he would not go on with the building, and he refusing, he was committed, and a record was made of this nuisance, as upon the judge's own view, and a writ issued to the sheriff of Middlesex to prostrate it. 1 Vent. 169. 1 Mod. 96.

Erecting a dove-cote is not a common nuisance; tho' action of the case will lie at the suit of the lord of the manor for erecting it without his licence. 1 Hawk. 199. It was antiently held, that if a man erected a dove-cote, he was punishable at the leet: but it has been since adjudged not to be punishable in the leet as a common nuisance, but that the lord for this particular nuisance should have an action on the case, or an assise of nuisance; as he may for building an house to the nuisance of his mill. 5 Rep. 104. 3 Salk. 248. Neither the King, nor lord of a manor, may licence any man to make or commit a nuisance. 1 Roll. Abr. 138.

A brewhouse erected in such an inconvenient place, wherein the business cannot be carried on without incommodeing the neighbourhood; may be indicted as a common nuisance; and so in the like case may a glass-house, &c. 1 Hawk. 199. Where there hath been an ancient brewhouse time out of mind, altho' in Fleet-street, &c. this is not any nuisance, because it shall be supposed to be erected when there were no buildings near: tho' if a brewhouse should be now built in any of the high streets of London, or trading places, it will be a nuisance, and action on the case lies for whomsoever receives any damage thereby; and accordingly in an action brought against a brewer in the last case, where a person's goods were injured in his shop; the jury gave the plaintiff for two years damages, sixty pounds. 2 Lill. Abr. 246. Palm. 536.

A plaintiff was possessed of an house wherein he dwelled, and the defendant built a brewhouse, &c. in which he burnt coal so near the house, that by the stink and smook he could not dwell there without danger of his health; and it was adjudged that the action lay, tho' a brewhouse is necessary, and so is burning coal in it. Hutton 135. If a person melt lead so near the close of another, that it injures his grass there, whereby cattle are lost; notwithstanding this is a lawful trade, and for the benefit of the nation, action lies against him; for he ought to use his trade in waste places, so as no damage may happen to the proprietors of the land adjoining. 2 Roll. Abr. 140.

Building a smith's forge near a man's house, and making a noise with hammers, so that he could not sleep, was held a nuisance, for which action lies; altho' the smith pleaded that he and his servants worked at seasonable times; that he had been a blacksmith, and used the trade above twenty years in that place, and set up his forge in an old room, &c. For tho' a smith is a necessary trade, and so is a lime-burner, and a hog-merchant; yet these trades must be used not to be injurious to the neighbours. 1 Lutw. 69.

But if a schoolmaster keeps a school so near the study of a lawyer by profession, that it is a disturbance to him; this is not a nuisance for which action may be brought. Wood's Inst. 538. An inn-keeper brought an action on the case against a person for erecting a tallow furnace, and melting stinking tallow so near his house that it annoyed his guests, and his family became unhealthy; and adjudged that the action lay. Cro. Car. 367. So where a person kept a hogsty near a man's parlour, whereby he lost the benefit of it. 2 Roll. Abr. 140.

Yet 'tis said to be no nuisance to a neighbourhood, for a butcher, or chandler, to set up their trades in houses amongst them: but it may be by such tradesmen, laying stinking heaps at their doors; in other cases the necessity of the thing shall dispense with the noisomeness of it. Pasch. 5 Jac. 1. B. R. If a man have a spout falling down from his house, and another person erect any thing above it, that the water cannot fall as it did, but is forced into the house of the plaintiff, and rots the timber; it is a nuisance actionable. 18 E. 3. 2 Roll. Abr. 140. And in trespass for a nuisance, in causing stinking water in the defendant's yard to run to the walls of the plaintiff's house, and piercing them so that it ran into his cellar, &c. judgment was given for the plaintiff. Hard. 60.

An action lies for hindring the wholesome air, and also for corrupting the air. 9 Rep. 58. And none shall cast any garbage, dung, or filth into ditches, waters, or other places, within or near any city or town, on pain of punishment by the Lord Chancellor at discretion, as a nuisance. Stat. 12 R. 2. c. 13. Sed qu. if this is not obsolete and illegal?

The continuation of a nuisance is, as it were, a new nuisance: Where a nuisance is erected in the time of the devisor, and continued afterwards by the devisee, it is as the new erecting of such a nuisance. 2 Leon. 129. Cro. Car. 231. If one hath freehold land adjoining to the highway, and he incroach part of the way, and lay lands to it; and then dying it comes to his heir, if he continues it, tho' he do nothing else, he may be indicted for the continuance of the nuisance. Roll. Abr. 137. A man erects a nuisance, and then lets it; the continuance by the lessee has been held a nuisance, and that action lies against him. Cro. Jac. 373. Moor 353. But it is said in another case of this nature, that admitting the plaintiff might have an assise of nuisance against the builder, the lessor, he cannot have an action against his lessee, because it would be waste in him to pull it down; but the plaintiff may abate the nuisance standing on his own ground; yet where the thing done is a nuisance per intervalla, as a pipe or gutter, action lies lies against the lessee, because every running is a fresh nuſance; and if a man have a way over the ground of another, and ſuch other ſtops that way, and then demises the ground, an action lies againſt the leſſee for continuing this nuſance. 1 Mod. 54. 3 Salk. 248.

If a perſon assigns his leaſe with a nuſance, action lies againſt him for continuing it, becauſe the leaſe was transferred with the original wrong, and his assignment confirms the continuance; beſides he hath a rent as conſideration for the continuance, therefore he ought to anſwer the damages occaſioned by it. 2 Salk. 460. 2 Cro. 272, 555. If a nuſance is levied in an houſe, &c. to the prejudice of another, and then the houſe is aliened; action of the caſe lies againſt him that levied it, and alſo againſt the alienee for continuing it, by ſtat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 24.

If a fair or market be ſet up to the nuſance of another, the party grieved may have his writ or action. F. N. B. 187. 2 Saund. 173. Lutw. 69, 91. And no ſpecial nuſance need be assigned, when a matter appears to the court to be a nuſance. 9 Rep. 54. A nuſance in a churchyard, is properly of eccleſiaſtical cogniſance. Cartbrow 152. If a man ſtraiten a way only, and do not ſtop it up, action of the caſe lieth, not aſſiſe of nuſance. 33 H. 6. c. 26. But for ſtopping ſuch way belonging to a freehold tenement, an aſſiſe will lie; and where one may have aſſiſe of nuſance for an injury to his way, there he ſhall not have action of treſpaſs. 19 H. 6. 29. 2 Shep. Abr. 468.

When a man hath but a term of years in a houſe or lands, and not a freehold, he ſhall not have an aſſiſe of nuſance; but action upon the caſe. New Nat. Br. 10. Writs of nuſance, called vicintiel, are to be made at the election of the plaintiff, determinable before the juſtices of either bench, or the juſtices of aſſiſe of the county, being in nature of aſſiſes, &c. 6 R. 2. c. 3. Making great noiſes in the night; a nuſance indictable. 1 Strange 704. Keeping gunpowder in great quantities a nuſance. 2 Strange 1167. See Higbway.

Tho' in the preceding head, an aſſiſe of nuſance is often mentioned, yet that mode of proceeding is now grown obſolete. The method is, if it is a nuſance to many to indict, if any individual ſuſtains a peculiar injury, an action on the caſe lies, to recover an adequate ſatisfaction in damages.

O.

O Is an adverb of calling; or interjection of ſorrow: And the ſeven Antiphones, or alternate hymn of ſeven verſes, &c. ſung by the choir in the time of Advent was called O, from beginning with ſuch exclamation. In the ſtatutes of St. Paul's church in London, there is one chapter, De faciendO O. Liber. Statut. MS f. 86.

Oath, (Sax. Eotb. Lat. Juramentum) Is an affirmation or denial of any thing, before one or more perſons who have authority to adminiſter the ſame, for the diſcovery and advancement of truth and right, calling God to witneſs, that the teſtimony is true; therefore it is termed Sacramentum, a holy band or tie: it is called a corporal oath, becauſe the witneſs when he ſwears lays his right-hand on the Holy Evangelists, or New Teſtament. 3 Inſt. 165.

There are ſeveral ſorts of oaths in our law, viz. Juramentum promiſſionis, where oath is made either to do, or not to do, ſuch a thing. Juramentum purgationis, when a perſon is charged with any matter by bill in Chancery, &c. Juramentum probationis, where any one is produced as a witneſs, to prove, or diſprove a thing: And Juramentum trialionis, when any perſons are ſworn to try an iſſue, &c. 2 Nelf. 1181.

All oaths muſt be lawful, allowed by the Common law, or ſome ſtatute; if they are adminiſtered by perſons in a private capacity, or not duly authorized, they are coram non judice, and void; and thoſe adminiſtring them are guilty of a high contempt, for doing it without warrant of law, and puniſhable by fine and imprisonment. 3 Inſt. 165. 4 Inſt. 278. 2 Roll. Abr. 257.

One who was to teſtify on behalf of a felon, or perſon indicted of treaſon, or other capital offence, upon an indictment at the King's ſuit, could not formerly be examined on his oath for the priſoner againſt the King; tho' he might be examined without oath: but by a late ſtatute, witneſſes on behalf of the priſoner upon indictments, are to be ſworn to depoſe the truth in ſuch manner as witneſſes for the King; and if convicted of wilful perjury, ſhall ſuffer the puniſhment inflicted for ſuch offences. 1 Ann. c. 9. And the evidence for the defendant in an appeal, whether capital or not, or on indictment or information for a miſdemeanor, was to be on oath before this ſtatute. 2 Hawk. P. C. 434.

A perſon who is to be a witneſs in a cauſe may have two oaths given him, one to ſpeak the truth to ſuch things as the court ſhall aſk him concerning himſelf, or other things which are not evidence in the cauſe; the other to give teſtimony in the cauſe in which he is produced as a witneſs: the former is called the oath upon a voyer dire. Paſch. 23 Car. B. R.

If oath be made againſt oath in a cauſe, it is a non liquet to the court which oath is true; and in ſuch caſe the court will take that oath to be true, which is to affirm a verdict, judgment, &c. as it tends to the expediting of juſtice. 2 Lill. Abr. 247. And the court will rather believe the oath of the plaintiff, than the oath of the defendant, if there be oath againſt oath; becauſe it is ſuppoſed that the plaintiff hath wrong done him, and was forced to ſly to the law to maintain his right. Ibid.

A voluntary oath, by conſent and agreement of the parties, is lawful as well as a compulſory oath; and in ſuch caſe, if it is to do a ſpiritual thing, and the party fail, he is ſuable in the eccleſiaſtical court, pro leſione fidei; if to do a temporal thing, and he fail therein; he may be puniſhed in B. R. Adjudged on affumpſit, where if the defendant would make oath before ſuch a perſon, the plaintiff promiſed, &c. Cro. Car. 486. 3 Salk. 248.

By the Common law, officers of juſtice are bound to take an oath for the due execution of juſtice. Trim. 22 Car. 1. B. R. Tho' if promiſſory oaths of officers are broken, they are not puniſhed as perjuries, like unto the breach of aſſertory oaths; but their offences ought to be puniſhed with a ſevere fine, &c. Wood's Inſt. 412. Anci- ciently at the end of a legal oath, was added, So help me God at his holy dome, i. e. judgment; and our anceſtors did believe, that a man could not be ſo wicked to call God to witneſs any thing which was not true; but that if any one ſhould be perjured, he muſt continually expect that God would be the revenger: And thence probably purgations of criminals, by their own oaths, and for great offences by the oaths of others, were allowed. Malmſb. lib. 2. c. 6. Leg. H. 1. c. 64.

Oaths to the Government. By Magna Charta, the oaths of the King, the biſhops, the King's counſellors, ſheriffs, mayors, bailiffs, &c. were appointed, 9 H. 3. The oaths of the judges of both benches; and of the clerks in Chancery and the cuſtitors, were ordained by 18 Ed. 3. ſt. 4. and ſee 14 E. 3. ſt. 1. c. 5. And officers of the lieutenantancy and militia are required to take the oaths by 13 Car. 2. c. 6. All perſons that bear any office, civil or military, or receive any ſalary, &c. from the King, are to take the oaths of allegiance and ſupremacy; and perſons reſuſing are the disabled, &c. 25 Car. 2. c. 2. By the 1 W. & M. Sess. 1. c. 6. the coronation oath was altered and regulated; and the oaths of allegiance and supremacy abrogated, and others appointed to be taken and enforced, on pain of disability, &c. by 1 W. & M. c. 8. and 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 27. All that bear offices in the government, peers and members of the House of Commons, ecclesiastical persons, members of colleges, school-masters, preachers, serjeants at law, counsellors, attorneys, solicitors, advocates, proctors, &c. are enjoined to take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy and abjuration; and persons neglecting or refusing, are declared incapable to execute their offices and employments, disabled to sue in law or equity, to be guardian, executor, &c. or to receive any legacy or deed of gift, to be in any office, &c. and to forfeit 50*l*. This extends not to constables, and other parish officers, nor to bailiffs of manors, &c. 13 W. 3. c. 6. The Stat. 1 Ann. c. 22. obliges the receiving the abjuration oath, with alterations: And by 4 Ann. c. 8. the oath of abjuration is settled after the death of Queen Anne, without issue. Also the oath of abjuration, with further alterations relating to the Protestant Succession, is required to be taken by the 1 Geo. 1. c. 13. And by a late statute, all persons are to take the oaths to government, or register their estates, on pain of forfeiture, &c. 9 Geo. 1. c. 24. There are almost every other sessions acts made for indemnifying persons, who have omitted to qualify themselves for offices and promotions within the time limited by law, and for allowing further time for that purpose. See Popish.

Persons maintaining an oath to be unlawful, are punishable by fine and imprisonment, &c. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. Two justices of peace have power to tender the oaths to suspected persons; and if they refuse them, it is to be certified to the next quarter-sessions, and from thence into B. R. and the offenders shall be adjudged Popish recusants convicted, and forfeit lands, goods, &c. but it hath been held that a person cannot be said to refuse the oaths unless they are read or offered to be read to him. Oaths must be taken in the very words expressed in the act, and cannot be qualified; yet using the words in conscience, instead of my conscience, or San of Rome, instead of San of Rome, is not material. 1 Bull. 197. See Black. Com. 1 P. 368. 4 P. 115, 116, 123.

Ornament. Selling corrupt ornament, is punishable by Statute: It shall be forfeited for the second offence, &c. See 51 Ed. 1. Pub. Kalend. Stat. 323.

Obedientia. In the Canon law is used for an office, or the administration of it; whereupon the word obedientialis, in the provincial constitutions, is taken for officers under their superiors. Can. Law. cap. 1. And as some of these offices consisted in the collection of rents or pensions, rents were called obedientia; quia colligebantur ab obedientialibus. But tho' obedientia was a rent as appears by Horiden, in a general acceptation of this word it extended to whatever was enjoined the monks by the abbot; and in a more restrained sense to the cells or farms which belonged to the abbey to which the monks were sent, ut visitem obedientia, either to look after the farms, or to collect the rents, &c. — Prohibemus ut redditus qui obedientie vocantur ad formam teneant. Matt. Paris. Ann. 1213.

Obit. (Lat.) Signifies a funeral solemnity or office for the dead, most commonly performed when the corpse lies in the church uninterred: Also the anniversary office. 2 Cro. 51. Dyer 113. The anniversary of any person's death was called the obit; and to observe such day with prayers and alms, or other commemoration, was the keeping of the obit: In religious houses they had a register, wherein they entered the obits or obituary days of their founders and benefactors, which was thence termed the obituary. The tenure of obit or chantry lands is taken away and extinct, by 1 Ed. 6. c. 14. and 15 Car. 2. c. 9.

Oburgationes. Are folds or enclosures, punished with the enclosure act. MS. LL. Lib. Burg. Villa de Montgomery temp. Hen. 2. See Enclosure, and Duck-ing-stool.

Oblate gifts or offerings made to the King by any of his subjects, which in the reigns of King John and K. Hen. 3. were so carefully heeded, that they were entered into the Fin. Rolls under the title of Oblate; and if not paid, esteemed a duty, and put in charge to the sheriff. Philips of Purveyance. In the Exchequer it signifies old debts, brought as it were together from precedent years, and put on the present sheriff's charge. Pract. Excheq. 78.

Oblations, (oblationes) Are thus defined in the Canon law: Dicuntur, quantumque a piis fidelibusque Christianis offeruntur Deo & Ecclesie, sive res solida sive mobiles sunt. Specul. de Concil. tom. 1. p. 393. The word is often mentioned in our law books; and formerly there were several sorts of oblations, viz. oblationes altaris, which the priest had for saying mass; oblationes defunctorum, which were given by the last wills and testaments of persons dying to the church; oblationes mortuorum, or funerales, given at burials; oblationes penitentium, which were given by persons penitent; and oblationes pentecostales, &c. The chief or principal feasts for the oblations of the altar, were All Saints, Christmas, Candlemas and Easter, which were called Oblationes quatuor principales; and of the customary offerings from the parishioners to the parish-priest, solemnly laid on the altar, the mass or sacrament offerings were usually three-pence at Christmas, two-pence at Easter, and a penny at the two other principal feasts: Under this title of oblations were comprehended all the accustomed dues for sacramentalia or christian offices; and also the little sums paid for saying masses and prayers for the deceased. Kennet's Gloss. Oblationes funerales were often the best horie of the defunct, delivered at the church gate or grave to the priest of the parish; to which old custom we owe the original of mortuaries, &c. And at the burial of the dead, it was usual for the surviving friends to offer liberally at the altar for the pious use of the priest, and the good estate of the soul deceased, being called the Soul Seat: In North Wales this usage still prevails, where at the rails of the communion table in churches, is a tablet conveniently fixed, to receive the money offered at funerals according to the quality of the deceased; which has been observed to be a providential augmentation to some of those poor churches. Kennet's Gloss. At first the church had no other revenues beside these oblations, till in the fourth century it was enriched with lands and other possessions. Blount. Oblations, &c. are in the nature of tithes, and may be sued for in the ecclesiastical courts, and it is said are included in the act 7 & 8 W. 3. for recovery of small tithes under 40*l*. by the determination of justices of peace, &c. Count. Parf. Compan. 137, 138.

Obligation, (obligatio) Is a bond, containing a penalty, with a condition annexed for payment of money, performance of covenants, or the like: it differs from a bill, which is generally without a penalty or condition, tho' a bill may be obligatory. Co. Litt. 172. And obligations may be by matter of record: as statutes and recognizances, to which there are sometimes added defeasances, like the condition of an obligation: but when the obligation is simple, or single, without any defeasance or condition, it is most properly called so. 2 Shep. Abr. 475. Simony or usury against the statutes, is pleadable in avoidance of obligations, &c. See Bond. See also Stat. 38 Ed. 3. f. 1. c. 4. 4 Ann. c. 16. sect. 12, 13. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. sect. 3. and as to the King 13 R. 2. f. 1. c. 14. 33 H. 8. c. 39. sect. 50, &c. and Tab. 10. Stat. tit. Debts to and from the King. See farther as to Obligations. 16 Fin. Abr. and 3 New Abr. tit. Obligation; and see Condition.

Obligatus. Is he who enters into an obligation, and obliges the person to whom it is entered into.

Before the coming in of the Normans, writings obligatory were made firm with golden crosses, or other small signs or marks. But the Normans began the making such bills and obligations with a print or seal in wax, impressed with every one's special signet, attested by three or four witnesses. In former times many houses and lands thereto passed by grant and bargain, without script, charter or deed, only with the landlord's sword or helmet, with his horn or cup; and many documents were demised with a spur or curriewrench, with a bow, or with an arrow. Cowell. See Warr.

Oblata acre. Is according to some accounts, half an acre of land; but others hold it to be only half a perch. Such. Gloss.

Obventions, (obventiones) Are offerings or tithes; and oblations, obventions and offerings are generally the same thing, tho' obvention has been esteemed the most comprehensive. The profits of the churches in London were formerly the oblations and obventions; for which a remedy is given by law: but the tithes and profits arising to the London clergy are now settled and appointed by act of parliament. Count. Parsl. Compan. 138. Rents and revenues of spiritual livings are called obventions. 12 Car. 2. c. 11.—Margeria Comitissa de Warwick Univerſis Sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ filiis, &c. dedi omnes obventiones tam in decimis majoribus & minoribus, quam in aliis rebus de assartis de W. & decimam pannagii, &c. MS. penes Will. Dugdale, Mil. See Oblations.

Occasio, Is taken for a tribute which the lord imposed on his vassals or tenants; propter occasiones bellorum vel aliarum necessitatum. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 24.

Occasionari, Signifies to be charged or loaded with payments, or occasional penalties. Non propter hoc occasionentur coram domino rege & iusticiariis. Stat. Ed. 2 Anno 21. So in Fleta, Ita quod ipsi vigilantes non occasionentur. Lib. 1. cap. 24. par. 7.

Occationes, Are assarts, whereof Manwood speaks at large; the word is derived ab occando, i. e. harrowing or breaking clods. See Spelman's Glossary, verbo Effartum. Effarta vulgo dicuntur quæ apud Isidorum occasiones nuncupantur. Lib. Niger Scacc. par. 1. cap. 13.

Occupant, (occupans) Is he who first gets possession of a thing. An island in the sea, precious stones on the sea shore, and treasure discovered in a ground that has no particular owner, by the laws of nations belong to him who finds them, and gets the first occupation of them. Treat. Larus 342. See Literary Property, and Black. Com. 2 V. 3. 8, 258, 400.

The law of occupancy is founded upon the law of nature, viz. Quod terra manens vacua occupanti conceditur. So as, upon the first coming of the inhabitants to a new country, he who first enters upon such part of it, and manures it, gains the property (as is now used in Cornwall, &c. by the laws of the Stannaries, under certain regulations, for which see the Stannary laws); so that it is the actual possession and manurance of the land, which was the first cause of occupancy, and consequently is to be gained by actual entry. Sid. 347. Geary v. Bearcroft.

Where a man finds a piece of land which no other possesses or hath title unto, and enters upon the same, this gains a property, and a title by occupancy: but this manner of gaining property of lands has long since been of no use in England; for lands now possessed without any title are in the crown, and not in him who first enters. Ibid. 218. Tho' an estate for another's life, by our ancient laws may be gotten by occupancy: As for example; A. having lands granted to him for the life of B. dieth without making any estate of it; in this case, whoever first enters into the land after the death of A. gets the property for the remainder of the estate granted to A. for the life of B. For to the heir of A. it cannot go, not being an estate of inheritance, but only an estate for another man's life; which is not descendible to the heir, unless he be specially named in the grant: And the executors of A. cannot have it, as it is not an estate testamentary, that it should go to the executor as goods and chattels; so that in truth no man can intitle himself unto those lands: therefore the law prefers him who first enters, and he is called occupans, and shall hold the land during the life of B. paying the rent, and performing the covenants, &c. Bac. Elem. 1. And not only if tenant pur terme d'auter vie dies, living cestuy que vie; but if tenant for his own life grant over his estate to another, and the grantee dies before him, there shall be an occupant. Co. Lit. 41, 388. A man cannot be an occupant but of a void possession; and it is not every possession of a person entering that can make an occupancy, for it must be such as will maintain trespass without further entry. Vaugh. 191, 192. Cart. 65. 2 Keb. 250. There can be no occupancy by any person of what another hath a present right to possess: Occupancy by law must be of things which have natural existence, as of land, &c. and not of rents, advowsons, fairs, markets, tithes, &c. which lie in grant, and are incorporeal rights and estates; and there cannot be an occupant of a copyhold estate.

Vaugh. 190. Mod. ca. 66. And occupancy of land in our law now seldom happens; leases and grants being generally made to the lessees or grantees, and their heirs, during the life of cestuy que vie, whereby the lands for the remainder of the term descend to the heir, &c. Wood's Inst. 216. By statute, any estate per auter vie shall be deviseable by will in writing; and if no devise thereof be made, but the heir become special occupant, it shall be assets in his hands by descent to pay debts; and if there be no special occupant, it shall go to the executors or administrators of the party who had the estate, and be assets in their hands. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. It hath been adjudged, that an heir, executor, &c. shall be charged on this statute with payment of debts only, not legacies, except devised particularly out of the estate; and an estate per auter vie of an interest, is not distributable. Mich. 8 W. 3. B. R. 2 Salt. 464.

The true ground of occupancy is, that anciently all trials of titles were by real actions, therefore he who had the freehold was one, to whom the law had a special regard. The ancient law, for many respects, did not allow leases for above 40 years, till 21 Hen. 8. 15. And another thing was, there was reason too, that not only he who had right paramount, might know how to try his action, but that the lord might know how to avow for his services (which were considerable things formerly); he ought to know who was his tenant, therefore the law provided there should be a person on whom he should avow; per Bridgman Ch. J. Cart. 65. in the case of Geary v. Bearcroft.

The subject and object of the occupant are only such things as are capable of occupancy, and not the freehold at all; into which he neither doth, nor can enter; but the law casts the freehold immediately upon him who hath made himself occupant of the land, or other real thing whereof he is occupant, that there may be a tenant to the præcipe; per Vaughan Ch. J. Hill. 19 & 20 Car. 2. in the case of Holden v. Smallbrooke.

See farther, 27 Aff. 31. 2 Rol. Abr. 151. Cro. Eliz. 158. 1 rev. 201. Geary v. Bearcroft. 6 Mod. 63, 68. Mich. 2 Ann. B. R. Smartle v. Penhallow. See 16 Vin. Abr. tit. Occupant; and see Life-Estate.

Occupation, (occupatio) Signifies in our law use or tenure; as we say, such land is in the tenure or occupation of such a man, that is, in his possession or management: Also it is used for a trade or mystery. 12 Car. 2. c. 18. 249. And occupations at large are taken for purpures, intrusions and usurpations; and particularly for usurpation upon the King, by the Stat. de Bigamis, c. 4. 2 Inst. 272.

Occupabit, Is a writ that lies for him who is ejected out of his freehold in time of war; as the writ novel disseisin lies for one disseised in time of peace. Ingham.

Octave, The eighth day after any feast, inclusive. See Utaz.

Odhal right. Pontoppidan, in his History of Norway (p. 290.) observes, that in the Northern languages odh signifies proprietas, and all totum. Hence he derives the ODHAL right in those countries; and hence too, perhaps, is derived the odul right in Finland, &c. (See Mac Dougl. Inst. part. 2.) Now the transposition of these Northern syllables, ALLHODH, will give us the true etymology of the allodium, or absolute property of the Feudists; as, by a similar combination of the latter syllable with the word FE (which signifies a conditional reward or stipend) FEODUM or feodum will denote stipendiary property. *Black. Com. 2 V. 45. n. **

Odio & Mâ, Was a writ anciently called breve de bono & malo, directed to the sheriff to inquire whether a man committed to prison upon suspicion of murder, were committed on just cause of suspicion, or only upon malice and ill will: And if upon the inquisition it were found that he was Not guilty, then there issued another writ to the sheriff to bail him. Reg. Orig. 133. Bract. lib. 3. cap. 20. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 11. But now taken away by Stat. 28 Ed. 3. cap. 9. S. P. C. 77. 2 Inst. 42. 9 Rep. 506.

And the party committed, if intitled to be bailed, may have the cause of his commitment inquired into, and be discharged.

discharged on bail, by suing out an habeas corpus. See Habeas Corpus. As to the writ De odio et atia, See Black. Com. 3 V. 128.

Oeconomus, Is sometimes taken for an advocate or defender; as, summus secularium oeconomus & protector Ecclesiae. Matt. Paris. anno 1245.

Oeconomicus, A word used for the executor of a last will and testament, as the person who had the oeconomy or fiduciary disposal of the goods of the deceased. Hist. Dunelm. apud Wharton Angl. Sacr. par. 1. pag. 784.

Offence, (delictum) Is an act committed against a law, or omitted where the law requires it, and punishable by it. Westm. Symb. And all offences are capital, or not capital, those for which the offender shall lose his life; not capital, where an offender may forfeit his lands and goods, be fined or suffer corporal punishment, or both; but not loss of life. H. P. C. 2, 126, 134. Capital offences are comprehended under high treason, petit treason, and felony: Offences not capital include the remaining part of the Pleas of the Crown, and come under the title of Misdemeanors. An offence may be greater or less, according to the place wherein it is done. Finch 25. But the offence will be in equal degree in them, who are equally tainted with it; and those who act and consent thereto, are alike offenders. 5 Rep. 80. Some offences are by the Common law; but most by statutes:

Offerings, Are reckoned among personal tithes, payable by custom to the parson or vicar of the parish, either occasionally, as at sacraments, marriages, christenings, churching of women, burials, &c. or at constant times, as at Easter, Christmas, &c. Comm. Pars. Campan. 137. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 7. § 2. 2. Inforces the payment of offerings according to the custom and places where they grow due. Vide Oblations.

By Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 13. § 10. All persons who ought to pay offerings, shall yearly pay to the parson, vicar, proprietary, or their deputies, or farmers of the parishes where they dwell, at such four offering-days as heretofore within the space of four last years past hath been accustomed, and in default thereof shall pay for their said offerings at Easter following.

The four offering-days are Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide, and the feast of the dedication of the parish church. Gibb. 739.

Offerings of the King, All offerings made at the Holy Altar by the King and Queen, are distributed amongst the poor, by the dean of the chapel: There are twelve days in the year, called Offering Days, as to these offerings; viz. Christmas, Easter, Whitsunday, All Saints, New Year's Day, Twelfth Day, Candlemas, Annunciation, Ascension, Trinity Sunday, St. John Baptist, and Michaelmas Day: All which are high festivals. See Constitution. 184.

The offering commonly made by James 1. was a piece of gold, having on one side the portrait of the King kneeling before the altar, with four crowns before him, and circumscribed with this motto, Quid retribuam domino pro omnibus quae tribuit mihi? And on the other side, a lamb lying near a lion, with this inscription, Cor contritum & humilitatum non despicies Deus. Ibid.

Offertorium, Is used for a piece of silk, or fine linen, to receive and wrap up the offerings or occasional oblations in the church. Status. Eccl. S. Pauli London. 225. Al. 39. Offertorium esse Sindonem sericam, seu linteum, in quo fidelium oblationes reponbantur. Sometimes this word signifies the offerings of the faithful; or the place where they are made or kept: Sometimes the singing at the time of sacrament, &c.

Offit, (Offitium) Signifies that function by virtue whereof a man hath some employment in the affairs of another, as of the King, or of another person. Corwell.

It is said, that the word offitium principally implies a duty, and in the next place the charge of such duty; and that it is a rule, that where one man hath to do with another's affairs against his will, and without his leave, that this is an office, and he who is in it, is an officer. Carth. 478.

There is a difference between an office and an employment, every office being an employment; but there are employments which do not come under the denomination of offices; such as an agreement to make hay, plough land, herd a flock; &c. which differ widely from that of steward of a manor, &c. 2 Sid. 142.

By the ancient Common law, officers ought to be honest men, legal and sage, & qui melius sciat & possit officio illi intendere; and this, says Lord Coke, was the policy of prudent antiquity, that officers did ever give grace to the place, and not the place, only to grace the officer. 2 Inst. 32, 456.

Officers are distinguished into civil and military, according to the nature of their several trusts, Carth. 479.

Officers are publick, or private; and it is said, that every man is a publick officer, who hath any duty concerning the publick; and he is not the less a publick officer, where his authority is confined to narrow limits; because it is the duty of his office, and the nature of that duty, which makes him a publick officer, and not the extent of his authority. Carth. 479.

Also offices are distinguished into ancient offices, and those which are of a new creation; and herein it is observable, that constant usage, hath not only sanctified the first establishment of such ancient offices, as have existed time out of mind, but also hath prescribed and settled the manner in which they have and are to continue to exist, in what manner to be exercised, how to be disposed, &c. 9 Co. 97, Cro. Eliz. 636. 2 Roll. Abr. 182. Cro. Car. 513. 1 Sbrey. 436.

There is also another distinction of offices into judicial, and ministerial; the first, relating to the administration of justice, or the actual exercise thereof, must be executed by persons of sufficient capacity, and by the persons themselves to whom they are granted; and herein also ancient usage and custom must govern. 1 Jon. 109. Daw. 35. 9 Co. 97.

It may not be improper, here to consider,

1. Who hath a right to create and grant, or assign an office; and of one office being incident to another.
2. Of the offence of buying and selling an office, and what offices are prohibited to be thus disposed of.
3. What remedies a person having a right to an office must pursue, to be let into the enjoyment of it, and how a disturbance is punishable.
4. Of the forfeitures of an office; and where for corruption, bribery, extortion, and oppressive proceedings, officers are punishable.

1. Who hath a right to create and grant, or assign an office; and of one office being incident to another.

The King is the universal officer and disposer of justice within this realm, from whom all others are said to be derived; yet he cannot create a new office inconsistent with our constitution, or prejudicial to the subject. 12 Co. 116. 1 Roll. Rep. 206. Carth. 478.

There are three things, says Lord Coke, which have fair pretences, yet are mischievous; 1st, new courts; 2d, new offices; 3d, new corporations for trade; and as to new offices, either in courts or out of them, these, cannot be erected without act of parliament; for that under the pretence of common good, they are exercised to the intolerable grievance of the subject. 2 Inst. 540.

An office granted by letters patent for the sole making of all bills, informations and letters missive in the council of York, was held unreasonable and void. 1 Jon. 231. Mounson v. Lyfter.

One Chute petitioned the King to erect a new office for registering all strangers within the realm, except merchants and strangers, and to grant the office to the petitioner with or without a fee; and it was resolved by all the judges, that the erection of such new offices for the benefit of a private person, was against all law, of what nature soever. 1 Co. 116. and several cases there cited to this purpose.

The King cannot grant to any person to hold a court of equity, tho' he may grant tenere placita; for the dispensation of equity is a special trust committed to the King, and and not by him to be intrusted with any other, except his Chancellor. Heb. 63.

Where-ever one office is incident to another, such incident office is regularly grantable by him who hath the principal office; and on this foundation it hath been held, that the King's grant of the office of county clerk was void, it being inseparably incident to the office of sheriff, and could not by any law or contrivance be taken away from him. 4 Co. 32. Mitton's case.

So the office of chamberlain of the King's Bench prison is inseparably incident to the office of marshal; therefore a grant of the office of marshal with a reservation of the office of chamberlain is void. 1 Salk. 439. Per Holt Ch. J. 1 Leon. 320, 321.

So it hath been resolved, that the office of Exigenter of London and other counties in England, is incident to the office of Chief Justice of C. B. that therefore a grant thereof by the King, tho' in the vacancy of a Chief Justice, is null and void. Dyer 175. a. pl. 25. 1 And. 152. and see Show. Par. Ca. Sir. Rowland Holt's case.

Lord Coke says, that the justices of courts did ever appoint their clerks, some of which after by prescription grew to be officers in their courts; and this right which they had of constituting their own officers, is further confirmed to them by Wilm. 2. c. 30. The reasons are; 1st. For that the law ever appoints those who have the greatest knowledge and skill, to perform that which is to be done. 2^{dly}. The officers and clerks are but to enter, inrol, or effect that which the justices adjudge, award or order; the insufficient doing whereof maketh the proceeding of the justices erroneous, than which nothing can be more dishonourable and grievous to the justices, and prejudicial to the party. 2 Inst. 425. 4 Med. 173. cited.

2. Of the offence of buying and selling an office, and what offices are prohibited to be thus disposed of.

The taking, or giving, of a reward for offices of a publick nature is said to be bribery; and nothing can be more prejudicial to the good of the publick, than to have places of the highest concern, (on the due execution whereof, the happiness of both King and people depends,) disposed of not to those who are most able to execute, but to those who are most able to pay for them; nor can any thing be a greater discouragement to industry and virtue, than to see those places of trust and honour, which ought to be the rewards of those who by their industry have qualified themselves for them, conferred on such who have no other recommendation, but that of being highest bidders; neither can any thing be a greater temptation to officers to abuse their power by bribery and extortion, and other acts of injustice, than the consideration of the great expences they were at in gaining their places, and the necessity of sometimes straining a point, to make their bargain answer their expectations. 2 Inst. 148. 1 Hawk. P. C. 166—8, 9. It is said to be malum n/jc. and indictable at Common law. Noy 102. Moor 781.

For which reasons, among many others, it is expressly enacted by 12 Ric. 2. c. 24. That the chancellor, treasurer, keeper of the Privy seal, steward of the King's house, the King's chamberlain, clerk of the rolls of the justices of the one bench and of the other, barons of the Exchequer, and all others who shall be called to ordain, name, or make justices of the peace, sheriffs, escheators, customers, comptrollers, or any other officer or minister of the King, shall be firmly sworn that they shall not ordain, name or make any of the above-mentioned officers for any gift or brokerage, favour or affection; nor that none who sueth by himself, or by others, privily or openly, to be in any manner of office, shall be put in the same office, or in any other, but that they make all such officers and ministers, of the best, and most lawful men, and sufficient to their estimation and knowledge.

And by the 4 H. 4. c. 5. it is enacted, That no sheriff shall let his bailiwick to farm to any man for the time he occupieth such office,

But the principal statute relating to this matter is the 6 Ed. 6. c. 16.

Whereby it is enacted, That if any person bargain or sell any office, or deputation of any office, or any part of any of them, or receive, any money, fee, &c. directly or indirectly, or take any promise, &c. to receive any money, &c. directly or indirectly, for any office, or for the deputation of any office, or any part of any of them; or to the intent that any person should have, exercise or enjoy any office, or the deputation of any office, or any part of any of them, which shall in any wise concern the administration or execution of justice, or the receipt, &c. of any the King's treasure, &c. or the keeping of any of the King's towns, &c. being for a place of strength and defence; or which shall concern or touch any clerkship; or be occupied in any manner of court of record wherein justice is to be ministered; that then every person, that shall so offend, shall not only lose and forfeit all his and their right, interest and estate, in or to any of the said office or offices, &c. but also persons who shall give or pay any sum of money, &c. or shall make any promise, &c. shall immediately, be adjudged a disabled person in the law to all intents and purposes to have, &c. the said office, &c.

"It is further enacted, That bargains, sales, promises, bonds, agreements, covenants and assurances, shall be void to and against him and them, by whom any such bargain, &c. shall be made."

"Provided always, That this act, shall not extend to any office, whereof any person is seized of any estate of inheritance; nor to any office of parkership, or of the keeping of any park, house, manor, garden, shade or forest, or to any of them."

"It is also provided, That this act shall not be prejudicial to the chief justices of the King's Bench or Common Pleas, or the justices of assize; but that they may do in every behalf, concerning any office to be given or granted by them, as they might have done before the making this act."

In the construction of the last mentioned statute, the following opinions have been holden.

1. That the office of chancellor, register and commissary in ecclesiastical courts, are within the meaning of the statute, inasmuch as those who do not only determine matters which are brought before them pro salute anime, but also have the decision of disputes concerning the lawfulness of matrimony, and legitimization of children, which touch the inheritance of the subject; and also hold plea of legacies and tithes, &c. in which respects they are courts of justice. Cro. Jac. 269. 3 Inst. 148. 12 Co. 78. Salk. 468. 3 Lev. 287. 2 Vent. 187, 267.

2. It hath been adjudged, that offices in fee are out of the statute; for if the King be seized in fee of a bailiwick, and he demise the same to A. who demises to B. rendering the demise to B. is not within the statute; for offices in fee being excepted out of the statute, under leases, of such offices are also excepted inclusively. 2 Lev. 151. Ellis v. Ruddle.

3. It hath been resolved, that the place of cofferer is within this statute, and a person having once purchased this place is for ever disabled to enjoy the same; and that the King is bound by this statute. 3 Buss. 91. Sir. Arthur Ingram's case. Co. Lit. 234. S. C. and there's said, that the King could not dispense with this statute by any non obstant. Cro. Jac. 385. S. C. cited.

4. It hath been agreed, that the sale of a bailiwick of a hundred is not within the statute, for such an office doth not concern the administration of justice, nor is it an office of trust. 4 Leon. 33. Godbolt's case. 4 Med. 223. S. C. cited.

5. It hath been adjudged, that a seat in the six clerks office is not within the statute, being a ministerial office only; and they are but under-clerks, who have so much a seat for copying, &c. but one judge held it not saleable at Common law for the following reasons; 1st. Discouragement of merit and industry. 2^{dly}. It occasions extortion and exaction of excessive fees. 3^{dly}. From its being a great charge to suits. 4^{thly}. It exempts the persons,

Persons, who enter by these means, in a great measure from the due regulations under which they ought to be; for they are not so easily removed, as if they were at the will of him who hath the disposal of them. Pasch. 26 Car. 2. in C. B. Sparrow v. Reynolds.

6. It has been held, that this statute doth not extend to military officers; and that the 7 W. & M. which requires, that every commission officer, before his commission is registered, should take the oath there mentioned, that he had not directly or indirectly given any thing for procuring the commission, but the usual fees, extended only to horse, foot and dragoons, but not to the marines. Preced. Chan. 199.

7. It hath been adjudged, that the sale of the deputation of the office of provost marshal of Jamaica, is not within this statute; because this statute does not extend to the plantations. 4 Mod. 222. Salk. 411. Blankard v. Galdy. 2 Mod. 45. S. P. undetermined, and there said arguendo, that so good a law should have as extensive a construction as possible.

8. In a writ on a judgment in Ireland, it was held clearly that the office of clerk of the crown, and clerk of the peace, was within the statute; but that this law did not extend to Ireland, not being enacted there. Trin. 9 Geo. 2. in B. R. Maccarty v. Wickford.

9. It hath been held, that one who makes a contract for an office, contrary to the purport of this statute, is so far disabled to hold the same, that he cannot at any time during life be restored to a capacity of holding it by any grant or dispensation whatsoever. Hob. 75. Co. Lit. 234. Cro. Car. 361. Cro. Jac. 386.

10. It is held, that where an office is within the statute, and the salary is certain, if the principal make a deputation, reserving a lesser sum out of the salary, it is good; so if the profits be uncertain arising from fees, if the principal make a deputation, reserving a certain sum out of the fees and profits of the office, it is good; for in these cases the deputy by his constitution is in place of his principal, yet he has no right to his fees, they still continue to be the principal's; so that as to him it is only reserving a part of his own, and giving away the rest to another; but where the reservation or agreement is not to pay out of the profits, but to pay generally a certain sum, it must be paid at all events; and a bond for performance of such agreement is void by the statute. Salk. 468. 6 Mod. 234. Gadolphin v. Tudor. Comb. 356. S. P.

11. It hath been held, that this being a publick law, the judges ex officio are to take notice of it; but yet it seems the more regular and safe way to plead it; but it hath been resolved, that a person in pleading this statute need not allege, that the party against whom it is pleaded is not within any of the provisos or exceptions in the statute; but that if he be, it must come on his side to shew it. Trin. 9 Geo. 2. in B. R. Maccarty v. Wickford. Sed. qu. Also vide 2 And. 55, 107. Smith v. Castlehill. If judicial offices are saleable, that are not within the statute, see Ld. Raym. 1445.

12. What remedies a person having a right to an office may pursue, to be let into the enjoyment of it, and how a disturbance is punishable.

It is held clearly, that an assise lay at Common law for an office, and that therefore tho' the statute of Westm. 2. cap. 23. speaks only of offices in fee, yet an assise lies for an office in tail, or for life; but this is to be understood of offices of profit, for of an office of charge and no profit, an assise does not lie. 8 Co. 47. a. John Webb's case. 2 Inst. 412. S. P.

But a man shall not have an assise of the whole office, unless he be dispossessed of the whole; yet if a man be dispossessed of parcel of the profits of an office, he may have an assise for that parcel only. 8 Co. 49. b. 2 Inst. 412.

In an assise for an office newly erected and constituted, the demandant in his plaint must shew what fee or profit is granted for the exercise thereof; for this office cannot have a fee or profit appurtenant to it, as an ancient office may, and for an office without fee or profit no assise lies. 8 Co. 49. Webb's case.

But in an assise for an ancient office, the demandant in his plaint need not shew what fee or profit is belonging to it, for it shall be intended there is some fee or profit. 8 Co. 49.

In an assise for an office, the demandant must shew a seisin; but it hath been held, that taking 3 d. for a capias against B. is sufficient seisin of the office of filiner de banco. 1 Roll. Abr. 270.

Also in an assise for an office, the demandant in his patent must set forth a title. 3 Mod. 273. Sawyer v. Lenthall.

An assise lies for the office of register of the admiralty; for though their proceedings are according to the Civil law, yet the right of their office is determinable at the Common law; so of the mastership of an hospital, being a lay fee. 8 Co. 47. 2 Inst. 412. 11 Co. 99. b. Dyer 152.

A man may bring an action on the case for the profits of an office, tho' he never had seisin. 1 Mod. 122. per Hale Ch. J.

An action by a person claiming an office against the person in actual possession and receiving the fees is perhaps the most eligible method that can be pursued, to try the question of right.

If the King grant the office of comptroller of the customs to A. and B. durante beneplacito, and A. dies, and afterwards the King grants the said office to C. and yet B. under pretence of survivorship, exercises the said office, and receives the profits thereof; C. may have an indebitatus assumpsit for so much money had and received to his use. 2 Mod. 260. adjudged upon a special verdict between Ardis v. Spink. Also vide 2 Lev. 108. Cragg v. Norfolk. And 1 Mod. 122.

4. Of the forfeiture of an office; and where for corruption, bribery, extortion, and oppressive proceedings, officers are punishable.

It is laid down in general, that if an officer acts contrary to the nature and duty of his office, or if he refuses to act at all, that in these cases the office is forfeited. 11 Ed. 4. 1. b. 2 Roll. Abr. 155.

But herein it will be necessary to consider more minutely, what shall be said such acts as are contrary to the duty of his office, and how far the same, (whether they are acts of omission or commission,) amount to a forfeiture; wherein it hath been clearly agreed, that a gaoler by suffering voluntary escapes, by abusing his prisoners, by extorting unreasonable fees from them, or by detaining them in goal after they have been legally discharged, and paid their just fees, forfeits his office; for that in the grant of every office it is implied, that the grantee execute it faithfully, and diligently. Co. Lit. 233. 9 Co. 50. 3 Mod. 143.

But it is held, that one negligent escape is not a forfeiture, though a voluntary one is, but that two negligent escapes amount to a forfeiture. 39 Hen. 6. 33. 2 Roll. Abr. 155. 2 Vern. 173. and see stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 27. tit. Gaoler.

There are, says Lord Coke, three causes of forfeiture or seizure of offices by matter in deed. 1st, By Abuser. 2dly, Nonuser. 3dly, Refusal.

1st, Abuser; as by a marshal or other gaoler's permitting escapes. 2dly, By nonuser; in which there is this difference, when the office concerns the administration of justice or the commonwealth, the officer ex officio ought to attend without request, there by nonuser or non-attendance the office is forfeited; but where an officer is not obliged to attend, but upon demand or request made by him whose officer he is, there without such demand or request, there can be no forfeiture; and herein also Lord Coke in another place takes the following diversity, viz. that non-user of itself, without some special damage, is no forfeiture of private offices, but that it is otherwise of a publick one, which concerns the administration of justice. 3dly, As to refusal, he says, that in all cases where an officer is bound upon request, to exercise his office, if he does not do it upon request, he forfeits it;

it; as if the steward of a manor be requested by the lord to hold a court, if he does not do it, it is a forfeiture. 6 Co. 56. Co. Lit. 233. b.

If a gaoler leave his prison door unlocked, and the prisoners escape, it is not only a negligent but voluntary escape. Cro. Car. 492. per cur'.

If conditions in law, which are annexed to offices, be not observed and fulfilled, the office is lost for ever, for these conditions are as strong and binding as express conditions; therefore if the office of forester, &c. descend to an infant or feme covert, (where by law they may so descend) and these are not exercised by sufficient deputies, they become forfeited. Co. Lit. 233. b. 8 Co. 44. Cro. Car. 556. Hard. 11.

Insufficiency is an original incapacity which creates the forfeiture of an office; so if a superior puts in a deputy into an office, which may be exercised by deputy, who is ignorant and unskilful, this is a forfeiture of the office. 4 Mod. 29. arguendo.

If the King grants an office in any of the courts at Westminster, the judges may remove an officer for insufficiency, and they are the proper judges of his abilities. 4 Mod. 30. arguendo. Where an officer may be removed, but not abridged of his fee. 1 Roll. Rep. 82-3.

A philizer of C. B. being absent two years, and having farmed out his office from year to year, without licence of the court, was discharged by the Chief Justice, ex assensu sociorum suorum, by words spoke openly in court; and tho' there was no record made of the discharge, nor no legal summons for him to answer to any accusation, yet the discharge was held good. Dyer 114. b. pl. 64. 1 Roll. Abr. 155. S. C.

An officer was turned out, because that he spoliavit quendam recorda contra officii sui debitum; and it was objected, 1st. That it was not certain enough, because not shewn what records: to which the court answered, that it would be prolix, and then he having spoiled the records, they are not perhaps to be had. 2d objection, That it may be he did it by chance, and not wilfully; to which the court said, that the conclusion contra officii sui debitum includes that. 1 Keb. 597. Pilkington's case.

But if the King grants an office which concerns trust and diligence to two, and one is attainted, the entire office is forfeited to the King; for he cannot make one occupy in common with another. Plow. 180.

Wherever an officer, who holds his office by patent, commits a forfeiture, he cannot regularly be turned out without a scire facias, nor can he be said to be completely ousted or discharged without a writ of discharge; for his right appearing of record, the same must be defeated by matter of as high a nature. But for this see Dyer 155, 198, 211. 9 Co. 98. Co. Lit. 233. Cro. Car. 60, 61. 1 Sid. 81, 134. 8 Co. 44. b. 1 Roll. Abr. 580. 3 Mod. 335. 3 Lew. 288.

All officers are punishable for corruption, and oppressive proceedings, according to the nature of the offence, either by indictment, attachment, action at the suit of the party injured, loss of their offices, &c. 6 Mod. 96.

But besides the punishment by indictment, &c. all courts of record, have a discretionary power over their officers, and are to see that no abuses are committed by them, which may bring disgrace on the courts themselves: The court of King's Bench, by the plenitude of its power, exercises a superintendency over all inferior courts, and may grant an attachment against the judges of such courts for oppressive, unjust, or irregular practice, contrary to the obvious rules of natural justice. Dyer 218. Palm. 564. 1 Salk. 210.

As to extortion by officers, it is so odious, (being more heinous, as Lord Coke says, than robbery, as it is usually attended with the aggravating sin of perjury,) that it is punishable at Common law by fine and imprisonment, and also by removal from the office in the execution whereof it was committed; and is defined to be, the taking of money, by any officer, by colour of his office, either where none is due, or not so much is due, or where it is not yet due. Co. Lit. 368. b. 2 Inst. 209.

16 Co. 102. 2 Roll. Abr. 32, 57. Cro. Car. 439, 448. Raym. 315.

But the stated and known fees allowed by the courts of justice to their respective officers; for their labour and trouble, are not restrained by the Common law, or by the statute of Westm. 1. therefore such fees may be legally demanded, without danger of extortion. 21 Hen. 7. 17. Co. Lit. 368.

Also it seems, that an officer, who takes a reward voluntarily given him, and which has been usual in certain cases, for the more diligent or expeditious performance of his duty, cannot be said to be guilty of extortion; for without such premium it would be impossible, in many cases, to have the law executed with vigour and success. 2 Inst. 210. 3 Inst. 149. Co. Lit. 368.

But it has been always held, that a promise to pay an officer money, for doing a thing which the law will not suffer him to take any thing for, is merely void, however voluntarily it may appear to have been made. 1 Roll. Abr. 16. 1 Roll. Rep. 313. Noy 76. 1 Jon. 65. Cro. Eliz. 654. Moor 468. Cro. Jac. 103.

As to bribery, it is said, in a large sense, to be the receiving, or offering, of any undue reward, by, or to, any person, whose ordinary profession relates to the administration of publick justice, in order to incline him to a thing, against the known rules of honesty; but in strict sense, it signifies the taking any thing valuable, by one in a judicial place, for executing his office, or by colour of his office, but of the King only; also it signifies the taking, or giving a reward, for offices of a publick nature, which manifestly tending to discourage men, and to introduce corruption, is highly punishable by the Common law. Fortescue de Laud. cap. 51. 3 Inst. 145, 149. Hob. 9. Cro. Jac. 65.

It is said, that at Common law bribery in a judge, in relation to a cause depending before him, was looked upon as an offence of so heinous a nature, that it was sometimes punished as high treason, before the statute 25 Ed. 3. 3 Inst. 145. 1 Leon. 291. Cro. Jac. 65. Russell's Collection, part 1. a. fol. 31.

Also it is said, in general, that all wilful breaches, of the duty of an office, are forfeitures of it, and punishable by fine, &c. for since every office is instituted, not for the sake of the officer, but for the good of some other, nothing can be more just, than that he, who either neglects or refuses to answer the end, for which his office was ordained, should give way to others, who are both able and willing to take care of it, and that he should be punished for his neglect or oppressive execution; but the particular instances wherein a man may be said to act contrary to the duty of his office, tho' various, are yet so generally obvious, that it is needless to enumerate them. Offices of the Government. The parliament in former times had a right in nominating, placing, and displacing the Great Officers of the Kingdom, when they corrupted or miscounted the King, of which many instances may be given. Pryn.

Office found, is where an inquisition is made to the King's use, of any thing by virtue of his office who inquires, reth, and it is found by the inquisition. In this signification it is used in the stat. 23 H. 8. c. 20. and Stauford's Prærog. pag. 60. where to traverse an office, is to traverse an inquisition taken of office: And to return an office, is to return that which is found by virtue of the office. Kitch. 177.

The office of intitling, doth vest the estate and possession of the land, &c. in the King, who had therein before only a right or title; as where an alien purchases lands, a person is attainted of felony, or the like: And the other office, is where land is vested and settled before in the King, but the particular thereof doth not appear upon record. 4 Rep. 58. Plowd. 484. Official, (officialis) By the ancient Civil law, signifies him who is the minister of; or attendant upon a magistrate. In the Canon law, it is he to whom any bishop generally commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction; and in this sense there is one in every diocese called Officialis Principalis, whom the laws stile Chancellor; and the rest, if there are more, are by the Canonists termed Officiales foranei, but by us Commissionaries. In our statutes this word signified properly him whom the Archdeacon substitutes for the executing his jurisdiction, as appears by stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 15. The archdeacon hath an official, or church lawyer to assist him, who is judge of the archdeacon's court. Wood's Inst. 30, 505.

Operarii, Were such tenants who had some little portions of land by the duty of performing many bodily labours and servile works for their lord, being no other than the servi and bondmen: They are mentioned in several ancient surveys of manors.

Operatio, One day's work performed by a tenant for his lord. Paroch. Antiq. 320.

Opyofer, An officer belonging to the Green Wax in the Exchequer. See Exchequer.

Oppression, In a private sense, is the trampling upon, or bearing down one, on pretence of law, which is unjust: But where the law is known and clear, tho' it be unequal, the judges must determine according to that. Vangb. 37. In another signification, it is said by Fortescue, that all the unjust methods invented by princes, to extort money from their subjects, are so many fountains of oppression, which never dry up; for succeeding Kings seldom fail to follow the example of their predecessors. Fortesc. Laud. Leg. Angl.

Oppression of the Crown, how Remedied. The learned Blackstone treating of the King, his dignity, &c. and observing that no suit or action can be brought against him, even in civil matters, because no court can have jurisdiction over him, proceeds as follows,

Are then, it may be asked, the subjects of England totally destitute of remedy, in case the crown should invade their rights, either by private injuries, or publick oppressions? To this we may answer, that the law has provided a remedy in both cases.

And, first, as to private injuries; if any person has, in point of property, a just demand upon the King, he must petition him in his court of Chancery, where his Chancellor will administer right as a matter of grace, tho' not of compulsion: And this is entirely consonant to what is laid down by the writers on natural law. "A subject, (says Puffendorf;) so long as he continues a subject, hath no way to oblige his prince to give him his due, when he refuses it; tho' no wise prince will ever refuse to stand to a lawful contract. And, if the prince gives the subject leave to enter an action against him, upon such contract, in his own courts, the action itself proceeds rather upon natural equity, than upon the municipal laws." For the end of such action is not to compel the prince to observe the contract, but to persuade him. And, as to personal wrongs; it is well observed by Mr. Locke, "The harm which the sovereign can do in his own person not being likely to happen often, nor to extend itself far; nor being able by his single strength to subvert the laws, nor oppress the body of the people, (should any prince have so much weakness and ill nature as to endeavour to do it)—the inconveniency therefore of some particular mischiefs, that may sometimes happen, when an heady prince comes to the throne, are well recompensed by the peace of the publick and security of the government, in the person of the chief magistrate being thus set out of the reach of danger."

Next, as to cases of ordinary publick oppression, where the vitals of the constitution are not attacked, the law hath also assigned a remedy. For, as a King cannot misuse his power, without the advice of evil counsellors, and the assistance of wicked ministers, these men may be examined and punished. The constitution has therefore provided, by means of indictments, and parliamentary impeachments, that no man shall dare to assist the crown in contradiction to the laws of the land. But it is at the same time a maxim in those laws, that the King himself can do no wrong; since it would be a great weakness and absurdity in any system of positive law, to define any possible wrong, without any possible redress.

For, as to such publick oppressions as tend to dissolve the constitution, and subvert the fundamentals of government, they are cases which the law will not, out of decency, suppose: Being incapable of distrusting those, whom it has invested with any part of the supreme power; since such distrust would render the exercise of that power precarious and impracticable. For, where-ever the law expresses its distrust of abuse of power, it always vests a superior coercive authority in some other hand to correct it; the very notion of which destroys the ideas of sovereignty. If therefore (for example) the two houses of parliament, or either of them, had avowedly a right to animadvert on the King, or each other, or if the King had a right to animadvert on either of the houses, that branch of the legislature, so subject to animadversion, would instantly cease to be part of the supreme power; the balance of the constitution would be over-turned; and that branch or branches, in which this jurisdiction resided, would be completely sovereign. The supposition of law therefore is, that neither the King, nor either house of parliament (collectively taken) is capable of doing any wrong; since in such cases the law feels itself incapable of furnishing any adequate remedy. For which reason all oppressions, which may happen to spring from any branch of the sovereign power, must necessarily be out of the reach of any stated rule, or express legal provision: But, if ever they unfortunately happen, the prudence of the times must provide new remedies upon new emergencies.

Indeed, it is found by experience, that whenever the unconstitutional oppressions, even of the sovereign power, advance with gigantic strides and threaten desolation to a state, MANKIND WILL NOT BE REASONED OUT OF THE FEELINGS OF HUMANITY; nor will sacrifice their liberty by a scrupulous adherence to those political maxims, which were originally established to preserve it. Therefore tho' the positive laws are silent, experience will furnish us with a very remarkable case, wherein NATURE AND REASON PREVAILED. When King James the Second INVADED the fundamental constitution of the realm, the convention declared an abdication, whereby the throne was rendered vacant, which induced a new settlement of the crown. And so far as this precedent leads, and no farther, we may now be allowed to lay down the law of redress against publick oppression. If therefore any future prince should endeavour to subvert the constitution by BREAKING the ORIGINAL CONTRACT between King and people, should violate the fundamental laws, and should withdraw himself out of the kingdom; we are now authorized to declare that this conjunction of circumstances would amount to an abdication, and the throne would be thereby vacant. But it is not for us to say, that any one, or two, of these ingredients would amount to such a situation; for there our precedent would fail us. In these therefore, or other circumstances, which a fertile imagination may furnish, since both law and history are silent, it becomes us to be silent too; leaving to future generations, whenever necessity and the safety of the whole shall require it, the EXERCISE of those INHERENT (tho' latent) POWERS of SOCIETY, which no climate, no time, no constitution, no contract, can ever DESTROY or DIMINISH. Black. Com. 1 V. 243, 45.

Option, When a new suffragan bishop is consecrated, the archbishop of the province by a customary prerogative claims the collation of the first vacant dignity or benefice in that see, at his own choice; which is called his Option. Cowell.

Optional Writ. A præcipe is an optional writ, i. e. it is the alternative, commanding the defendant, to do the thing required, or shew the reason wherefore he hath not done it. There is another species of original writs called Peremptory, or a Si feceris te securum, from the words of the writ, which directs the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court, without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gives the sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim. Black. Com. 3 V. 274.

Pæ. This was Saxon money or coin, valued at sixteen pence, and sometimes according to variation of the standard at twenty pence. It is a word which often occurs in Domesday, and the laws of King Canutus.

Orando pro Rege & Regno, An ancient Writ. Before the Reformation, while there was no standing collect for a sitting parliament, when the Houses of Parliament were met, they petitioned the King that he would require the bishops and clergy to pray for the peace and good government of the realm, and for a continuance of the good understanding between his Majesty and the estates of the kingdom; and accordingly the writ De Orando pro Rege & Regno was issued, which was common in the time of King Edw. 3. Nichols. Engl. Hist. par. 3. p. 66.

Orarium, The hem, or border of a garment. Cowell.

Oryth, Anglice, A bony, a swelling or knot in the flesh, caused by a blow. Brass. lib. 3. tit. De Corona, cap. 23. num. 2.

Orythel or Orythel, (mentioned in stat. Rich. 3. cap. 24 H. 8. cap. 2. and 3 Edw. 6. cap. 2.) Seems to be a kind of cork, or rather a kind of stone like alium, which dyers use in their colours. To what duties liable? 4 W. & M. c. 5. stat. 2.

Orythel, or Orythel, (ordalium) Is a Saxon word, compounded of or, magnum and deal, or del, judicium, or as others, from or, which in that language is præsumptio, and del, part, that is, super criminis, or Not guilty; but is used for a kind of purgation practised in ancient times, and in the Canon law called purgatio vulgaris. There were of this two sorts, one by fire, another by water. Of these see Mr. Lambard, in his Explication of Saxon Words, verbo ordalium: of this you may read likewise Holingshead, fol. 98. and Maxman especially, Dispar. de Feid. p. 41. where, of five kinds of proofs, which he calleth, Feudales probationes, he maketh this the fourth, calling it Explorationem, & hujus jurisjuramentum.

bationis 6, genera fuisse animadvertit, viz. per flammam, per aquam, per ferrum candens, per aquam vel gelidam vel ferventem, per foras & per corpus Domini, of all which he alledged several examples out of history, very worthy reading. See Stene de verbor. Significat. verbo Marchianum.

This Ordeal to have been in use in Henry the Second's time, as appeareth by Glanville, lib. 14. cap. 1. 2. See also Verfegan, cap. 3. pag. 63, &c. See also Hoveden 556. This Ordeal law was condemned by Pope Stephen the Second, and afterwards here totally abolished by parliament, as appears by Rot. Puten. de Anno 2 Hen. 3. membr. 5. Cowell, Vide Leg. Edw. Confess. cap. 9. Anciently when an offender being arraigned pleaded Not guilty, he might chuse whether he would put himself for trial upon God and the country, by swearing, as at this day, or upon God only; and then it was called the judgment of God, presuming that he would deliver the innocent. Terms de Ley. 9. Rep. 32. This trial was two ways, one by water, and another by fire: the water ordeal was performed either in hot or cold; in cold water the parties suspected were adjudged innocent, if their bodies were not borne up by the water contrary to the course of nature; in hot water, they were to put their bare arms or legs into scalding water, which if they brought out without hurt, they were taken to be innocent of the crime. Those that were tried by the fire ordeal, passed bare footed and blind-fold over nine hot glowing plow-shares; or were to carry burning irons in their hands, usally of one pound weight, which was called simple ordeal; or of two pounds, which was duplex; or of three pounds weight, which was triplex ordeal; and accordingly as they escaped, they were judged innocent or nocent, acquitted or condemned: this fire ordeal was for freemen, and persons of better condition; and the water ordeal for bondmen and rusticks. Glanville lib. 4. c. 1. And the horrible trial by fire ordeal, in the first degree, Queen Emma, mother of Edward the Confessor, underwent on a suspicion of her chastity: also an example of the second kind is mentioned in our books of a company of persons suspected to be dealers of the King's deer, in the reign of King Will. 2. who having carried burning irons without injury, on its being reported to the King, he received it with a remarkable indignation; and replied, Quid est id; Deus est justus Iudex: Percat qui deinceps hoc crediderit.

The monarch must mean, that God, whom his priests had taught him to worship, or consider as God; not the great Author of Nature.

The Saxons, besides the trial by combat, commonly used their fire and water ordeals. See Black. Com. 4 V. 336, 407, 418.

Ordelite, or Ordelite, (effusio metalli, derived from the Saxon ore, metallum and delfan, effodere) Is often used in charters of privileges, being taken for a liberty, whereby a man claims the ore found in his own ground, but properly is the ore lying under ground; as also a delf of coal, is coal lying in veins under ground, before it is digged up. Cowell.

Ordeals, Oaths and ordels, Was part of the privileges and immunities granted in old charters, meaning the right of administering oaths, and adjudging ordel trials, within such a precinct or liberty. Cowell.

Orders, Are of several sorts, and by divers courts; as of the Chancery, King's Bench, &c. Orders of the court of Chancery, either of course or otherwise, are obtained on the petition or motion of one of the parties in a cause, or of some other interested in, or affected by it; and they are sometimes made on hearings, sometimes by consent of parties. Pract. Sile. 25. They are to be pronounced in open court, and drawn up by the Register from his notes; and if there be any difficulty in adjusting the notes, a summons is given by the register for the clerk or solicitor of the other side to attend, whereupon they are settled, or the court is applied to, if it cannot be otherwise done: before the orders are entered and passed by the register, the other side hath four days allowed to object against them, for which purpose copies are delivered; and when they are perfected, they are to be served on the parties, or the clerk or solicitor employed by them. Ibid. If an order is of course, the solicitor usually draws up the notes or minutes, and gives them to the register's clerk, to draw up the order from; and when the order is drawn up, it is to be entered by the entering clerk, which must be within eight days from the pronouncing; then the register passes and signs it, after which is the service, &c. For not obeying an order, personally served, a party may be committed.

Orders of the King's Bench, Are rules made by the court in causes there depending; and when they are drawn up and entered by the clerk of the rules, they become orders of the court. 2 Lill. 261. This court doth not take notice of orders made in Chancery, nor in any other court, so as to be bound by them; but will proceed according to their own rules and orders. Trin. 23 Car. B. R. And if a cause be put in the paper of causes, that it may be spoke unto in the matter of law, by the order of the court; and the attorney in the cause doth not attend at the day, the cause is to be put out of the paper, and not be put in again that term, except very good cause be shewn. Mich. 22 Car. B. R. 2 Lill. 261. The King's Bench hath power to quash any orders made at the publick or private sessions of the peace; or by any other commissioners, if they find good reason for it. Ibid.

See Sir George Cooke's Rules and Orders in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, and Cases in Practice, 2 vols. 8vo. a very excellent work; from which many things in our modern books of practice are taken, tho' the authors have seldom been so ingenuous as to acknowledge from whence they were taken, or to refer to any authorities, in many of those instances.

Justices of Peace, Justices of peace, who make orders, must be said in such orders to be justices of the county, for residing in the county is not sufficient; but they need not be of the division: it must also appear that one of the justices was of the quorum. 2 Salk. 474; 480. An order signed separately by two justices of peace, not being present together at the doing it, was ruled naught upon the statute 14 Car. 2. c. 12. See 1 Ld. Raym. 55. Also where 'tis said, that two justices doth order instead of do, the singular number for the plural, it has been adjudged ill. 2 Raym. 1198. And if the name of the county be not in the body of orders, but only in the margin, they will be quashed: tho' some orders of removal with the name of the county in the margin, have been held good. Mich 11 Geo. 1. Mod. Ca. in L. and E. 310. The sessions of the peace, during all their sessions, may alter or revoke their orders, and make a new order to vacate the former, tho' it be drawn up; as judgments in B. R. may be altered during the same term, the sessions as well as the term being in law accounted as one day. Ibid. 606. And the quarter sessions is not bound to set forth the reason of their orders and judgments, no more than other courts. 2 Salk. 607. Justices of peace at the quarter-sessions may rectify defects of form in orders, &c. upon appeals, and then shall determine the matters according to the merits of the case; and no orders shall be removed into B. R. without entering into recognizance of 50 l. to prosecute with effect, &c. otherwise the justices to confirm their order, by Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 19. By the Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 27. No order of justices shall be set aside for not inserting that one of them is of the quorum. See Peer.

Ordnale, Is a book which contains the manner of performing divine offices: in quo ordinatur modus, &c.

Ordinance, (ordinatio) Is a law, decree, or statute, variously used. Litt. Dist.

Ordinance of the forest, (ordinatio forestæ) Is a statute made touching matters and causes of the forest, anno 34. Ed. 1.

Ordinance of Parliament, Is said to be the same with all of parliament; for in the Parliament Rolls acts of parliament are often called ordinances, and ordinances acts: but originally there seems to be this difference between them: that an ordinance was but a temporary act, by way of prohibition, which the Commons might alter or amend at their pleasure; and an act of parliament is a perpetual law not to be altered but by King, Lords and Commons. Rot. Parl. 37 Ed. 3. Pryn's Animadver. on 4 Inst. 13. And Sir Edward Coke says, that an ordinance of parliament is to be distinguished from an act; in as much as the latter can be only made by the King and the three estates, whereas the former is by one or two of them. Co. Lit.

Ordinary, (ordinarius) Is a Civil law term, for any judge who hath authority to take cognisance of causes in his own right, and not by deputation: by the Common law it is taken for him who hath ordinary or exempt and immediate jurisdiction in causes ecclesiastical. Co. Lit. 344. Stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 19.

This name is applied to a bishop who hath original jurisdiction; and an archbishop is the ordinary of the whole province, to visit and receive appeals from inferior jurisdictions, &c. 2 Inst. 398. 9 Rep. 41. Wood's Inst. 25. The word ordinary is also used for every commissary or official of the bishop, or other ecclesiastical judge, having judicial power: an archdeacon is an ordinary; and ordinaries may grant administration of intestates estates, &c. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 11. 9 Rep. 36. But the bishop of the diocese is the true and only ordinary to certify excommunications, lawfulness of marriage, and such ecclesiastical and spiritual acts to the judges of the Common law; for he is the person whom the court is to write to, in such things 2 Shep. Abr. 472. For the ordinary's power, it is declared by many statutes; as relating to visiting hospitals, by 2 H. 5. c. 1. The certifying of bastardy, &c. 9 H. 6. c. 11. If a man may keep a school without licence of the ordinary, see Ld. Raym. 603. And their authority in general is restored, by 13 Car. 2. c. 1. The ordinary's power and interest in a church, is of admitting, instituting and inducting parsons; of seeing and taking care that it be provided with a pastor, by the patron who has the right of presenting; or in his default, to bestow the church on some proper person to serve the cure, &c. 1 Roll. Rep. 453. Before presentation to a church, the ordinary may sequester the profits; and during the vacation, 'tis said he may make a lease. 1 Keb. 370. When the ordinaries or their ministers have committed extortion or oppression, they may be indicted, putting the things in certain, and in what manner, &c. 25 Ed. 3. c. 9. Formerly clerks accused of crimes were delivered to the ordinary, and the bodies of such clerks kept in the ordinary's prison until tried before him by a jury of twelve clerks; and if condemned, they were liable to no greater punishment than degradation, loss of goods, and the profits of their lands; unless they had been guilty of apostacy, &c. This was when they had the privilege of being tried only by ecclesiastical judges; which was so far indulged them, that after they had been once delivered to the ordinary, they could not be remanded to any temporal court, until the Stat. 8 Elix. c. 4. 2 Hawt. P. C. 361. No ornaments can be set up in a church, without consent of the ordinary. 1 Strange 576. Ordinary of Newgate, Is one who is attendant in ordinary upon condemned malefactors in that prison, to prepare them for death; and he records the behaviour of such persons.

Ordinatione contra Serbientes, A writ that lieth against a servant, for leaving his master contrary to the statute. Reg. Orig. 189.

Ordination of Clergy. No man is capable of taking any ecclesiastical promotion, or dignity, unless he be ordained a priest, to qualify him for the same. A clerk is to be twenty-three years old, and have deacon's orders, before he can be admitted into any share of the ministry: and a priest must be twenty-four years of age, before he shall be admitted into orders to preach, or to administer the sacraments; but the archbishop may dispense with one to be made deacon at what age he pleases, tho' he cannot with one who is to be made a priest. 13 Elix. Deacons and priests are to be ordained only on the four Sundays immediately following the Ember Weeks, except on urgent occasions; and it is to be done in the cathedral or parish church where the bishop resides, in time of divine service, and in the presence of the archdeacon, dean, and two prebendaries, or of four other grave divines. And no bishop shall admit any person into orders, without a title, or assurance of being provided for; and before any are admitted, the bishop shall examine them in the presence of the ministers, who assist him at the imposition of hands; on pain, if he admits any not qualified, &c. of being suspended by the archbishop from making either deacons or priests for two years. Can. 31, 34. If any impediment be objected against one who is to be made either priest or deacon, at the time he is to be ordained, the bishop is bound to surcease from ordaining him, until he shall be found clear of that impediment; and it is generally held, that whatever are good causes of deprivation, are also sufficient causes to deny admission to orders; as incontinency, drunkenness, illiterature, perjury, forgery, simony, heresy, outlawry, bastardy, &c. 2 Inst. 631. 5 Rep. A person to be ordained priest, must bring a testimonial of four persons, known to the bishop, of his life and doctrine; and be able to give an account of his faith in Latin: and a deacon is not to be made a priest, unless he produce to the bishop such a testimonial of his life, &c. and that he hath been found faithful and diligent in executing the office of a deacon. A bishop shall not make any one a deacon and minister, on the same day; for there must be some time to try the behaviour of a deacon in his office, before he is admitted to the order of priesthood, which time is generally a year, but it may be shorter, on reasonable cause allowed by the bishop: priests and deacons are not only to subscribe the thirty-nine articles, but take the oath of the King's supremacy, &c. as directed and altered by Stat. 1 W. & M. A priest by his ordination receives authority to preach the word, and administer the Holy Sacraments, &c. (but he may not preach without licence from the bishop, archbishop, or one of the universities.)

None but priests are capable of any benefice, or dignity, or of administering the sacrament, 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. ff. 14.

The Stat. 31 Elix. cap. 6. punishes corrupt ordination of priests, &c. If any persons shall take any reward, or other profit, to make and ordain a minister, or to license him to preach, they shall forfeit 40 l. and the party so ordained, &c. 10 l. by this statute.

Ordines, A general chapter, or other solemn convention of the religious of such a particular order. Paroch. Antiq. p. 576.

Ordines majores & minores, The holy orders of priest, deacon and subdeacon, any of which did qualify for presentation and admission to an ecclesiastical dignity or cure, were called ordines majores; and the inferior orders of chanter, psalmist, ostiary, reader, exorcist and acolyte, were called ordines minores: for which the persons so ordained had their prima tonsura different from the tonsura clericalis. Cowell.

Ordinum fugitivi, Signified those of the religious who deserted their houses, and throwing off the habits, renounced their particular order, in contempt of their oath and other obligations. Paroch. Antiq. 388.

Ordinance, Letters patent for making it not within the statute of monopolies, 21 Jac. 1. c. 3. ff. 10.

Ordo, Is taken for that rule which the monks were obliged to observe. In Radmer. vita S. Engelmi, cap. 37.

Ordo Albus, The White Friars, or Augustines; and the Cistercians also wore White.

Ordo Niger, Were the Black Friars. Sub norma Benedicti famulantes; as Inglulphus tells us, p. 851. The Cistercians likewise wore Black. Matt. Paris. 321, 514.

Oratio, or Expiatio, (from the Saxon or, fecit and gild, solutio vel redemptio.) Is a delivery or restitution of cattle. But Landward says, 'tis a restitution made by the hundred, or county, for any wrong done by one who was in pledge. Arch. pag. 125. Or, rather a penalty for taking away cattle.

Oxford haven, Penalty on selling a net with a stall-boat within the mouth of Oxford haven, 27 El. c. 21.

Orfraises, (aurifrisum) A sort of cloth of gold, frizled or embroidered, formerly made and used in England. worn by our Kings and nobility; and the cloaths of the King's guards were called orfraises, because adorned with such works of gold. Mention is made of these orfraises in the Records of the Tower.

Orgailous, More truly orguillous, that is, proud and high-minded; derived from the French orgueil, pride. 4 Inst. 89.

Organs, (mentioned in Stat. 32 E. 2. f. 3. c. 3.) Is the greatest sort of North-sea fish, (for the statute says they are greater than lob-fish) which we now call organ-lings, corruptly from Orkney-ling, because the best are near that island. Cowell.

Orgito, (sine compensatione) Without recompence; as where no satisfaction was to be made for the death of a man killed, so that he was judged lawfully slain. Spelm.

Oriel college, A prebend of Rockester, how annexed to its provostship, 12 Ann. f. 2. c. 6. f. 7.

Original, In the court of King's Bench, the usual original writ issued in actions, as action of trespass upon the case, &c. The court of Common Pleas proceeds by original in all actions: but to arrest and sue a party to outlawry, it is used by both courts. And for originals in trespass on the case, there is a fine payable to the crown, where the damages are laid above forty pounds in proportion to the damage. Præf. Solic. 254, 255. The original is the foundation of the capias, and all subsequent process; the return whereof is generally the teste of the capias: tho' the capias may be taken out before the original, by leaving the præcipe with the filazer, who will make out a capias upon it, and afterwards carry it to the curfitor to make an original; and the filazer when it is returned, is to file it with the custos brevium. See Attorney's Pract. in Court of K. B. and C. P.

Originales. In the treasurer's remembrancer's office in the Exchequer, the transcripts, &c. sent thither out of the Chancery are called by this name, and distinguished from recorda; which contain the judgments and pleadings in suits tried before the Barons.

Oryed, Some orped knight, i. e. a knight whose clothes shined with gold. Blount.

Orphan, (orphanus) Is a fatherless child; and in the city of London there is a court of record established for the care and government of orphans. 4 Inst. 248.

The Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London have the custody of orphans under age and unmarried, of freemen that die; and the keeping of their lands and goods: and if they commit the custody of an orphan to any man, he shall have the writ of reavishment of ward, if the orphan be taken away; or the Mayor and Aldermen may imprison the offender until he produces the infant. 2 Dauv. Abr. 311. If any one, without consent of the court of Aldermen, marries such an orphan under the age of twenty-one years, tho' out of the city, they may fine and imprison him, until paid. 1 Lev. 32. f. Centr. 178. Executors and administrators of freemen dying, are to exhibit true inventories of their estates before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen in the court of orphans, and must give security to the Chamberlain of London and his successors by recognizance for the orphan's part; which if they refuse to do, they may be committed to prison until they obey. Wood's Inst. 522. If any orphan, who by the custom of London is under the government of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, sue in the spiritual court for any legacy, &c. a prohibition shall be granted; because the Lord Mayor and Aldermen only have jurisdiction of them. 5 Rep. 73. But an orphan may waive the benefit of suing in the court of orphans, and file a bill in equity for discovery of the personal estate, &c.

The Lord Mayor and Commonalty of London being answerable for the orphans' money paid into the chamber of the city, and by some accidents become indebted to the orphans and their creditors, in a greater sum than they could pay; by Stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. cap. 10. it is enacted, that the lands, markets, fairs, &c. belonging to the city of London, shall be chargeable for raising eight thousand pounds per ann. to be appropriated for a perpetual fund for orphans; and towards raising such a fund, the Mayor and Commonalty may assess two thousand pounds yearly upon the personal estates of inhabitants of the city, and levy the same by distress, &c. Also a duty is granted of four shillings per ton wines imported, and on coals; and every apprentice shall pay 2 s. 6 d. when he is bound; and 5 s. when he is admitted a freeman; for raising the fund: the fund is to be applied for payment of the debts due to orphans, by interest after the rate of 4 l. per cent. &c. And no person shall be compelled, by virtue of any custom in the city, to pay into the chamber of London any sum of money or personal estate belonging to an orphan of any freeman for the future. 5 & 6 W. & M. By the Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 29. The duty of 6 d. per chaldron on coals, given by the Stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. towards the orphan debt, is continued for thirty-five years. See Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 29. for the further relief of the orphans of the city of London.

Ortelli, (Fr.) Is a forest word, and signifies the claws of a dog's foot. Kitch.

Orotagium, A garden plot, or hortilage. Mon. Angl. tom. 1.

Oryal, (oriolum) Is a room, or cloister, of a monastery, priory, &c. whence it is presumed that Oriel or Oryel College in Oxford took name. Matt. Paris. in vit. Abb. St. Alban.

Osculum Pacis. A custom formerly of the church, that in the celebration of the mass, after the priest had spoke these words, viz. Pax Domini vobiscum, the people kissed each other; was called osculum pacis: afterwards when this custom was abrogated, another was introduced; which was, whilst the priest spoke the aforementioned words, a deacon offered the people an image to kiss, which was commonly called paxem. Matt. Paris. anno 1100.

Osmund, A kind of iron ore, antiently brought into England. Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 14.

Ostense, Was a tribute paid by merchants for leave to expose their goods for sale in markets. — Qui per terras ibant ostensionem dabant & teloneum. Leg. Ethelred. cap. 23.

Oswald's Law, (Lex Oswaldi) The law by which was understood the ejecting married priests, and introducing monks into churches, by Oswald bishop of Worcester, about the year 964.

Oswald's Law Hundred, An ancient hundred in Worcestershire, so called from bishop Oswald who obtained it of King Edgar, to be given to St. Mary's church in Worcester; it is exempt from the jurisdiction of the sheriff, and comprehends 300 hides of lands. Camb. Brit.

Otho, Was a deacon-cardinal of St. Nicholas, in carcere Tulliano, a legate for the people here in England, 22 H. 3. whose constitutions we have at this day. Stow's Annals, 303.

Othobonus, Was a deacon-cardinal of St. Adrian, and the pope's legate here in England, 15 H. 3. as appeareth by the award made betwixt the said King and his Commons at Kenilworth. His constitutions we have at this day in use.

Ouch, A collar of gold, or such like ornament, worn by women about their necks. Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 13.

Ouer, (Sax. ofer, ripa) In the beginning or ending of the names of places, signifies a situation near the bank of some river; as St. Maryover in Southwark, Andover in Hampshire, &c.

Ouerseyed, (from the Sax. ofer, i. e. super, & cythan, offendere) Is used where a person is convicted of any crime; that it is found upon the offender: this word is mentioned in the laws of Edw. apud Brompton, pag. 836.

Ouerhermissa, Contumacy, or contempt of court. In the laws of Adelstan, cap. 25. it is used for contumacy: but in a council held at Winchester, anno 1027, it signifies a forfeiture. See Leg. Ethelred, cap. 27.

Ouerlameffa, Seems to have been an antient fine before the statute for hue and cry, laid upon those, who, hearing of a murder or robbery, did not pursue the malefactor. 3 Inst. 116. — Si quis furi obviauerit, & sine vociferatione gratis eum dimiserit, emendet secundum Weram ipsius furis, vel plenam lada se adlegiet, quod cum eo falsum no ferit: si quis audito clamore sperpsedit, reddat overlameffa Regis, aut plene se laiderit. Lib. Rub. cap. 36.

Ouerseers of the Poor, Are public officers created by the Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. to provide for the poor of every parish;

Parish; and are sometimes two, three, or four, according to the extent of parishes. Churchwardens by this statute are called overseers of the poor, and they join with the overseers in making a poor rate, &c. But the churchwardens having distinct business of their own, usually leave the care of the poor to the overseers only; tho' anciently they were the sole overseers of the poor. Dalt. ch. 27. Wood's Inst. 93. See Poor.

Overt, (Fr.) Is used for open; overture, an opening, also a proposal. Law Fr. Dict.

Overt-Act, (apertum factum) An open act which by law must be manifestly proved. 3 Inst. 12. Some overt-act is to be alledged in every indictment for high treason: such as for treason in compassing the death of the King, the providing arms to effect it, &c. 3 Inst. 6, 12. H. P. C. 11. And no evidence shall be admitted of any overt-act, that is not expressly laid in the indictment, by Stat. 7 W. 3. Vide Treason.

Overt-Word. Is an open plain word, not to be mistaken. Stat. 1 Mar. Sess. 2. 3.

Oures, (Fr.) Acts, deeds, or works: and ouages, are days works. 8 Rep. 131.

Ourlop, The leivwite or fine paid to the lord by the inferior tenant, when his daughter was corrupted or debauched. — Natawi in villa de Wridthorp — soluit quilibet pro filiabus suis maritandis gerfam Domino, & ourlop pro filiabus corruptis, & Roth & alia servitia & auxilium. Petr. Bles. Contin. Hist. Croyland, 115.

Ousted, (from the Fr. ouster, to put out) As ousted of possession, is where one is removed or put out of possession. 3 Cro. 349.

Ouster le Main, (amovere manum) Signifies a livery of land out of the King's hand, or a judgment given for him that sued a monsians de droit; and when it appeared upon the matter, that the King had no title to the land he seized, judgment was given in the Chancery that the King's hands be amoved, and thereupon an amoveas manum was awarded to the escheator, to restore the land, it being as much as if the judgment were given that the party should have his land again. Staundf. Prærog. cap. 24. 28 Ed. 1. cap. 19. It was also taken for the writ granted upon a petition for this purpose. F. M. B. 256. And it is written outer le mains, in the 25 Hen. 8. cap. 22. But all wardships, liveries, and ouster le mains, &c. are taken away by Stat. 12 Car. 2. cap. 24.

Ouster le Mer, (oultre, i. e. ultra, & le mer, mare) Is a cause of esoin or excuse, if a man appear not in court on summons, for that he was then beyond the sea.

Outfangthes, (from the Sax. ut, i. e. extra, fang, captus, & thoes, fur) Fur extra captus, quem Dominus, quanquam in alieno fundo comprehensus, in curiam tamen suam revocat, ibique judicat. Litt. It is a liberty or privilege, as used in the ancient Common law, whereby a lord was enabled to call any man dwelling in his manor, and taken for felony in another place out of his fee, to judgment in his own court. Rassal. Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 15.

Outhest, Is the same with outborn; which is a calling men out to the army, by the sound of an horn.

Out-houses, Are those belonging and adjoining to dwelling-houses; and taking away any money, goods, &c. from such out-houses, in the day-time, of 5 s. value, is felony without benefit of clergy. Dalt. c. 99. Stat. 32 Eliz. c. 15. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9. See Burglary.

Outland. The Saxon Thanes divided their hereditary lands into inland, such as lay nearest their dwelling, which they kept to their own use; and outland, which lay beyond the demesns, and was granted out to tenants, at the will of the lord, like copyhold estates. This outland they subdivided into two parts, one part they disposed among those who attended their persons, called Theodens, or lesser Thanes; the other part, they allotted to their husbandmen, or churls. Spalm. de Feud. cap. 5.

Outlaw, Sax. utlaghe, Lat. utlagatus) One deprived of the benefit of the law, and out of the King's protection. Flota, lib. 1. cap. 47. If where a person is called into the law, after an original writ, and the writs of capias, alias and pluries, returned Nou est inventus, and proclamation made for him to appear, &c. he contemptuously refuses to appear, he is then outlawed. 1 Inst. 128. A woman cannot be an outlaw, because women are not sworn to the King as men are, to be ever within law; therefore they are said to be waived, as not regarded but forsaken of the law. F. N. B. 160. And an infant under twenty-one years old, his age to take the oath of allegiance, cannot be outlawed. When a person is restored to the King's protection, he is inlawed again.

Outlawry, (utlagaria) Is the loss of the benefit of a subject, that is, of the King's protection and the realm. Corwell.

Outlawry is a punishment inflicted for a contempt, in refusing to be amenable to the justice of that court which hath authority to call him before them; and as this is a crime of the highest nature, being an act of rebellion against that state or community of which he is a member, so it subjects the party to forfeitures and disabilities; for he loseth his liberam legem, is out of the King's protection, &c. Co. Lit. 128. Doct. & Stud. dial. 2. cap. 3. 1 Roll. Abr. 802.

And as to forfeitures for refusing to appear, the law distinguishes between outlawries in capital cases, and those of an inferior nature; for as to outlawries in treason and felony, the law interprets the party's absence a sufficient evidence of his guilt, and without requiring further proof, accounts him guilty of the fact, on which ensues corruption of blood, and forfeiture of his estate, real and personal. Co. Lit. 128. 3 Inst. 161.

But outlawry in personal actions does not occasion the party to be looked on as guilty of the fact, nor does it occasion an intire forfeiture of his real estate, yet it is very fatal and penal in its consequences; for hereby he is restrained of his liberty, if he can be found, forfeits his goods and chattels, and the profits of his lands, while the outlawry remains in force. Plow. 541. 9 H. 6. 20. b. Show. Parl. Ca. 73.

Anciently outlawry was looked upon as so horrid a crime, that any one might lawfully kill a person outlawed, as he might a wolf, or other noxious animal; but the law herein was changed in Edward the Third's time, which provides, that a person outlawed shall be put to death by the sheriff only, having lawful authority for that purpose. Co. Lit. 128. b.

Also from the heinousness of the offence the sheriff may, on a capias utlagatum, break open the house of the person outlawed; for it would be unreasonable, that the protection, allowed in other cases, should extend to him who is declared a contemner and violator of the law; therefore the seizing him as an outlaw, implies the liberty of entering and seizing him wherever he lies hid. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 202. 9 Co. 91. 1 Bulf. 146. Cro. Eliz. 908. Moor 606, 668. Yelv. 28. Cro. Car. 537. 4 Leon. 41. 2 Jon. 233.

1. In what cases process of outlawry lies; and by what jurisdiction such processes are to issue.

2. Against whom process of outlawry may be awarded; whether it may be awarded against a peer, an infant, feme sole or covert, several defendants, and principal and accessory.

3. To what place process of outlawry is to issue; of the quinto exactus, and proclamation on an outlawry.

4. What the party must do in order to intitle him to a reversal; and of the effects and consequences of outlawry.

1. In what cases process of outlawry lies; and by what jurisdiction such processes are to issue.

Originally process of outlawry only lay in treason and felony, and was afterwards extended to trespass of an enormous nature; and herein it is laid down by Hawkins, That process of outlawry lies in all appeals, and in all indictments of conspiracy and deceit, or other crimes of a higher nature than trespass vi & armis; but it lies not in an action, nor, as some say, on an indictment ment on a statute, unless it be given by such statute, either expressly, as in the case of præmunire, or impliedly, as in cases made treason or felony by statute, or where a recovery is given by an action in which such process lay before, as in the case of forcible entry. Staundf. 192. Bro. tit. Outlawry, 26, 36, 59. Co. Lit. 128. b. Dyer 213, 214. 2 Hawk. P. C. 302, 303. and several authorities there cited.

In an assise, a capias pro fine lies, and upon that process of outlawry, if the assise be found with force, but being a mixt action, as favouring of the realty, it is out of the statute of additions, 1 Hen. 5. cap. 5. which extends only to personal actions, appeals and indictments. 2 Inst. 665. 6 Mod. 85.

So process of outlawry lies in replevin, and is given by the statute 25 Ed. 3. cap. 17. which gives the capias in this manner; when on the pluries replegiari facias the sheriff returns averia conyata, then a capias in withernam issues, and on that's being returned nulla bona, a capias issues, and so to outlawry; but it does not lie on the original writ of replevin, which is vicontial and determined; therefore as no addition is required in such original writ, so neither ought there to be any in the second writ; for where a writ or process is founded on a former, it must pursue the former, and cannot vary from it. 6 Mod. 84. 1 Salk. 5. Earl of Banbury v. Wood.

By the Common law, in all actions of trespass quare vi & armis, and in which there is a fine to the King, a capias was the process; and herein process of outlawry lay by the Common law. 35 Hen. 6. 6. b. 22 Hen. 6. 13. Rast. Ent. 293. 10 Co. 72. 2 Roll. Abr. 805.

But in account, debt, detinue, annuity, covenant, and such actions as are grounded upon negligence or laches merely, no capias lay at Common law, but only summons and distress infinite, therefore the capias and outlawry in these actions were introduced by acts of parliament. Co. Lit. 128. b. 3 Co. 12. 2 Bulst. 63. 2 Inst. 143. Cro. Jac. 222, 261. Yelv. 158. Raym. 128. 1 Keb. 890, 908. 1 Sid. 248, 258. Of detinue of charters. Dyer 223. a. dubitatur.

By the statute of Marlebridge, cap. 23. the writ of monstravit de compta was given, where before the process in account was summons, attachment, and distress infinite; and by Westm. 2. cap. 11. process of outlawry is given in account. 2 Inst. 145, 380. F. N. B. 259.

By the 25 Ed. 3. cap. 17. Such process shall be made in a writ of debt and detinue of chattels, and taking of beasts, by writ of capias, and by process of exigent, by the sheriff's return, as is used in a writ of account. 3 Co. 12. 2 Roll. Rep. 295. 2 Bulst. 63.

And by the 19 Hen. 7. cap. 9. it is enacted. That like process be had in actions upon the case, as in actions of trespass, or debt.

But it hath been adjudged, that process of outlawry lies in no case but where a capias lies; that therefore where the proceeding is by bill, and not by original, as there can be no capias, so there can be no process of outlawry, as in a bill of privilege by or against an attorney. 1 Leon. 329. 2 Roll. Abr. 76. 1 Sid. 159. 1 Keb. 577.

It is clear, that the courts at Westminster may issue process of outlawry, and that the court of King's Bench, either upon an indictment originally taken there, or removed thither by certiorari, may issue process of capias and exigent into any county of England, upon a non est returned by the sheriff of the county where he is indicted, and a testatum that he is in some other county. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 198.

Also justices of oyer and terminer may issue a capias or exigent, and so proceed to the outlawry of any person indicted before them, directed to the sheriff of the same county where they held their sessions at Common law; and by the statute of 5 Ed. 3. cap. 11. they may issue process of capias and exigent to all the counties of England, against persons indicted or outlawed of felony before them. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 31, 199.

But justices of gaol delivery regularly cannot issue a capias or exigent; because their commission is to deliver the gaol de prisonibus in ea existentibus, so that those whom they have to do with, are always intended in custody already. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 199.

Justices of the peace may make out process of outlawry upon indictments taken before themselves, or upon indictments taken before the sheriff, and returned to the justices of the peace, by the statute of 1 Ed. 4. cap. 1. but the power of the sheriff, to make any process upon indictments, taken before him, is taken away by that statute. 2 Hale's Hist. 199.

It is made a querre by Hale, whether a coroner can, by law, make out process of outlawry, against a man indicted by inquisition before him. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 199.

It hath been held, that though the process in inferior courts be a capias, that yet they cannot proceed to outlaw the party. Yelv. 158. Cro. Jac. 222, 261. Raym. 128. 1 Sid. 248, 259. 1 Keb. 890, 908.

The process to the outlawry, viz. the capias and exigent, must be in the King's name, and under the judicial seal of the King, appointed to that court, which issues that process, and with the teste of the chief justice or chief judge of that court or sessions. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 199.

2. Against whom process of outlawry may be awarded; whether it may be awarded against a peer, an infant, feme sole or covert, several defendants, and principal and accessory.

If a peer of the realm be indicted, and cannot be found, process of outlawry shall be awarded against him, and he shall be outlawed per judicium coronatorum. 2 Inst. 49. 3 Inst. 31. Staundf. 130. 2 Hawk. P. C. 424.

But in civil actions, between party and party, regularly a capias or exigent lies not against a peer, yet in case of an indictment for treason or felony, or for trespass vi & armis, as an assault or riot, process of outlawry shall issue against a peer, for the suit is for the King, and the offence a contempt against him; therefore, if a rescue be returned against a peer, or if a peer be convicted of a disseisin with force, or denies his deed, and it be found against him, a capias pro fine and exigent shall issue, for the King is to have a fine; and the same reason holds upon an indictment of trespass or riot, much more in the case of felony. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 199, 200. Cro. Eliz. 170, 503. 5 Co. 54. 1 Roll. Abr. 220.

An infant above the age of fourteen may be outlawed, and the outlawry is not erroneous; but an infant under the age of fourteen cannot be outlawed; if he be, it is erroneous. 3 Hen. 5. utlag. Fitz. tit. Outlawry 11. 2 Roll. Abr. 805. Dyer 104. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 207, 208.

But the outlawry of such infant is not void, it being of record, but is voidable only by writ of error. Dyer 239. a. 2 Roll. Abr. 805.

A woman is said to be waived, and not outlawed; and the reason why the outlawry of a woman is legally called waivdiaria mulieris, is because women are not sworn in leets or torns; therefore men are called utlagati, i. e. extra legem positi, but women are waivdiatae, i. e. derelictae, left out, or not regarded, because they are not sworn to the law. Co. Lit. 122. b. Litt. sect. 186.

Therefore where a capias and exigent were awarded against three men and two women, and the return was utlagati existunt, where, as to the women, it ought to have been waivdiata existunt, this was held to be error. *Cro. If in an action against husband and wife, the husband is outlawed, and wife waived, and she is taken upon the capias utlagati, tho' she is to be discharged of the imprisonment, (because the plaintiff cannot proceed against her alone) yet she still remains waived, and when her husband is taken he must bring her in. As to awarding outlawry against principal and accessory, by the stat. of Westm. 1. cap. 14. it is provided, that none be outlawed upon appeal of commandment, force aid or receipt, unless he who is appealed of the deed be attainted, so that one like law be used therein thro' this realm; nevertheless, he that will so appeal, shall not by reason of this intermit, or leave off to commence his appeal at the next county, against them, no more than against their principals which be appealed of the deed, but their exigent shall remain, until such as be appealed of the deed, be attainted of outlawry or otherwise.

In the construction of this statute, the following particulars are laid down by Serjeant Hawkins, as most remarkable.

1st, That it seems agreed, that it extends as well to indictments as to appeals, not only because the word appeal in the statute may in a large sense be taken for any accusation in general; but because indictments are certainly as much within the reason of the statute as appeals; and the Common law, (for the settling whereof this statute was made,) did not make any distinction in this respect between appeals and indictments. 2 Inst. 183. 2 Hawk. P. C. 306.

2dly, That it seems agreed, that where-ever some of the defendants are expressly charged as principals, and others as accessories, before the award of this exigent, the outlawry thereon, of those charged as accessories, cannot but be reversible, because it appears upon record that the exigent issued, contrary to the direction of the statute; but if several be outlawed, on a writ of appeal, which chargeth them all alike without any distinction, there can be no advantage taken of the appellant's not having pursued the statute, since it appears not, but that he might have charged them all as principals. 1 Hawk. P. C. 306. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 200.

3dly, That it is strongly holden, that if an appellant take out the exigent, at the same time against all the defendants, he must, when they appear, count against them all as principals, and shall be concluded from charging any of them as accessories, because he has taken out such process as is erroneous, where all are not principals; but he makes a doubt, whether this be law at this day, since all errors, as the law seems now to be holden, are salved by appearance. 2 Hawk. P. C. 306. and vide 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 200.

4thly, That it seems the better opinion, that where there are more than one principal, the exigent shall not issue, till all of them are arraigned; and herein it is said by Hale, that if A. and B. be indicted as principals in felony, and C. as accessory to them both, the exigent against the accessory, shall stay till both be attainted by outlawry or plea; for that it is said, if one be acquitted, the accessory is discharged, because indicted as accessory to both, therefore shall not be put to answer till both be attaint; but hereof he adds a debitur, because tho' C. be accessory to both, he might have been indicted as accessory to one, because the felonies are in law several; but if he be indicted as accessory to both, he must be proved so. 2 Hawk. P. C. 306. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 200, 201.

In treason all are principals; therefore process of outlawry may go against him who receives, at the same time as against him that did the fact. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 238.

3. To what place process of outlawry is to issue; of the quinto exactus, and proclamations on an outlawry.

The exigent must be sued in the county where the party really resides, for there all actions were originally laid; and because outlawries were at first only for treason, felony or very enormous trespasses, the process was to be executed at the Town, which is the sheriff's criminal court; and this held not only before the sheriff, but before the coroners, who were ancient conservators of the peace, being the best men in each county, to preside with the sheriff in his court, and who pronounced the outlawry in the county court on the party's being quinto exactus; therefore anciently there was no occasion for any process to any other county than that in which the party actually resided; but this matter being since altered, and the learning thereof depending on several acts of parliament, it will be necessary to take notice of the statutes. Fitz. Exigent 26. Dyer 295.

And first, It is enacted by the 6 Hen. 6. cap. 1. "That before any exigents be awarded against persons indicted in the King's Bench, of treason or felony, writs of capias shall be directed to the sheriff of the county, whereof they be named in the indictments;" vide the Stat.

And it is further enacted by 8 H. 6. cap. 10. "That upon every indictment or appeal, before any exigent awarded, presently after the first writ of capias returned, another writ of capias shall be awarded, directed to the sheriff of the county, whereof he who is indicted is, or was supposed to be conversant, by the same indictment, by which second writ of capias, the sheriff shall be commanded to take him, if he can be found within his bailiwick; and if he cannot, to make proclamation in two counties, before the return of the same writ, after which writ so served and returned, if he which is so indicted or appealed, come not at the day of such writ returned, the exigent shall be awarded."

This statute not to extend to indictments, or appeals, taken within the county of Chester.

It is enacted by 10 Hen. 6. cap. 6. "That such second capias as is required by 8 Hen. 6. cap. 10. shall be awarded upon indictments or appeals removed into the King's Bench, or elsewhere, by certiorari or otherwise."

And by the 31 Eliz. cap. 3. it is enacted, "That in every action personal, where any writ of exigent shall be awarded, one writ of proclamation shall be awarded out of the same court, and delivered of record to the sheriff of the county where the defendant, at the time of the exigent so awarded, shall be dwelling; which writ of proclamation shall contain the effect of the same action: And that the sheriff, (as mentioned in the stat. which vide,) shall make three proclamations; and that all outlawries pronounced, and no writs of proclamation awarded and returned, according to the form of this statute, shall be utterly void and none effect."

In the construction of these statutes, the following opinions have been holden:

That tho' the words are express, that any outlawry pronounced, contrary to the directions of the statute shall be void; yet it is not to be taken, as if such outlawries were absolutely void, but only voidable by writ of error. Cro. Eliz. 179. 3 Co. 59. Plow. 137. Hob. 166.

If a defendant be expressly named of the same county wherein he is indicted, or appealed, and be also named under an alias dictus of another, it hath been adjudged, that there is no need of any capias, with a command for proclamation according to 8 Hen. 6. c. 10. because that which comes under the alias dictus is not traversable nor material: Also if a defendant be named of B. and late of C. there is no need of any capias to the sheriff of the county wherein C. lies; because it appears, that defendant is at present conversant at B. but if a defendant be named of no certain place at present, but only late of B. and late of C. and late of D. &c. being all in different counties from that in which the prosecution is commenced, a capias shall go to the sheriff of each county. 2 Hawk. P. C. 304-5. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 195-6. Vide Cro. Jac. 167. Leche's case. And also 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 201-2. Where it hath been holden, that in London, where the holding of the huffings is uncertain, no exigi facias shall issue with an allocato huffings, because the court cannot take notice of the set times of holding it, as they may of the times of holding the county-courts; but it is now agreed, that if an exigent issues in London, and they begin Huffling de placito terra (as they may) they shall proceed along at that Huffings to the outlawry, outlawry, without mingling their Husting de communibus placitis; but if an allocate Husting comes, they shall proceed without omitting any Husting. Palm. 287. 2 Leon. 14. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 202.

4. What the party must do in order to intitle him to a reversal; and the effects and consequences of a reversal.

Regularly in all outlawries, as well personal as criminal, the party in order to reverse the same was to appear in person, and could not appear by attorney. 2 Leon. 22.

But now by the 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 18. No person who shall be outlawed in the court of B. R. for any cause whatsoever, (treason and felony only excepted,) shall be compelled to appear in person in the said court to reverse such outlawry, but may appear by attorney and reverse the same without bail in all cases, (except where special bail shall be ordered by the said court.)

And that if any person outlawed in the said court, (other than for treason or felony,) shall be taken upon any capias utlagatum out of the said court, it shall be lawful for the sheriff (in all cases where special bail is not required by the said court,) to take an attorney's engagement under his hand to appear for the defendant, and reverse the outlawries, and thereupon to discharge the defendant; and where special bail is required, the sheriff shall and may take security of the defendant by bond, with one or more sufficient surety or sureties, in the penalty of double the sum for which special bail is required, and no more, for appearance by attorney at the return of the writ, and to perform such things as shall be required by the court; and after such bond taken to discharge the defendant.

And if any person outlawed, and taken upon a capias utlagatum, shall not be able within the return of the writ to give security where special bail is required, security may be given after the return, and after the commitment.

It hath been held, that if the party outlawed comes in by cepi corpus, he shall not be admitted to reverse the outlawry without appearing in person, as in such case he was obliged to do at Common law; or putting in bail with the sheriff for his appearance, upon the return of the cepi corpus and for doing what the court shall order. 2 Salk. 496.

Bail must be put in before it can be reversed. 1 Wils. 3.

By Westm. 1. cap. 9. it is expressly provided, that those who are outlawed, have abjured the realm, &c. should be excluded the benefit of replevin; yet it hath been always held, that the court of King's Bench may in their discretion, in special cases, bail a person upon an outlawry of felony; as where he pleads, that he is not of the same name, and therefore not the same person with him that was outlawed, or alleges any other error in the proceedings. 2 Hawk. P. C. 98.

By the 31 Elix. cap. 3. sed. 3. it is enacted, "That before any allowance of any writ of error, or reversing of any outlawry be had by plea, or otherwise, through or by want of any proclamation to be had or made according to the form of this statute, the defendant and defendants in the original action shall put in bail, not only to appear and answer to the plaintiff in the former suit in a new action to be commenced by the said plaintiff for the cause mentioned in the first action, but also to satisfy the condemnation, if the plaintiff shall begin his suit before the end of two terms next after the allowing the writ of error, or otherwise avoiding of the said outlawry."

A foreigner was outlawed and goods, &c. seized, and court would not reverse the outlawry on motion, but put him to his writ of error, whereby the plaintiff got bail. Cartb. 459. Mattbeus v. Erbo.

H. was outlawed, in two actions, one for 10 l. the other for 40 s. and on reversing the outlawry the court took special bail for the first, and an appearance for the other, upon the statute 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. and the recognition was taken pursuant to 31 Elix. c. 3. 2 Salk. 496.

It is clearly agreed, that an attainder of felony of a person who had any lands shall never be reversed by writ of error, without a scire facias against all the tenants and lords mediate and immediate; but it is settled, that such scire facias is not necessary in the case of high treason. Dyer 3^a. pl. 20. Cro. Eliz. 235. 1 Keb. 141. pl. 11. 1 Sid. 316. 3 Keb. 39. 3 Mod. 42, 47. 4 Mod. 366. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. S. P. and see Ld. Raym. 154.

Also it is said; that it is not necessary in the case of felony, when it is suggested on the roll that the party had no lands, and the attorney general confesses it. 2 Salk. 495.

It is agreed, that after an outlawry of treason or felony is reversed, the party shall be put to plead to the indictment, for that still remains good, and he may be tried at the King's Bench bar; or the record may be remitted into the country, if it were removed into the King's Bench by certiorari, with a command to the justices below, to proceed by the statute of 6 Hen. 6. cap. 1. Cro. Jac. 646. Cro. Car. 365. 3 Mod. 42. 6 Mod. 115. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 209.

So if a man be outlawed by process in an information, and comes in and reverses the outlawry, he must plead insanter to the information. 1 Salk. 371. Rex v. Hill. 5 Mod. 141. S. P.

The law is the same in civil cases; and therefore if an outlawry in a personal action be reversed, the original remains. March 9.

Vide the case of Whitwick v. Howenden. 3 Lev. 245.

It hath been adjudged, that if the King grant over the lands of a person outlawed for treason or felony, and afterwards the outlawry be reversed, the party may enter on the patentee, and need neither sue a petition to the King, nor a scire facias against the patentee. 1 And. 188. A person shall, after outlawry reversed, be restored to his law, and to be of ability to sue. Co. Lit. 288. b.

If the goods of a person outlawed are sold by the sheriff upon a capias utlagatum, and after the outlawry is reversed by writ of error, he shall be restored to the goods themselves; because the sheriff was not compellable to sell these goods, but only to keep them to the use of the King. 5 Co. 90. Hoe's case. 1 Roll. Abr. 778. S. C. cited.

If an advowson come to the King, by forfeiture upon an outlawry, and, the church becoming void, the King presents, and then the outlawry is reversed; yet the King shall enjoy that presentment, because the presentment there came to the King as the profit of the advowson. Moor 269. Beverly v. Cromwall.

But if the church be void at the time of the outlawry, and the presentation is thereby forfeited as a chattel principally and distinct of itself, there, upon reversal of the outlawry, the party shall be restored to the presentation. Cro. Eliz. 170. agreed per curiam.

If a termor being outlawed for felony, grants over his term, after the outlawry is reversed, the grantee may have trespass for the profits taken between the reversal of the outlawry and the assignment; for by the reversal it is, as if no outlawry had been, and there is no record of it. Cro. Eliz. 170. Ognell's case, and 13 Co. 20, 22.

It is said, that if a man be outlawed in the King's Bench, and the party's goods are seized into the King's hands, and then the outlawry is reversed, there can be no restitution; the reason whereof is, for that the court of King's Bench cannot send a writ to the Treasurer; and the court of Exchequer have no record before them to issue out a warrant for restitution. 5 Mod. 61. Oxgang, (from Ox, i. e. bos, and gang, or gate, iter) Is commonly taken for fifteen acres of land, or as much as one ox can plough in a year.

Six oxgangs of land, is so much as six oxen can plough. Crompt. Jurisd. 220. But an oxgang seemeth properly to be spoken of such land as lieth in Gaynour. *Old Nat. Oyer. This word was anciently used for what we now call Affixis. Anno 13 Ed. 1.

Oyer of a Deed, Is where a man brings an action of debt upon a bond, or other deed, and defendant appears, and prays that he may bear the bond, &c. wherewith he is charged, which shall be allowed him. 2 Lill. Abr. 266.

Defendant may crave oyer of the writ, or of the bond, or other specialty upon which the action is brought, that is to bear it read to him; the generality of defendants in the times of ancient simplicity being supposed incapable to read it themselves: Whereupon the whole is entered verbatim upon the record, and the defendant may take advantage of any condition or other part of it, not stated in the plaintiff's declaration. Black. Com. 3 V. 299.

The demand of oyer is a kind of plea, and may be counterpleaded: Where there may be oyer, the party demanding it is not bound to plead without it; but defendant may plead without it if he will, on taking upon him to remember the bond or deed; tho' if he plead without oyer, he cannot after waive his plea, and demand oyer. Mod. Caf. 28. 3 Salk. 119. In the court of B. R. oyer may be prayed after imparlance; but not in C. B. 5 Rep. 74. See Ld. Raym. 970. After imparlance oyer cannot be demanded, because imparlance is always to another term: Also after a plea in abatement, oyer may not be had the same term, to plead another dilatory plea. Mod. Caf. 27. 2 Lill. 267. Sed. qu. as to oyer after imparlance.

Oyer in C. B. must be demanded, before time for pleading expires. 2 Barnes 265.

Omission of, per scriptum suum obligatorium, cured by proferet and oyer. Ld. Raym. 1056.

An imperfect oyer, if received, makes no variance, ib. 1176.

To demand oyer of an obligation, is not only to desire the plaintiff's attorney to read the same; but to have a copy thereof, that the defendant may consider what to plead to the action. Hob. 217. And when on oyer of a deed, it is entered, the whole case appears to the court as if the deed were in the plea, and the deed is become parcel of the record: Tho' oyer of a deed can only be demanded, during the term it is produced in court; and then it may be entered in hac verba, and there may be demurrer, or issue upon it, &c. 5 Rep. 76. Lutw. 1644. 3 Salk. 119.

If a bond is brought into court, oyer is grantable only the first term, for afterwards it is adjudged in the possession of the party.—Yet oyer of a recognizance was granted in a term subsequent to the declaration. Ld. Raym. 84.

Where oyer is prayed, it is always intended that the is in court; which it is not of another term. Sid. 308. A defendant ought to crave oyer of the deed plaintiff's deed, on which he hath declared; and cannot set forth another, to plead performance thereof. Mod. Caf. 154. 2 Nels. Abr. 1225. If there is misnomer in a bond, &c. the defendant is to plead the misnomer, and that he made no such deed, without craving oyer; for if he doth, he admits his name to be right. 1 Salk. 7.

If defendant will take advantage of a variance between the writ and count, he must crave oyer of the writ, and spread it on the record, i. e. shew it to the court. Wils. par. 2. 395.

Executors bringing action of debt, the defendant may demand oyer of the testament, &c. oyer is not to be dispensed with tho' a deed be lost. Where a deed is in the hands of a third person, the court will oblige him to give oyer and produce it. 2 Strange 1198. And see Wils. par. 1. 16. Where a deed is pleaded, the other party cannot alledge that there is other matter contained in the deed, but must set it forth on oyer. Strange 227. A party who has had oyer is not obliged to set it forth in pleading. Strange 1241. And see Wils. par. 1. 97.

Formerly all demands of oyer were in court, as it is now in cases of appeals: But now in other cases, it is demanded and granted between the attornies. Vide Mod. 28. *Longwill v. Oyer de Record, (audire recordum) Is a petition made in court, that the judges, for better proof-take, will bear or look upon any record. And it hath been adjudged, that the craving oyer of an original writ is not like the craving oyer of a deed; because the deed is always produced by the plaintiff, and it is the act of the party, wherefore he shall not be admitted to say that it is not his deed: But the filing a writ, and having it read on oyer demanded, is the act of the court. 2 Lutw. 1641. See Doct. Plac. 270-2.

If defendant pleads another action depending for the same cause, in the same court, the plaintiff may pray oyer of the record, being in the same court; and if there is no oyer of the record, the plaintiff may sign judgment by default. For in all cases where a deed or record is pleaded, and oyer prayed; if oyer is not granted, the plea is as no plea. Ld. Raym. 347. Keilw. 95, 96. Cartb. 453. 3 Salk. 119.

A defendant is not intitled to oyer of the writ, after judgment of respondens oyster, tho' in the same term. Ld. Raym. 970.

Oyer and Terminer, (Fr. Ouir & Terminer, Lat. Audiendo & Terminando) Is a commission directed to the judges, and other gentlemen of the county to which it is issued, by virtue whereof they have power to bear and determine treasons, and all manner of felonies and trespasses. Crompt. Jurisd. 121. 4 Inst. 152. 2 Inst. 419. It is the first and largest of the five commissions, by which our judges of assize sit in their several circuits; And is general, for trying all offenders and offences; or special, to try only particular persons, or offences: And in our statutes it is often printed Oyer and Determiner. 4 Inst. 162. The usual commission of Oyer and Terminer of justices of assize, is general; and when any sudden insurrection, or trespass is committed, which requires speedy reformation, then a special commission is immediately granted. Westm. 2. 13 Ed.

Ed. 1. c. 29. F. N. B. 110. And this commission was formerly issued, only where some insurrection was made, or heinous misdemeanor committed; when the manner and usage was to grant a commission of Oyer and Terminer, to hear and determine it: and the stat. 2 Ed. 3. c. 2. requireth that no commission of Oyer and Terminer be granted, but before the justices of one bench or other, or the justices itinerant, and that for horrible trespasses. New Nat. Br. 243. A man may have a special commission of Oyer and Terminer, to enquire of extortions and oppressions of under-sheriffs, bailiffs, clerks of the market, and all other officers, &c. on the complaint and suit of any one who will sue it out: And the King may make a writ of Association unto the justices of Oyer and Terminer, to admit those into their company whom he hath associated unto them; also another writ may be sent to the judges to proceed, altho' all the justices do not come at the day of the sessions; and this writ is called the writ of Si non omnes, &c. Ibid. 245, 247. As to these commissions it is said, that if a commission of Oyer and Terminer, &c. be awarded to certain persons to enquire at such a place, they can neither open their commission at another, nor adjourn it thither, or give judgment there; if they do, all their proceedings are, as coram non iudice: But it is held, that justices appointed pro hac vice, may adjourn their commission, from one day to another, tho' there be no words in their commission to such purpose; for a general commission authorizing persons to do a thing, implicitly allows them convenient time for the doing it. 2 Hawk. P. C. 18. Upon the general commission of Oyer and Terminer, there should issue a precept to the sheriff in the name of the commissioners, bearing date fifteen days before their sessions, that he return twenty-four persons for a grand jury ad inquirendum, &c. on such a day; and the sheriff is to return his panel annexed to the precept: And by the statute 5 Ed. 3. c. 11. Justices of Oyer and Terminer may issue process of outlawry in any county of England, against persons indicted before them; but all their processes are regularly to be in the names, and under the seals of the commissioners, viz. three of them, one being of the Quorum. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 26, 31. The same justices, at the same time, may execute the commission of Oyer and Terminer, and also that of gaol-delivery; and the same persons being authorized by both these commissions, may proceed by virtue of the one in those cases, where they have no jurisdiction by the other, and make up their records accordingly. Ibid. 20. But justices of Oyer and Terminer cannot proceed but upon indictments taken before themselves, unless they have a commission of gaol-delivery likewise, or a special commission; for the commission of Oyer and Terminer is, Ad inquirendum, audiendum & terminandum, To inquire, hear and determine. Wood's Inst. 478. And tho' justices of gaol-delivery, have a more general commission for trying malefactors, than the commissioners of Oyer and Terminer have; yet such justices may not proceed, but on indictments found before other justices, as justices of peace, &c. 2 Hawk. 24. On indictments found before the justices of Oyer and Terminer, they may proceed the same day against the parties indicted.

There is a Special Commission of Oyer and Terminer granted upon urgent occasion; and the party suing it, might thereupon take out a writ to the sheriff, commanding him to arrest goods wrongfully taken away, and keep them in safe custody, till order made concerning them, by the justices assigned to determine the matter. *Reg. Pain Fort & Dure, (Lat. pœna fortis & dura, Fr. peine forte & dure) Signifies a special punishment inflicted on those who being arraigned of felony, refuse to put themselves on the ordinary trial, but stubbornly stand mute; it is vulgarly called Pressing to Death. Stat. Westm. 1. c. 12.

If a criminal doth not plead directly to the fact, or put himself on trial by the country, he shall be put to the penance of pain fort & dure, in cases of petit treason and felony; and forfeit his goods; and some criminals have undergone this punishment, to prevent attainder, corruption of blood, and forfeiture of lands; but on standing mute in high treason, the highest offence, and in petit larceny, the lowest of all felonies, the offenders shall have the like judgment, as if they had been convicted by confession or verdict. 3 Inst. 217. H. P. C. 226. Kel. 27. Women standing mute in felony, are liable to this punishment as well as men. 2 Inst. 177.

For the judgment of pain fort & dure by the Common law, and according to the usual practice, as recorded in our books, see tit. Mute.

Before judgment passes of pain fort & dure, the court orders a taste to be given to the criminal of the pain to be endured, if he will not comply; and the court will not proceed to this judgment, before all methods are used to persuade him to plead: This is the constant practice of Newgate sessions. *Kel. 27, 28. new laws, made pro re nata, and by no means an execution of such as are already in being. Black. Com. 4 V. 256.

An act passed in the ninth year of King George 1. for inflicting pains and penalties on the late bishop of Rochester, Mr. Kelly, and others, for being concerned in Layer's conspiracy; by virtue of which statute, the bishop was deprived and banished, and disabled to hold any office, dignity, benefice, &c. And the others were imprisoned during life, and to forfeit all their lands and goods; and escaping from prison, or the bishop returning from banishment, to be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy, &c. Also persons corresponding with the bishop, (except licensed under the sign manual) were adjudged felons by the statute. They were condemned by parliament for want of such evidence as is strictly required in the Common law courts. 9 Geo. 1. c. 16, 17.

Painters. The price of painters work is limited by statute; who shall not take above 16 d. a day, for laying any flat colour mingled with oil or size, upon timber, stone, &c. And plasterers are forbid using the trade of a painter in London, or to lay any colour of painting, unless they are servants to painters, &c. on pain of 2 s. But they may use whiting, blacking, red lead, &c. mixt with size only. Plasterers not to exercise the trade of a painter in London, without serving an apprenticeship. 1 Jac. 1. c. 20.

Pais, A county or region. Trials per Pais, which Spelman in his Glossary saith, Nen intelligendum est de quovis populo, sed de compagesibus, hoc est eorum qui ex eadem sunt comitatu, quem majores nostri pagum dixerunt & incolis, inde pais, g, in i, vel u, converjs.

Paisley, A duty of excise granted to the town, 2 Geo. 2. c. 96.

Paisso, Pannage, or liberty for hogs to run in forests or woods to feed on mast. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 682. See Passune.

Palaces, The steward, treasurer, and comptroller, may inquire by a jury of the King's servants, if any of the servants conspire the death of the King, or of any counsellor, &c. 3 Hen. 7. c. 14. The yeomen of the crown and grooms of the chamber shall attend their offices. 4 Hen. 7. c. 7. The limits of the palace of Westminster, 28 Hen. 8. c. 12. The great master of the King's house, to have the same authority as the lord steward, 32 Hen. 8. c. 39. Repealed, 1 Mar. 2. c. 4. The penalty of striking in the King's court. 33 Hen. 8. c. 12. Inquiries of murders, &c. within the verge, ib. Entering into the King's house with intent to steal, made felony, ib.

Palatium, A duty to lords of manors, for exporting and importing vessels of wine, in any of their ports.—Quieti de omni telonio, & passagio, cobuagio, pallagio, &c.

Palfrey, (Paisfredus, palafredus, palefredus, palifredus,) Is one of the better sort of horses used by noblemen or others for state: And sometimes of old taken for a horse fit for a woman to ride. Camden says, that William Fauconberge held the manor of Cuxeny, in the county of Nottingham in sergeantry, by the service of shoeing the King's palfrey, when the King should come to Mansfield. See Co. on Lit. 149.

Palicen, A park pale. Cowell.

Paltingman, (mentioned in stat. 22 Ed. 4. c. 23. and 11 H. 7. c. 23.) Seems to be a merchant denizen, one born within the English pale. But Dr. Skinner judges it to signify a fishmonger, or merchant of fish. Cowell.

Palla, A canopy; also often used for an altar-cloth. Matt. Paris. sub. Ann. 1236, Chartular. Gloston. MS. fol. 12.

Pallio cooperire. It was anciently a custom where children were born out of wedlock, and their parents afterwards intermarried, that those children, together with the father and mother, stood under a cloth extended while the marriage was solemnizing, which was in the nature of adoption; and by such custom, the children were taken to be legitimate.—In signum legitimisationis nati ante matrimonium confuerunt poni sub pallio super parentes eorum extenso in matrimonii solemnizatione. Epist. Rob. Grossthead Episc. Lincoln.

Pallium, A word often mentioned in our old historians; Durandus tells us, that it is a garment made of white wool, after the following manner, viz. The nuns of St. Agnus every year, on the feast-day of their saint, offer two white lambs on the altar of their church, during the time they sing Agnus Dei in a solemn mass; which lambs are afterwards taken by two of the canons of the Lateran church, and by them given to the Pope's subdeacons, who put them to pasture till shearing time, and then they are shorn, and the pall is made of their wool, mixed with other white wool: The pall being thus made is carried to the Lateran church, and there placed on the high altar by the deacons of that church on the bodies of St. Peter and St. Paul; and after a usual watching, it is carried away in the night, and delivered to the subdeacons, who lay it up safe. And because it was taken from the body of St. Peter, it signifies the plenitude of ecclesiastical power; and therefore it was the prerogative of Popes, who pretend to be the immediate successors of that saint, to invest other prelates with it, which at first was done nowhere but at Rome, but afterwards at other places. Durandus's Rationale.

Palis, The pontifical vesture made of lamb's wool, in breadth not exceeding three fingers, cut round that they may cover the shoulders; they have two labels or strings on each side, before and behind, and likewise four purple crosses on the right and left, fastened with pins of gold, whose heads are Saphire: These vestments the Pope gives or lends to archbishops and metropolitans, and upon extraordinary occasions to other bishops; who wear them about their necks at the altar, above their other ornaments. The pall was first given to the bishop of Offia, by Pope Marcus the Second, Anno 336. And the preface to an ancient synod here in England, wherein Odo, archbishop of Canterbury presided, begins thus;—Ego Odo humilis & extremus, divina largiente Clementia, Almi prefulis & palati honore ditatus, &c. Selden's Hist. Tithes 227. Cressy's Church Hist. 972. Stat. 25 H. 8.

Palmetry, A kind of divination, practised by looking upon the lines and marks of the hands and fingers; being a deceitful art used by Egyptians, prohibited by the statute of 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 4. See Black. Com. 4 V. 165, 6.

Pamphlets, see Table to the Statutes, tit. Stamps.

Pandects, Are the books of the Civil law, compiled by Justinian; mentioned in the historians of this nation. Bede, c. 5. See Black. Com. 1 V. 17. 81.

Pandepatrix, An ale wife who both brews and sells ale or beer; from pandoxatorium, a brewhouse, Statut. & Consuetud. Burgi Villæ de Montgom'. Temp. Hen. 2.

Panell, (panella, panellum) According to Sir Edward Coke, denotes a little part; but the learned Spelman says, that it signifies a schedula vel pagina, a schedule or page; as a panel of parchment, or a counterpane of an indenture; But it is used more particularly for a schedule or roll, containing the names of such jurors as the sheriff returns to pass upon any trial. Kitch. 226. Reg. Orig. 223. And the impanelling a jury is the entering their names by the sheriff into a panel or little schedule of parchment; in panello offise. 8 H. 6. c. 12. Panels of juries are to be returned into court, on writs of Nisi prius, &c. before inquests can be taken upon them, by stat. 42 Ed. 3. c. 11. And persons indicted of high treason shall have a copy of the panel of the jurors, who are returned to try them, two days at least before tried. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 3. But it is said, that in trials before justices of gaol-delivery, the prisoner has no right to a copy of the panel before the time of his trial; except only in cases within that statute. 2 Hawk. P. C. 410. See Black. Com. 3 V. 354. 4 V. 299, 344.

Panis armigerorum, The bread distributed to servants. Mon. 1. p. 420.

Panis bisus, Coarse bread. Id. ib.

Panctia, A pantry, or place to set up cold victuals. Cowell.

Panis,

Panls, called Blackwytlof, Bread of a middle sort, between white and brown, such as in Kent is called Ravel-bread. In religious houses it was their coarser bread, made for ordinary guests, and distinguished from their houfhold loaf, or panis conventualis, which was pure-manchet, or white-bread. Conwell.

Panls militaris, Hard bisket, brown george, camp-bread, coarse and black. The prior and convent of Ely grant to John Grove, a corrody or allowance, — Ad suum viduum quolibet die unum panem monachalem, i. e. a white loaf; and to his servant unum panem nigrum militare, i. e. a little brown loaf or bisket. Cartulur. Elyn. MS. f. 47.

Pannage or Patonage, (pannagium, Fr. pasnage) Is that food which the swine feed upon in the woods, as mast of beech, acorns, &c. Alimentum, quod in silvis colligunt pecora, ab arboribus dilapsum: Also it is the money taken by the Agistors for the food of hogs in the King's forest. Crompt. Jurisd. 155. Stat. West. 2. c. 25. Manwood says pannage signifies most properly the mast of the woods or hedge rows: And Linwood thus defines it: Pannagium est pastus pecorum in nemoribus & in sylvis, utpote de glandibus & aliis fructibus arborum sylvestrium, quarum fructus aliter non solent colligi. It is mentioned in the statute 20 Car. 2. c. 3. And in ancient charters this word is variously written; as pannagium, pasnagium, patnagium, paunagium & peffona. See 8 Rep. 47.

Pannus, A garment made with skins. — Statutum fuit quod nullos habet pannos decisos & laceratos, Fleta, lib. 2. c. 14.

Paper-Books, Are the issues in law, &c. upon special pleadings, made up by the clerk of the papers, who is an officer for that purpose. And the clerks of the papers of the court of King's Bench, in all copies of pleas and paper-books by them made up, shall subscribe to such paper-books, the names of the counsel who have signed such pleas, as well on the behalf of the plaintiff as defendant; and in all paper-books delivered to the judges of the court, the names of the counsellors, who did sign those pleas, are to be subscribed to the books, by the clerks or attornies who deliver the same. Pasch. 18 Car. 2. 2 Lill. Abr. 268.

Paper-Office, Is an ancient office within the palace of Whitehall, wherein all the publick papers, writings, matters of state and council, letters, intelligences, negotiations of the King's ministers abroad, and generally all the papers and dispatches that pass thro' the offices of the two principal secretaries of state, are lodged and transmitted, and there remain disposed in the way of library. Also an office belonging to the court of King's Bench so called.

Papists, Are those who profess the Popish religion in this kingdom: And since the Reformation there have been many statutes concerning them. By the 35 Elix. c. 2. Papists are to repair to their usual place of residence, and not remove above five miles, without licence, &c. The 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. enacts, That no Papists, or Popish recusant convict, shall come to court; practice the Common law, Civil law, physick, &c. or bear any publick office or charge, but shall be utterly disabled to exercise the same; and liable to a penalty of 100 l. But offices of inheritance may be executed by deputies taking the oaths, by 1 W. & M. Papists, and trustees for Papists, are incapable to present to any benefice, school, hospital, &c. or to grant any avoidance of a benefice, and the two universities shall present; the Chancellor, &c. of Oxford, to present to benefices lying in such and such counties; and the university of Cambridge to benefices in others, particularly mentioned in the statute; and a bill may be brought in a court of equity to discover secret trust, &c. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. It has been adjudged on that statute, that the person is only disabled to present; and that he continues patron to all other purposes. Cawley 230. That such a person by being disabled to grant an avoidance, is not hindered from granting the advowson itself, in fee, or for life, for good consideration. 1 Jen. 19, 20. And that if an advowson or avoidance belonging to a Papist come into the King's hands, by reason of an outlawry, or conviction of recusancy, &c. the King and not the universities, shall present. 1 Jen. 20. Hob. 126. But where a presentment is vested in the university, at the time when the church becomes void, it shall not be defeated again, by the patron's conforming, &c. 10 Rep. 57. Papists, and Popish recusants, married not according to the orders of the church of England, are disabled, the husband to be tenant by the curtesy, and the wife to have dower, &c. and incur a forfeiture of 100 l. Also not baptizing their children by a lawful minister, is liable to the like penalty: And not being buried according to the Ecclesiastical laws, the executors shall forfeit 20 l. &c. And Papists are incapable to be executors, administrators, or guardians; disabled to sue actions, and as persons excommunicate till they conform, &c. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. And it is said that being convicted of Popish recusancy, they may be taken up by the writ de excom. capiend. And shall not be admitted as competent witnesses in a cause: But this seems to be carried beyond the intent of the statute. 2 Bull. 155, 156. 1 Hawk. P. C. 23. Persons going beyond sea to be trained up by Papists, shall forfeit their goods and chattels, if they do not conform within six months after their return: And sending children abroad to be thus trained up, is liable to a penalty of 100 l. Stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 2. The Lord Mayor of the city of London, and justices of peace, &c. are to cause to be brought before them Papists, within the said city and ten miles thereof, and tender them the declaration 30 Car. 2. c. 1. against transubstantiation; and refusing to subscribe it, they shall suffer as Popish recusants convict: But such as use any trade or manual art; and foreign merchants, servants to ambassadors, &c. are excepted. 1 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 9. Papists refusing to appear and subscribe the said declaration, are not to keep in their houses any arms, weapons, gunpowder, &c. And justices of peace may order any such to be seized: And they may not keep any horse above the value of 5 l. which may be also seized, And persons concealing arms or horses, or hindering a search after them shall be committed, and forfeit treble value. 1 W. & M. c. 15. If any person refuse to repeat and subscribe the above-mentioned declaration, and shall thereupon have his name and place of abode certified and recorded at the general quarter-sessions of the peace, as by the act is appointed, he shall be disabled to make any presentation, &c. And presenting contrary to this act shall forfeit 500 l. 1 W. & M. c. 26. Papists who keep schools are to suffer perpetual imprisonment: And persons educated in the Popish religion, not taking the oaths and subscribing the declaration in the 30 Car. 2. c. 1. within six months after they attain the age of eighteen years, shall be disabled to take or inherit lands, but not their heirs or posterity; and during their lives or refusal, the next Protestant relation shall enjoy, &c. And where the parents of Protestant children are Papists, the Lord Chancellor may take care of the education of such Protestant children, and make order for their maintenance suitable to the ability of the parent. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4. Every trustee, &c. for Popish children is disabled to present to any benefice, &c. and presentations by them shall be void; and the Chancellor and scholars of the universities shall present, as by the act 3 Jac. 1. And bishops are required to examine persons presented on oath, before institution, whether the persons presenting be the real patron, and made the presentation in his own right, or whether he be not a trustee for a Papist, &c. And if the parson presented refuse to be examined, his presentation shall be void. 12 Ann. sess. 2. c. 14. Grants of advowsons, or right of presentation to churches, &c. by any Papists, or person any ways in trust for him, to be void; except made for valuable consideration to some Protestant purchaser; for the benefit of a Protestant only; and persons claiming under such grant, shall be deemed as trustees for a Papist, and they and their presentees be compelled to make discovery thereof and the intent, as directed by 12 Ann. &c.

11 Geo. 2. c. 17. Papists are to register their estates, as by this statute is directed, on pain of forfeiture; and lands registered must be expressed in what parishes they lie, who are the possessors thereof, the estate therein, and the yearly rent, &c. Persons suing in Chancery for forfeitures for default of registry, may demand all discoveries as if purchasers; and they may bring ejectment on their own demise, and give the act and special matter in evidence. 1 Geo. 1. c. 55. Sales of lands by Papists (incurring the disabilities 11 Edw. 3.) to Protestant purchasers, are confirmed notwithstanding the disability of persons joining in the sale; unless before such sales any person who is to take advantage of the disability, has recovered, or entered his claim, and given notice, &c. No lands shall pass from Papists, by deed or will, without inrollment: and Papists are rendered incapable to purchase lands. 3 Geo. 1. c. 18. Deeds and wills of Papists have further time to be inrolled, and not avoidable for want thereof, &c. by 6 Geo. 2. c. 5. All persons within England, of the age of eighteen years, not having taken the oaths, and who refuse to take the same, shall register their estates as Papists; or neglecting such registry, are to forfeit the inheritance of their lands, two thirds to the King, and the other third to the prosecutor. 9 Geo. 1. c. 24. But by a subsequent act, this shall not extend to oblige any woman to take the oaths, or to register her estate; nor any person that hath only an interest in lands in reversion; or to estates under 10 l. a year, &c. And only one year's rent and profits of lands is forfeited for default of registering by this statute, recoverable by actions in the courts at Westminster, within six months after the offence; persons in prison, beyond sea, non compos, &c. are to have six months to take the oaths and register their estates, after the removal of their disabilities; and certificates by the proper officers, shall be allowed as evidence of taking the oaths, &c. 10 Geo. 1. c. 4. By a late statute, the reputed owners of estates being Papists, on conforming to the Protestant religion, and taking the oaths, the same to be recorded, and they and all Protestants claiming under them, shall possess the estates freed of disabilities incurred by such owners, &c. And any person's right intitled to a reversion, is saved if his suit be commenced in twelve months after the determination of the precedent estate. But persons conforming as aforesaid, and afterwards returning to the Popish religion, shall be ever after incapable of any benefit by this act 11 Geo. 2. c. 17. A Papist tenant in tail suffers a recovery to the use of himself in fee, in order to make a marriage settlement; this is not a purchase within 11 W. 3. c. 4. Strange 267. Acts are made almost every other sessions, for allowing further time for the inrolment of deeds and wills made by Papists, and for relief of Protestant purchasers. See Oaths. Papists taxed. Papists, or reputed papists, who refuse to take the oaths 1 W. & M. are to pay double to the land tax, &c. Stat. 8 W. 3. c. 6. And a tax of 100,000 l. for the year 1723. was laid on the lands of all papists, over and above the double taxes, towards reimbursing the publick charges occasioned by late conspiracies; charged so much on every county, &c. and leviable by the commissioners of the land tax, by Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 18.

Par, Is a term in Exchange, where a man to whom a bill is payable, receives of the acceptor just so much in value, &c. as was paid to the drawer by the remitter. Merch. Dic. And in exchange of money, par is defined to be a certain number of pieces of the coin of one country, containing in them an equal quantity of silver to that of another number of pieces of the coin of some other country; as where thirty-six shillings of the money of Holland, have just as much silver, as twenty shillings English money; and bills of exchange drawn from England to Holland, at the rate of thirty-six shillings Dutch, for each pound sterling, is according to the par. Lock's Confid. of Money, pag. 18.

Paracium, The tenure that is between parceners, viz. that which the youngest oweth to the eldest. Domesday.

Parage. (paragium) Signifies equality of name, blood, or dignity; but more especially of land, in the partition of an inheritance between coheirs: hence comes to disparage and disparagement. Co. Litt. 166.

Paragium, Was commonly taken for the equal condition betwixt two parties, to be contracted in marriage: for the old laws did strictly provide, that young heirs should be disposed in matrimony cum paragio, with persons of equal birth and fortune, sine disparagations.

Paramount, (compounded of two French words, par, i. e. per and monter, ascendere) Signifies in our law the highest lord of the fee, of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. F. N. B. 135. As there may be a lord mesne, where lands are held of an inferior lord, who holds them of a superior under certain services; so this superior lord is lord paramount: and all honours, which have manors under them, have lords paramount. Also the King is chief lord, or lord paramount of all the lands in the kingdom. Co. Litt. 1.

Paraphernalia, or Paraphernalia, (from the Greek Παρά, Præter, and Δορί, Dos) Are those goods which a wife challengeth over and above her dower or jointure, after her husband's death; as furniture for her chamber, wearing apparel, and jewels, which are not to be put into the inventory of her husband. A wife, after the death of her husband, may claim her paraphernalia or necessary apparel for her body, and cloth given her to make a garment, &c. besides her dower; so that the husband cannot give them away by will: but she shall not have excessive apparel, beyond her rank. Pearl necklaces, chains of diamonds, gold watches, &c. may be included under paraphernalia, if they were usually worn by the wife, and suitable to her quality, and the fashion of the times, and they are assets to pay debts and legacies; provided the husband does not give these away by will. 1 Roll. Abr. 911. 3 Cro. 343. Kitch. 369. Noy's Max. 168. It was adjudged in the Viscountess Bindon's case, that paraphernalia ought to be allowed to a widow, having regard to her quality and degree; and that her husband being a Viscount, she shall be allowed her jewels to the value of 500 marks, &c. 2 Leon. 166. A widow retained a chain of diamonds and pearls, against the devise of her husband; and two judges held, that she might detain them, because they were convenient for a woman of her quality; but two other judges were of a contrary opinion, that paraphernalia should be not only convenient, but necessary; otherwise the widow shall not detain them against the express devise of the husband: tho' it is said it was adjudged, that the widow might detain necessary apparel, and likewise ornaments, against the devise of her husband; and that he cannot dispose of them by will, tho' he might have sold them in his life-time; for immediately upon his death, the property is vested in the widow. Cro. Car. 347. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1225. All the wife's wearing apparel, more than that which is necessary and convenient, is a chattel in the husband; and after the husband's death shall go to his executors: but what is necessary for her condition and state, and comes under paraphernalia, she shall have as her own goods, and may dispose of at her death; or take after the death of her husband. Bro. 9. DoB. & Stud. 17. Tho' by our law the wife may not make a will of and devise them, without the assent of the husband whilst he lives; because the property and possession is in him. 2 Shep. Abr. 423. Mich. 27 Elix. Vide Com. Dig. 1 V. tit. Baron and Feme, and Black. Com. 2 V. 435.

Parabasi,

Paravail, (per-avail) Signifies the lowest tenant of the fee, or he who is immediate tenant to one who holdeth over of another; and he is called tenant paravail, because 'tis presumed he hath profit and avail by the land. F. N. B. 135. 2 Inst. 296. 9 Rep. Coney's case. See Black. Com. 2 V. 60.

Parcelle Terræ, A parcel of land, as used in some ancient charters.—Sciant, quod ego Stephanus W. dedi, &c. Roberto de D. undm parcellem terræ cum pertinen. jacent. &c. sine dat.

Parcel-makers, Are two officers in the Exchequer, that make the parcels of the escheators accounts; wherein they charge them with every thing they have levied for the King's use, within the time of their being in office, and deliver the same to the auditors, to make up their accounts therewith. Practice Excheq. 99.

Parceners, (quasi parcellers, i. e. rem in parcellas dividentes) Are of two sorts, viz. parceners, according to the course of the Common law; and parceners according to custom. Parceners by the Common law, are where a man or woman seised of lands or tenements in fee-simple or fee-tail hath no issue but daughters, and dieth, and the tenements descend to such daughters, who enter into the lands descended to them, then they are called parceners, and are but as one heir to their ancestor; and they are termed parceners, because by the writ de partitione facienda the law will constrain them to make partition; tho' they may do it by consent, &c. Litt. 243. 1 Inst. 164. See Black. Com. 2 V. 187. And if a man seised of lands in fee-simple, or in tail, dieth without any issue of his body begotten, and the lands descend to the sisters, they are parceners; and in the same manner where he hath no sisters, but the lands descend to his aunts, or other females of kin in equal degree, they are also parceners: but where a person hath but one daughter, she shall not be called parcener, but daughter and heir, &c. Litt. sēd. 242.

If a man hath issue two daughters, and the eldest hath issue divers sons and daughters, and the youngest hath issue divers daughters; the eldest son of the eldest daughter shall not only inherit, but all the daughters of the youngest shall inherit, and the eldest son is coparcener with the daughters of the youngest sister, and shall have one moiety, viz. his mother's part; so that men descending of daughters may be parceners as well as women, and shall jointly plead and be impleaded, &c. 1 Inst. 164. None are parceners by the Common law, but either females, or the heirs of females, who come to lands or tenements by descent. Litt. 254.

Parceners by custom is, where a person seised in fee-simple, or in fee-tail of lands or tenements of the tenure called gavelkind, hath issue, divers sons, and dies; such lands shall descend to all the sons as parceners by the custom, who shall equally inherit and make partition as females do, and a writ of partition lies in this case, as between females, &c. Litt. sēd. 265. Women parceners make but one heir, and have but one freehold: but between themselves they have in judgment of law several freeholds, to many purposes; for one of them may infeoff the other of her part; and the parcenary is not severed by the death of any of them; but if one dies, her part shall descend to her issue, &c. 1 Inst. 164, 165. If one parcener make a feoffment in fee of her part, this is a severance of the coparcenary, and several writs of præcipe shall lie against the other parceners and the feoffee. 1 Inst. 167. Tho' if two coparceners by deed alien both their parts to another in fee, rendering to them two, and their heirs, a rent out of the land, they shall have the rent in course of parcenary; because their right in the land out of which the rent is reserved was in parcenary. Ibid. 160. If there be two parceners, and each of them taketh husband, and have issue, and the wives die, the parcenary is divided, and here is a partition in law. Ibid. Partition of lands held in tail, by the death of one sister, without issue is made void, and the other sister as heir in tail will be intitled to the whole land; and may have writ of formedon where the other parcener hath aliened. New Nat. Br. 476. And a writ of unper obit lies for one parcener deformed by another, &c. F. N. B. 197. If any parceners or their issues be disseised, they must join in an assise against the disseisor; so if they have cause to bring any action of waste, &c. 1 Inst. 95, 198. Two parceners are of land, one enters and claims the whole, and is disseised, she alone may maintain assise; but if the disseisin be of rent, the other parceners must be named, or the writ shall abate. Jenk. Cent. 41, 42. The possession of one parcener, &c. of land, without an actual ouster, gives possession to the other of them. Hob. 120. Dyer 128. One parcener may justify detaining the deeds concerning the land, against another, as they belong to one as well as the other. 2 Roll. Abr. 31. Parceners are to make partition of the lands descended; and estates of coparceners at Common law are applicable only to inheritances: Partition may be made between parceners of inheritances, which are intire and dividable, as of an advowson, rent charge or such like; but it is otherwise of inheritances which are not intire and indivisible, as of a piscary, common-without number, or such uncertain profits out of lands; for in such case the eldest parcener shall have them, and the others have contribution from her out of some other inheritance, left by the ancestor; but if there be no such inheritance, then the eldest shall have these uncertain profits for one time, and the youngest for another time. Dyer 153. Parceners cannot make partition, so as for one to have the land for one time, and another for another, &c. for each is to have her part absolutely: but if an advowson descend to them, they may present by turns; and if there be a common, &c. which may not be divided, one may have it for one year, and another, for another year, &c. 1 Inst. 164. An advowson is an intire thing, and yet in effect, the same may be divided betwixt parceners; for they may present by turns: and if there be coparceners of an advowson appendant to a manor, and they make partition of the manor, without mentioning the advowson; the same is still appendant, and they may present by turns. 8 Rep. 79. If two parceners be of an advowson, and they agree to present by turns, this is a good partition as to the possession; but it is not a severance of the estate of inheritance. 1 Rep. 87. And where there are coparceners of an advowson, the eldest hath privilege to present first; not in respect of her person, but estate: and if one parcener hath a rent granted to her upon a partition made, to make her part equal with the other, she may distrain for the arrears of common right; and so shall the grantee of the rent, because it is not annexed to her person only, but to her estate. 3 Rep. 32. If there are two parceners of a manor, and on partition made, each hath demesnes and services allotted; in this case each is said to have a manor. 1 Leon. 26. Davis 61. A partition may not be made of franchises, as goods of felons, waifs, citrays, &c. which are casual, 5 Rep. 3.

How partition may be made.

Partition, between parceners, may be made four ways, viz.

First, When they themselves divide the lands equally into as many parts, as there are parceners; and each chuses one share or part, the eldest first, and so one after another, &c.

Secondly, When they agree to chuse certain friends to make division for them.

Thirdly, Partition by drawing lots, where having divided the lands into as many parts as there are parceners, and written every part in a distinct scroll, being wrapt up, they each draw one out of a hat, basin, &c.

And Fourthly, Partition by a writ de partitione facienda, which is by compulsion, where some agree to partition, and others do not; and when judgment is given on a writ of partition, it is that the sheriff shall go to the land, and by the oaths of twelve men make partition between the parties, to hold to them in SEVERALTY, without any mention of preference to the eldest sister, &c. Litt. 248. 1 Inst. 164. But if there be a capital messuage on the land to be divided, the sheriff must allot that wholly to the eldest of the parceners. 1 Inst. 165. The partition made and delivered by the sheriff and jurors, ought to be returned into court under the seal of the sheriff, and the seals of the twelve jurors; for the words of the judicial writ of partition, which commands the sheriff to make partition, are, Assumpsit tecum duodecim, &c. & partitionem inde scire facias facias justiciariis, &c. sub sigillo tuo & sigillis eorum per quorum sacramentum partitionem illam feceris, &c. If partition be made by force of the King's writ, and judgment thereof given, it shall be binding to all parties, because it is made by the sheriff, by the oath of twelve men, by authority of law; and the judgment is, that the partition shall remain firm and stable for ever. 1 Inst. 171. In a writ of partition, the judgment was, quod partitio fiat; and before it was executed by the sheriff, a writ of error was brought; and it was adjudged that a writ of error doth not lie upon this first judgment, because this is not like other actions, where error lies before the habere facias seisinam is returned, and the judgment is final; but it is not so in this case, as there must be another judgment, i. e. quod partitio stabilis maneat, which cannot be till the partition is made, and returned by the sheriff. Hetley 36. Dyer 67. Where two persons hold lands pro indiviso, and one would have his part in severalty, and the other refuseth to make partition by deed, there the writ de partitione facienda lies against him who refuses, directed to the sheriff; and he must be present when the partition is made; and if it is objected before the return of the writ, that he was not present, it may be examined by the court; but after the writ is returned and filed, 'tis too late. Cro. Eliz. 9. A writ of partition was taken forth, and the sheriff made partition, but was not upon the land; and on motion that the return might not be filed, but that a new writ might be awarded, because the sheriff was not on the land, the court staid the filing, and on examining the sheriff, ordered a new writ. Cro. Car. 9, 10. On writ of partition to the sheriff to make partition of lands, part of the lands were allotted to one, and the jury would not assist the sheriff to make partition of the other part; which appearing on the return of the writ, the court was moved for an attachment against the jury, and a new writ to the sheriff. Godb. 265. Partition was brought by tenant in fee of one moiety, against tenant for life of the other moiety, on the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 32. And tho' it has been resolved, if partition be made between one who hath an estate of inheritance, and another who hath a particular estate for life; that the writ ought to be framed upon the statute, and to be made special, setting forth the particular estate: yet it was held to be good where the writ was general. Goldsb. 84. 2 Lutw. 1015. A partition may be made by statute of any estate of freehold, or for term of years, &c. of manors, lands, tenements and hereditaments whereof the partition is demanded; and if after process of pone return'd upon a writ of partition, and affidavit of notice given of the writ to the tenant to the action, and a copy left with the tenant in possession at least forty days before the return of the said pone, &c. there be no appearance entered in fifteen days; the demandant having entered his declaration, the court may give judgment by default, and award a writ to make partition, whereby the demandant's part or purpart will be set out severally; which writ being executed, after eight days notice, and return'd, and thereupon final judgment entered, shall conclude all persons, &c. But the court may suspend or set aside the judgment, if the party concerned move the court in a year, and shew good matter in bar. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 31. And by this statute, if the high sheriff by reason of distance, &c. cannot be present at the execution of any judgment in partition, then the under sheriff in the presence of two justices of peace of the county, shall proceed to the execution of the writ, by inquisition, and the high sheriff is to make the return, &c. Ibid. When the partition is made and returned, the persons who were tenants of the lands, or any part thereof, before divided, shall continue tenants of the lands they held, to the respective owners, under such conditions and rents as before: and no plea in abatement shall be admitted or received in any suit of partition; nor shall the same be abated by the death of any tenant, &c. Ibid. In a writ of partition the defendant pleaded, that he formerly brought writ of partition against the plaintiff, and had judgment, to have partition: and held a good plea; but it was a question, whether it should be pleaded in bar or abatement, or by way of estoppel. Dyer 52. No damages can be recover'd on a writ of partition, tho' the writ and declaration conclude ad damnum. Hetl. 35. Noy 143. 2 Nels. Abr. 1237. Where judgment for debt is had against one parcener, the lands, &c. of both may be taken in execution, and the moiety undivided is to be sold, and then the vendee will be tenant in common with the other coparcener: if the sheriff seize only a moiety and sell it, the other parcener will have a right to a moiety of that money. 1 Salk. 392. All partitions ought to be according to the quality and true value of the lands, and be equal in value: but if partition be made by parceners of full age, and unmarried, and sane memoriae, it binds them for ever, altho' the value be unequal, if it be made of lands in fee; and if it be of lands intailed, it shall bind the parties themselves for their lives, but not their issue unless it be equal: if it be unequal, the issue of her who hath the lesser part, may after her decease disagree, and enter and occupy in common with the aunt: also if any be covert, it shall bind the husband, but not the wife, or her heirs; or if any be within age, it shall not bind the infant, but she may at her full age disagree, &c. 1 Inst. 166, 170. 2 Lill. Abr. 283. Tho' if a wife after coverture, or the infant at her age, accept of the unequal part, they are concluded for ever. 1 Inst. 170. And where there be two coparceners, and one hath seven daughters, and dieth; if the other parcener releaseth to any one of the daughters her whole part, here, altho' she to whom the release is made, have not an equal part, the release is good. Ibid. 193. It hath been adjudged, that notwithstanding a partition is unequal, if it is by writ, it cannot be avoided; but if it be by deed, it may be avoided by entry. 1 Inst. 171. If the estate of a parcener be in part evicted, that shall defeat the whole partition; partition implying a warranty and condition in law to enter upon the whole on eviction, as in case of exchange of lands. 1 Inst. 173. 1 Rep. 87. And if after partition, one of the parts is recovered from a parcener by lawful title, she shall compel the others to make a new partition. Cro. Eliz. 902. But as to eviction of parceners, if one sell her part, and then the part which the other parcener hath, is evicted; in this case she who loseth her part, cannot enter on the alienee, for by alienation the privity is destroyed. 1 Inst. 173. Among parceners, a partition upon the land may be good without deed; but not among jointenants, &c. Dyer 29, 194.

Form of a common writ of partition.

GEORGE the Third, &c. to the sheriff of S. greeting: If A. B. make you secure, &c. then summon E. B. that she be before, &c. to shew why, whereas the said A. B. and E. B. together and undivided hold the manor of, &c. with the appurtenances, twenty messuages, one mill, one dove-house, twenty gardens, three hundred acres of land, two hundred acres of meadow, a hundred and fifty acres of pasture, one hundred acres of wood, two hundred acres of furze and heath, and twenty shillings rent, with the appurtenances of the inheritance which was of N. B. father of the said A. B. and E. B. whose heirs they are, in, &c. the said E. B. doth deny partition thereof to be made between them, according to the law and custom of England, and unjustly will not permit that to be done, as it is said: And have you there the summons, and this writ. Witness, &c.

See Coparceners, Jointenants, Partition.

Parcenary, Is the holding of lands jointly by parceners, when the common inheritance is not divided. Litt. 56.

Parcbment, A tax of 20 l. per cent. is laid on parchment, paper, &c. by stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 7. and see 9 Ann. c. 11.

Parco fracto, Is a writ which lies against him who violently breaks a pound, and takes out bealls from thence, which for some trespass done, &c. were lawfully impounded. Reg. Orig. 166. And if a person hath authority to take bealls out of the pound, if he breaks the pound before he demands the cattle of the keeper thereof, and he refuseth, or interrupts him in the taking of them, &c. the writ parco fracto lies. Dr. and Stud. 112. Damages are recoverable in this writ; and the party may be punished, as for a pound breach in the court leet. 1 Inst. 47. F. N. B. 100. The word parcus was frequently used for a pound to confine trespassing or straying cattle; whence imparcare to impound, imparcatio pouncing, and imparcamentum, right of pouncing, &c.

Pardon, (Pardonatio, venia.) Is the remitting or forgiving of an offence committed against the King; and is either ex gratia Regis, or by course of law. Staundf. Pl. Cor. 47. Pardon ex gratia Regis, is that which the King, affords by virtue of his prerogative. Pardon by course of law, is that which the law in equity affords for a light offence; as casual homicide, when one killeth a man, having no such meaning. West. Symbol. part. 2. tit. Indictment, sect. 46.

1. By whom a pardon may be granted; in what cases, and for what offences.

2. Where a pardon is grantable of common right; of the validity of a pardon; and by what words treasons, murder, felony and other offences may be pardoned.

1. By whom a pardon may be granted; in what cases, and for what offences.

The power of pardoning offences is inseparably incident to the Crown; and this high prerogative the King is intrusted with upon a special confidence, that he will spare those only whose case, could it have been foreseen, the law itself may be presumed willing to have excepted out of its general rules, which the wisdom of man cannot possibly make so perfect, as to suit every particular case. 1 Shorw. 284. See Black. Com. 4 V. 389, &c.

Anciently the right of pardoning offences, within certain districts, was claimed by lords, who had jura regalia by ancient grants from the Crown, or by prescription. But now, by 27 H. 8. cap. 24. it is enacted, "That no person shall have power to pardon any treasons or felonies, nor any accessaries, nor outlawries; but that the King shall have the authority thereof, united to the crown of this realm, as of right it appertaineth." Co. Lit. 114. 3 Inst. 233.

It is laid down in general, that the King may pardon any offence, so far as the publick is concerned in it, after it is over, consequently may prevent a popular action on a statute, by pardoning the offence before the suit is commenced; but it seems, that he cannot wholly pardon a publick nuisance, while it continues such, because such pardon would take away the only means of compelling a redress; yet it is said, that such a pardon will save the party from any fine, to the time of the pardon. Plowd. 487. Keilw. 134. 12 Co. 29, 30. 3 Inst. 237. Vaugh. 333.

But it seems agreed, that the King can by no previous licence, pardon, or dispensation, make an offence punishable which is malum in se; as being either against the law of nature, or so far against the publick good as to be indictable at Common law; and that a grant of this kind, tending to encourage the doing of evil, which it is the chief end of government to prevent, is against the common good, therefore void. D. v. 75. 5 Co. 35. 12 Co. 29. Vide 2 Hawk. P. C. 389. 3 H. 7. 15. pl. 30.

But where a thing in its own nature lawful, is made unlawful by parliament, it was formerly taken as a general rule, that the King might dispense with it, as to a particular time or place, or person, so far as the public was concerned in it; unless such dispensation could not, but be attended with an inconvenience, as the introducing a monopoly; or frustrating the end for which the law was made; as the licensing a particular person to import foreign cards or wines, &c. in which case, it was commonly taken to be void; also, where a statute gives a particular interest, or right of action to the party grieved, it has been always agreed, that no charter from the King, can bar the right of the party grounded on such statute; also where a statute is express, that the King's charter against the purport of it, tho' with the clause of non obstante, shall be void; it seems to have been always generally agreed, that regularly no such clause could dispense with it. 2 Hawk. P. C. 389, 390. and several authorities there cited.

It seems to be agreed, that no dispensation of any statute, except the statutes of mortmain, was of any force without a clause of non obstante; neither is such clause of any effect at this day, for it is declared and enacted by 1 W. & M. sess. 2. cap. 2. That no dispensation by non obstante of, or to any statute, or any part thereof, be allowed; but that the same shall be held void, except a dispensation be allowed in such statute; but it is provided, that no charter, grant or pardon, granted before 23d of October 1699. shall be any ways invalidated by that act, but that the same shall be and remain of the same force, and no other, as if the said act had never been made. 2 Hawk. P. C. 391.

The King cannot by any charter bar any right of entry or action, or any legal interest, or benefit before vested in the subject; therefore it seems clear, that he cannot bar any action on a statute by the party grieved, nor even a popular action commenced before his pardon, nor a recognizance for the peace before it is forfeited. Plowd. 487. 2 Roll. Abr. 178. Cro. Car. 199. Keilw. 134.

Neither can the King pardon an appeal, except only where it is carried on at his suit, after a nonsuit; therefore if a person attainted, on an appeal carried on at the suit of the party, get the King's pardon, he must sue a scire facias against the appellant, before the pardon shall be allowed. 2 Hawk. P. C. 392.

And if the appellant appear on the scire facias, he may pray execution notwithstanding the pardon; but if the sheriff return a scire facias, or two nihilis, and the appellant appear not, on demand, or if he return the appellant dead, the appellee shall be discharged; but some have holden, that in this last case, a scire facias shall go against the heirs of the deceased. 2 Hawk. P. C. 392.

But there is no need of any scire facias against the lord by escheat, because the pardon no way tends to reverse the attainder whereon the title of escheat is founded. 2 Hawk. P. C. 393. which vide.

It hath been strongly holden, that the King may pardon the burning of the hand, on a conviction of manslaughter on an appeal, as being no part of the judgment at the suit of the party, but collateral and exemplary punishment inflicted by the statute, and intended only by way of satisfaction to publick justice, like the finding of sureties by one convicted on the statute, against trespass in parks. But for this see 2 Hawk. P. C. 393.

A pardon will not only discharge any suit in the spiritual court ex officio, but also any suit in such court ad instantiam partis pro reformatione morum, or salute anime, as for defamation, or laying violent hands on a clerk, &c. See the following cases, 5 Co. 51. Latch 190. Cro. Eliz. 684. Hob. 81. Cro. Jac. 335. 2 Hawk. P. C. 394.

If a person be imprisoned on an excommunicato capiendo for non-payment of costs, and the King pardons all contempts, it is said, that he shall be discharged without any scire facias against the party, and that the party must begin anew to compel payment of costs; because the imprisonment was grounded on the contempt, which is wholly pardoned. 1 Jon. 227. 2 Roll. Abr. 178. Cro. Jac. 159. 8 Co. 68, 69.

But no pardon will discharge a suit in the spiritual court, any more than in a temporal, for a matter of interest or property in the plaintiff; as for tithes, legacies, matrimonial contracts and such like; also it is agreed, that after costs are taxed in a suit, in such court at the prosecution of the party, whether for a matter of private interest, or pro reformatione morum, or pro salute anime, or for defamation, &c. they shall not be discharged by a subsequent pardon. 5 Co. 51. Latch 190. Cro. Car. 46-7.

And with respect to costs, see 2 Roll. Abr. 304. Noy 85. Latch 155.

By the 12 & 13 W. 3. cap. 2. "No pardon under the great seal shall be impleaded to an IMPEACHMENT by the commons in parliament."

2. When a pardon is grantable of common right; and by what words treason, murder, felony, and other offences may be pardoned.

By the statute of Gloucester, cap. 9. it is enacted, "That if it be found by the country, that a person tried for the death of a man, did it in his defence, or by misfortune, then, by the report of the justices to the King, the King shall take him to his grace, if it please him." 2 Inst. 316.

But it seems to be settled at this day, agreeable to the ancient Common law, in assurance whereof this statute was made, that in such a case, or where one indicted of homicide se defendendo confesses the indictment, if the party cause the record to come into Chancery, the Chancellor will of course make him a pardon, without speaking to the King, and that by such pardon the forfeiture of goods may be saved; for these words, "If it shall please the King," shall be taken as spoken only by way of reverence to him, and not intended to make such a pardon discretionary. But if the party be found to have fled, it is made a quære, if the Pardon save the forfeiture of the flight, for that is not grounded on the homicide, but on the contempt of law. 2 Hawk. P. C. 380, 381.

If an approver convict all the appellees, whether by battle or verdict, the King ex merito justitia ought to pardon him as to his life, and also give him his wages from the time of appeal, to the time of conviction. 3 Inst. 139. 2 Hawk. P. C. 209. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 233.

As to persons intitled to pardons, on discovering their fellows, vide 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8. 6 & 7 W. & M. c. 17. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. 5 Ann. c. 31, &c.

It is laid down as a general rule, that wherever it appears by the recital of the pardon, that the King was misinformed, or not rightly apprised, both of the heinousness of the crime, and also how far the party stands convicted upon record, the pardon is void, upon a presumption that it was gained from the King by imposition. Yel. 43, 47. Cro. Jac. 18, 34, 548. 2 Roll. Ab. 188. Dyer 352. pl. 26. Raym. 13. 1 Sid. 41. 3 Inst. 338.

And on this ground it seems agreed, that if a man attainted of felony get a Pardon, which doth not mention the attainer, the Pardon will be ineffectual; also it hath been holden, that the Pardon of a person convicted by verdict of felony is void, unless it recite the indictment and conviction; also it hath been questioned, if the Pardon of a person barely indicted of felony be good, without mentioning the indictment; but it hath been adjudged, that such a defect is saved by the words five indictatus five non. 2 Hawk. P. C. 382-3.

Anciently a Pardon of all felonies, included all treasons as well as felonies; and it seems to be taken for granted in many books, that such a general Pardon is even at this day pleadable to any felony, except murder and rape, and piracy; and that the only reason why it may not also be pleaded to murder and rape is, because 13 Rich. 2. requires an express mention of them; and that the only reason why it is not pleadable to piracy is, because it is a felony by the Civil law. 2 Hawk. P. C. 383-4. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 466. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 45. Vide Stat. 37 E. 3. c. 2.

No Pardon of felony shall be carried beyond the EXPRESS purport of it; therefore if the King, reciting an attainder of robbery, pardon the execution, he thereby neither pardons the felony itself, nor any other consequence of it, besides the execution. 6 Co. 13. 2 Hawk. P. C. 384.

Vide Stat. 2 Ed. 3. c. 2. which seems to deprive the King of the power of pardoning WILFUL murder. But see 13 Ric. 2. c. 1. and Hawk. P. C. 385-6. and the various authorities there cited.

It hath been formerly adjudged, that murder might be pardoned under the general description of a felonious killing, with a clause of non obstante; but by 1 W. & M. sess. 2. cap. 2. it is declared that no dispensation by non obstante of or to any statute shall be allowed. 1 Sid. 366. 1 Show, 283. Keiling 24. 3 Mod. 37.

But Pardons of manslaughter remain as they were at Common law; therefore the Pardon of the felonious killing of J. S. may be pleaded to an indictment of manslaughter in killing him; but where such a Pardon is pleaded to a coroner's inquest of manslaughter, the court may refuse to allow it, till the fact be found manslaughter by a jury directed by a higher court. 2 Keb. 363, 415. Keiling 24. 2 Jon. 56.

If a general act expressly pardon petit treason, and except murders, it cannot be avoided by indicting a person guilty of petit treason for murder only, omitting the word proditorie; for the less offence being included in the greater is pardoned, by the Pardon of it; therefore such an exception of murder is to be intended of such murder only as is specially so called, and doth not amount to petit treason. Dyer 50. pl. 4. 235. pl. 19. 6 Co. 13.

Neither doth the exception of murder in a general act of Pardon of all felonies, extend to felo de se; for tho' his offence be in strictness murder, yet in common speech, according to which statutes are commonly expounded, it is generally understood as a distinct offence, the word murder seeming prima facie to import the murder of another. 1 Lev. 8, 120. 1 Sid. 130. 1 Keb. 66, 548.

It is said, that a general act of Pardon of all felonies, misdemeanors and other things done before such a day, pardons a homicide from a wound before the day, whereof the party died not till after; because the stroke being pardoned, the effects of it are consequently pardoned. Plow. 401. Cole's case. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 426. Dyer 99. pl. 65.

It is said, that a Pardon of all misprisions, trespasses, offences and contempts, will pardon a contempt in making a false return, and a striking in Westminster Hall, and barratry, and even a præmunire; also it is laid down in general, that it will pardon any crime not capital. 1 Lev. 106. 1 Sid. 211. 2 Mod. 52.

Vide 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 252. Dyer 308. a.

Pardoners, Were persons who carried about the Pope's indulgences, and sold them to any who would buy them. Stat. 22 H. 8.

Parent, (Parents) A father or mother; but generally applied to the father: parents have power over their children by the law of nature, and the Divine law; and by those laws they must educate, maintain and defend their children. Wood's Inst. 63. The parent or father hath an interest in the profits of the childrens labour while they are under age, if they live with, and are maintained by him: but the father hath no interest in the estate of a child, otherwise than as his guardian. Ibid. The eldest son is heir to his father's estate at Common law; and if there are no sons, but daughters, the daughters shall be heirs, &c. And there being a reciprocal interest in each other, parents and children may maintain the suits of each other, and justify the defence of each other's person. 2 Inst. 564. See Black. Com. 1 V. 437, 452.

Parentela, or De Parentela se tollere, To renounce his kindred; which was done in open court before the judge, and in the presence of twelve men, who made oath, that they believed it was done lawfully, and for a just cause. We read it in the laws of H. 1. cap. 88. Si quis propter fadum vel causam aliquam de parentela se velit tollere, & eam forisjuraverit, & de societate & hereditate & tota illius ratione se separet, si postea aliquis de parentibus abjuratis moriatur, vel occidatur, nihil ad eum de hereditate vel compositione pertineat, &c.

Parish, (parochia) Did anciently signify what we now call the diocese of a bishop: But at this day it is the circuit of ground in which the people who belong to one church do inhabit, and the particular charge of a secular priest. It is derived from the Saxon Preost-scryne, Preost-scryre, which signifies the precinct of which the priest had the care, in English priest-shire.

How ancient the division of parishes is, may at present be difficult to ascertain; for it seems to be agreed on all hands, that in the early ages of christianity in this island, parishes were unknown, or at least signified the same that a diocese does now. There was then no appropriation of ecclesiastical dues to any particular church; but every man was at liberty to contribute his tithes to whatever priest or church he pleased, provided only that he did it to some: Or, if he made no special appointment or appropriation thereof, they were paid into the hands of the bishop, whose duty it was to distribute them among the clergy, and for other pious purposes, according to his own discretion.

Mr. Camden (in his Britannia) says, England was divided into parishes by archbishop Honorius about the year 630. Sir Henry Hobart lays it down that parishes were first erected by the council of Lateran, which was held Anno Domini 1179. Each widely differing from the other, and both of them perhaps from the truth; which will probably be found in the medium between the two extremes. For Mr. Selden has clearly shewn, (of tithes. c. 9.) that the clergy lived in common without any division of parishes, long after the time mentioned by Camden. And it appears from the Saxon laws, that parishes were in being long before the date of that council of Lateran, to which they are ascribed by Hobart.

We find the distinction of parishes, nay even of mother churches, so early as in the laws of King Edgar, about the year 970. Before that time the consecration of tithes was in general arbitrary; that is, every man paid his own (as before observed) to what church or parish he pleased. But this being liable to be attended with either fraud, or at least caprice, in the persons paying; and with either jealousies or mean compliances in such as were competitors for receiving them; it was now ordered by the law of King Edgar, (c. 1.) That "dentur omnes decimæ primariæ ecclesiæ ad quam parochia pertinet." However, if anythane, or great lord, had a church within his own demesnes, distinct from the mother church, in the nature of a private chapel; then, provided such church had a coemetry or consecrated place of burial belonging to it, he might allot one third of his tithes for the maintenance of the officiating minister: But, if it had no coemetry, the thane must himself have maintained his chaplain by some other means; for in such case all his tithes were ordained to be paid to the primariæ ecclesiæ or mother-church.

This proves that the kingdom was then universally divided into parishes; which division happened probably not all at once, but by degrees. For it seems pretty clear and certain, that the boundaries of parishes were originally ascertained by those of a manor or manors: Since it very seldom happens that a manor extends itself over more parishes than one, tho' there are often many manors in one parish. The lords, as christianity spread itself, began to build churches upon their own demesnes or wastes, to accommodate their tenants in one or two adjoining lordships; and, in order to have divine service regularly performed therein, obliged all their tenants to appropriate their tithes to the maintenance of the one officiating minister, instead of leaving them at liberty to distribute them among the clergy of the diocese in general: And this tract of land, the tithes whereof were so appropriated, formed a distinct parish: which will well enough account for the frequent intermixture of parishes one with another. For if a lord had a parcel of land detached from the main of his estate, but not sufficient to form a parish of itself, it was natural for him to endow his newly erected church with the tithes of those disjointed lands; especially if no church was then built in any lordship adjoining to those out-lying parcels. Thus parishes were gradually formed, and parish churches endowed with the tithes that arose within the circuit assigned. But some lands, either because they were in the hands of irreligious and careless owners, or were situate in forests and desert places, or for other now unsearchable reasons, were never united to any parish, and therefore continue to this day extraparochial; and their tithes are now by immemorial custom payable to the King in stead of the bishop, in trust and confidence that he will distribute them, for the general good of the church. 2 Instit. 647. 2 Rep. 44. Cro. Eliz. 512. Yet extraparochial wastes and marsh lands, when improved and drained, are by the statute 17 Geo. 2. c. 37. to be assessed to all parochial rates in the parish next adjoining. See Black. Com. 1 V. 111, 112, 113. And Wilf. par. 2. 182.

Lord Holt held, That parishes were instituted for the ease and benefit of the people, not of the parson; and the reason why parishioners must come to their parish church is, because having charged himself with the cure of their souls, he might be enabled to take care of that charge. 3 Salk. 88, 89. A parish may comprise many vills; but generally it shall not be accounted to contain more than one, except the contrary be shewn, because most parishes have but one vill within them. Hill. 23 Car. 1. B. R. And it shall not be intended that there is more than one parish in a city, if it be not made to appear; for some cities have but one parish. Ibid. Where there are several vills in a parish, they may have peace officers, and overseers of the poor for every particular vill: And an ancient vill in a parish, that time out of mind hath had a church of its own, and churchwardens and parochial rights, being reputed a parish, is a parish within the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. to provide for its own poor, and shall not pay to the poor of the parish wherein it lies. 10. Car. 92. 384, 396. But to make a vill a reputed parish within 43 Eliz. it must have a parochial chapel, chapelwardens and sacraments at the time that statute was made. 2 Salk. 501. Parishes in reputation are within that statute, especially when it has been the constant usage of such parishes to chuse their own overseers; who may distrain for a poor tax, &c. 2 Roll. Rep. 160. 2 Nelf Abr. 1235. Money given by will to a parish, shall be to the poor of the parish, as adjudged in equity. Chanc. Rep. 134. If a highway lie in a parish, the parish is obliged to repair it, and it is the most convenient and equal for the parishioners in every parish, to repair the ways within it, if they are able. 2 Lill. 272. And if any vill, liberty, &c. that uses to repair their own highways, shall after the usual rate levied and employed, and the ways not sufficiently repaired; the whole parish may be ordered by justices of peace in their sessions to contribute to the repairing thereof. Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 29.

Parish Clerk. In every parish the parson, vicar, &c. hath a parish clerk under him, who is the lowest officer of the church. These were formerly clerks in orders, and their business at first was to officiate at the altar, for which they had a competent maintenance by offerings; but now they are laymen, and have certain fees with the parson, on christnings, marriages, burials, &c. besides wages for their maintenance. Count. Perf. Compan. 83, 84. They are to be twenty years of age at least, and known to be of honest conversation, sufficient for their reading, singing, &c. And their business consists chiefly in responses to the minister, reading lessons, singing psalms, &c. And in the large parishes of London, some of them have deputies, to dispatch the business of their places, which are more gainful than common rectories. Ibid. The law looks upon them as officers for life: They are regarded by the Common law, as persons who have freeholds in their offices; and therefore tho' they may be punished, yet they cannot be deprived, by ecclesiastical censures. Black. Com. 1 V. 395. And they are generally appointed by the minister, unless there is a custom for the parishioners or churchwardens to chuse them; in which case the canon cannot abrogate such custom; and when chosen it is to be signified, and they are to be sworn into their office by the archdeacon. Cro. Car. 589. Can. 91. And if such custom appears, the court of B. R. will grant a Mandamus to the archdeacon to swear him in, for the establishment of the custom turns it into a temporal or civil right. Black. Com. 1 V. 395. He may make a deputy without licence of the ordinary. Strange 942. And cannot sue in the Spiritual court for fees as being a temporal officer. 2 Strange 1108.

Parishioner. (Parochianus.) Is an inhabitant of, or belonging to any parish, lawfully settled therein. Parishioners are compellable to put things in decent order; but the judgment of the majority is the only rule for the degrees of that decency; and the court inclined, that a rate for that purpose is binding; as for moving the communion-table out of the body of the church into the chancel, or raising it higher, &c. Faw. 70.

Parishioners have a right to view parish books. 11 Mod. 134.

Parishioners are a body politick to many purposes; as to vote at a vestry if they pay scot and lot; and they have a sole right to raise taxes for their own relief, without the interposition of any superior court; may make by-laws to mend the highways, and to make banks to keep out the sea, and for repairing the church, and making a bridge, &c. or any such thing for the publick good, and by the 3 & 4 W. 3. and 7 Ann. to tax and levy poor rates, and to make and maintain fire-engines, and by 9 Geo. for purchasing workhouses for the poor. Arg. 8 Mod. 354.

Parish Officers. Divers persons are exempted from serving parish offices on account of their professions, viz. Physicians and surgeons, apothecaries, dissenting teachers, registered seamen, and persons having prosecuted any felon to conviction, &c. Stat. 32 H. 8. 1 W. & M. 7 & 8 & 10 & 11 W. 3. 1 & 10 Ann. &c.

Park, (Lat. parcus, Fr. parque, i. e. locus incleſus) Is a large quantity of ground incloſed and privileged for wild beaſts of chafe, by the King's grant or preſcription. 1 Inſt. 233.

Manwood defines a park to be a privileged place for beaſts of venary, and other wild beaſts of the foreſt and chafe, tam Sylveſtres, quam Campeſtres; and differs from a chafe or warren, in that it muſt be incloſed; for if it lies open it is good cauſe of ſeizure into the King's hands, as a thing forfeited; as a free chafe is, if it be incloſed; beſides, the owner cannot have an action againſt ſuch as hunt in his park, if it lies open. Manw. Foreſt Law. Crompt. Jurif. 148. No man can erect a park, without licence under the broad ſeal; for the Common law does not encourage matter of pleaſure, which brings no profit to the commonwealth. Wood's Inſt. 207. But there may be a park in reputation, erected without lawful warrant; and the owner may bring his action againſt perſons killing his deer. Ibid.

To a park three things are required. 1. A grant thereof. 2. Incloſures by pale, wall or hedge. 3. Beaſts of a park, ſuch as the buck, doe, &c. And where all the deer are deſtroyed, it ſhall no more be accounted a park; for a park conſiſts of vert, veniſon and incloſure, and if it is determined in any of them, it is a total diſparking. Cro. Car. 59, 60.

The King may by letters patent diſſolve his park. 2 Lill. Abr. 273.

Parks as well as chafes are ſubject to the Common law, and are not to be governed by the foreſt laws. 4 Inſt. 314.

Pulling down park walls or pales, the offenders ſhall be liable to the ſame penalty as for killing deer, &c. by ſtat. and the ſtatutes againſt deer-ſtealing, are the 13 Car. 2. c. 10. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 10. 5 Geo. 1. c. 15. See Deer-ſtealers.

Parliament, (Parliamentum, from the Fr. Parler, i. e. loqui, & ment, mens, to ſpeak the mind, ſometimes called Commune Concilium Regni Angliæ, Magnum Concilium, &c.) Is a grand aſſembly, or convention of the three eſtates of the kingdom, ſummoned to meet the King, to conſult of matters relating to the common wealth; and particularly to enact and repeal laws.

Herein may be conſidered,

1. The antiquity and original of parliaments;
2. The juuriſdiction of parliament.
3. The ſpeaker.
4. The judicial power of parliament.
5. The proper province of the Houſe of Commons, &c.
6. The privilege of members, &c.

1. The antiquity and original of parliaments.

Some authors ſay, that the ancient Britains had no ſuch aſſemblies; but that the Saxons had; which may be collected from the laws of King Ina; who lived about the year 712. And William the firſt, called the Conqueror, having divided this land among his followers, to that every one of them ſhould hold their lands of him in capite, the chief of theſe were called Barons, who thrice every year aſſembled at the King's court, viz. at Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Whiſjuntide, among whom the King uſed to come in his royal robes, to conſult about the publick affairs of the kingdom. This King called ſeveral parliaments, wherein it appears, that the freemen or commons of England were alſo there, and had a ſhare in making laws: He by ſettling the court of parliament ſo eſtabliſhed his throne, that neither Britain, Dane, nor Saxon, could diſturb his tranquility; the making of his laws were by act of parliament, and the accord between Stephen and him was made by parliament; tho' all the times ſince have not kept the ſame form of aſſembling the ſtates. Doderidge's Antiq. Parliament.

There was a parliament before there were any barons; and if the commons do not appear, there can be no parliament; for the knights, citizens and burgeſſes, repreſent the whole commons of England, but the peers only are preſent for themſelves, and none others. Ibid. Sir Edward Coke aſſirms, that many parliaments were held before the conqueſt; and produces an inſtance of one held in the reign of Alfred: He likewiſe gives us a concluſion of a parliament holden by Alhelſian, where mention is made, that all things were enacted in the great ſynod, or council at Grately, whereat was archbiſhop Welfebelme, with all the noblemen and wiſemen, whom the King called together. 1 Inſt. 110. It is apparent, (ſays Mr. Pryn) from all the precedents before the time of the conqueſt, that our priſtine ſynods and councils were nothing elſe but parliaments; that our Kings, nobles, ſenators, aldermen, wiſemen, knights and commons, were preſent and voting in them as members and judges: And Sir Henry Spelman, Camden, and other writers, prove the commons to be a part of the parliament in the time of the Saxons, but not by that name, or elected as conſiſting of knights, citizens and burgeſſes, Pryn's Sovereign Pow. Parliament.

As to the original of the preſent houſe of commons, our authors of antiquity vary very much; many are of opinion that the commons began not to be admitted as part of the parliament, upon the footing they are now, until the 49 H. 3. becauſe the firſt writ of ſummons of any knights, citizens and burgeſſes, is of no ancients date than that time. But the great charter in the 17th year of King John, (about which time the diſtinction of Barones Majores and Minores is ſuppoſed to begin) was made per Regem, Barones & LIBEROS HOMINES TOTIUS REGNI.

Mr. Selden ſays, that the borough of St. Albans claimed by preſcription in the parliament, 8 Edw. 2. to ſend two burgeſſes to all parliaments, as in the reigns of Edw. 1. and his progenitors, which muſt be the time of King John; and ſo before the reign of King Hen. 3. And in the reign of Hen. 5. it was declared and admitted, that the commons of the land were ever a part of the parliament. Selden's Tit. Hon. 709. Polydore Virgil, Hollinſhead, Speed and others mention, that the commons were firſt ſummoned at a parliament held at Salisbury, 16 Hen. 1. Sir Walter Raleigh, in his treatiſe of the Prerogative of Parliaments, thinks it was Anno 18 H. 1. And Dr. Heylin finds another beginning for them, viz. in the reign of King Hen. 2.

Thus much for the original of our parliament; which is the higheſt and moſt honourable, and abſolute court of juſtice in England; conſiſting of the King, the lords of parliament, and the commons; and again, the lords are divided into ſpiritual, and temporal; and the commons divided into knights of ſhires or counties, citizens out of cities, and burgeſſes from boroughs; the words of the old Latin writ to the ſheriff for the election, being Duos milites gladii cinctos magis idoneos & diſcretos comitatus tui, & do

Et de qualibet civitate comitatus tui duos cives, Et de qualibet burgo duos burgenſes, de discretioribus Et magis ſufficientibus, &c. Inſt. 109.

2. The jurisdiction of parliament.

The jurisdiction of this court is ſo transcendent, that it makes, enlarges, abrogates, repeals, and revives laws and ſtatutes, concerning matters eccleſiaſtical, civil, criminal, martial, maritime, &c. And for making of laws and in proceeding by bill, this ſupreme court is not confined either for cauſes, or perſons within any bounds; nor is it tied down to any certain rules or forms of law, in proceedings and determinations: The court of parliament hath power to judge in matters of law; and redreſs grievances that happen, eſpecially ſuch as have no ordinary remedy; to examine into the corruption of magiſtrates, and illegal proceedings of other courts; to redreſs errors, and determine on petitions and appeals, &c. and FROM THIS HIGH COURT THERE LIES NO APPEAL. Ibid. Affairs of parliament are to be determined by the parliament; tho' the parliament err, it is not reverſible: And not only what is done in the houſe of commons, but what relates to the commons during the parliament, and ſitting the parliament, is no where elſe to be puniſhed but by themſelves, or a ſucceeding parliament.

Every court of juſtice having laws and cuſtoms for its direction, the high court of parliament hath its own proper laws and cuſtoms, called the Laws and Cuſtoms of Parliament; inſomuch that no judge ought to give any opinion of matters done in parliament, becauſe they are not to be decided by the Common law: But the parliament, in their judicial capacity, are governed by the Common and Statute laws, as well as the courts in Weſtmiñſter-Hall. 4 Inſt. 14, 15. State Trials, Vol. 2. 735. The lords and commons in their reſpective houſes have power of judicature, and ſo have both houſes together: And in former times both lords and commons ſat together in one houſe of parliament. 4 Inſt. 23.

3. The ſpeaker.

The lords have one who preſides as ſpeaker in common affairs, uſually the Lord Chancellor; and the commons have their ſpeaker, choſen by the houſe, but to be approved by the King: The commons anciently had no continual ſpeaker, but after conſultation, their manner of proceedings was to agree upon ſome perſon of great abilities, to deliver their reſolutions: In the reign of William Ruſus, at a great parliament held at Rockingham, a certain knight came forth, and ſtood before the people, and ſpoke in the name and behalf of them all, who was undoubtedly the ſpeaker of the houſe of commons at that time: But the firſt ſpeaker certainly known was Peter de Mountford, 44 H. 3. when the lords and commons ſat in ſeveral houſes, or at leaſt gave their aſſents ſeverally. Lex Conſtitution. 162. Sir Richard Walgrave, 5 R. 2. was the firſt ſpeaker who made any formal apology for inability, as now practiſed: Richard Rich, Eſq; 28 H. 8. was the firſt ſpeaker who is recorded to have made requeſt for acceſs to the King. Thomas Moyle, Eſq; 34 H. 8. is ſaid to be the firſt ſpeaker who petitioned for freedom of ſpeech; and Sir Thomas Gargrave, 1 Eliz. was the firſt who made the requeſt for privilege from arreſts, &c. Sir John Buſhey, 17 R. 2. was the firſt ſpeaker preſented to the King in full parliament by the commons. And when Sir Arnold Savage was ſpeaker, 2 Hen. 4. it was the firſt time that the commons were required by the King to chuſe a ſpeaker. Ibid. 163, &c.

4. The judicial power of parliament.

The King cannot take notice of any thing ſaid to be done in the houſe of commons but by the report of the houſe; and every member of the houſe of parliament has a judicial place, and can be no witneſs. 4 Inſt. 15. When Charles 1. being in the houſe of commons, and ſitting in the ſpeaker's chair, asked the then ſpeaker, whether certain members, whom the King named, were preſent? The ſpeaker, from a preſence of mind which aroſe from the genius of that houſe, readily answered, That "he had

"neither eyes to ſee, nor tongue to ſpeak, but at the houſe was pleaded to direct him." Atkin's Jurisd. and Antiquity of Houſe of Commons. Henry 8. having commanded Sir Thomas Gaudy, (one of the judges of the King's Bench), to attend the chief juſtices and know their opinion, whether a man might be attainted of high treaſon by parliament, and never called to answer; the judges declared it was a dangerous queſtion, and that the high court of parliament ought to give examples to inferior courts, for proceeding according to juſtice, and no inferior court could do the like. Lex Conſtitution. 161. The houſe of lords is a diſtinct court from the commons, to ſeveral purpoſes, and is the ſovereign court of juſtice, and dernier reſort: They try criminal cauſes on impeachments of the commons; and have an original jurisdiction for the trial of peers upon indictments found by a grand jury: They alſo try cauſes upon appeals from the court of Chancery, or upon writs of error to reverſe judgments in B. R. &c. AND ALL THEIR DECREES ARE AS JUDGMENTS; and judgments given in parliament may be executed by the Lord Chancellor. 4 Inſt. 21. Finch 233. 1 Lew. 165. It is ſaid, that the judicial power of Parliament is in the lords; but that the houſe of lords hath no jurisdiction over ORIGINAL CAUSES, which would deprive the ſubject of the benefit of appeal. 2 Salk. 510. Alſo the houſe of commons is a diſtinct court to many purpoſes; they examine the right of elections, expel their own members, and commit them to priſon, and ſometimes other perſons, &c. And the book of the clerk of the houſe of commons is a record. 2 Inſt. 536. 4 Inſt. 23. The commons coming from all parts are the grand inqueſt of the realm; to preſent publick grievances and delinquents to the King and lords to be puniſhed by them: And any member of the houſe of commons, has the privilege of impeaching the higheſt lord in the kingdom. Wood's Inſt. 455.

5. The proper province of the houſe of commons, &c.

As the houſe of lords ſeems to be politically conſtituted for the ſupport of the rights of the crown; ſo the proper province of the houſe of commons, is to ſtand for the preſervation of the people's liberties. The commons in making and repealing laws, have equal power with the lords; and for laying taxes on the ſubject, the bill is to begin in the houſe of commons, becauſe from thence the greateſt part of the money ariſes, they repreſent the whole commons of England; for which reaſon they will not permit any alteration to be made by the lords in a bill concerning money: And as formerly the laying and levying of new taxes have cauſed rebellions and commotions, this has occaſioned, particularly 9 E. 3. when a motion has been made for a ſubſidy of a new kind, that the commons have deſired a conference with thoſe of their ſeveral counties and places, whom they have repreſented before they have treated of any ſuch matters. 4 Inſt. 34.

There are no places of precedency in the houſe of commons as there are in the houſe of lords; only the ſpeaker has a chair or ſeat, fixed towards the upper end, in the middle of the houſe; and the clerk, with his aſſiſtant, ſits near him at the table, juſt below the chair: The members of the houſe of commons never had any robes, as the lords ever had, except the ſpeaker and clerks, who in the houſe wear gowns, as profeſſors of the law do during term time. If a lord be abſent from the houſe, he may make another lord his proxy; tho' a member of the houſe of commons cannot make a proxy, for himſelf is only a repreſentative or deputy. Wood's Inſt. 456. No knight, citizen or burgeſs of the houſe of commons, ſhall depart from the parliament without leave of the ſpeaker and commons aſſembled; and the ſame is to be entered in the book of the clerk of the parliament. Stat. 6 Hen. 8. c. 16. And in the 1 & 2 P. & M. Informations were preferred by the attorney general againſt thirty-nine of the houſe of commons, for departing without licence, whereof ſix ſubmitted to fines; but it is uncertain whether any of them were paid.

Calling the houſe is to diſcover what members are abſent, without leave of the houſe, or juſt cauſe; in which caſes fines have been impoſed: On calling over, ſuch of the members as are preſent, are marked; and the defaulters being called over again the same day, or the day after, and not appearing, are summoned, or sent for by the serjeant at arms. Lex Constitution. 159.

Forty members are requisite to make a house of commons for dispatch of business; and the business of the house is to be kept secret among themselves: In the 23d year of Queen Elizabeth, Arthur Hall, Esq; member of parliament, for publishing the conferences of the house, and writing a book which contained matters of reproach against some particular members, derogatory to the general authority, power, and state of the house, and prejudicial to the validity of the proceedings, was adjudged by the commons to be committed to the Tower for six months, fined 500*l.* and expelled the house. But the speaker of the house of commons, according to the duty of his office, as servant to the house, may publish such proceedings as he shall be ordered by the commons assembled; and he cannot be liable for what he does that way by the command of others, unless those other persons are liable.

If any member of either house speak words of offence in a debate, after the debate is over he is called to the bar, where commonly on his knees he receives a reprimand from the speaker; and if the offence be great, he is sent to the Tower. When the bill of attainder of the earl of Strafford, was passing the house of commons, Mr. Taylor, a member of that house opposed it with great violence and indecency, and being heard to explain himself, was commanded to withdraw; whereupon it was resolved he should be expelled the house, be made incapable of ever serving as a member of parliament, and should be committed prisoner to the Tower, there to remain during the pleasure of the house: And he was called to the bar, where he kneeled down, and Mr. Speaker pronounced the sentence accordingly. And Sir John Elliot, Denzil Hollis, and another person having spoken these words, viz. The King's Privy Council, his judges and his counsel learned in the law, have conspired to trample under their feet the liberties of the subject, and of this house, an information was filed against them by the Attorney General; and farther, for that the King having signified his pleasure to the house of commons for the adjournment of the parliament, and the speaker endeavouring to get out of the chair, they violently, &c. detained him in the chair, upon which there was a great tumult in the house, to the terror of the commons there assembled, and against their allegiance, in contempt of the King, his crown and dignity: The defendants pleaded to the jurisdiction of the court; and refused to answer but in parliament; but it was adjudged, that they ought to answer, the charge being for a conspiracy, and seditious acts to prevent the adjournment of the parliament, which may be examined out of it; and not answering, judgment was given against them, that Sir John Elliot should be committed to the Tower, and fined 2000*l.* and the other two were fined and imprisoned. Cro. Car. 130.

6. The Privilege of members, &c.

Members of parliament are not only privileged from arrests, but likewise in an extraordinary manner from assaults, menaces, &c. Sir Robert Brandling made an assault upon Mr. Witherington, a member of the house of commons, in the country before his coming up to parliament, and Sir Robert was sent for by the house, and committed to the Tower. And Anno 19 Jac. 1. some speeches passed privately in the house between two of the members, and one of them going down the parliament stairs, struck the other, who catching at a sword in his man's hand, endeavouring to return the stroke; on complaint to the house of commons they were both ordered to attend, where he who gave the blow was committed to the Tower during the pleasure of the house.

Assaulting a member coming to or attending in parliament, the offender shall pay double damages, and make fine and ransom, &c. By Stat. 11 Hen. 6.

All members of parliament, that they may attend the publick service of their country, have privilege of parliament for themselves and their menial servants, to be free from arrests, &c. and for their goods to be free from distresses: And this privilege of parliament generally holds in all cases except in treason, felony and breach of the peace. 4 Inst. 24, 25.

The law and privilege of parliament is part of the law of the land; and a member cannot be arrested, except in cases of treason, felony, and actual breach of the peace. Willf. par. 2. 159.

There are many remarkable cases in our books treating of the privileges of parliament, relating to arrests of members of the house of commons, and their servants, and the manner of their confinement, release, &c. The first year of King Jac. Sir Thomas Shirley, a member of parliament, was arrested four days before the sitting of the parliament, and carried prisoner to the Fleet; on which a warrant issued to the clerk of the crown for a habeas corpus to bring him to the house, and the serjeant was sent for in custody, who being brought to the bar, and confessing his fault, was excused for that time: But on hearing counsel at the bar for Sir Thomas Shirley, and the warden of the Fleet, and upon producing precedent, Simpson the prosecutor, who caused the arrest to be made, was ordered to be committed to the Tower; and afterwards the warden refusing to execute the writ of habeas corpus, and the delivery of Sir Thomas being denied, was likewise committed to the Tower; tho' on his agreeing to deliver up Sir Thomas, upon a new warrant for a new writ of habeas corpus, and making submission to the house, he was discharged: This affair taking up some time, the house entered into several debates touching their privilege, and how the debt of the party might be satisfied, which produced three questions; First, Whether Sir Thomas Shirley should have privilege? Secondly, Whether presently, or to be deferred? And, Thirdly, Whether the house should petition the King for some course for securing the debt of the party, according to former precedents, and saving harmless the warden of the Fleet? All which questions were resolved; and a bill was brought in to secure Simpson's debt, &c. which also occasioned an act 1 Jac. 1. c. 13. for relief of plaintiffs in writs of execution, where the defendants in such writs are arrested, and set at liberty by privilege of parliament, by which a fresh prosecution and new execution may be had against them when that privilege ceases. Lex Constitution. 141. And 19 Jac. 1. one Johnson, a servant to Sir James Whitlock a member of the house of commons, was arrested by two bailiffs, who being told Sir James Whitlock was a parliament man, answered, that they had known greater men's servants than his taken from their masters in time of parliament: And this appearing, the two bailiffs were sentenced to ask pardon of the house and Sir James Whitlock, on their knees; that they should both ride on one horse bare backed, back to back, from Westminster to the Exchange, with papers on their breasts signifying their offence; all which was to be executed presently, Sedente Curia. Ibid. In action of debt on a bond, conditioned that B. B. should render himself at such a day and place to an arrest; defendant pleaded, that by privilege of parliament, the members, &c. and their servants ought not to be arrested by the space of forty days before the sitting of the parliament, nor during the session, nor forty days afterwards; and that B. B. was at that time servant to such a member of parliament, so as he could not render himself to be arrested: Upon demurrer to this plea, it was adjudged ill, because he might have rendered himself at the time and place; but then it would be at their peril if he was arrested. Brownl. 81.

The commons in parliament claim privilege for forty days before and after each session and prorogation. 2 Lev. 72. Tho' 12 W. 3. c. 2. ordains, That actions may be prosecuted against persons intitled to privilege of parliament, after a dissolution or prorogation, until a new parliament is called, or the same is reassembled: and after adjournment for above fourteen days, and the respective courts may proceed to judgment, &c. Proceedings are to be by summons and distress infinite, &c. until the parties shall enter a common appearance; and the real or personal estates of the defendants may be sequestered for default of appearance; but the plaintiff may not arrest their bodies: and where any plaintiff shall be stayed or prevented from proceeding proceeding by privilege of Parliament, he shall not be barred by any statute of limitation, or nonsuited, dismissed, or his suit discontinued for want of prosecution; but at the rising of the Parliament shall be at liberty to proceed to judgment and execution. And by 2 Ann. c. 8. Actions may be prosecuted against officers of the revenue, or in any place of publick trust, for any forfeiture or breach of trust, &c. and shall not be stayed by colour of privilege; but such officer being a Member of Parliament, is not subject to arrest during time of privilege, but summons, attachment, &c. By the 11 Geo. 2. cap. 24. Any person may prosecute a suit in any court of record, &c. in Great Britain or Ireland, against any Peer, or Member of the House of Commons, or other person intitled to privilege, in the intervals of Parliaments, or of Sessions, if above fourteen days; and the said courts, after dissolutions or prorogations, are to give judgment, and award execution: and no proceedings in law against the King's immediate debtor, as such, &c. to be delayed under colour of such privilege; only the person of a Member of Parliament, &c. shall not be arrested or imprisoned. A defendant who was a Member of Parliament, brought a letter from the Speaker to the court of King's Bench to stay proceedings; but the court would not allow it, but told him he might bring his writ of privilege. Latch 150. Judgment was had against the defendant, and afterwards he was chosen a Member of Parliament, and after his election he was taken in execution, yet he had his privilege; tho' the book tells us minus juste. Moor 57. And where judgment being had against a defendant, and he was taken in execution in the morning, and about three hours afterwards was chosen a Member of Parliament; the House agreed, that being arrested before he was chosen, &c. he shall not have his privilege. Moor 340. 1 Nels. Abr. 27.

The courts at Westminster may judge of the privilege of Parliament, where it is incident to a suit the court is possessed of: and courts may proceed to execution between the sessions of Parliament, notwithstanding appeals lodged, &c. State Trials, 2 V. pag. 66, 209.

But now by Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50. No action against any peer, &c. shall be delayed by pretence of privilege of Parliament.

Of elections, and herein,

1. Of the elected, and who are eligible, and who not, and of their qualifications.
2. Of the electors, and their qualifications.
3. Of the duty of returning officers, and the remedies against them.

1. Of the elected, and who are eligible, and who not, and of their qualifications.

The Parliament is called by virtue of the King's writ of summons out of Chancery, at least forty days before the Parliament begins: the Commons are elected by the people; and every Member, tho' chose for one particular place, serves for the whole kingdom. As attendants of this nature is for the service of the publick, the whole nation has such an interest therein, that the King cannot grant an exemption to any person from being elected as a Knight, Citizen, or Burgess in Parliament; and for that elections ought to be free. 29 Hen. 6. But an alien cannot be elected, for he is not a liege subject; tho' if an alien were naturalized, he was eligible till the Stat. 12 W. 3. cap. 2. A man attainted of treason or felony, or outlawed, &c. is not eligible; nor shall such persons be suffered in the House of Parliament. 4 Inst. 48. A person under the age of twenty-one years, may not be elected to sit in Parliament; neither can any Lord sit there, until he be of the full age of twenty-one years. Ibid. It was formerly held that Mayors and Baliffs of towns corporate were not eligible; but now they may be elected. And so may a sheriff of a county, for another shire. None of the Judges, or Barons of the Exchequer, who have judicial places, can be chosen Knight, Citizen, or Burgess of Parliament, as it is now holden, because they are assistants in the House of Lords: yet Thorpe, Baron of the Exchequer, was Speaker of the House of Commons: persons who have judicial places in the other courts, Ecclesiastical or Civil, are eligible. 4 Inst. 47.

Clergymen are not eligible, they being of another body, viz. the Convocation. Ibid. Any of the profession of the law, and who are in practice, are eligible; but Ann. 6 H. 4. a Parliament was summoned by writ, and by colour of a certain ordinance, it was forbidden that any lawyer should be chosen; by reason whereof Lord Coke observes, this Parliament was fruitless: and the prohibitory clause inserted in the writ was against law; for lawyers are eligible of common right, and cannot be disabled by ordinance without act of Parliament.

By 12 W. 3. c. 2. No person who had any office or place of profit under the King, or pension from the crown, was to serve as a member of the House of Commons. And by 4 & 5 Ann. No member of Parliament may enjoy any office in the government, and sit in the house at the same time by virtue of his former election; for by acceptance of an office his election is void: but he may be elected again, on a new writ issued out, and sit in the house; and officers in the army or navy, receiving any new commission, need not be re-elected. 6 Ann. When persons are incapable of being elected, the election shall be void; and sitting or voting in the House of Commons they shall forfeit 500 l. And the statute 1 Geo. 1. c. 56. enacts, That no man having any pension from the crown, either in his own name or in trust for him, shall be elected a member of Parliament; and pensioners presuming to sit and vote, shall forfeit 20 l. for every day, &c. The act mentions only a pension for any term or number of years; and not a pension during pleasure, according to the 4 Ann. c. 8.

'Tis now enacted, That no person who shall be a Commissioner of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, Commissioner of the Admiralty, Paymaster of the Army, Secretary of State, &c. shall be capable of being a member in any Parliament. 15 Geo. 2. c. 22. But this statute does not exclude the Secretaries of the Treasury, or those of other offices; or any other person having an office for life. Ibid.

By ancient statutes, Knights of the Shire are to be resident in the county, for which they are chosen; so Citizens and Burgesses elected shall be resident in, and free of the same cities and boroughs, the day of the date of the writ of summons, and they are to be notable Knights of the same county, &c. notable Esquires or Gentlemen: also by a late act, no person shall be qualified to serve in Parliament as a Knight of the Shire, who hath not an estate of freehold or copyhold for life, or some greater estate to his own use, of 600 l. a year, above all incumbrances; and a Citizen and Burgess 300 l. per annum, of which oath is to be made at the request of a candidate, or two persons having a right to vote; and if any person be elected and returned not so qualified, the return shall be void. 9 Ann. cap. 5. And none shall be qualified by virtue of any mortgage, whereof the equity of redemption is in another; unless the mortgagee shall have been in possession seven years before the election. Tho' the eldest son of a Peer, or of any person qualified to serve as a Knight of the Shire, shall not be incapable of being elected. Stat. ibid.

Members of Parliament must take the oaths to the Government before they sit and vote in the House; or shall be adjudged Popish Recusants, and be disabled to sit in Parliament, and liable to certain forfeitures, &c. Stat. 5 Eliz. cap. 1. 30 Car. 2. c. 1. And this statute was confirmed and enforced by the 13 & 14 W. 3. c. 6.

2. Of the electors and their qualifications.

The election of Knights of the Shire is to be made by the majority of people dwelling in the counties, having each of them lands or tenements to the yearly value of 40 s. besides reprises; and he who cannot expend 40 s. per ann. shall have no vote in the election of Knights for the Parliament. 8 H. 6. c. 7. And by the 10 H. 6. c. 2. an elector of Knights of the Shire must be resident, and have 40 s. per annum freehold over and above reprises in the same county. The 7 & 8 W. 3. requires, that every freeholder shall take an oath that he is a freeholder of the county, and has freehold lands or hereditaments of the yearly value of 40 s. lying at such a place, within the said county, and that he hath not before polled at the election: no person is to be admitted to vote in any election of a member to serve in Parliament, who is under the age of twenty-one, or be intitled to any vote by reason of any tithe or mortgage; if the trustee or mortgagee be not in actual possession, and receive the rents and profits of the estate: but the mortgagor or cestui que trust possession, shall and may vote for the same estate: and all conveyances of lands, tenements, &c. in order to multiply votes, or split and divide the interest in any houses or lands, among several persons, to enable them to vote, shall be void and of none effect.

By 10 Ann. c. 22. None shall have a voice for electing Knights of the Shire in right of any lands, who has not been charged or assessed to the publick taxes, church rates and parish duties, in such proportion as other lands and tenements of 40 s. per annum, lying within the same parish; and for which he shall not have received the rents and profits, or be intitled to have received the same to the full value of 40 s. or more to his own use for one year, before the election; except such lands or tenements come by descent, devise, presentation to some church, or promotion to an office, to which a freehold is annexed; and persons voting contrary shall forfeit 40 l. This extends not to restrain persons from voting for Knights of the Shire, in respect of any tithes, or other incorporeal inheritances, or messuages, &c. belonging to offices, by reason the same have not been usually assessed to any publick taxes; or in regard to lands not taxed to all taxes, if they have been generally assessed to some one or more of the said rates, &c. by 12 Ann. c. 5.

All estates and conveyances made to any person in a fraudulent manner, on purpose to qualify him to vote, subject to conditions to defeat or determine such estate or conveyance the same, shall be taken against the persons executing them as free and absolute; and all bonds, &c. for redemption shall be void; also persons voting by colour of such conveyance, incur a forfeiture of 40 l.

The statutes for preventing fraudulent conveyances to multiply votes on electing Knights of Shires, are made to extend to lands or tenements, for which any persons shall vote for the election of Members to serve in Parliament for any city or town, that is a county of itself; and if any person votes at such election as a freeholder, not having his estate a year before, and assessed as described in the act 10 Ann. he is liable to the penalties imposed on unqualified voters. 13 Geo. 2. c. 20. Persons refusing to take the oaths of abjuration, &c. are made incapable to vote for Members of Parliament. 1 Geo. 1. c. 13.

By 18 Geo. 2. c. 18. No person shall vote for the electing a Knight of the Shire in England and Wales, in respect or right of any messuage, &c. which has not been charged or assessed to the land tax twelve kalendar months next before the election. But not to restrain any person from voting in right of any rents or chambers in the inns of courts, &c. or any messuages or seats belonging to any offices, in regard they have not been usually assessed to the land tax. No person shall vote at any such election without having a freehold in the same county, of the clear yearly value of 40 s. above all charges, or without having been in the actual possession or receipt of the profits above twelve kalendar months, unless the same come to him within the time aforesaid, by descent, marriage, marriage settlement, devise or promotion to any benefice or office; or shall vote in right of any freehold granted to him fraudulently, or vote more than once at the same election, under the penalty of 40 l. No publick tax, rate or assessment, shall be deemed a charge on any freehold.

As to who are, or ought, to be the electors in boroughs, it hath very much exercised the British House of Commons: in the 22 Jun. 1. it was resolved, that where there is no charter or custom to the contrary, the election in boroughs is to be made by all the householders and not freeholders only: and in a question whether the commons or the capital burgesses of a certain borough in Lincolnshire, were the electors of Members of Parliament, anno 4 Car. 1. it was agreed, that the election of burgesses in all boroughs did of common right belong to the commoners, and that nothing could take it from them but a prescription and constant usage beyond the memory of man. It has been holden, that the commonalties of cities and burghs are only the ordinary and lower sort of citizens, burgesses or freemen; and that the right of election of burgesses to Parliament in all boroughs, belongs to the commoners, viz. the ordinary burgesses or freemen; and not the Mayor, Aldermen and Common Council: tho' the meaning of the words communitates civitatum & burgorum, has always signified, rightly understood, the Mayor, Aldermen and Common Council, where they were to be found; or the Steward or Bailiff, and capital Burgesses, or the governing parts of cities and towns, by what persons soever they were governed, or otherwise called.

The most extraordinary case which has happened in this age, with relation to the determinations of a committee of privileges and elections, was the case of Asphy and White, concerning the borough of Aylesbury; on a question, "Whether an action at law lies for an elector who is denied his vote?"

In this case the debates ended in the following resolutions, viz. That the qualification of electors and of persons elected, is cognizable only before the Commons in Parliament; and that the examining and determining the qualification or right of any elector, &c. belongs to them, where the acts of Parliament give no particular direction; that whoever shall prosecute any action, &c. which shall bring the right of electors to the determination of any other jurisdiction than that of the House of Commons, except in cases specially provided for by some statute, shall be guilty of a breach of the privilege of the House. Several persons were committed to Newgate by a warrant signed by Robert Harley, Speaker of the House of Commons, for prosecuting actions at law against the constables of the borough of Aylesbury, who refused to take their votes at the election of Members of Parliament, &c. in contempt of the jurisdiction and privileges of the House; and this matter being returned by habeas corpus severally, and the several persons defendants brought into court, counsel moved that they might be discharged, for that the prosecution of a suit at law could be no unlawful act, nor a breach of the privilege of the House of Commons: three judges were of opinion, that the House were the proper judges of their own privileges; but Lord Chief Justice held, That the AUTHORITY OF THE COMMONS WAS CIRCUMSCRIBED BY LAW; and if they should exceed that authority, then to say they were judges of their own privilege, is to make their privilege to be what they would have them to be; and that if they should wrongfully imprison, there could be no redress, so that the courts at Westminster could not execute the laws upon which the liberties of the subject subsist. 2 Salk. 503. And in action on the case, by a burgess of Aylesbury, against the constables of the said borough, for refusing to receive the plaintiff's vote in the election of a Member of Parliament; the plaintiff had a verdict, but the judgment was arrested by the opinion of three judges, viz. That the action is not maintainable, because the constables acted as judges, and the not receiving the plaintiff's vote is damnum sine injuria; for when the matter comes before the House, his vote will be received; that the right of electing Members to serve in Parliament, is to be decided in Parliament, and the plaintiff may petition the House for that purpose, and after 'tis determined there, he may then bring his action, and not before. Holt Chief Justice contra, That the plaintiff had a right to vote; a freeholder has a right to vote by reason of his freehold; and IT IS A REAL RIGHT, and the value of his freehold was not material till the Stat. 8 H. 6. which requires it to be 40 s. per annum: that as it is ratione liberi tenementi in counties; so in ancient boroughs, they have a right to vote ratione burgagii; and in cities and corporation, it is ratione franchise, and a personal inheritance, vested in the whole corporation, but to be used by the PARTICULAR Members; that this is a noble privilege, which entitles the subject to a share in the government and legislature; and that if the plaintiff hath a right, he must have a remedy to assert that right, for want of right and want of remedy is the same thing; that refusing to take the plaintiff's vote is an injury, and every injury imports a damage; and that where a parliamentary matter comes in incidentally to an action of property, in the King's court, it must be determined there, and not in Parliament; the Parliament cannot judge of the injury, nor give damages to the plaintiff, and he hath no remedy by way of petition: and according to this opinion, the judgment of the other three judges was reversed upon a writ of error brought in the House of Lords. 1 Salk. 10. This case occasioned great disputes between the two Houses of Parliament; the Lords insisting, That if the Commons only could judge of the right of their electors, they would in effect choose their electors, &c. And the Commons alledging, that if the right of electors might be determined in the courts of law, from whence causes are removed by writ of error into the House of Lords, the Lords would become judges of the right of electors to choose, and consequently who were duly elected Members of the Commons House; whereby the Commons would lose their independency, and be subject to the Lords, &c. But the Parliament being soon after prorogued, the dispute was dropped. See the case of Ashby and White, which is excellently reported, as well in 6 Mod. 45. to 56 incl. see. as in Ld. Raym. from fo. 938 to 958 inclusive. And see also Lord Holt's Life.

By the Common law of England, No Commoner can be subjected to laws made without his consent, and because such consent cannot be given by every individual, by reason of number and confusion; that power is lodged in their Representatives, elected and chosen by them, viz. Knights, Citizens, &c. 3 Salk. 18. And in several counties, the Citizens and Burgesses were formerly chosen in the county-courts, with the Knights of Shires, and jointly returned, &c. For there were commonly four or five Citizens or Burgesses sent from the respective cities or boroughs to the county-court; and there chosen, with full power for themselves and their several communities, to do and consent to such things, as by the Common Council of the Kingdom assembled in Parliament, should be ordained and enacted.

It is said by some writers, that in ancient times the King hath nominated the very persons to be returned, and did not leave it to the election of the people; for which they give an instance in the 45th year of Ed. 3. And among the Parliament writs 14 Elizabeth. there appears to be an appointment and return of Burgesses, by the Lord of a Town, &c. But these are single instances in their kind; and the writs for elections in the 23d year of King Edward. 1. ran in English as follows, viz.

Form of an ancient writ for election of Members of Parliament.

TO the sheriff of, &c. greeting: Because we desire to have a conference and treaty with the Earls, Barons, and other great men of our kingdom, to provide remedies against the dangers our kingdom is in at this time; therefore we have commanded them that they be with us at Westminster, on the day, &c. next coming, to treat, ordain, and do, so as those dangers may be prevented: and we command, and firmly enjoin thee, that, without delay, thou dost cause to be chosen, and to come to us, at the time and place aforesaid, two Knights of the County aforesaid, and of every city two Citizens, and of every borough two Burgesses, of the best, most able, and discreet men for business; so as the said Knights may have sufficient power for themselves and the community of the County aforesaid; and the Citizens and Burgesses may have the same power separately from them, for themselves and the communities of Cities and Boroughs, then to do in the premises what shall be ordained by the Common Council of the realm, so that the business aforesaid may not remain undone; and have there the names of the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses, and this Writ. Witness the King, &c.

The Return of the Writ, thereon indorsed was thus:

IA. B. sheriff, by virtue of this writ have caused to be chosen in the county of, &c. two Knights, and of every city of the same county two Citizens, and of every borough two Burgesses, of the best, most able, and discreet Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of the county, city and boroughs aforesaid, according to the tenor of the writ.

3. Of the duty of Returning Officers, and the remedies against them.

By 7 H. 4. cap. 15. The election of Knights of the Shire is to be made in the following manner:

At the next county-court after delivery of the writ, proclamation is to be made by the sheriff of the county, of the day and place the Parliament is to assemble, and that all as are there present shall attend at the election of Knights of the Shire; and then in full county, a free and indifferent election shall be made: and after such choice the names of the parties chosen, are to be written on an indenture under the seals of the electors; which indenture so sealed and tacked to the writ, shall be the sheriff's return thereof. And by the 23 H. 6. cap. 7. it is enacted, That the sheriff after receipt of the writ shall deliver a precept under his seal to every Mayor and Bailiff of cities and boroughs within his county, reciting the writ, and requiring them to choose two Citizens and Burgesses to come to the Parliament; and such Mayors and head officers, are to make return of the precept to the sheriff, by indenture, &c. whereupon the sheriff is enabled to make a good return of the writ: the sheriff is to make election between the hours of eight and eleven in the forenoon; and if any Knight, Citizen, or Burgess, returned by the sheriff shall be put out, and the name of another put in, divers penalties are incurred; sheriffs acting contrary to this statute, and not returning a Member duly elected, are subject to a forfeiture of 100*l.* recoverable by action of debt; and officers of corporations, making false returns, liable to a penalty of 40*l.* &c. It has been adjudged on this act, That tho' no election should be made of any Knight of the Shire, but between eight and eleven of the clock in the forenoon; if the election be begun within that time, and cannot be determined in those hours, it may be made after. 4 Inst. 48. And if any electors give their voices before the precept for election is read and published, it will be of no force; for after the precept is thus read, &c. they may alter their voices and make a new election. Ibid. 49. The Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 7. ordains, If any person shall return a Member to serve in Parliament for any place, contrary to the determination in the House of Commons of the right of election for such a place, the return so made shall be judged a false return; and the party making it may be prosecuted, and double damages, with costs, recovered against him: officers wilfully and falsely returning more persons than are required to be chosen by the writ or precept, the like remedy may be had against them; and all contracts, promises, &c. to return any Member of Parliament, are not only declared void, but the makers or givers of the contracts, &c. or of any gift or reward to procure a false or double return, shall forfeit 300*l.* one third to the King, another to the informer, and the other third to the poor of the place, to be recovered in any Court of Record at Westminster, &c.

By 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 25. When any new Parliament shall be called, there shall be forty days between the teste and returns of the writs; the Lord Chancellor, &c. is to issue out writs for election of Members of Parliament, with as much expedition as may be; and the several writs shall be delivered to the proper officers for execution, who are to indorse the day of the receipt on the back of the writ, and forthwith make out the precepts to each borough, &c. which are to be delivered to the officers of every such borough, within three days, and they must likewise indorse the day of the receipt, and immediately cause publick notice to be given of the time and place of election, and proceed to election thereupon in eight days: for electing Knights of the Shire, the sheriff is to hold his county-court at the most publick and usual place, and there proceed in the election at the next court, unless it fall out to be within six days after the receipt of the writ, and then the same is to be adjourned, giving ten days notice of the election; if the election be not determined on view, but a poll is demanded, the sheriff is to take the same, fame, and likewise a scrutiny, and he or his under-sheriff shall appoint and swear clerks for that purpose, &c. The county-court is not to be adjourned to any other place, without consent of the candidates; nor shall any unnecessary adjournments be made, but the poll to proceed; also every sheriff, &c. is to deliver a copy of the poll to any person desiring it; and officers for every wilful offence against this act, are subject to a forfeiture of 500*l.* And by 6 Geo. 2. cap. 23. The county-court for electing Knights of the Shire in Parliament, may be adjourned from day to day, until the election is determined; but not to a Monday, or Friday, &c. only, which will be void.

The 10 & 11 W. 3. directs, that the sheriff or other officer having execution and return of writs of summons for parliament, shall on or before the day of meeting of parliament, and with all expedition, (not exceeding fourteen days after election,) make returns to the clerk of the crown in Chancery to be filed, on pain of forfeiting 500*l.* And the returning officer, within twenty days after the election, is to deliver over to the clerk of the peace, all the poll books on oath made before two justices, to be preserved among the records of the sessions of the peace, &c. 10 Ann. cap. 23.

In double returns, it has been formerly a general practice in the House of Commons, that neither one nor the other should sit in the house until it be decided; anno 1640, two returns were made for Great Marlow, and in both indentures one person was returned, and he was admitted to sit, but the others ordered to withdraw until the question was determined: And in the same year, it was ordered, That where some are returned by the sheriff or such other officer as by law hath power to return, and others returned by private hands; in such case, those returned by the sheriff or other officer, shall sit until the election is quashed by the house. Ordinan. 1640. If one be duly elected, and the sheriff, &c. return another, the return must be reformed and amended; and he who is duly elected is to be inserted, for the election is the foundation, and not the return. 4 Insh. 49.

In action of the case, the plaintiff declared, that he was duly elected a member of parliament for such a borough, and that the defendant returned two other persons; and that he petitioned the House of Commons, and was adjudged to be duly elected, and his name ordered to be inserted in the Roll, and the name of the other to be razed out: the plaintiff had a verdict; but it was adjudged in arrest of judgment, that this declaration was not founded on the act 7 & 8 W. 3. because that statute gave an action where there was none before, therefore the fact must be agreeable to it, which not being done, defendant had judgment. 2 Salk. 504. The court will not meddle in an action upon a double return, until it is determined in parliament. Lutw. 88. And it hath been holden that for a double return, no action lay before the Statute 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 7. because it is the only method the sheriff had to secure himself; and when the right was decided in parliament, then one indenture was taken off the file, so that it is not then a double return; neither can the party have an action for a false return, for the matter may be determined in the house whether true or false; and if so, there will be an inconvenience in contrary resolutions, if they should determine one way, and the courts at law another; but after a dissolution the action may lie for a false return, for then the right cannot be determined in parliament. 2 Salk. 502.

A double return is the same as a false return, as to action on the case; in both it is grounded on the falsity; but there is another reason why this action will not lie for a double return, (viz.) because the law doth not take notice of such a return; it is only allowed by the usage of parliament, and in cases wherein the proper officer cannot determine who is chosen; therefore when he doubts, he makes a double return, and submits the choice to the determination of the House of Commons; and if that house admits such returns, and make determinations on them, it will be hard for the law to subject a man to the action only for submitting a fact to be determined by a court, which hath a proper jurisdiction to determine it: And by reason of the variety of opinions, that an action in this case would lie, and would not; it hath been enacted by 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 7. That THE LAST DETERMINATION OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS CONCERNING THE RIGHT OF ELECTION, IS TO BE PURSUED. 2 Lev. 114. 1 Nels. Abr. 30.

A member elected and returned for several places, is to make his choice for which place he will serve; and if he doth not, by the time which the house shall appoint, the house may determine for what place he shall continue a member, and writs shall go out for the other place.

Candidates are not to make presents of money to, or treat, &c. electors, after the teste of the writ of summons, or issuing out the writs of election, or after any place of a member becomes vacant; if they do, for THIS BRIBERY they shall be incapacitated to serve as members. 7 W. 3. c. 4. And no officers of the excise, post office, &c. are to make any interest for members of parliament, on pain of forfeiting 100*l.* and disability, &c. 5 & 6 W. & M. cap. 20.

By a late act, an oath is to be taken by electors of members of parliament, That they have not received or had any money, gift, reward, office, place or employment, or any promise for money, &c. to them or their use, to give their votes: and if they ask, take, or contract for any money, or reward, by gift or other device, to give or refuse their votes; or if any persons by gift, &c. corruptly procure any one to give his vote; they shall forfeit 500*l.* and be disabled to vote in any election, and to hold any office, or franchise, &c. And officers admitting persons to vote, without taking the aforesaid oath, if demanded, incur a forfeiture of 100*l.* Likewise an oath is to be administered to returning officers, that they have not received any money, &c. or promise for such, for making any returns, &c. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 24. Persons are to be prosecuted within two years, after any offence against this last statute, for preventing bribery and corruption in elections of persons to serve in parliament, or shall not be liable to any incapacity or forfeiture, &c. by the 9 Geo. 2. c. 38. And when election shall be made, the secretary at war shall issue orders for the removal of all soldiers quartered in any city, town, or borough, where such election shall be, one day at least before, to the distance of two or more miles; and not to make a nearer approach, until after the poll taken, is ended, &c. But this not to extend to the liberty of Westminster, &c. in respect of his Majesty's guards; nor to fortified places, &c. Stat. 8 Geo. 2. cap. 30.

See 33 Geo. 2. c. 20. intitled, An act to enforce and render more effectual the laws relating to the qualification of members to sit in the House of Commons.

To regulate the trials of controverted elections, or returns of members to serve in parliament, see 10 Geo. 3. c. 16.

By 10 Geo. 3. c. 41. The Speaker of the House of Commons, is empowered to issue his warrant to make out new writs for the choice of members, during the recess of parliament.

N. B. By 10 Geo. 3. c. 6. s. 86. Members of parliament are to be taxed at their mansion-houses.

Parliaments holden, and proceedings in.

All parliaments are to be held without force. 7 Ed. 1. Before the Conquest, parliaments were held twice every year? The 4 Ed. 3. enacted, That a parliament should be holden once a year, and oftener if necessary; and the 36 Ed. 6. requires a parliament to be held every year. But by the means of Cardinal Wolsey, a parliament was held but once in fourteen years during that reign; which was upon a remarkable occasion, viz. to attain the Duke of Buckingham. The Stat. 16 Car. 2. cap. 1. ordains, That the sitting and holding of parliaments shall not be discontinued above three years. And the 6 W. & M. cap. 2. enacts, That new parliaments shall be chosen once in three years; and no parliament continue longer than three years. But by 1 Geo. 1. c. 38. The time of continuance of parliament is enlarged to seven years; to be computed from the day appointed for their meeting, by the writ of summons.

The occasional law, 1 W. & M. Sess. 1. cap. 1. declared, That the Lords and Commons convened at Westminster, were the two houses of parliament, notwithstanding the want of any writ of summons, or other defect of form, &c. Tho' 12 and 13 Car. 2. c. 1. made it penal, for any person to affirm that the houses of parliament have a legislative power without the King. An old statute ordains, That every person and commonalty, having summons to parliament, shall come thither, in pain to be amerced, or otherwise punished: And if the sheriff doth not summon them, he shall likewise be amerced, &c. 5 R. 2. c. 4.

On holding a parliament, the King the first day sits in the upper house, and by himself or the Lord Chancellor, shews the reason of their meeting; then the Commons are commanded to choose their speaker, which done, two or three days afterwards he is presented to the King, and after some speeches is allowed, and sent down to the House of Commons; when the business of parliament proceeds. 12 Rep. 115.

A parliament cannot begin on return of the writs, without the King, in person, or by representation; and by representation two ways, either by a guardian of England, by letters patent under the Great Seal, when the King is out of the realm; or by commission, to certain lords in case of indisposition, &c. when his Majesty is at home. 4 Inst. 6. 7. And if any parliament is to be holden before a guardian of the realm, there must be a special commission to begin the parliament; but the teste of the writs of summons is to be in the guardian's name: And by an ancient law, if the King being beyond sea, cause a parliament to be summoned in this kingdom, by writ under the teste of his lieutenant; and after the King returns hither, the parliament shall proceed without any new summons. 8 H. 5.

In the 5th year of Henry 5. a parliament was held, before John Duke of Bedford, brother to the King, and guardian of the kingdom. Anno 3 Ed. 4. a parliament was begun in the presence of the King, and prorogued to a further day; and then William Archbishop of York, the King's Commissary by letters patent, held the same parliament, and made an adjournment, &c. And 28 Eliz. the Queen by commission under the Great Seal, (re-citing, that for urgent occasions she could not be present in her royal person,) did authorise John Whitgift Archbishop of Canterbury, William Lord Burleigh, Lord Treasurer of England, and Henry Earl of Derby, Lord Steward, to hold a parliament, &c. Ad faciendum omnia & singula, &c. nunc ad parliamentum adjournand' & prorogand', &c. And in the upper part of the page, above the beginning of the commission is written, Domina Regina representatur per commissarios, viz. &c. These commissioners sat on a form before the cloth of state, and after the commission read, the parliament proceeded.

A parliament may be holden at any place the King shall assign; but it ought not to be dissolved as long as any bill remains undiscussed, and proclamation must be made in the parliament, that if any person have any petition, he shall come in and be heard, and if no answer be given, it is intended the publick are satisfied. Lex Constitution. 157.

In former times, by the death of the King during the sitting of parliament, the parliament was ipso facto dissolved; but by the Stat. 4 Ann. c. 8. A parliament sitting or in being, at the demise of the King, shall continue for six months; unless prorogued or dissolved, by such person to whom the crown shall come; by 1 and 12 W. 3. All orders of parliament determine by prorogation; and one taken by order of the parliament, after their prorogation, may be discharged on an habeas corpus, as well as after a dissolution; but the dissolution of a parliament doth not alter the state of impeachments brought up by the commons in a preceding parliament. Raym. 120. 1 Lev. 384. And it hath been resolved, that cases of appeals and writs of error, shall continue, and are to be proceeded in statu quo, &c. as they stood at the dissolution of the last parliament. Raym. 381.

A prorogation of parliament is always by the King, and in this case the sessions must begin de novo; and if a parliament is prorogued upon return of the writ of summons, it begins at the end of the prorogation: An adjournment is by each house, and the sessions continues notwithstanding such adjournment. 1 Mod. 242. By a prorogation of parliament, there is a session; and every several session of parliament is in law a several parliament: tho' if it be only an adjournment, there is no session; and when a parliament is called and doth sit, but is dissolved without any act passed, or judgment given, it is no session of parliament, but a convention. 4 Inst. 27. If a parliament is assembled, and orders made, and writs of error brought in the House of Peers, and several bills agreed on, but none signed; this is but a convention, and no parliament, or sessions of parliament: But every session, in which the King signs a bill, is a parliament; and so every parliament is a session. 1 Roll. Rep. 29. Hutt. 61. And a session doth continue, until it is prorogued or dissolved.

The parliament from the first day of sitting is called the first session of parliament, &c. Raym. 120. And the courts of justice ex officio are to take notice of the beginning, prorogation, and ending of every parliament; also of all general statutes; and acts of parliament take effect from the beginning of the parliament, unless it be otherwise ordered by the acts. 1 Lev. 296. Hob. 111.

On prorogation, such bills as have passed, not having received the royal assent, must fall: for there can be no act of parliament, without consent of the lords and commons, and the royal fiat of the King, giving his consent personally, or by commission; and by the Stat. 33 H. 8. cap. 21. The King may pass acts by commission under the Great Seal, signed by his hand; and such acts shall be of equal force as if the King were present in person.

Every man in judgment of law is party to an act of parliament; after the royal assent is given, it is the prince's, and whole realm's deed. The determination of the High Court of Parliament, being presumed to be the act of every particular subject, who is either present personally, or consenting by his representative.

Publick bills or acts of parliament are commonly drawn by such members of the House of Commons as are most inclined to effect the good of the publick, particularly in relation to the bill designed, taking advice thereupon; and acts for the revival, repeal, or continuance of statutes, are penned by lawyers, members of the house, appointed for that purpose.

Of the formality in bringing in, and passing statutes.

In bringing in and passing statutes, the following formalities are observed, viz.

Any member may move for a bill to be brought in, except it be for imposing a tax, which is to be done by order of the house; and being granted, the person making the motion, and those who second it, are ordered to prepare and bring in the same: When the bill is ready, some of the members ordered to prepare it, present it; and upon a question being agreed to, it has the first reading by the clerk at the table; after this the clerk delivers the bill to the speaker, who, standing up, declares the substance of it; and if any debate happens, he puts the question, whether the same shall have a second reading: And sometimes upon motion appoints a day for it; for publick bills, unless upon extraordinary occasions, are seldom read more than once a day, the members being allowed convenient time to consider of them; If nothing be said against a bill, the ordinary course is to proceed without a question; but if the bill be generally disliked, a question is sometimes put, whether the bill shall be rejected? If it be rejected, it cannot be proposed any more than sessions: When a bill hath been read a second time, any member may move to have the same amended; but no member of the house is admitted to speak more than once in a debate, except the bill be read more than once that day; or the whole house is turned into a committee; and after some time spent in debates, the Speaker collecting the sense of the house, reduces the same to a question, which he submits to the house, and is put to the vote: And a question is to be put, after the bill is so read a second time, whether it shall be committed? which is either to a committee of the whole house or a private committee, as the importance of the bill shall require; this committee is to report their opinion of the bill, with the amendments, to the house, the chairman having caused the clerk attending, to read the bill, and read it himself, putting every clause to the question, &c. The chairman makes his report at the side bar of the house, reading all the alterations made, and then delivers the same to the clerk of the parliament; who likewise reads all the amendments, and the speaker puts the question, whether they shall be read a second time? And if that be agreed unto, he reads the amendments himself, and puts the question, whether the bill so amended shall be ingrossed, and read a third time some other day? And then the speaker takes the bill in his hand, holds it up, and puts the last question, whether the bill shall pass? If a majority of voices are for it, then the bill passes; and it is sent up to the House of Lords, where, when it is twice read, the question is to be for commitment; or if it be not committed, then it is to be read a third time, and the next question to be for its passing; and on the third reading of the bill, any member may speak against the whole bill to throw out the same, or for amendment of any clause; and if it be amended, it is to be sent back again to the Commons for their concurrence, and being returned, is then passed in the House of Lords, and ready for the royal assent. If a bill pass in one house, but a demur happens upon it when sent to the other house, in this case a conference is demanded; wherein certain deputed members of each house meet in the painted chamber, and debate the matter; and when they have agreed, the bill passed is brought to the King in the House of Lords, where having his royal robes on, he declares the royal assent, by the clerk of the parliament. Pract. Solic. in Par. 397, 398.

As for private bills, leave is to be obtained by petition, &c. to bring in the same; and the substance thereof is to be set forth, until which a bill is not to be offered; and when the petition is read, and leave given to bring in the bill, whereupon it is accordingly brought into the house, the persons concerned and affected by it may be heard by themselves or counsel at the bar, or before a committee, to whom such bill is referred; (and in case of a peer, he shall be admitted to come within the bar of the House of Commons, and sit covered on a stool whilst the same is debating.) And after counsel is heard on both sides, and the house is satisfied with the contents of the bill, it is committed, and passed, &c.

All bills, motions and petitions, are by order of parliament to be entered on the parliament rolls, altho' they are denied, and never proceed to the establishment of a statute, together with the answers. Lex Constitution.

The Speaker of the House of Commons is not allowed to persuade or dissuade in passing a bill, only to make a short narrative of it; opening the parts of the bill, so that all may understand it; if any question be upon the bill, he is to explain, but not enter into argument or dispute; and he is not to vote, except the house is equally divided: When Mr. Speaker desires to speak, he ought to be heard without interruption; and when the Speaker stands up, the member standing up is to sit down: If two stand up to speak to a bill, he who would speak against the bill, if it be known, is to be first heard; otherwise he who was first up, which is to be determined by the Speaker: No member is to be taken down, unless by Mr. Speaker, in such cases as the house do not think fit to admit; and if any person speak impertinently, or besides the question, the Speaker is to interrupt him, and know the pleasure of the house whether he shall be further heard: but if he speaks not to the matter, it may be moderated: And whosoever hisses or disturbs any person in his speech, shall answer it at the bar of the house.

In enacting laws, and other proceedings in parliament; the Lords give their voices in their house, from the pious Lord seriatim, by the word Content, or Not Content: The manner of voting in the House of Commons, is by Yea and No; and if it be difficult to determine which are the greater number, the house divides, and four tellers are appointed by the Speaker, two of each side, to number them, the Ay's going out, and the No's staying in; and thereof report is made to the house. When the members of the house go forth, none is to stir, until Mr. Speaker rises from his seat; and then all the rest are to follow after.

Parliamentum Diabolicum, Was a parliament held at Coventry, 38 H. 6. wherein Edward Earl of March, (afterwards King) and many of the chief nobility were attainted, but the acts then made were annulled by the succeeding parliament. Holingb. Cron.

Parliamentum Indolozum, A parliament 6 H. 4. whereunto by special precept to the sheriffs in their several counties, no lawyer or person skilled in the law was to come; therefore it was so termed. Rot. Parl. 6 H. 4. Black. Com. 1 V. 176.

Parliamentum insanum, Was a parliament assembled at Oxford, anno 41 H. 3. so stiled, from the madness of their proceedings; and because the Lords came with armed men to it, and contentions grew very high between the King, Lords and Commons, whereby many extraordinary things were done. 4 Inst.

Parliamentum Religiozorum. In most convents, they had a common room, into which the brethren withdrew for conversation; and the conference there had was termed Parliamentum. *Matt. Parol. What things may be done by parol or without deed.

Stat. 29 Car. 2. cap. 3. enacts, That all leases, estates, interests of freehold, or terms of years, or any uncertain interests in or out of lands, &c. not put in writing, and signed by the parties, or their agents authorized by writing, shall have no greater effect than as estates at will. Except leases not exceeding three years, whereof the rent shall be two thirds of the full value.

No such estates or interests, not being copyhold or customary interest, shall be assigned, granted or surrendered, unless by deed or note in writing signed (as supra) or by operation of law. No action shall be brought, to charge an executor on a special promise to answer damages out of his own estate, Or to charge the defendant upon any promise to answer for the debt or miscarriage of another, Or upon an agreement or consideration of marriage, Or on any contract of sale of lands, &c. or any interest concerning them, Or on any agreement not to be performed within a year after the making, Unless such agreement, or some note thereof be in writing, signed by the party to be charged, or some other by him authorized.

All devises of lands or tenements shall be in writing, and signed by the party devising, or some other in his presence and by his direction, and subscribed in his presence by three or four witnesses, or else shall be void.

No such devises in writing shall be recoverable, otherwise than by writing or burning, tearing or cancelling the same by the testator, or in his presence, and by his consent.

All declarations or creations of trusts shall be made by some writing, signed by the party, or by his last will in writing, or else be void.

Assignments of trust shall be in writing, signed by the party granting or assigning by such last will, or else shall be of no effect.

Trusts resulting by implication of law, or transferred or extinguished by act of law, shall be as if this statute had not been made.

No contract for the sale of any goods for 10 l. or upwards, shall be good, except the buyer ACTUALLY receive active part of them, or give something in earnest, or some note thereof in writing be made and signed by the parties to be charged, or their agents.

No will in writing of any personal estate shall be repealed by words only, except the same be in the life of the testator committed to writing, and read to him, and allowed by him, and that be proved by three witnesses.

An use will not pass by parol without deed; but Ch. J. Pemberton said, it would be a good trust or Chancery use, if for money. 2 Show. 156. Pasch. 33 Car. 2. B. R. in case of Berris v. Bowyer. A parol release is good to discharge a debt by simple contract. Arg. 2 Show. 417.

A promise merely executory on both parts; as if I promise B. 5 s. if he goes to Paul's, before B. goes, I may discharge him, and so shall discharge myself of payment of the 5 s. for no debt was yet due, nor any thing executed on either side. 3 Lev. 238. An agreement in writing since the statute of frauds and perjuries may be discharged by parol. Vern. 240. A rent assigned in lieu of dower may be by parol without deed, though it be a freehold created de novo: And though a rent lies in grant, because this is not properly a grant, but an appointment. 12 Mod. 201. Lessee for years surrendered to the lessor by parol reserving rent; adjudged, this was a good reservation upon the contract, and that an action of debt would lie for the rent after the first day of payment incurred, though the reservation was by way of contract, and without any deed. 3 Salk. 312. fl. 7.

If one has a bill of exchange, he may authorise another to indorse his name upon it by parol, and when that is done, it is all one as if he had done it himself; per Holt Ch. J. at Nisi prius. 12 Mod. 564.

An insurance was made from Archangel to the Downs, and from the Downs to Leghorn, but there was a parol agreement at the same time, that the policy should not commence till the ship came to such a place, and it was held, that the parol agreement should avoid (or defeat) the writing; cited per Holt Ch. J. as adjudged in Pemberton's time. 2 Salk. 444, 445.

If a thing is granted by a writing, which is grantable by parol, it may be revoked by parol. Vid. 10 Mod. 74.

Deputation of an office is in it's own nature grantable by parol, and therefore though it should happen to be granted by writing, yet since it is in itself grantable by parol, it may be revoked by parol. 10 Mod. 74. See Black. Com. 2 V. 297.

Parol arrest. Any justice of peace may, by word of mouth, authorise any one to arrest another who is guilty of a breach of the peace in his presence, &c. Dalt. 17.

Parol demurrer. Is a privilege allowed an infant, who is sued concerning lands which came to him by descent; and the court thereupon will give judgment, quod loquela predicta remaneat quousque the infant comes to the age of twenty-one years. And where the age is granted on parol demurrer, the writ doth not abate, but the plea is put sine die, until the infant is of full age; and then there shall be a re-summmons. 2 Lill. Abr. 280. 2 Inst. 258. Rass. Entr. 363.

The granting a parol demurrer is in favour of an infant, and for his benefit, that he may not be prejudiced in his right for want of well knowing his estate, &c. And if his ancestor dies seised, and the land, descended to him, and he enters and takes the profits, it would be a prejudice to the infant to lose the possession which he hath; so that in such case it shall stay until his age. 6 Rep. 3.

The tenant in an action, cannot pray parol demurrer, until the infant demandant comes of age: this is expressly provided for by 6 Ed. 1. cap. 2. And it would damage the infant, if it should be so delayed upon an action brought by him, where an estate is descended to him from his ancestor. 6 Rep. 3, 5. In parol demurrer when it may be had, if two are vouched, and there is parol demurrer for the nonage of the one; it shall be for the other also. 45 Ed. 3. 23. See Age prier, and Black. Com. 3 V. 300.

Parol Evidence. See tit. Witnesses, and Black. Com. 3 V. 369.

Parol, or Pleadings. Are the mutual altercations between the plaintiff and defendant; which at present are set down and delivered into the proper office in writing, tho' formerly they were usually put in by their counsel ore tenus, or in voce, in court, and then minuted down by the chief clerks, or prothonotaries; whence in our old law French the pleadings are frequently denominated the parol. Black. Com. 3 V. 293.

It is sometimes joined with lease, as lease parol, i. e. lease per parol, a lease by word of mouth, to distinguish it from a lease in writing. Cowell.

Parricide, (Patricida,) Is properly he who kills his father, and may be applied to him who killeth his mother. Law Lat. Dict.

By the Roman law, parricide, or the murder of one's parents or children, was punished in a much severer manner than any other kind of homicide. After being scourged, the delinquents were sewed up in a leather sack, with a live dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and so cast into the sea. Solon, it is true, in his laws, made none against parricide; apprehending it impossible that any one should be guilty of so unnatural a barbarity. And the Persians, according to Hierodotus, entertained the same notion, when they adjudged all persons who killed their reputed parents to be bastards. And, upon some such reason as this, must we account for the omission of an exemplary punishment for this crime in our English laws; which treat it no otherwise than as simple murder, unless the child was also the servant of his parent. 1 Hal. P. C. 380.

For, tho' the breach of natural relation is unobserved, yet the breach of civil or ecclesiastical connexions, when coupled with murder, denominates it a new offence; no less than a species of treason, called parva proditio, or petit treason: which, however, is nothing else but an aggravated degree of murder; altho', on account of the violation of private allegiance, it is stigmatized as an inferior species of treason. And thus, in the ancient Gothic constitution, we find the breach both of natural and civil relations, ranked in the same class with crimes against the state and sovereign. Black. Com. 4 V. 203.

Parson, (Persona) Signifies the rector of a church because for his time he represents the church, and in his person, the church may sue for, and defend her right, &c. Or he is called parson as he is bound by virtue of his office, in propria persona servire Deum. Fleta, lib. 9. cap. 18. 1 Inst. 300. Also the word parson in a large sense includes all clergymen having spiritual presentments. And there may be two parsons in one church, one of the one moiety, and the other of the other; and a part of the church and town allotted to each; and may be two that make but one parson in a church, presented by one patron. 1 Inst. 17, 18.

To a parson, these things are requisite; holy orders, presentation, institution, and induction; and where a person is compleat parson, he may cease to be parson of the church, by death, or cession, resignation, deprivation for simony, nonconformity to the canons, for adultery, &c. 1 Inst. 120. 4 Rep. 75, 76. A parson hath the entire fee of his church; and where 'tis said he hath not the right of fee simple, that is understood as to bringing a writ of right. Cro. Car. 582. And in the time of the parson, the patron hath nothing to do with the church; but if the parson wastes the inheritance thereof to his own private use, in cutting trees, &c. his patron may have a prohibition, so that to some purposes he hath an interest in the parson's time. 11 H. 6. 4. 11 Rep. 49.

Sir Edward Coke was of opinion, That at Common law a parson could not be arrested; and said, he had seen a report grounded on the statutes 50 Edward 3. c. 5. and 1 Henry 2. c. 15. which are in affirmance of the Common law, and in maintenance of the liberties of the church; church; that a parson ought not to be arrested in going, staying, or returning to celebrate divine service, nor any other person who attended him in such service; and that if he was, he might have an action upon those statutes, against the person making the arrest. 12 Rep. 100. A parson ought not to appear at the sheriff's turn, or the court leet, without an absolute necessity, F. N. B. 160.

No parson or spiritual person, shall take a farm or lease of lands, &c. to himself, or any one for his use, on pain of forfeiting 10*l.* a month, one moiety to the King, the other to the informer. Stat. 21 H. 8. cap. 13. Nor shall he buy, to sell again any merchandise, corn, cattle, &c. upon forfeiture of treble value: but he may buy horses, or any other cattle, for his necessary use in manuring his glebe and church lands. Ibid. On information upon this statute for renting a farm, defendant pleaded in bar, that he had not sufficient glebe for pasturing his cattle, nor corn for his family; but the plaintiff traversed his having spent the product thereof in his family, &c. 1 Lutw. 134. See Church, Ecclesiastical Courts, &c. and Black. Com. 1 V. 384.

Parson Impersonator (Persona impersonata) Is he who is in possession of a church, be it presentative or improper, and with whom the church is full.

Persona, according to the New Book of Entries, seems to be the patron who has right to give the benefice, by reason he had anciently the tithes in respect of his liberality in erecting or endowing the church, Quasi justinet personam ecclesie; and persona impersonata is the parson to whom the benefice is given in the patron's right. Persona impersonata is used for the rector of a church presentative. Reg. Judic. 24. A dean and chapter are parsons impersonates of a benefice appropriated to them; and persona impersonata is one who is inducted and in possession of a benefice. Dyer 40, 221. So that persona may be termed impersonata, only in regard of the possession he hath of the rectory, by the act of another. 1 Inst. 300. In a quare impedit the parson is to plead persona impersonata; but if he doth not say at the time of obtaining the writ, it will be inferred by the writ that he is. Cro. Car. 105. And this is a plea that he is admitted and instituted in the church, &c. 7 Rep. 26. See Black. Com. 1 V. 391.

Parsonage, (Personatus, personagium,) Is sometimes taken for a dignitary in a church, and sometimes for the benefice itself. Cowell.

Parsonage, or rectory, is a parish church, endowed with a house, glebe, tithes, &c. Or a certain portion of lands, tithes, and offerings, established by law, for the maintenance of the minister who hath the cure of souls: And tho' properly a parsonage or rectory doth consist of glebe land and tithes; yet it may be a rectory, tho' it have no glebe, but the church and church-yard: Also there may be neither glebe nor tithes, but annual payments in lieu thereof. Purf. Conne. 190. The rights to the parsonage and church lands are of several natures; for the parson hath a right to the possession; the patron hath the right of presentation; and the ordinary a right of investiture, &c. But the rights of the patron and ordinary are only collateral rights: neither of them being capable of possessing or retaining the church themselves; tho' no charge can be laid on the church or parsonage, but by the consent and agreement of all of them. Hugh's Purf. Law. 188.

Parson mortal. The rector of a church instituted and inducted, for his own life, was called Persona mortalis: And any collegiate or conventual body, to whom the church was for ever appropriated, were termed Persona immortalis. Cartular. Rading. MS. fol. 182.

Partes suis nihil habuerunt, &c. Is an exception taken against a fine levied. 3 Rep. 88. The case of Fines.

Participatio. Is the charity so called, by which the poor are made participes of other mens goods. We read it in several places in the Monast. 2 tom. pag. 321.

Parties. Are those who are named in a deed or fine, as parties to it; as those who levy the fine, and to whom the fine is levied: so they who make any deed, and they to whom it is made, are called parties to the deed. Cowell. See 16 Vin. Abr. tit. Party. and Black. Com. 2 V. 298, 355.

Partition, (Partitio,) Is dividing land descended by the Common law, or custom, among cobairs or parceners, where there are two at least. In Kent, where the land is of gavelkind nature, they call their partition sfisting, from the Saxon sfistan, to divide. In Latin it is called herciffere. Partition also may be made by joint-tenants, or tenants in common, by assent, deed, or writ. 31 H. 8. 1. 32 H. 8. 32. See Joint-tenants, Parceners, and Black. Com. 2 V. 189, 323.

Partitione facienda, (Mentioned in stat. 31 H. 8. cap. 1.) Is a writ that lies for those who hold lands or tenements pro indiviso, and would sever to every one his part, against those who refuse to join in partition, as copartners, tenants in gavelkind, &c. Old Nat. Brev. 142. F. N. B. 61.

Partners. Are where two or more persons agree to come in share and share alike to any trade or bargain. If there are two partners in trade, and judgment is recovered against one of them, his moiety of the goods in partnership only shall be taken in execution. Shew. 174. Partnership, is cognisable in equity. See Black. Com. 3 V. 437. and 16 Vin. Abr. tit. Partners.

Part-owners. Are those who are concerned in ship matters, and have joint shares therein. And when there are part-owners of a ship, the majority may fit her out, without consent of the rest; and if they do, such majority run all hazard, and are to partake of the profits. Shew. 13, 30. Action lies as well against the part-owners of a ship, for the loss or spoiling of goods delivered to the master, as against the master; for as the master of a ship is chargeable in respect of his wages, so are part-owners in respect of the freight; but the action against the part-owners must be brought against all of them, or defendants may take advantage of it, by pleading in abatement, &c. Shew. 30, 105. 3 Law. 259.

Party-walls. See Buildings, Fire.

Parvise, (parvise, parvisus, non à parvus adj. sed à gal. le parvis) Sed placitantes, tunc, i. e. post meridiem, se divertunt ad parvisum & alibi consulentes cum servientibus ad legem & alius consiliariis, &c. Fortescue de Laudibus LL. Angl. cap. 51. pag. 124. And Selden (in his notes on Fortescue) defines it to be, an afternoon's exercise, or moot for the instruction of young students; bearing the same name originally with the Parvisia at Oxford. Seld. Notes pag. 56. Of which Chaucer has mention in one of his prologues.

*A Serjeant at Law, that ware and wise,
That often had been at the Parvise.*

Pascha clausum, The Octaves of Easter or Low Sunday, which closes that solemnity: And die (sali) post pascha clausum, is a date in some of our old deeds. The first statute of Westminster, anno 3 Ed. 1. is said to be made the Monday after Easter week; post de la cluse de pasche, &c.

Pascha floridum, Is the Sunday before Easter, called Palm Sunday; when the proper hymn or gospel sung was, occurrunt turbe cum floribus & palmis, &c. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS. 75.

Paschal Bents, Rents or yearly tributes paid by the clergy to the bishop or archdeacon, at their Easter visitations.

Pascua, A meadow or pasture ground, set apart to feed cattle. See Pastura.

Pascuage, (pascuagium, Fr. pascege) The grazing or pasturing of cattle.—Et habere viginti porcos quietos de pascuagio, &c. Mon. Angl. Tom. 2. 23. The same with pannage.

Pasnage, And pathnage in woods, &c. See Pannage.

Passage, (Passagium) Is properly over water, as way is over land; it relates to the sea, and great rivers, and is a French word signifying transitum. In the stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 7. it is used for the hire a man pays for being transported over sea, or any river: And it is mentioned among customs and duties, as theolonia, passagio, & lastagio. Chari. Hen. 1.

All persons shall have free passage on the river Severn; and if any be disturbed, he may have his remedy by action. Stat. 9 H. 6. c. 5. There are other statutes for regulating the passage of this river, and preventing disorders therein by the Welsh, &c. 19 H. 7. c. 18. 26 H. 8. c. 5.

Also passagio is a writ directed to the keepers of the ports to permit a man to pass over sea, who has the King's leave. Reg. Orig. 193. The prices of passage at Dover, &c. are limited by 4 Ed. 3. c. 8. None to pass out of the realm without the King's licence. 5 R. 2. ft. 1. c. 2. Passage from Kent to Calais restrained to Dover. 4 Ed. 4. c. 10.

Passagium, A voyage or expedition to the Holy Land, when made by the Kings of England in person, was called Passagium, or Passagium regis. Cowell.

Passator, Is he who has the interest or command of the passage of a river, or the lord to whom a duty is paid for passage. Cowell.

Pass-port, A compound of two French words, viz. passer, transire, and port, portus, a haven. It signifies a licence, for the safe passage of any man from one place to another. 2 E. 6. cap. 2. See Black. Com. 1 V. 260. 4 V. 68.

Passagiarius, A ferry-man. We meet with the word in Thorn's Chronicle, in anno 1287.

Pastitium, A pasture field. Castrum Arundel. T. R. E. reddebat a quodam molino 40 s. &c. & de uno pastitio 20 s. Domejdy, per Gale 761.

Pastoral staff. The form of it was streight, which signified rectum regimen. All the top part of it was crooked, and the other part sharp: The crooked signified, that the bishop presided over the people; and the sharp signified, to punish the stubborn. Cowell.

Pasture, Is generally any place where cattle may feed; and feeding for cattle is called pasture, wherefore feeding grounds are called common of pasture: But common of pasture is properly a right of putting beasts to pasture in another man's soil; and in this there is an interest of the lord and of the tenant. Wood's Inst. 196, 197. For in those waste grounds, which are usually called Commons, the property of the soil is generally in the lord of the manor; as in common fields it is in the particular tenants. And common of pasture is either appendant, appurtenant, because of vicinage, or in gross. Black. Com. 2 V. 32. See Adme furement.

Pastura differs from pastua, as appears from what follows, viz. pastura omne genus pascendi significat, sive fiat in partibus, sive in stipula, sive in agris, sive in campis; sed pastua est locus principaliter deputatus pecoribus pascendis, ut puta in montibus, moris, mariscis & planis non cultis aratis. Lindewood. Provin. Angl. lib. 3. c. 1.

Pastus, Is the same with procuracion, or the provision which tenants are bound to make for their lords at certain times, or as often as they make a progress to their lands: This in many places was turned into money. Hoc modo per annum liberabo a pastu Regis & principum. Chart. Walgati Regis Merciorum in Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 123.

Patentee, One to whom the King grants his letters patent. 7 Edw. 6. c. 3.

Patents, Are the King's writings, sealed with the Great Seal, having their name from being open: And they differ from writs. Grompt. Jurisd. 126. The King is to advise with his council touching grants and patents made of his estate, &c. And in petitions for lands, annuities or offices, the value is to be expressed; also a former patent is to be mentioned where the petition is for a grant in reversion, or the patents thereupon shall be void. 1 Hen. 4. c. 6. 6 Hen. 8. c. 15. And patents which bear not the date and day of delivery of the King's warrants into Chancery, are not good. Statute 18 Hen. 6. c. 1. Where the King's patent creates a new estate, of which the law does not take knowledge; the patents are void. 8 Rep. 1. 5 Rep. 93. But patents shall not be avoided by nice constructions: If a patent may be taken to two intents; and is good as to one, and not as to the other; it is valid. Jenk. Cent 138. When the King would pass a freehold, it is necessary that the patent be under the Great Seal; and it ought to be granted de advisamento of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and Lord Treasurer, in the usual manner. Fitzgib. 291. See Grants of the King. And Black. Com. 2 V. 346.

As to patents for new inventions, see Black. Com. 4 V. 159. For patents of peerage, ib. 1 V. 400. For patents of precedence, ib. 3 V. 28.

Patria, Properly signifies the country; but in law it denotes the men of a neighbourhood; so when we say inquiratur per patriam, we mean a jury of the neighbourhood. In like manner, Assisa vel recognitio per assisam, idem est quod recognitio patrie. Cowell. See Black. Com. 3 V. 349. 4 V. 342.

Patrimony. An hereditary estate, or right descended from ancestors. The legal endowment of a church or religious house, was called ecclesiastical patrimony; and the lands and reversions united to the see of Rome, are called St. Peter's Patrimony. Cowell.

Patrinus, Is used for godfather, and matrina a god-mother, in the laws of King Hen. 1.

Patritius, An honour conferred on men of the first quality, in the time of the English Saxon Kings.—Pro ampliori firmitatis testamento, principes & senatores, judices & patritios subscribere fecimus. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 13.

Patron, (Patronus) Signifieth in the Civil law him who hath manumitted a servant; and thereby is accounted his great benefactor, and claims duty of him during life. Digest tit. de Jure Patronatus. In the Canon and Common law, it is he who hath the disposition of an ecclesiastical benefice; and the reason is, because the gift of churches and benefices belonged unto such good men as either built or endowed them with great part of their revenues. Terms de Ley.

He who has the right of advowson is called the Patron of the church. For, when lords of manors first built churches on their own demesnes, and appointed the tithes of those manors to be paid to the officiating ministers, which before were given to the clergy in common, (from whence arose the division of parishes) the lord, who thus built a church, and endowed it with glebe or land, had of common right a power annexed of nominating such minister as he pleased (provided he were canonically qualified) to officiate in that church, of which he was the founder, endower, maintainer, or, in one word, the patron. Black. Com. 2 V. 21.

This original of the jus patronatus by building and endowing the church appears also to have been allowed in the Roman empire. Nov. 56. s. 12. c. 2. Nov. 118. c. 23.

There are three causes of patronage: Ratione foundationis, where one solely founds a church; Ratione donationis, when a man only endows it; and Ratione fundi, where a person erects a church on his own ground. Litt. 137. 2 Lill. Abr. 286.

The patron is to present within six calendar months after an avoidance of the church; and where the church becomes void by the death of the incumbent, the patron at his peril must take notice of it, in making presentation; but if there be an avoidance by deprivation, &c. he shall have notice, and six months after to present. 6 Rep. 61. 3 Leon. 46. If a church becomes litigious by the presentation of two patrons of their clerks, a jus patronatus may be awarded by the bishop to inquire who is rightful patron, and he is to admit accordingly. 2 Roll. Abr. 384, 385.

The patron's right is the most worthy and first act and part of a promotion to a benefice, and is granted and pleaded by the name of libera dispositio ecclesie. Hob. 152. But during the vacancy of a church, the freehold of the glebe is not in the patron; for it is in abeyance. 8 H. 6. 24. Litt. 144. A patron shall not have an action for trespass done when the church is vacant: And if a man who hath a right to glebe lands, releaseth the same to the patron, that is not good; because the patron has not any estate in the land. 11 H. 6. c. 4. If the patron grants a rent out of a church, it is void even against himself. 38 Ed. 3. 4. See Advowson, Parson, Presentation, &c. And Black. Com. 2 V. 21. And 3 V. 242.

Pavage, (Pavagium,) Money paid towards paving the streets or highways. Rex (Edw. 1.) concessit pavagium villæ de Huntingdon per quinquennium. Pla. Parl. 35. Edw. 1.

Paving, &c. See the Table to the Statutes.

Pauper, Signifies a poor man according to which we have a term in law, to sue in forma pauperis. See Forma Pauperis. Also vide the stat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 12.

Before a person is admitted to sue in forma pauperis. he must have counsel's hand to his petition, certifying the judge to whom the petition is directed, that he conceives the petitioner hath good cause of action; he must also annex an affidavit to his petition, that he is not worth 5 l. all his debts paid, except wearing apparel, and his right to the matter in question. Lill. Reg. 633.

None ought to be admitted to sue in forma pauperis in an action on the case, for words. Lill. Reg. 633. per Wild.

A person admitted to sue in forma pauperis, can only sue in that cause for which he is admitted, & fi. testis quoties. Lill. Reg. 633.

It seems that, after the statutes which introduced costs, neither plaintiffs nor defendants could sue in forma pauperis, for that would be a means of depriving the other party of the costs given him by statute; and as the 11 Hen. 7. c. 12. enables persons only to sue as paupers; and as the statute 23 Hen. 8. c. 15. excepts only plaintiffs who are paupers from paying costs, it seems, that defendant cannot be admitted in a civil action to defend as a pauper. But it hath been adjudged, that a person may be admitted to defend an indictment in forma pauperis for a misdemeanor, such as a conspiracy, keeping a disorderly house, &c. for in such proceedings there being no costs, the judges have a discretionary power of admitting or refusing them by the Common law. Pasch. 9 Geo. 2. The King v. Wright. See stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 28. fi. 8.

It is said, that paupers ought not to be admitted to remove causes out of inferior courts, but ought to satisfy themselves with the jurisdiction within which their actions properly lie. 1 Mod. 368. per North.

By the orders of the courts, if the party admitted to sue in forma pauperis give any fee or reward to his counsel or attorney, or make any contract or agreement with them, he shall from thenceforth be dispaupered, and not be afterwards admitted again in that suit to prosecute in forma pauperis. Ord. Cur' 94.

Also if it shall be made appear to the court, that any person prosecuting in forma pauperis hath sold or contracted for the benefit of the suit, or any part thereof, while the same depends, such cause shall be from thenceforth totally dismissed the court. Ord. Cur' 95.

It is said, that if a pauper gives notice of trial, and does not proceed, he shall be dispaupered. 1 Salk. 506.

In the statute 23 Hen. 8. c. 15. there is a provision, "That whoever sues in forma pauperis shall not pay costs, but shall suffer such other punishment as the court shall think fit."

But notwithstanding this statute, if he be dispaupered or nonsuited, the usual practice is to tax the costs, and for non-payment to order him to be whipped. 2 Salk. 506. Stile 386.

A. brought a bill in forma pauperis, to which the defendant put in a plea and demurrer, which were both over-ruled; and it was insisted upon, that he should not have costs, being at none; but Lord Somers, (after long debate and inquiry of all the ancient counsel and clerks, who agreed, that he should have costs,) ordered him his costs like other suitors; for tho' he is at no, or but small costs, yet the counsel and clerks do not give their labour to defendant, but to the pauper. Abr. Eq. 125. See Black. Com. 3 V. 400.

Pawn, (Pignus) A pledge or gage for payment of money lent: It is said to be derived à pugno, quia res quæ pignori dantur, pugno vel manu traduntur. Litt. Dist. The party who parvns goods, hath a general property in them; they cannot be forfeited by the party who hath them in parvns for any offence of his, nor be taken in execution for his debt; neither may they otherwife be put in execution, till the debt for which they are parvned is satisfied. Litt. Rep. 332.

If a man parvns goods for money, and afterwards a judgment is had against the parvner at the suit of one of the creditors; the goods in the hands of the parvnee shall not be taken in execution, until the money is paid to the parvnee, because he had a qualified property in them, and the judgment creditor only an interest. 3 Fulst. 17. And when a person hath jewels in parvns for a certain sum, and he who parvned them is attainted, the King shall not have the jewels unless he pay the money. Plowd. 487.

The parvnee of goods hath a special property in them, to detain them for his security, &c. and he may assign the parvns over to another, subject to the same conditions: And if the parvnee die before redeemed, his executors shall have it upon the like terms as he had it.

If goods parvned are perishable, and no day being set for payment of the money, they lie in parvns till spoiled, without any default in him who hath them in keeping; the party who parvned them shall bear the damage, for it shall be adjudged his fault that he did not redeem them sooner; and he to whom parvned may have action of debt for his money: Also if the goods are taken from him, he may have action of trespass, &c. Co. Litt. 89. 208.

Where goods are parvned for money borrowed, without a day set for redemption, they are redeemable at any time during the life of the borrower. They may be redeemed after the death of him to whom parvned; but not after the death of him who parvned the goods. 2 Cro. 245. But where a day is appointed, and the parvner dieth before the day, his executors may redeem the parvns at the day, and this shall be assets in their hands. 1 Bulst. 30, 31. Goods parvned generally, without any day of redemption, if the parvner dies, the parvns is absolute and irredeemable; if the parvnee dies, it is not so. Noy 137. 1 Bulst. 9. If goods are redeemable at a day certain, it must be strictly observed; and the parvnee, in case of failure of payment at the day, may sell them. 1 Roll. Rep. 181, 215. In other cases brokers commonly stay but a year for their money lent on parvns, at the end of which, if not redeemed, they may sell the goods. Larc Secur. 99.

He who borrows money on a parvns, is to have the pledge again when he repays it, or he may have action for the detainer; and his tender of the money revests the special property. 2 Cro. 244. And it hath been held, that where a broker or parvnee refuses (upon tender of the money) to redeliver the goods in parvns, he may be indicted; because being secretly parvned, it may be impossible to prove a delivery for want of witnesses, if trover should be brought for them. 3 Salk. 268. Adjudged, that if goods are lost, after the tender of the money, the parvner is liable to make them good to the owner; for after tender he is a wrongful detainer, and he who keeps goods wrongfully must answer for them at all events, his wrongful detainer being the occasion of the loss: but if they are lost before a tender, it is otherwise; the parvnee is not liable, if his care of keeping them was exact; and the law requires nothing of him, but only that he should use an ordinary care in keeping the goods, that they may be restored on payment of the money for which they were deposited; and in such case if the goods are lost, the parvnee hath still his remedy against the parvner for the money lent. 2 Salk. 522. 3 Salk. 268.

If the parvns is laid up, and the parvnee robbed, he is not answerable: Tho' if the parvnee useth the thing, as a jewel, watch, &c. that will not be the worse for wearing, which he may do, it is at his peril; and if he is robbed, he is answerable to the owner, as the using occasioned the loss, &c. Ibid. If the parvns is of such a nature that the keeping is a charge to the parvnee, as a cow or a horse, &c. he may milk the one, or ride the other, and this shall go in recompence for his keeping: Things which will grow the worse by usage, as apparel, &c. he may not use. Owen 124.

A person borrows 100 l. on the parvns of jewels, and takes a note from the lender acknowledging them to be in his hands, for securing the money; afterwards he borrows several other sums of the same person, for which he gave gave his notes, without taking any notice of the jewels. As in this case it was natural to think the lender would not have advanced the sums on note only, but on the credit of the pledge in his hands before; it was decreed in equity, that if the borrower would have his jewels, he must pay all the money due on the notes. Preced. Chanc. 419, 421.

A factor cannot pawn the goods of his principal, Strange 1178. He to whom goods are delivered for safe custody cannot pawn them. Strange 1187. There can be no market-overt for pawning. Ibid. Where money is lent on a pledge, the borrower is personally liable to the payment, unless there be an agreement to the contrary. Strange 919. Regulations of pawnbrokers, 30 Geo. 2. c. 24. Penalty of pawning or taking in pawn goods without leave of the owner. Ib. See Cheats, Pledging. And Black. Com. 2 V. 452.

Pannage, In woods and forells for swine. Vide Pannage.

Payment of money before the day appointed, is in law payment at the day; for it cannot, in presumption of law, be any prejudice to him to whom the payment is made, to have his money before the time; and it appears by the party's receipt of it, that it is for his own advantage to receive it then, otherwise he would not do it: Yet it is said, that defendant must not plead, that the plaintiff accepted it in full satisfaction; but that he PAID it in full satisfaction. 5 Rep. 117. Payment of a lesser sum in satisfaction of a greater, cannot be a satisfaction for the whole, unless the payment be before the day: Tho' the gift of an horse, or robe, &c. in satisfaction may be good. Ibid. And where damages are uncertain, a less thing may be done in satisfaction of a greater. 4 Mod. 89.

Upon solvit ad diem pleaded, it is good evidence to prove payment at any time after the day, and before action brought; and payment, altho' after the day, may be pleaded to any action of debt, upon bill, bond or judgment, or Scire facias upon a judgment. 2 Lill. Abr. 287. Statute 4 & 5 Ann. But tho' payment after the day, is good by way of discharge, it will not be so by way of satisfaction. 4 Mod. 250. Payment is no plea to debt on covenant, or an obligation, without acquittance; but if the obligation have a condition, it is otherwise. Dyer 25, 160. If a bond, &c. be for payment of money, and no day is set, damages cannot be recovered till a demand is made. Bridgm. 20.

For payment of rent there are said to be four times; 1. A voluntary time, that is not satisfactory, and yet good to some purpose; as where a lessee pays his rent before the day, this gives seisin of the rent, and enables him to whom paid to bring his assise for it. 2. A time voluntary and satisfactory in some cases; when it is paid the morning of the last day, and the lessor dies before the end of the day, this is a good payment to bind the heir or executor, but not the King. 3. The legal, absolute and satisfactory time, which is a convenient time before the last instant of the last day, and then it must be paid. 4. Is satisfactory, and not voluntary, but coercive, when forced and recovered by suit at law. Co. Litt. 200. 10 Rep. 127. Plovid. 172.

Payment of money shall be directed by him who pays it, and not by the receiver, &c. 5 Rep. 117. Cro. Eliz. 68. If the payer does not apply the payment, the receiver may, but he must not apply it to an uncertain demand, as to a debt from a testator. Strange 1194. In the payment of a testator's debts by executors, they are to pay first judgments, mortgages, rent due by lease, &c. then bonds and bills, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 927. Vide Bond and Rent.

A bill drawn on A. to pay money for value received, is a good discharge of a debt, tho' the bill be not paid, unless the creditor return the bill in convenient time. Per Holt Ch. J. Show. 155.

A. gives B. a bill of exchange on C. in payment of a former debt; this is not allowable as evidence on non assumpsit, unless paid; for a bill shall never go in discharge of a precedent debt, except it be part of the contract that it should be so. 1 Salk. 124.

When a merchant draws a bill upon a correspondent, who accepts it, this is payment; for it makes him debtor to another person, who may bring his action. 10 Mod. 37.

4 & 5 Ann. cap. 16. sess. 12. enacts, That in debt on single bill, debt, or scire facias on judgment, defendant may plead payment in bar. In debt on bond, if defendant before action brought hath paid the principal and interest due by the condition, tho' such payment was not strictly made according to the condition, yet it may be pleaded in bar, and shall be as effectual as if the money had been paid at the day and place, according to the condition, and had been so pleaded. Vide Bond, and Rent.

Peace, (Pax,) In the general signification is opposite to war or strife: But particularly with us it intends a quiet behaviour toward the King and his subjects. And if any man is in danger from another, and makes oath of it before a justice of peace, he shall be secured by good bond, which is called binding to the peace. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 2. cap. 2. 77. Crompt. Just. of Peace, 118. 129. And also frank-pledge and conservator of the peace. Time of peace is when the courts of justice are open, and the judges and ministers of the same may by law protect men from wrong, and administer justice to all. Co. Litt. 249.

All authority for keeping the peace comes originally from the King, who is the supreme magistrate for preservation thereof; tho' it is said the King cannot take a recognizance of the peace, because it is a rule in law that no one can take any recognizance, who is not either a justice of record, or by commission: Also it is certain, that no duke, earl, or baron, as such, have any greater power to keep the peace, than meer private persons. Lamb. lib. 1. ch. 3. Dalt. ch. 1. But the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, the Lord High Steward, the Lord Marshal, and every justice of the King's Bench, have as incident to their offices, a general authority to keep the peace throughout the realm, and to award process for surety of the peace, and take recognizances for it. 2 Haruk. P. C. 32. And every court of record hath power to keep the peace within its own precinct: As have likewise sheriffs, who are intrusted with the custody of the counties, consequently have by it an implied power of keeping the peace within the same; and corners may bind persons to the peace who make an affray in their presence; but may not grant process of the peace, &c. Ibid.

It is said every man is to be a constable, to keep the peace among others, and justices of peace are to do the same especially; and no man may break it. 3 Shep. Abr. 14.

Peace shall be kept, and justice and right duly administered to all persons. Stat. 1 R. 2. c. 2, &c. And the general issue pleadable. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5. 21 Jac. 1. c. 12. See Justice of Peace and Good Behaviour.

Peace of God and the Church, (Pax Dei & Ecclesiae) Was antiently used for that cessation which the King's subjects had from trouble and suit of law between the trrps. Tempus dicitur cultui divino adhibitum, eaque appellations omnes dies dominici, festa & vigiliae censentur. Spelman. See Vacation.

Peace of the King, (Pax Regis, mentioned in Stat. 6 R. 2. stat. 1. cap. 13.) Is that peace and security both for life and goods, which the King promiseth to all his subjects, subjects, or others taken into his protection. And where an outlawry is reversed, a person is restored to the King's peace, called ad pacem redire. Bract. lib. 3. c. 11. See Suit of the King's Peace. This point of policy seems to have been borrowed by us from the Feudists, which in the second book of the Feuds, cap. 53. intitled, De pace tenenda, &c. Hotoman proveth. Of this Hoveden setteth down many branches Par. poster. suorum Ann. l. in H. 2. fol. 144. and 330. There is also peace of the church, for which see Sanctuary. There is besides, the peace of the King's highway, which is the immunity that the King's highway hath to be free from annoyance or molestation. The peace of the plough, whereby the plough and the plough cattle are secured from distresses. F. N. B. 90. And fairs have been said to have their peace; because no man might be troubled in them for any debt contracted elsewhere.

Pecia, A piece or small quantity of ground.—Cum duabus peciis, &c. dictæ terræ pertinentibus. Paroch. Antiq. 240.

Pectorale, A word often met with in old writings. Most authors agree that it is the same with that garment called rationale, which the high priest in the old law wore on his shoulders, as a sign of perfection. 'Tis worn also by the high priest of the new law, as a sign of the greatest virtue. Quæ gratia & ratione perficitur; for which reason it is called rationale. 'Tis by some taken to be that part of the pall which covers the breast of the priest, and from thence called pectorale. But all agree that it is the richest part of that garment, embroidered with gold, and adorned with precious stones. Cowell. Item capa cum pectorale optime brendato cum rotundis pectoralibus aurifrigiis, &c. humerali vin. ato de fino auro brendato, & lapidibus insertis, &c.

Pectoral, Armour for the breast, a breast-plate or petrel, for a horse; from the Lat. pectus: it is mentioned in the Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 3.

Peculiar, (Fr. peculier, i. e. private) Is a particular parish or church, that hath jurisdiction within itself, and power to grant administration or probate of wills, &c. exempt from the ordinary.

There are royal peculiars, and archbishops peculiars: the King's chapel is a royal peculiar, exempted from all spiritual jurisdiction, and reserved to the immediate government of the King; there are also some peculiar ecclesiastical jurisdictions belonging to the King, which formerly appertained to monasteries and religious houses. Wood's Inst. 504. It is an ancient privilege of the see of Canterbury, that wherever any manors or advowsons belong to it, they forthwith become exempt from the ordinary, and are reputed peculiars of that see; not because they are under no ordinary, but because they are not under the ordinary of the diocese, &c. For the jurisdiction is annexed to the Court of Arches, and the judge thereof may originally cite to these peculiars of the archbishop. Ibid.

The Court of Peculiars of the archbishop of Canterbury, hath a particular jurisdiction in the city of London, and in other dioceses, &c. within his province, in all fifty-seven peculiars. 4 Inst. 338. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. There are some peculiars which belong to Deans and Chaplers, or a Prebendary, exempted from the Archdeacon only: they are derived from the Bishop, of ancient composition, and may be visited by the Bishop in his primary or triennial visitation: in the mean time an official of the Dean and Chapter, or Prebendary, is the judge; and from hence the appeal lies to the Bishop of the diocese. Wood 504. Appeal lieth from other peculiar courts to the King in Chancery. Stat. 25 H. 8. The Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's have a peculiar jurisdiction; and the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury have a large peculiar within that diocese; so have the Dean and Chapter of Litchfield, &c. 2 Neli. Abr. 1240, 1241. There is mention in our books of Peculiars of Archdeacons; but they are not properly Peculiars, only subordinate jurisdictions; and a Peculiar is prima facie to be understood of him who hath a co-ordinate jurisdiction with the Bishop. Hob. 185. Mod. Ca. 308. If an Archdeacon hath a peculiar authority by commission, this shall not take away the authority of the Bishop; but if he hath authority and jurisdiction by prescription, it is said it shall. 2 Roll. Rep. 357. Where a man dies intestate, leaving goods in several Peculiars, it has been held that the Archbishop is to grant administration. Sid. 90. 5 Mod. 239. See 16 Vin. Abr. tit. Peculiars. See Black. Com. 3 V. 65.

Pecunia, Properly money, but anciently used for cattle, and sometimes for other goods as well as money. So we find often in Domesday, Pastura ibidem ad pecuniam villæ, that is, pasture-ground for the cattle of the village. And in Emendat. Willelm. Primi ad Leg. Edw. Conf. Intenti sumus etiam ut nulla vivæ pecunia vendantur, aut emanent nisi infra civitates, & hoc ante tres j. d. & c. And Leg. Edw. Conf. cap. 10. Qui habuerit 30 denarios vivæ pecuniæ. Cowell.

Pecunia sepulchralis, (L. L. Canuti, 102.) Was money anciently paid to the priest at the opening the grave for the good of the deceased soul. This the Saxons called saulscad, saulscot, and animæ symbolum. Spei. de Concil. T. 1. f. 517.

Pecuniary. All punishments of offences were antiently pecuniary, by mulct, &c. See Fine.

Pecuniary Causes, Cognizable in the Ecclesiastical courts, are such as arise either from the withholding Ecclesiastical dues, or the doing or neglecting some act relating to the church, whereby damage accrues to the plaintiff; towards obtaining a satisfaction for which he is permitted to institute a suit in the Spiritual Court. For the principal of these causes, see Black. Com. 2 V. 88.

Pecuniary Legacy, Cannot be taken without consent of the executor: for in him all the chattels are vested; and it is his business first to see whether there is a sufficient fund left to pay the debts of the testator: the rule of equity being, that a man must be just, before he is permitted to be generous. And in case of a deficiency of assets, all the general, or pecuniary legacies, must abate proportionably, in order to pay the debts. Black. Com. 2 V. 512.

Pedage, (pedagium) Signifies money given for the passing by foot or horse thro' any country. Pedagium à pede dictum est, quod a transeuntibus solvitur, &c. Cassian. de Conf. Burgun. p. 118. Padagia dicuntur quæ dantur a transeuntibus in locum constitutum a principe, &c. Et capiens pedagium, debet dare saluum conductum, & territorium ejus tenere securum. Spelm. This word is likewise mentioned by Matt. Paris. anno 1256. And Edw. 3. granted to Sir Nele Loring pedagium Sancti Macharii, &c. Rot. Pasch. 22 Ed. 3.

Pedale, A foot cloth, or piece of tapestry laid on the ground to tread on for greater state and ceremony. In gulph. pag. 41.

Pedis abicisso, Cutting off the foot, was a punishment of criminals, inflicted here, instead of death; as appears by the laws of William, called The Conqueror, viz. Interdicimus ne quis occidatur vel suspendatur pro aliqua culpa, sed eruantur oculi, abicindantur pedes, vel testiculi, vel manus. Leg. Will. 1. cap. 7. So in Ingulphus, p. 856. Sub panno peditationis dextri sui pedis. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 38. Bracton, lib. 3. cap. 32. Monast. 1 tom. pag. 166.

Pedones, Foot-soldiers. Simon of Durham, Anno 1085.

Pedlars. See Hawkers.

Pier, or Pier, (Pera, Fr. pierre, saxum, quod a saxis fieri solebat,) Is a fortress made against the force of the sea, or great rivers, for the better security of ships that lie at harbour in any haven. So is the peer of Dover described in Cam. Britan. 259. 14 Car. 2. cap. 27. The haven and peer of Great-Yarmouth, mentioned 22 Car. 2. cap. 2.

Peerage, A duty or imposition for maintenance of a sea peer: Also the dignity of the lords or peers of the realm.

Peers, (Parus) Signify in law, those who are impelled in an inquest upon a man, for convicting or clearing him of any offence; the reason is, because the custom of the realm is, to try every man in such case by his peers or equals. Westm. 1. cap. 6. Mag. Car. c. 29. And in this sense is, in use with other nations: for parus sunt convassalli quorum sententia vassallus propter feloniam est condemnatus. Bartilayus de Regno, lib. 4. cap. 2. Et parus sunt funt qui ab eodem domino feudum tenent. Lib. 1. Feudor. cap. 26. Corvell.

And as every one of the nobility being a Lord of Parliament, is a Peer or equal to all the other Lords, tho' of several degrees; so the Commons are Peers to one another, altho' distinguished as Knights, Esquires, Gentlemen, &c. 2 Inst. 29. 3 Inst. 31.

Peers of Fees. The word peer denoted originally one of the same rank; afterwards it was used for the vassals or tenants of the same Lord, who were obliged to serve and attend him in his courts, being equal in function: these were termed peers of fees, because holding fees of the lord, or because their business in court was to sit and judge under their lord, of disputes arising on fees: but if there were too many in one lordship, the lord usually chose twelve, who had the title of peers, by way of distinction, from whence it is said we derive our common juries, and other peers. Cowell.

Peers of the Realm, (Pares Regni, proceres) Are the Nobility of the kingdom, and Lords of Parliament; who are divided into Dukes, Marquesses, Earls, Viscounts, and Barons: and the reason why they are called peers, is that notwithstanding a distinction of dignities in our nobility, yet in all publick actions they are equal; as in their votes of Parliament, and trial of any nobleman. S. P. C. lib. 3. And this appellation seems to be chiefly borrowed from France, from those twelve peers that Charlemaine instituted in that kingdom, (called pares vel patricii Franciæ) but we have applied this name to all our Lords of Parliament, and have no set number of peers, for they are more or less at the King's pleasure.

All nobility and peerage is granted by the crown; and created either by writ, or letters patent: the calling up a lord by writ is the most antient way, and gives a fee-simple in a barony, without words of inheritance, viz. To him and his heirs; but the King may limit the general estate of inheritance to heirs male, or the heirs of the body; and as soon as the person called sits in parliament by virtue of this writ, his blood is enobled, and he is a peer; but if he dies before he sits in parliament, he is not, the bare direction and delivery of the writ having no effect. 1 Inst. 9. 16. But creation by letters patent is good, and makes the peerage sure, altho' he never sits in parliament, and his heirs shall inherit the honour pursuant to the words of the patent: tho' the persons created must in this case have the inheritance limited by apt words; as to him and his heirs, or the heirs male of his body, heirs of his body, &c. otherwise he shall have no inheritance. 1 Inst. 2 Inst. 48.

The King may create either man or woman noble for life only: and peerage may be gained for life, by act of law; as if a Duke take a wife, she is a Duchess in law by the intermarriage; so of a Marquis, Earl, &c. 1 Inst. 16. 9 Rep. 97. Also the dignity of an Earl may descend to a daughter, if there be no son, who shall be a Countess; and if there are many daughters, it is said, the King shall dispose of the dignity to which daughter he pleases. 1 Inst. 165. Wood's Inst. 42. It has been resolved in the House of Peers, that if a person is summoned as a Baron to Parliament by writ, and sitting die, leaving two or more daughters, who all dying, one of them only leaves issue a son, such issue has a right to demand a seat in the House of Peers. Skin. 441.

Before the time of King Edw. 3. there were but two titles of nobility, viz. Earls and Barons: the Barons were originally by tenure, afterwards created by writ, and after that by patent; but Earls were always created by letters patent. Seld. 536. And Hen. 6. created Edmond of Haddingham, Earl of Richmond, by patent, and granted him precedence before all other Earls. Mary I. likewise granted to Henry Ratcliff, Earl of Suffex, a privilege by patent beyond any other nobleman, viz. that he might at any time be covered in her presence, like unto the grandees of Spain; and some few others of our nobility have had this honour.

The 31 H. 8. c. 10. settles the precedence of the Lords or Parliament, and great officers, &c. After whom, the Dukes, Marquisses, Earls, Viscounts, and Barons, take place according to their antient; but it is declared, that PRECEDENCE IS IN THE KING'S DISPOSITION. Thomas de la Mare was summoned to parliament by writ, anno 3 Hen. 8. and William his son, anno 3 Ed. 6. was disabled by attainder to claim any dignity during his life, but was afterwards called to parliament by Queen Elizabeth, and sat there as puisne Lord, and died; then Thomas, the son of the said William, petitioned the Queen in parliament to be restored to the place of Thomas his grandfather; and all the Judges to whom it was referred, were of opinion that he should, because his father's disability was not absolute by attainder, but only personal and temporary during his life; and the acceptance of the new dignity by the petitioner shall not hurt him, so that when the old and new dignity are in one person, the old shall be preferred. 11 Rep. 1.

A dignity of Earl, &c. is a title by the Common law; and if a patentee be disturbed of his dignity; the regular course is to petition the King, who indorses it and sends it into Chancery. Straundf. Prærog. 72. 22 Edw. 3. And where nobility is gained by writ, or patent, without descent, it is triable by record; but when it is gained by matter of fact, as by marriage, or where descents are pleaded, nobility is triable per pais. 22 Affs. 24. 3 Salk. 243. A person petitioned the Lords in Parliament to be tried by his peers; the Lords disallowed his peerage, and dismissed the petition: and it was held in this case, that the defendant's right stood upon his letters patent, which could not be cancelled but by scire facias; and that the parliament could not give judgment in a thing which did not come in a judicial way before that court. 2 Salk. 510, 511. 3 Salk. 243. Where peerage is claimed ratione Baronii, as by a Bishop, he must plead, that he is unus parium Regni Angliæ; but if the claim is ratione nobilitatis, he need not plead otherwise than pursuant to his creation. 4 Inst. 15. 3 Salk. 243.

There are now no feudal Baronies; but there are Barons by succession, and those are the Bishops, who by virtue of antient Baronies held of the King, (into which the possessions of their bishopricks have been converted) are called by writ to parliament, and have place in the House of Peers as Lords Spiritual: the temporal possessions of Bishops are held by their service, to attend in parliament when called; and that is in the nature of a Barony; and all the Bishops, it hath been said, made one of the three estates in parliament; but this is denied, because they have separately from the other Lords no negative vote, &c. And tho' the Bishops are Lords of Parliament, and called by the King's writ, and have a vote there; they shall not be tried by the Peers, as they do not sit in parliament by reason of their nobility, but of their Baronies which they hold in right of the church: they are not of the degree of nobility; their blood is not ennobled, nor their Peerage hereditary; so that they are to be tried by the country, i. e. by a common jury: and when one of the nobility is to be tried by his Peers in parliament, the Spiritual Lords must withdraw, and make their proxies. 1 Inst. 70, 97, 110. 3 Inst. 30. 4 Inst. 1, 2. Some Bishops have been tried by Peers of the realm; but it hath been when impeached by the House of Commons, as upon special occasions many others have been who have not been Peers: and the Bishops may claim all the privileges of the Lords Temporal; saving they cannot be tried by their Peers, because the Bishops cannot in like cases pass upon the trial of any other Peers, they being prohibited by canon to be judges of life and death, &c.

When a Lord is newly created, he is introduced into the House of Peers, by two Lords of the same form in their robes, Garter King at Arms going before, and his Lordship is to present his writ of summons, &c. to the Lord Chancellor; which being read, he is conducted to his place: and Lords by descent, where nobility comes down from the ancestor, and is enjoyed by right of blood, are introduced with the same ceremony, the presenting of the writ excepted. Lex Constitution. 79.

A nobleman, whether native or foreigner, who has his nobility from a foreign state, altho' the title of dignity be given him, (as the highest and lowest degrees of nobility are universally acknowledged) in all our legal proceedings no notice is taken of his nobility, for he is no Peer: and the laws of England prohibit all subjects to receive any hereditary title of honour or dignity, from any foreign Prince, without consent of the Sovereign. Ibid. 80, 81.

Tho' dignities of peerage are granted from the crown; yet they cannot be surrendered to the crown, except it be, in order to new and greater honours; nor are they transferable, unless they relate to an office: and notwithstanding there are instances of Earldoms being transferred, and wherein one branch of a family sat in the House of Peers, by virtue of a grant from the other branch, particularly in the reigns of Hen. 3. and Ed. 2. these precedents have been disallowed; and the Duke of Bedford, who in the reign of King Edw. 4. was degraded for poverty, and want of possessions to support his title, lost not his peerage by surrender, but by the authority of parliament: and as dignities may not be surrendered or transferred without authority of parliament; so it hath been holden, that honour and peerage cannot be extinguished but by act of parliament, the King and kingdom having an interest in the peerage of every Lord. Lex Constit. 85, 86, 87.

An Earldom consists in office, for defence of the kingdom; and of rents and possessions, &c. and may be intailed as any other office may, and as it concerns land: but the dignity of peerage cannot be transferred by fine, because it is a quality affixed to the blood, and so merely personal, that a fine cannot touch it. 2 Salk. 509. 3 Salk. 244.

A personal honour or dignity may be forfeited, on committing treason, &c. for it is implied by a condition in law, that the person dignified shall be loyal; and the office of an Earl, &c. is ad consulendum Regem tempore pacis & defendendum tempore belli, therefore he forfeits it when he takes counsel or arms against the King. 7 Rep. 33. 2 Nelf. Abr. 934.

All peers of the realm are looked upon as the King's hereditary counsellors and may be called together by the King to impart their advice in all matters of importance to the realm, either in time of parliament, or, which hath been their principal use, when there is no parliament in being. Co. Lit. 110.

Instances of conventions of the peers, to advise the King, have been in former times very frequent, tho' now fallen into disuse, by reason of the more regular meetings of parliament. Many instances of this kind of meeting are to be found under our antient Kings: tho' the former method of convoking them had been so long left off, that when Charles I. in 1640, issued out writs under the Great Seal to call a great council of all the peers of England to meet and attend his Majesty at York, previous to the meeting of the long parliament, the Earl of Clarendon mentions it as a new invention, not before heard of; that is, as he explains himself, so old, that it had not been practised in some hundreds of years. But, tho' there had not so long before been an instance, nor has there been any since, of assembling them in so solemn a manner, yet, in cases of emergency, our Princes have at several times thought proper to call for and consult as many of the nobility as could easily be got together; as was particularly the case with King James the Second, after the landing of the Prince of Orange; and with the Prince of Orange himself, before he called that convention parliament, which afterwards called him to the throne.

Besides this general meeting, it is usually looked upon to be the right of each particular peer of the realm, to demand an audience of the King, and to lay before him, with decency and respect, such matters as he shall judge of importance to the publick. And therefore, in the reign of Edward II. it was made an article of impeachment in parliament against the two Hugh Spencers, (father and son) for which they were banished the kingdom, "that they by their evil covin would not suffer the great men of the realm, the King's good counsellors, to speak with the King, or to come near him; but only in the presence and hearing of the said Hugh the father and Hugh the son, or one of them, and at their will, and according to such things as pleased them." 4 Inst. 53. See Black. Com. 2 V. 227, 8, 9.

As to the privileges belonging to the peerage, they are very great. At Common law, it was lawful for any peer to retain as many chaplains as he would; but by Stat. 21 Hen. 8. their number is limited, viz. a Duke to have six, Marquis or Earl five, Viscount four, Baron three, &c. In many cases, the protestation of honour shall be sufficient for a peer; as in trial of peers, they proceed upon their honour, not upon oath; and if a peer is defendant in a court of equity, he shall put in his answer upon his honour; (tho' formerly it was to be on oath;) and in action of debt upon account the plaintiff being a peer, it shall suffice to examine his attorney, and not himself on oath: but where a peer is to answer interrogatories, or make an affidavit, or to be examined as a witness, he must be upon his oath. Brass. lib. 5. c. 9. 9 Rep. 49. 3 Inst. 29. W. Jones 152. 2 Salk. 512. A subpoena shall not be awarded against a peer out of the Chancery, in a cause; but a letter from the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper, in lieu thereof. In any trial where a peer is plaintiff or defendant, there must be two or more Knights on the jury. 2 Mod. 182. Tho' it is said, if a Knight is returned on a jury where a nobleman is concerned, it is not material whether he appear and give his verdict or not. 1 Mod. 226. A peer may not be impanelled upon any inquests, tho' the cause hath relation to two peers; and if a peer be return'd on a jury, a special writ shall issue for his discharge from service. No peer can be assessed towards the militia, but by an assessment made by six or more peers; and the Houses of peers shall not be searched for conventicles, but by warrant under the sign manual, or in the presence of the Lord Lieutenant, or one Deputy Lieutenant, and two justices of the peace. 13 & 14 Car. 2. and 22 Car. 2.

A peer of the realm being sent for by the King, in coming and returning may kill a deer or two in a forest thro' which he passes; being done by the view of the forester, or on blowing a horn, if the forester be absent, that he may not seem to take the King's venison by stealth. See Black. Com. 1 V. 168. and 9 H. 3.

The peers have a right to be attended, and constantly are, by the judges, and such of the Barons of the Exchequer as are of the degree of the coif, or have been made Serjeants at Law; as likewise by the Masters of the court of Chancery; for their advice in point of law, and for the greater dignity of their proceedings. The Secretaries of State, the Attorney and Solicitor General, and the rest of the King's learned Council being Serjeants, were also used to attend the House of Peers, and have to this day their regular writs of summons issued out at the beginning of every parliament; but, as many of them have of late years been members of the House of Commons, their attendance is fallen into disuse.

Every peer, by licence obtained from the King, may make another Lord of Parliament his proxy, to vote for him in his absence.

Each peer has also a right, by leave of the House, when a vote passes contrary to his sentiments, to enter his dissent on the Journals of the House, with the reasons for such dissent; which is usually stiled his protest.

All bills likewise, that may in their consequences any way affect the rights of the peerage, are by the custom of parliament to have their first rise and beginning in the House of Peers, and to suffer no changes or amendments in the House of Commons. See Black. Com. 1 V. 168.

If any person shall divulge false tales of any of the Lords of Parliament by which dissension may happen, or any slander arise, the offender shall be imprisoned, &c. Stat. Westm. 1. c. 34.

A nobleman menacing another person, whereby such other person fears his life is in danger, no writ of supplicavit shall issue, but a subpoena; and when the Lord appears, instead of surety, he shall only promise to keep the peace. 35 H. 6. No captias or outlawry can be sued out against peers of the realm, in civil cases; and no essoign lies against them. 9 Rep. 49.

The person of a peer, as well out, as in parliament-time, is privileged from all arrests; unless for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, &c. Peers are not to be arrested upon mean process, or on execution for debt or trespass, because they are presumed not only to attend the King and the publick affairs, but the law doth intend that they have sufficient lands wherein they may be distrained; but they may be arrested or apprehended in criminal cases. 6 Rep. 52, 53. And tho' a peer may not be arrested by his his body; yet his estate may be sequestred for debt, &c. upon a proceution after a dissolution and prorogation of parliament, or adjournment for above the space of fourteen days, when he refuses to appear and answer. 12 W. 3. See the 11 Geo. 2. c. 24. And of late years, on non-appearance, &c. the coaches and horses of several peers of this kingdom, have out of the time of privilege been distrained, and cattle seized upon their lands, to compel them to appear; but the privilege of a peer is so great in respect of his person, that the King may not restrain him of his liberty, without order of the House of Lords, except it be in cases of treason, &c. A memorable case wherein was that of the Earl of Arundel imprisoned by the King in the reign of King Charles I. Every Lord of Parliament is allowed his clergy in all cases, where others are excluded by the Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. except wilful murder; and cannot be denied clergy for any other felony wherein it was grantable at Common law, if it be not ousted by some statute made since the first of King Ed. 6. S. P. C. 130. Lord Morley, who was tried by his peers for murder, and found guilty of manslaughter, was discharged without clergy. Sid. 277. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1181.

Peers of the realm are to be tried by their peers in parliament. Magna Charta, c. 29. and 15 Ed. 3. c. 2. But noblemen who are not Lords of parliament, shall not be permitted to have this trial. 2 Inst. 50. A peer shall be tried by his peers on indictment for treason, murder or felony; tho' in appeal of felony, he shall be tried by freeholders: and indictments of peers for treason or felony, are to be found by freeholders of the county, and then they plead before the Lord High Steward, &c. 1 Inst. 156. 3 Inst. 28.

1. Of the privilege of peers; and proceedings at law and in equity against them.

Peers are created for two reasons;

1. Ad consulendum.

2. Ad defendendum regem.

For which reasons the law gives them certain great and high privileges, such as freedom from arrests, &c. even when no parliament is sitting; because the law intends, that they are always assisting the King with their counsel for the commonwealth; or keeping the realm in safety by their prowess and valour. Black. Com. 1 V. 227.

A bill of Middlesex was issued out of B. R. by an attorney of the court, against the Countess of H. which was discharged by superfedeas without pleading; because it appeared by the record, that she was a peeress, and the attorney was committed for suing out the process. Vent. 293.

Widows of peers are to have the privilege of peers not to be arrested; but as to privilege of parliament, it was determined both ways in 1676. See 2 Chan. Cases 224.

In ejectment a special verdict was found on a trial at bar, and judgment for defendant, and costs taxed; and after affidavit of the demand of costs, a motion was made for an attachment against the Dutchess, (the Duke being dead) she being one of the lessors, for non-payment of costs; and it was alledged, that if the court did not grant it, the defendant would be remediless; for tho' in other cases a distringas issues against peers, yet in this case no process can go but an attachment. The court refused to grant an attachment against the person of the Dutchess, but ordered her to shew cause why an attachment, as to her goods and chattels, should not be issued; which rule was afterwards made absolute. Rep. of Pract. in C. B. 7, 8.

A peer, or lord of parliament, cannot be an approver; for it is against Magna Charta for him to pray a coroner.

If a bill in Chancery be exhibited against a peer, the course is first for the Lord Keeper to write a letter to him; and if he doth not answer, then a subpoena; then an order to shew cause why a sequestration should not go; and if he still stands out, then a sequestration. Because there can be no process of contempt against his person. 2 Vent. 342.

It is said, if a trustee be made defendant in Chancery he shall not have privilege, tho' he be a member of parliament. Quere. Cur. Canc. 499. cap. 18.

Distringas is the first process against a peer on an information for an intrusion on the King's lands, or for a conversion of the King's goods. 2 Hawk. Pl. C. 284. cap. 27. sect. 12. cites Co. Ent. 387.

Now by a new act, said to be planned and procured by Lord Mansfield, viz. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50. Suits may be prosecuted against peers, and members of the House of Commons and their servants, &c. DURING TIME OF PRIVILEGE, but the persons of members of the House of Commons not to be arrested or imprisoned. Issues returned on writs of distringas may be sold, and the costs of applying, &c. for and relative to those writs, paid to plaintiff. Vide the act.

2. In what cases peers are to be sworn; and for what degraded.

In the pleas of parliament, 18 Ed. 1. between the Earl of Gloucester and Earl of Hereford, on long debate whether John de Hastings, a baron, ought to be sworn, because he was a peer of the realm, it was resolved; that he ought to lay his hand on the book. The like was resolved, 10 Car. in B. R. by the court where the Lord Dorset's testimony was requisite. See D. 314. b. marg. pl. 98.

A bill was against a peeress to discover deeds, she answers on her honour and confesses deeds. She shall produce them only upon her honour, and not on oath, Ch. Prec. 92.

Where a peer is to answer a bill, his answer put in on his honour is sufficient; but where a peer is to answer interrogatories, to make an affidavit, or be examined as a witness, he must be on his oath; per Harcourt Lord Keeper. 2 Salk. 513.

George Newil, Duke of Bedford, was degraded by act of parliament, 16 June 17 Ed. 4. reciting that as the said George hath not, nor may have any livelihood to support his name, estate and dignity, or any name of estate; and often when a lord is called to high estate, and hath not convenient livelihood to support the dignity, it induceth great poverty, and often causeth great extortion, embracery and maintenance. Wherefore the King by advice of his Lords and commons ordaineth, establisheth and enacteth, That from henceforth the same creation and making of the said Duke, and all the names of dignity given to the said George, or to John Newil his father, be from henceforth void and of none effect, &c.

In which act these things are to be observed: First, That altho' the Duke had not any possessions to support his dignity; yet his dignity cannot be taken from him without an act of parliament. Secondly, The inconveniencies appear, where a great state and dignity is, and no livelihood to maintain it. Thirdly, It is a good reason to take away such dignity by act of parliament, therefore the said act of the 28 H. 8. shall be expounded, according to the general words of the writ, to take away such inconvenience. 12 Rep. 106, 107.

3. Of the trial of peers, and the order and process of trial.

All the barons of parliament shall be tried for treason, felony, misprision, or as accessory, at the suit of the King by their peers. By Magna Charta 9 H. 3. 39. Non super eum ibimus, &c. NISI PER LEGALE JUDICIUM PARTRUM SUORUM. 2 Inst. 49. 9 Co. 30. b. Sta. 152, 153. So all the nobility, who are peers of parliament. So by the Common law, which is now affirmed by the Stat.

stat. 20 H. 6. cap. 9. All dutchesses, countesses and baronesses, who are noble by descent, creation or marriage. 2 Inst. 50. And marchionesses and viscountesses, &c. tho' not named by the stat. 20 H. 6. 9. 2 Inst. 50. So the queen consort, or dowager. 2 Inst. 50. And a peer cannot waive the trial by his peers: Kel. 56. in marg. 621. 1 Tr. 265. 2 Rusb. 94.

But nobles who are not barons of parliament, shall not be tried by the peers of parliament. By the Common law, confirmed by parliament, 4 Ed. 3. 2 Inst. 50. 7 Co. 15, 16. Calvin. 3 Inst. 30. Nor a woman, noble by marriage, who has lost her dignity by subsequent marriage under the degree of nobility. 2 Inst. 50. Nor an archbishop or bishop; for they are not peers inheritable. Sheld. J. P. If he be not accused in parliament. 4 Seld. 3 vol. 2. p. 1541. 3 Inst. 30. For they make proxies after plea, and withdraw themselves. 3 Inst. 31. So a baron of parliament shall not be tried by his peers in an appeal, which is the suit of the party. 2 Inst. 49. 9 Co. 30. b. Sta. P. C. 152. a. 10 Ed. 4. 6. b. 3 Inst. 30.

By stat. 7 W. 3. cap. 3. s. 11. it is enacted, That upon the trial of any peers or peeresses, all the peers who have a right to sit and vote in parliament, shall be duly summoned 20 days at least before the trial, and every peer so summoned and appearing shall vote in the trial, first taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy required by 1 W. & M. s. 1. c. 8. and subscribing and repeating the Test enjoined by 30 Car. 2.

Not to extend to impeachments or other proceedings in parliament. Nor to the treasons of counterfeiting the coin, the Great seal, Privy seal, Sign manual or Privy signet.

By the 6 Ann. cap. 23. s. 12. Peers shall be indicted in Scotland as in England.

If a peer be impeached by a commoner, yet such cause shall not be tried by peers, but by a jury of the country; for tho' the peers are the proper pares to a lord of parliament in capital matters, where the life and nobility of a peer is concerned; yet in matter of property, the trial of fact is not by them, but by the inhabitants of those counties where the facts arise, since such peers living thro' the whole kingdom could not be generally cognizant of facts arising in several counties, as the inhabitants themselves where they are done; but this want of having noblemen for their jury was compensated as much as possible, by returning persons of the best quality; therefore a knight is necessary to be summoned in any cause where a peer is party. G. Hist. C. B. 78, 79.

It has been adjudged, that if a peer on arraignment before the lords, refuse to put himself on his peers, he shall be dealt with as one who stands mute; for it is as much the law of the land, that a peer be tried by his peers, as a commoner by commoners; yet if one who has a title to peerage, be indicted and arraigned as a commoner, and plead Not guilty, and put himself upon his country, it hath been adjudged, that he cannot afterwards suggest that he is a peer, and pray trial by his peers. 2 Hawk. Pl. C. 425.

The order and process of this trial.

On the trials of peers in criminal matters, all the peers who have a right to sit and vote in parliament are to be duly summoned twenty days at least before the trial, to appear and vote at the same; every such peer first taking the oaths required by the 1 W. & M. s. 1. c. 8. The peer being indicted for the treason or felony, before commissioners of oyer and terminer, or in the King's Bench, if the treason, &c. be committed in the county of Middlesex; then the King by commission under the Great Seal, constitutes some peer (generally the Lord Chancellor) Lord High Steward, who is judge in these cases; and the commission commands the peers of the realm to be attendant on him, also the Lieutenant of the Tower, with the prisoner, &c. A certiorari is awarded out of Chancery, to remove the indictment before the Lord High Steward: and another writ issues for bringing the prisoner; and the Lord High Steward makes his precepts for that purpose, assigning a day and place, as in Westminster-Hall inclosed with scaffolds, &c. and for summoning the peers, which are to be twelve and above at least present: At the day, the Lord High Steward takes place under a cloth of state; his commission is read by the clerk of the crown, and he has a white rod delivered him by the Usher, which being returned proclamation is made, and command given for legitimizing of indictments, &c. and the Lieutenant of the Tower to return his writ, and bring the prisoner to the bar; after this, the serjeant at arms returns his precept with the names of the peers summoned, and they are called over, and answering to their names are recorded, when they take their places: the ceremony thus adjusted, the High Steward declares to the prisoner at the bar, the cause of their assembly, assures him of justice, and encourages him to answer without fear; then the clerk of the crown reads the indictment, and arraigns the prisoner, and the High Steward gives his charge to the peers; this being over, the King's counsel produce their evidence for the King; and if the prisoner hath ANY MATTER OF LAW to plead, he shall be assigned counsel; but if he pleads Not guilty, and has nothing farther, he shall be allowed no counsel; for the court are instead of it; after evidence given for the King, and the prisoner's answer heard, the prisoner is withdrawn from the bar, and the Lords who are triers go to some place to consider of their evidence: but the Lords can admit no evidence, but in the hearing of the prisoner; they cannot have conference with the judges, or demand it, (who attend on the Lord High Steward, and are not to deliver their opinions before hand) but in the prisoner's hearing; nor can they send for the opinion of the judges, or demand it, but in open court; and the Lord Steward cannot collect the evidence, or confer with the Lords, but in the presence of the prisoner; who is at first to require justice of the Lords, and that no question or conference be had, but in his presence: Nothing is done in the absence of the prisoner, until the Lords come to agree on their verdict; and then they are to be together as juries until they are agreed, when they come again into court and take their places; and the Lord High Steward, publicly in open court, demands of the Lords, beginning with the passive Lord, whether the prisoner, calling him by his name, be guilty of the treason, &c. whereof he is arraigned, who all give in their verdict, and he being found guilty by a majority of votes more than twelve, is brought to the bar again, and the Lord Steward acquainting the prisoner with the verdict of his peers, passes sentence and judgment accordingly: After which, an O Yes is made for dissolving the commission, and the white rod is broken by the Lord High Steward; whereupon this grand assembly, breaks up, which is esteemed the most solemn and august court of justice upon earth. 2 Hawk. P. C. 421, 422, &c. See Black. Com. 4 V. 256-7, 342.

The Lord High Steward gives no vote himself on a trial by commission; but only on a trial by the House of Peers, while the parliament is sitting: Where a Peer is tried by the House of Lords in full parliament, the house may be adjourned as often as there is occasion, and the evidence taken by parcels; and it hath been adjudged, that where the trial is by commission, the Lord Steward, after a verdict given, may take time to advise upon it, and his office continues till he gives judgment. But the triers may not separate upon a trial by commission, after evidence given for the King; and it hath been resolved, that the peers in such case must continue together, till they agree, to give a verdict. State Trials, Vol. 2. 702. Vol. 3. 657. 2 Hawk. 425.

It is said a writ of error lies in the King's Bench of an attainder of a peer before the Lord High Steward. 2 Hawk. P. C. 462. If a peer be attainted of treason or felony, he may be brought before the court of B. R. and demanded, what he has to say why execution should not be awarded against him? And if he plead any matter to such demand, his plea shall be heard, and execution ordered by the court, upon its being adjudged against him. 1 H. 7. 22. pl. 15. Bro. Coro. 129. Fitz. Coro. 49. Likewise the court of King's Bench may allow a pardon pleaded by a peer to an indictment in that court. But that court cannot receive his plea of Not guilty, &c. but only the Lord Steward on arraignment before the Lords. 2 Inst. 49.

The sentence against a peer for treason, is the same as against a common subject; tho' the King forgives all but beheading, which is a part of the judgment: for other capital crimes, beheading is also the general punishment.

nishment of a peer; but 33 H. 8. the Lord Dacres was attainted of murder, and had judgment to be hanged; and anno 3 & 4 P. & M. the Lord Stourton being attainted of murder, had judgment against him to be hanged, which sentences were executed.

If execution be not done; the Lord Steward may by precept command it to be done according to the judgment. 3 Inst. 31.

Trial by peers is very ancient: In the reign of Will. 1. the Earl of Hereford for conspiring to receive the Danes into England, and depose the conqueror, was tried by his peers, and found guilty of treason, per judicium parium suorum. 2 Inst. 50. The Duke of Suffolk, 28 H. 6. being accused of high treason by the Commons, put himself upon the King's grace, and not upon his peers, and the King alone adjudge'd him to banishment; but he sent for the Lord Chancellor, and the Lords who were in town, to his palace at Westminster, and also the Duke, and commanded him to quit the kingdom in their presence: The Lords nevertheless entered a protest to save the privilege of their peerage; and this was deemed no legal banishment, for the King's judging in that manner was no judgment; he was extrajudicially bid to absent himself out of the realm, and in doing it he was taken on the sea and slain. The case of the Lord Cromwell, in the reign of K. H. 8. was very extraordinary; this Lord was attainted in parliament, and condemned and executed for high treason, without being allowed to make any defence: And several great persons during this reign were brought to trial before Lord Commissioners. Anno 32 Car. 2. the Lord Stafford was tried for treason; and after evidence given for the King, and the prisoner had made his objections to the King's evidence, he insisted upon several points of law, viz. That no overt-act was alleged in his impeachment; that they were not competent witnesses who swore against him, but that they swore for money; and whether a man could be condemned for treason by one witness, there not being two witnesses to any one point, &c. But the points insisted upon being over-ruled, he was found guilty by a majority of twenty-four voices; and executed on Tower-Hill. See more of Peers under Baron, Descent of Dignities, Lords, &c.

Peers. As we have noblemen, so we have noble women, and these may be by Creation, Descent, or Marriage.

And first, Hen. 8. made Anne Bullen, Marchioness of Pembroke: James 1. created Lady Compton, wife to Sir Tho. Compton, Countess of Buckingham in the life-time of her husband, without any addition of honour to him; and also made Lady Finch Viscountess of Maidstone, and afterwards Countess of Winchelsea, to her and the heirs of her body. Geo. 1. made Lady Schulinsburgh, Duchess of Kendal. A woman noble by creation or descent marrying one under the degree of nobility, still remaineth noble; but if she be noble by marriage only, she loseth her dignity if she afterwards marry a Commoner; tho' not if the second husband is noble, and inferior in dignity to the first. And by the courtesy of England, women noble by marriage always retain their nobility. 1 Inst. 16, 50. 6 Rep. 53. If any English woman, takes to husband a French nobleman, she shall not bear the title of dignity; and if a German woman, &c. marry a nobleman of England, unless she be made denizen, she cannot claim the title of her husband, no more than her dowry, &c. Lex Constitution 80.

If a duke, marquis, earl, &c. marries, the wife shall be noble for her life. And if a woman marries a duke, who dies, and afterwards she marries a baron; yet she continues a dutchess. Co. Lit. 16. b. 2 Inst. 50. If a duke, earl, &c. who has the dignity in fee, has not a son, but several daughters; the King may confer the dignity on him who marries any of the daughters, as he pleases. 12 Co. 111. But if a woman, noble by marriage, afterwards takes a husband under the degree of nobility, she shall lose her nobility. Co. Lit. 16. b. 2 Inst. 50. Dyer 79. b. Ow. 81. Otherwise if a woman, noble by descent, takes a husband not noble. Co. Lit. 16. b. 2 Inst. 50. per Brook, Ow. 82. Or if a Queen Dowager takes a husband, noble or not noble; for she by her subsequent marriage shall not lose her dignity. 2 Inst. 50. Yet if a woman, noble by descent, marries to an inferior degree of nobility, as, if the daughter of a duke marries a baron, she shall have precedence only as a baroness. Ow. 82.

A countess or baroness may not be arrested for debt or trespass; for tho' in respect of their sex, they cannot sit in parliament, yet they are peers of the realm, and shall be tried by their peers, &c. But a capias being awarded against the Countess of Rutland, it was held that she might be taken by the sheriff; because he ought not to dispute the authority of the court from whence the writ issued, but must execute it, for he is bound by oath so to do; and altho' by the writ itself it appeared, that the party was a countess, against whom a capias would not generally lie, for that in some cases it may lie, as for a contempt, &c. therefore the sheriff ought not to examine the judicial acts of the court. 6 Rep. 52.

By 20 Hen. 6. cap. 9. a duchess, countess, or baroness, married or sole, shall be put to answer, and judged upon indictments of treason and felony, before such judges and peers as the peers of the realm shall be: And it hath been agreed, that a Queen Consort, and Queen Dowager, whether she continue sole after the King's death, or take a second husband, and he be a peer or commoner; and also all peeresses by birth, whether sole or married to peers or commoners; and all marchionesses and viscountesses are intitled to a trial by the peers, tho' not expressly mentioned in the act. 2 Inst. 50. *Crompt. A duchess, marchioness, countess, or baroness, may retain two chaplains, by 21 Hen. 8. cap. 13. But it is said that a baroness, &c. may not retain chaplains during coverture. Wood's Inst. 44. 4 Rep. 89. Vide Chaplain.

Pelliparius, (Pat. 15 Ed. 3. pag. 2. m. 45) A leatherfeller or skinner.

Pellota, (Fr. Pelote) The ball of the foot. See 4 Inst. 308.

Pelt-wool, Is the wool pulled off the skin, or pelt of dead sheep. 8 H. 6. cap. 20.

Pen, A word used by the Britains for a high mountain, and also by the ancient Gauls; from whence those high hills, which divide France from Italy, are called the Apennines. Camd. Britan.

Penal Laws, Are of three kinds, viz. Pæna po unia-ria, pæna corporalis, and pæna exilii. Cro. Jac. 415. And penal statutes are made on various occasions, to punish and deter offenders; and they ought to be construed strictly, and not extended by equity; but the words may be interpreted beneficially, according to the intent of the legislators. 1 Inst. 54, 268. Where a thing is prohibited by statute under a penalty, if the penalty, or part of it be not given to him who will sue for the same; it goes and belongs to the King. Rast. Entr. 433. 2 Hawk. 265. But the King cannot grant to any person, any penalty or forfeiture, &c. due by any statute, before judgment thereupon had; tho' after plea pleaded, justices of assize, &c. having power to hear and determine offences done against any penal statute, may compound the penalties with the defendant, by virtue of the King's warrant or Privy Seal. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 3.

There are penalties ordained by several penal acts of parliament, to be recovered in any court of record; but this is to be understood only of the courts at Westminster, and not of the courts of record of inferior corporations. Jenk. Cent. 228. The spiritual court may hold plea of a thing forbidden by statute upon a penalty; but they may not proceed on the penalty. 2 Lev. 222. See Information, and Black. Com. 1 V. 88. 4 V. 422.

Penalty of Bonds, &c. If a man brings an action of debt upon a bond for performance of covenants, the plaintiff shall recover the whole penalty of his bond; because in debt, the judgment must be according to the demand, and the demand is to be for the whole penalty; but on defendant's bringing a bill in equity, and praying an injunction to the suit at Common law, the court of equity usually grants it till the hearing of the cause, and upon hearing cause, they will continue the injunction farther, and order a trial at law on a quantum damnificatus, for the jury to find what damage the plaintiff received by reason of the breach of covenant, &c. And they farther order, that after such verdict given at Common law, both parties shall resort back for the decree of that court: so that here must be several actions and suits at law and equity; whereas a bare action of covenant, without suing for the penalty of the bond, will make an end of the business in less time, and for a much less charge. 2 Lill. Abr. 288, 289.

A person being intitled to the penalty by law, a court of equity will not relieve against it, without paying principal, interest and costs; and where a penalty is recovered at law and paid, Chancery may decree the party to refund all, except the principal and interest, &c. Chan. Rep. 437. This court will not generally carry the debt, beyond the penalty of a bond: Yet where a plaintiff came to be relieved against such penalty, tho' it was decreed, it was on the payment of the principal money, interest, and costs; and notwithstanding they exceeded the penalty, this was affirmed. 1 Vern. 350. Abr. Ch. Eq. 92. See 16 Vin. Abr. tit. Penalty, and Black. Com. 3 V. 435.

Penance, is an ecclesiastical punishment, which affects the body of the penitent; by which he is obliged to give a publick satisfaction to the church, for the scandal he hath given by his evil example. So in the primitive times, they were to give testimonies of their reformation, before they were re-admitted to partake of the mysteries of the church. In the case of incest, or incontinency, the sinner is usually enjoined to do a publick penance in the cathedral, or parish church, or publick market, bare-legged and bareheaded in a white sheet, and to make an open confession of his crime in a prescribed form of words; which is augmented or moderated according to the quality of the fault, and the discretion of the judge.

So in smaller faults, a publick satisfaction or penance, as the judge shall decree, is to be made before the minister, churchwardens, or some of the parishioners, respecting being had to the quality of the offence, as in the case of defamation, or laying violent hands on a minister, or the like. God. Append. 18. Wood's Inst. 507. Penance may be changed into a sum of money, to be applied to pious uses called commuting. 3 Inst. 150. 4 Inst. 336. See Prohibition, and Black. Com. 4 V. 105, 217, 272, 361.

Pensions of Churches, Are certain sums of money paid to clergymen in lieu of tithes. And some churches have settled on them annuities, pensions, &c. payable by other churches; which pensions are due by virtue of some decree made by an ecclesiastical judge on a controversy for tithes, by which the tithes have been decreed to be enjoyed by one, and a pension instead thereof to be paid to another; or they have arisen by virtue of a deed made by consent of the parson, patron and ordinary; and if such pension hath been usually paid for twenty years, then it may be claimed by prescription, and be recovered in the spiritual court; or a parson may prosecute his suit for a pension by prescription, either in that court or at Common law, by writ of annuity; but if he takes his remedy at law, he shall never afterwards sue in the spiritual court: If the prescription be denied, that must be tried by the Common law. F. N. B. 51. Hardr. 230. Ventr. 120. A spiritual person may sue in the spiritual court, for a pension originally granted and confirmed by the ordinary; but where it is granted by a temporal person to a clerk, he cannot; as if one grant an annuity to a parson, he must sue for it in the temporal courts. Cro. Eliz. 675. If a parson or vicar have a pension out of another church, and it is not paid, they may bring a writ of annuity; because a pension issuing out of a rectory is the same thing as a rent; for it may be demanded in a writ of entry and a common recovery may be suffered of it. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1243.

Upon a bill in the Exchequer for a pension, issuing out of a vicarage, it has been held, that tho' there is no glebe nor tithes, but only offerings, &c. yet the vicar is chargeable; and a suit may be brought in this court as well: as at Common law, &c. for a pension by prescription. Hardr. 230. A pension out of an appropriation by prescription is suable in the spiritual court; and if the duty is traversed, it may be tried there. 1 Salk. 58. A libel was had in the spiritual court for a pension, to which the plaintiff made a title by prescription; and a prohibition was prayed, for that the court had no cognisance of prescriptions; but adjudged, that they having cognisance of the principal, it shall draw the accessory. 1 Vent. 3. The curate of a chapel of ease libelled against the vicar of the parish for the arrears of a pension, which he claimed by prescription; tho' a prohibition was granted, because the curate is removable at the will of the parson, therefore cannot prescribe; he must bring a quantum meruit. 2 Salk. 506. The statute 13 Edw. 1. appoints a remedy for pensions in the ecclesiastical court: And the 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 19. gives damages to the value and costs, &c. See Ecclesiastical Courts, and Black. Com. 1 V. 281. 4 V. 40.

Pensions of the Inns of Courts, Are annual payments of each member to the houses. And also that which in the two Temples is called a parliament, and in Lincoln's Inn a council, in Gray's Inn is termed a pension, being usually an assembly of the members to consult of the affairs of the society.

Pentecostals, (Pentecostalia.) Were certain pious oblations made at the feast of Pentecost, by parishioners to their priest, and sometimes by inferior churches or parishes, to the principal mother church. Which oblations were also called Whitson furthings, and were divided into four parts, one to the parish-priest, a second to the poor, a third for repair of the church, and a fourth to the bishop. Stephens of Procurations and Pentecostals. See Kennet's Glossary in Pentecostalia.

Peny, (Saxon Penig.) Was our ancient current silver. 2 Inst. 575. The Saxons had no other sort of silver coin. It was equal in weight to our three-pence: Five made one shilling Saxon, and thirty made a mark, which they called manche, and weighed as much as three of our half-crowns. The English peny called sterling, is round, without clipping, and weighs 32 grana frumenti in medio spica; twenty pence make an ounce, and twelve ounces make a pound. Stat. Edw. 1. It was made with a cross in the middle, and broke into half-pence and farthings. Cowell. Vide Mat. Paris 1279. And see Denarius.

Perambulation, (Perambulatio) Signifies a travelling through, or over: As perambulation of the forest is the surveying or walking about the forest, and the utmost limits of it; by justices, or other officers thereto assigned, to set down and reserve the metes and bounds thereof. 17 Car. c. 16. 20 Car. 2. c. 3. 4 Inst. 30. Perambulation of parishes is to be made by the minister, churchwardens and parishioners, by going round the same once a year, in or about Ascension week: And the parishioners may well justify going over any man's land in their perambulation, according to usage; and it is said may abate nuisances in their way. Cr. Eliz. 441. And there is a perambulation of manors; and a writ perambulatione faciendæ, which lies where any incroachments have been made by a neighbouring lord, &c. then by the assent of the lords, the sheriff shall take with him the parties and neighbours, and make a perambulation, and settle the bounds: Also a commission may be granted to other persons to make perambulation, and to certify the same in the Chancery, or the Common Pleas, &c. And this commission is issued to make perambulation of towns, counties, &c. New N. B. 206.

If tenant for life of a lordship, and one who is tenant in fee-simple of another lordship adjoining, sue forth this writ or commission, and by virtue thereof a perambulation is made; the same shall not bind him in reversion: Nor shall the perambulation made with the assent of tenant in tail, bind his heir. Ibid. And 'tis said this assent of the parties to the perambulation ought to be acknowledged and made personally in Chancery, or by dedimus potestatem; and being certified, the writ or commission issues, &c. The writ begins thus: The King to the sheriff, &c. We command you, that taking with you twelve discreet lawful men of your county, in your proper person you go to the land of A. B. of, &c. And the land of C. D. of, &c. And upon their oaths you cause to be made perambulation betwixt the lands of the said A. in, &c. and of the said C. in, &c. So that it be made by certain metes, or bounds and divisions, &c. And make known to our justices at Westminster, &c.

If perambulation be refused to be made by a lord, the other lord who is grieved thereby shall have a writ against him, called de Rationabilibus Divisiis. See F. N. B. 133. Reg. Orig. 157. and Rationabilibus Divisiis.

Periphrasis, Circumlocution ; use of many words to express the sense of one. Johns.

No periphrasis, or circumlocution will supply words of art, which the law hath appropriated for the description of offences in indictments : No periphrasis, intendment or conclusion shall make good an indictment, which doth not bring the fact within all the material words of a statute ; unless the statute be recited, &c. Cro. Eliz. 535, 749. 2 Hawk. P. C. 224, 249.

Perjury and Subornation. Perjury, (Perjuriū est mendacium cum juramento firmatum.) Is a crime committed, when a lawful oath is administered by any who hath authority, to a person in any judicial proceeding, who swears absolutely and falsely, in a matter material to the issue, or cause in question, by their own act, or by the subornation of others. And if a man call me perjured man, I may have an action on the case, but it must be intended contrary to my oath in a judicial proceeding : But for calling me a forsworn man, no action lies ; because the forswearing may be extra judicial. 3 Inst. 163.

Perjury by the Common law is defined a wilful false oath by one who, being lawfully required to depose the truth in any proceeding in a court of justice, swears absolutely in a matter of some consequence to the point in question, whether he be believed or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. 272.

Subornation of perjury by the Common law is an offence in procuring a man to take a false oath amounting to perjury, who actually takes such oath ; but if the person, incited to take such oath, do not actually take it, the person by whom he was so incited is not guilty of subornation ; yet he is liable to be punished, not only by fine, but also by infamous corporal punishment. 1 Roll. Abr. 41, 57. Yelv. 72. Cro. Jac. 158. 2 Keb. 399. 3 Mod. 122. 1 Hawk. P. C. 177. See Black. Com. 4 V. 136, 138, 196.

1. What is perjury by the Common law, and how restrained and punished.
2. How restrained and punished by statute.

1. What is perjury by the Common law, and how restrained and punished.

1st, It is necessary to constitute the offence perjury, that the false oath be taken wilfully, viz. with some degree of deliberation, not merely owing to surprize or inadvertency, or a mistake of the true state of the question. 5 Mod. 350.

2dly, The oath must be taken either in a judicial proceeding, or in some other publick proceeding of the like nature, wherein the King's honour or interest is concerned ; or before commissioners appointed by the King to inquire of the forfeitures of his tenants, or of defective titles wanting the supply of the King's patents ; but it is not material whether the court, in which a false oath is taken, be a court of record or not, or whether it be a court of Common law, or a court of equity, or Civil law, &c. or whether the oath be taken in face of the court, or out of it, before persons authorized to examine a matter depending in it ; as before the sheriff on a writ of inquiry, &c. or whether it be in relation to the merits of a cause, or in a collateral matter ; as where one, who offers himself to be bail for another, swears that his substance is greater than it is, &c. but neither a false oath in a mere private matter, as in making a bargain, &c. nor the breach of a promissory oath, whether publick or private, are punishable as perjury. 1 Hawk. P. C. 173.

3dly, The oath ought to be taken before persons lawfully authorized to administer it ; for if it be taken before persons acting merely in a private capacity, or before persons pretending to a legal authority of administering such oath, but having no such authority, it is not punishable as perjury ; yet a false oath taken before commissioners, whose commission at the time is in strictness determined by the demise of the King, is perjury ; if taken before such time as the commissioners had notice of such demise ; for it would be of the utmost ill consequence, in such case, to make their proceedings wholly void. 1 Hawk. P. C. 173. 4.

4thly, The oath ought to be taken by a person sworn to depose the truth ; therefore a false verdict comes not under the notion of perjury, because the jurors swear not to depose the truth, but only to judge truly of the depositions of others ; but a man may be as well perjured by an oath in his own cause, as in an answer in Chancery, or in an answer to interrogatories concerning a contempt, or in an affidavit, &c. as by an oath taken by him as witness in another's cause. 1 Hawk. P. C. 174.

5thly, It is not material, whether the thing sworn be true or false, where the person who swears it in truth knows nothing of it. 1 Hawk. P. C. 175.

6thly, The oath must be taken absolutely and directly ; therefore if a man only swears as he thinks, remembers or believes, he cannot be guilty of perjury. 1 Hawk. P. C. 175.

7thly, The thing sworn ought to be some way material ; for if it be wholly foreign from the purpose, or immaterial, and neither pertinent to the matter in question, or tending to aggravate or extenuate the damages, nor likely to induce the jury to give credit to the material part of the evidence, it cannot amount to perjury, because it is wholly insignificant ; as where a witness introduces his evidence, with an impertinent preamble of a story concerning previous facts, no way relating to what is material, and is guilty of a falsity as to such facts ; but a witness may be guilty of perjury in respect to a false oath concerning a mere circumstance, if such oath have a plain tendency to corroborate the more material part of the evidence ; as if in trespass for spoiling the plaintiff's close, with defendant's sheep, a witness swears that he saw such a number of defendant's sheep in the close ; and being asked how he knew them to be defendant's, swears that he knew them by such a mark, which he knew to be the defendant's, where in truth defendant never used any such mark. 1 Hawk. P. C. 175.

8thly, It is not material, whether the false oath was credited or not, or whether the party, in whose prejudice it was taken, was in the event damaged by it ; for the prosecution is not grounded on the damage to the party, but on the abuse of publick justice. 1 Hawk. P. C. 177.

2. How restrained and punished by statute.

By the 5 Eliz. c. 9. it is enacted, " That whoever shall unlawfully and corruptly procure any witness, to commit any wilful and corrupt perjury, or shall unlawfully or corruptly procure or suborn any witness, who shall be sworn to testify in perpetuam rei memoriam, shall for such offence, being thereof lawfully convicted or attainted, forfeit the sum of 40 l. And if such offender, so convicted or attainted, shall not have goods, &c. to the value of 40 l. then such person shall suffer imprisonment by the space of one half year, without bail, and stand upon the pillory the space of one hour in some market town next adjoining to the place where the offence was committed, in open market there, or in the market town itself where the offence was committed."

And, That no person, so convicted or attainted, shall be received as a witness in any court of record, till such judgment shall be reversed, and that on such reversal the party grieved shall recover damages against the party who procured the judgment so reversed to be first given.

And, That if any person shall either by the subornation, unlawful procurement, sinister persuasion, or means of any other, or by their own act, consent or agreement, wilfully and corruptly commit wilful perjury, that then every offender being duly convicted shall forfeit 20 l. and have imprisonment by the space of six months, without bail, and the oath of such offender shall not from thenceforth be received in any court of record, until such judgment be reversed, &c. on which reversal the party grieved shall recover damages in the manner before-mentioned.

And, That if such offender shall not have goods or chattels to the value of 20 l. then he shall be set on the pillory, where he shall have both ears nailed.

One moiety of the forfeitures to the King, the other to the person grieved, who will sue for the same, &c. and that as well the judge of every court where any suit shall be, and whereon any such perjury shall be committed, as also the justices of assize and gaol-delivery, and justices of peace at their quarter sessions, may inquire of, hear and determine offences against the act.

The act shall no way extend to any spiritual or ecclesiastical court, but every offender, shall be punished by such usual laws as are used in the said courts.

The statute shall not restrain the authority of any judge having absolute power to punish perjury before the making thereof, but every such judge may proceed in the punishment of all offences punishable before making the statute, as they might have done to all purposes, so that they set not on the offender les punishment than contained in the act.

In the construction of this statute the following opinions have been holden:

That every indictment, or action, on this statute must *pur*ue the words of it; therefore if it alledge, that defendant depofed such a matter salso & deceptive, or salso & corrupte or salso & voluntarie, without saying, voluntarie & corrupte, it is not good, tho' it concluded, that sic voluntarium & corruptum commisit perjuriū contra formam statuti, &c. Also it is necessary expressly to shew, that defendant was sworn; and it is not sufficient to say, that tucto per se sacro evangelio depofuit. Cro. Eliz. 147. Heth. 12. Savil 43. 2 Leon. 211. 1 Show. 198. Cro. Eliz. 105.

But there is no need to shew, whether the party took the false oath thro' the subornation of another, or of his own act, tho' the words of the statute are, "If persons by subornation, &c. or their own act, &c. shall commit wilful perjury;" for there being no medium between the branches of this distinction, they express no more than the law would have implied, therefore operate nothing. 3 Bull. 147.

It hath been adjudged, that a man cannot be guilty of perjury within this statute, in any case wherein he may not possibly be guilty of subornation of perjury within it; for it is reasonable to give the whole statute the same construction; neither can it be well intended, that the makers of the statute meant to extend its purview farther as to perjury, which they seem to esteem the lesser crime, than to subornation of perjury, which they seem to esteem the greater; therefore since the clause concerning subornation of perjury mentioning only matters depending by writ, bill, plaint or information, concerning hereditaments, goods, debts or damages, &c. extends not to perjury on an indictment or criminal information; the clause concerning perjury, tho' penned in more general words, hath been adjudged to come under the like restriction: Also since the clause concerning subornation of perjury relates only to perjury by witnesses, that concerning perjury shall extend only to the like perjury; therefore not to perjury in an answer in Chancery; or in swearing the peace against a man; or in any presentment by homage in a court baron; or in wager of law, or in swearing before commissioners of inquiry of the King's title to lands; and by the opinions of some, a false affidavit against a man in a court of justice is not within the statute; but if such affidavit be by a third person, and relate to a cause depending in suit before the court, and either of the parties in variance be grieved, in respect of such cause, by reason of the perjury, it may strongly be argued that it is within the purview of the statute; also a false oath before the sheriff, on a writ of inquiry, is within the statute. 5 Co. 99. Cro. Jac. 120. 3 Inst. 164. 2 Leon. 201. Yelv. 120. Cro. Eliz. 148. 2 Roll. Abr. 77.

It hath been collected from the clause which gives an action to the party grieved, that no false oath is within the statute, which doth not give some person a just cause of complaint; therefore, if the thing sworn be true, tho' it be not known by him who swears it to be so, the oath is not within the statute, because it gives no just cause of complaint to the other party, who would take advantage of another's want of evidence to prove the truth; from the same ground no false oath can be within the statute, unless the party against whom it was sworn suffered some disadvantage by it; therefore in every prosecution on the statute, you must set forth the record wherein you suppose the perjury to have been committed, and must prove at the trial, that there is such a record, either by actually producing it, or an attested copy; also in the pleadings you must not only set forth the point wherein the false oath was taken, but must also shew how it conduced to the proof or disproof of the matter in question; and if an action on the statute be brought by more than one, you must shew how the perjury was prejudicial to each of the plaintiffs; but it seems that a perjury, which tends only to aggravate or extenuate the damages, is as much within the statute as a perjury which goes directly to the point in issue; and a perjury, in a cause wherein an erroneous judgment is given, is a good ground of prosecution upon the statute till the judgment be reversed. 1 Hawk. P. C. 181.

If perjury be committed, that is within this statute, but concludes not contra formam statuti; yet it is a good indictment at Common law, but not to bring him within the corporal punishment of the statute. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 191-2.

By 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. s. 2. 'The more effectually to deter persons from committing wilful and corrupt perjury, or subornation of perjury, it is enacted, "That besides the punishment to be inflicted by law for so great crimes, it shall be lawful for the court or judge before whom any person shall be convicted of wilful and corrupt perjury, or subornation of perjury, to order such person to be sent to some house of correction, for a time not exceeding seven years, there to be kept to hard labour during the time, otherwise to be transported for a term not exceeding seven years, as the court shall think proper; therefore judgment shall be given, that the person convicted shall be committed or transported accordingly, besides such punishment as shall be adjudged to be inflicted on such person agreeable to the laws in being; and if transportation be directed, the same shall be executed in such manner as is provided by law for transportation of felons; and if any person so committed or transported shall voluntarily escape or break prison, or return from transportation before the expiration of the time, such person being lawfully convicted shall suffer death as a felon, and shall be tried for such felony in the county where he so escaped, or where he shall be apprehended."

Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 11. s. 1. In every information or indictment for perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged, and by what court, or before whom the oath was taken (averring such court or person to have authority to administer the same) together with the proper averment to falsify the matter wherein the perjury is assigned, without setting forth the bill, answer, information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or proceeding; and without setting forth the commission or authority of the court or person before whom the perjury was committed.

Sec. 2. In every information or indictment for subornation of perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged, without setting forth the bill, answer, information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or proceeding, and without setting forth the commission or authority of the court or person before whom the perjury was committed, or agreed to be committed.

Sec. 3. It shall be lawful for any justice (sitting the court, or within 24 hours after) to direct any person examined as a witness before them, to be prosecuted for perjury, in case there appear a reasonable cause; and to assign the party injured, or other person undertaking such prosecution counsel, who shall do their duty without fee. And every prosecution so directed shall be carried on without payment of any tax, and without payment of any fees in court, or to any officer of the court. And the clerk of assize, or his associate or prothonotary, or other officer of the court attending when such prosecution is directed, shall without fee give the party injured, or other person undertaking such prosecution, a certificate of the same being directed, with the names of the counsel assigned him; which which certificate shall be deemed sufficient proof of such prosecution having been directed. Provided, that no such direction or certificate shall be given in evidence upon any trial against any person upon a prosecution so directed.

Perjury and subornation excepted out of the general pardon, 20 Geo. 2. c. 52. s. 19, 21.

Permissive Waste. Waste is either voluntary, which is a crime of commission, as by pulling down a house; or it is permissive, which is a matter of omission only, as by suffering it to fall for want of necessary reparations. Black. Com. 2 V. 281.

Permit, (from permitto) Is a licence for persons to pass with and sell goods, on having paid the custom duties for the same. See Customs.

Permutatione archidiaconatus & ecclesiae eidem annexae cum ecclesia & praebenda, Is a writ to an ordinary, commanding him to admit a clerk to a benefice, upon exchange made with another. Reg. Orig. 307.

Perannancy, (from the Fr. prendre.) Signifies a taking or receiving; as tithes in perannancy, are tithes taken or that may be taken in kind.

Perpetrator of Profits, Is he who receives the profits of lands, &c. and is all one with cessui que use. Stat 1 Hen. 7. cap. 1. 1 Rep. 123. The King has the perannancy of the profits of the lands of an outlaw, in personal actions; and by seizure shall hold against the alienation of such outlaw, &c. Raym. 17. See Co. Litt. 589. b. and 12 R. 2. c. 15. and Black. Com. 2 V. 163.

Perparts, A part of the inheritance. — Tanquam eram quae sibi descendit in perpartem de hereditate, &c. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 54. par. 19.

Perpetuating the Testimony of Witnesses. If witnesses to a disputable fact are old and infirm, it is usual to file a bill to perpetuate the testimony of those witnesses, altho' no suit is depending; for, it may be, a man's antagonist only waits for the death of some of them to commence his suit. See Black. Com. 3 V. 450.

Perpetuity, As it is a legal term of art, is the limiting an estate either of inheritance or for years, so as to render it unalienable longer than for a life or lives in being at the same time, and some short or reasonable time after. 2 Wms. Rep. 688.

Perpetuities are absolute or qualified. And estates-tail from the time of the statute de donis, till common recoveries were found out, were looked upon as perpetuities. 12 Mod. 282.

A perpetuity is, where if all who have interest join, yet they cannot bar or pass the estate. But if by concurrence of all having interest the estate-tail may be barred, it is no perpetuity. Ch. Cases 213.

A perpetuity is a thing odious in law, and destructive to the commonwealth; it would put a stop to the commerce, and prevent the circulation of the property of the kingdom. Vern. 164.

Every executory devise is a perpetuity as far as it goes, i. e. an estate unalienable, tho' all mankind join in the conveyance. 1 Salk. 229.

A. seised in fee gives his lands after his death without issue male to B. in tail male, until he or they effectually go about to do any acts to alter or discontinue this estate-tail, and then to C. and the heirs male of his body, with several remainders over; the deviser dies without issue; B. enters; C. dies leaving issue D. B. levies a fine; D. enters; and the question was, if the entry was good? Resolved. That this was a perpetuity and not allowable, being repugnant to law; for by such a limitation an estate-tail cannot be determined and given to another; for by the fine the remainder is discontinued and divested, so as D. cannot enter; for it is no limitation to enter but after the effectual going about to do any acts, &c. and it is not effectual till the act done; and when it is done the remainder is discontinued, and then he cannot enter. Cro. J. 696. See Vern. 161.

It is absolutely against the constant course of Chancery to decree a perpetuity, or give any relief in that case. 1 Chan. Rep. 144.

Trustees of a term limited over in tail, remainder in tail, were decreed in Chancery to convey the estate over; for otherwise there would be a perpetuity. Sid. 37.

The father settles land on his son in tail male, and takes bond from him, that he will not dock the entail; decreed the bond good. Had not the son agreed to give the bond, the father might have made him only tenant for life; and tho' the alienation is not made by the son, but by his issue, the bill was dismissed with costs. 2 Vern. 233.

An attempt to make a perpetual succession of estates for life is vain and not practicable. 2 Vern. 738.

Perpetuity of the King. The law ascribes to the King, in his POLITICAL CAPACITY, an absolute immortality. THE KING NEVER DIES. Henry, Edward, or George may die; but the King survives them all. For immediately upon the decease of the reigning Prince in his natural capacity, his Kingship or imperial dignity, by act of law, without any interregnum or interval, is vested at once in his heir; who is, eo instanti, King to all intents and purposes. And so tender is the law of supposing even a possibility of his death, that his natural dissolution is generally called his demise; dimissio regis, vel coronae: an expression which signifies merely, a transfer of property; for, as is observed by Plowden, (177. 234.) when we say the demise of the crown, we mean only that in consequence of the disunion of the King's body natural, from his body politick, the kingdom is transferred or demised to his successor; and so the royal dignity remains perpetual. Thus too, when Edward the Fourth, in the tenth year of his reign, was driven from his throne for a few months by the house of Lancaster, this temporary transfer of his dignity was denominated his demise; and all process was held to be discontinued, as upon a natural death of the King. Black. Com. 1 V. 249.

Per quae servitia, Is a judicial writ issuing from the note of a fine, and lieth for cognicee of a manor, feigniory, chief rent, or other services to compel him who is tenant of the land at the time of the note of the fine levied, to attorn unto him. West. Symbol. part 2. tit. Fines, sect. 126. Old Nat. Brew. 155. See 16 Abr. tit. Per quae servitia.

Perquisite, (Perquisitum) Is any thing got by industry or purchased with money, different from that which descends from a father or ancestor; and so Bracon uses it, when he says, Perquisitum facere, lib. 2. cap. 30. num. 3. & lib. 4. c. 22.

Perquisites of Courts, Are commonly those profits which arise to lords of manors, from their court-baron, above the yearly revenue of the land; as fines of copyholds, heriots, amerciaments, &c. Perk. 20, 21. Perquisites of Officers. See Fees.

Per quod consortium amisit, And per quod servitium amisit, are words necessary in declarations for trespass, &c. where a man's wife or servant is beaten, or taken from him, by which means he loses their service, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 595, 596.

Person, A man or woman; also the state or condition, whereby one man differs from another.

Person, injuries to, see Black. Com. 3 V. 119, &c.

Personable, (personabilis) Signifies as much as enabled to maintain plea in court: as for example, the defendant was judged personable to maintain this action. Old Nat. Brew. 142. and in Kitchen, 214. The tenant pleaded, that the wife was an alien, born in Portugal, and judgment was demanded whether she should be answered: the plaintiff saith, she was made personable by parliament, that is, as the Civilians would speak it, Habere personam standi in judicio. Personable is also as much as to be of capacity to take any thing granted or given. Plowd. 27.

Personal, (personalis) Being joined with the substantives, things, goods or chattels, as things personal, goods personal, chattels personal; signifies any moveable thing, quick or dead: so it is used in West Symbol, part 2. sect. 58. in these words: theft is an unlawful felony taking away another man's moveable personal goods, so also 61. And Kitchen, 139. saith, Where personal things shall be given to a corporation, as a horse, a cow, sheep, or other goods, &c. And Staundf. Pl. Cor. fol. 25. Contradictio rei alienae, is to be understood of things personal; for in things real it is not felony, as the cutting of a tree is not felony. See Chattels, and Black. Com. 2 V. 384, 387.

Personal Action, (actio personalis) Is that which one man may have by reason of a contract for money or goods against another: it is such an action whereby a debt, goods and chattels are demanded, or damages for them; or damages for a wrong done to a man's person. Terms de Ley. In the Civil-law, it is called actio in personam, and is brought against him who is bound by covenant, to grant or to do any thing, &c. And in our law, Actio personalis moritur cum persona. 1 Inst. 53.

Action of debt lieth not against executors, upon a contract for the eating and drinking of the testator; for that action, in such case dieth with him. 9 Rep. 87. If a person commit a battery or trespass, and he or the person beaten, &c. die; the action dieth, and is gone. Noy's Max. 5. An executor cannot bring an appeal, for larceny, from the testator; for it is a meer personal action, vested in the testator, and dies with him as all actions for torts do. H. P. C. 184. S. P. C. 50. And an appeal of death is a personal action given to the heir, in respect to his immediate relation to the person killed; and like other personal actions, shall die with the person. 2 Hawk. P. C. 165. See Black. Com. 3 V. 117, 302.

Personal Security, The right of personal security consists in a person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation, for which see Black. Com. 1 V. 129, &c.

Personal Tithes, Are tithes paid of such profits as come by the labour of a man's person; as by buying and selling, gains of merchandise, and handicrafts, &c. See Black. Com. 2 V. 24.

Personalty, (Personalitas) Is an abstract of personal: the action is in the personalty, i. e. it is brought against the right person, or the person against whom in law it lies. Old Nat. Br. 92. Or it is to distinguish actions and things personal, from those that are real.

Personate, To represent by a fictitious or assumed character, so as to pass for the person represented. John.

A. had a warrant to arrest J. S. and A. demanded of a stranger what his name was, who said his name was J. S. whereupon A. arrested him. The stranger brought false imprisonment; and adjudged it lay; for the bailiff ought at his peril to take notice of the party. Mo. 457.

If one of my name levies a fine of my land in my name, I may well confess and avoid this fine, by shewing the special matter. But if a stranger, who is not of my name, levies a fine of my land in my name, I shall not be received to aver that I did not levy the fine, but another in my name; for that is merely contrary to the record; and so it is of a recognizance, and other matters of record. But when the fraud appears to the court, they may enter a vacat on the roll, and so make it no fine, altho' the party cannot avoid it by averment, during the time it remains a record. Cro. Eliz. 531.

B. was taken in execution upon a recognizance of bail, and he made it appear to the court, that he never acknowledged the recognizance, but was personated by another; and thereupon it was moved, that the bail might be vacated, and he discharged, as was done in Cotton's case. 2 Cro. 256. But the court said since 21 Jac. cap. 26. by which this offence was made felony without clergy, it is not convenient to vacate it until the offender is convicted; and so it was done in Spicer's case; wherefore it was ordered, that B. should bring the money into court, and be let at large to prosecute the offender. Twisden said it must be tried in Middlesex, tho' the bail was taken at a judge's chambers in London, because filed here, and the entry is venit coram Domino Rege, &c. so it differs from a recognizance acknowledged before Lord Hobart, upon 23 H. 8. at his chambers, and recorded in Middlesex; there the scire facias may be either in London or Middlesex. Hob. 195, 196. Ven. 301. Mod. 46. S. P. Cockerel who personated Besley was hanged at Tyburn, but the rope was immediately cut; and afterwards Besley on motion had restitution of his goods in the hands of the sheriff. 2 Jo. 64.

A commission of rebellion was awarded against A. whereupon B. came before the commissioners and affirmed himself to be the person. The commissioners apprehended him by virtue of their commission; but per Hale

Ch. B. the commissioners have no warrant to take him by their commission; his affirming himself to be the person will not excuse them in false imprisonment, as has been held on executing a capias. Hard. 323.

Persons, Are divided by law into either natural persons, or artificial. Natural persons are such as the God of Nature formed us; artificial are such as are created and devised by human laws for the purposes of society and government, which are called corporations or bodies politic. Pesturable, Pestarble, or Pestarable Places, Seem to be such wares or merchandize as pester, and take up much room in a ship. 32 H. 8. c. 14.

Peter-corn, Is mentioned in some of the ancient registers of our bishops, particularly in that of St. Leonard de Ebor, which contains a grant thereof by King Atthelstane, &c. Collect. Dodsw. M.

Peter-pence, (Denarii Sancti Petri) Otherwise called in the Saxon tongue Romefob, the fee of Rome, or due to Rome; also Romefot and Rome-pennyng, was a tribute given by Inas, King of the West-Saxons, being in pilgrimage at Rome, in the year of our Lord 720. which was a penny for every house. Lamb. Explication of Saxon Words, Verbo Nummus. And the like given by Offa, King of the Mercians, thro' his dominions, in anno 794. not as a tribute to the Pope, but in sustentation of the English school or college there; and it was called Peter-pence, because collected on the day of St. Peter ad Vincula, which was a penny for every house. Spelm. de Circul. tom. 1. fol. 2. 3. And in St. Edward's Laws, num. 10. where we may read these words, Omnes qui habent 30. denariatus vivæ pecuniæ in domo sua de suo proprio, Anglorum lege dabit denarium Sancti Petri, & lege Danorum dimidium marcam; iste vero debet summoniri in solennitate apostolorum Petri & Pauli & collegii ad festivitatem quæ dicitur ad Vincula, ita ut ultra illum diem non detineatur, &c. See also King Edgar's Laws, 78. c. 4. which contain a sharp constitution touching this matter. Stow, in his Annals, p. 67. saith, that he who had twenty pennyworth of goods of one sort in his house, was to give a penny at Lammas yearly. See Romefot.

It was prohibited by Edw. 3. and by 25 H. 8. c. 21. But it revived 1 & 2 Ph. & Mar. c. 8. and was wholly abrogated 1 Eliz. c. 1. See Black. Com. 4 V. 106.

Peter ad vincula, Mentioned in the Stat. 4 Ed. 4. cap. 1, &c. See Gula of August.

Petition, (Petitio) A supplication made by an inferior to a superior, and especially to one having jurisdiction. S. P. C. c. 15. It is used for that remedy, which the subject hath to help a wrong done by the King, who hath a prerogative not to be sued by writ: in which sense it is either general, That the King do him right, whereupon follows a general indorsement upon the same, Let right be done done the party; or it is special, when the conclusion and indorsement are special, for this or that to be done, &c. Standf. Prærog. c. 22. See Black. Com. 3 V. 256.

By statute, the soliciting, labouring or procuring the putting the hands or consent of above twenty persons to any petition, to the King, or either House of Parliament, for alterations in church or state; unless by assent of three or more justices of peace of the county, or a majority of the grand jury, at the assizes or sessions, &c. and repairing to the King or Parliament to deliver such petition, with above the number of ten persons, is subject to a fine of 100*l.* and three months imprisonment, being proved by two witnesses, within six months, in the court of B. R. or at the assizes, &c. 13 Car. 2. c. 5. And if what is required by this statute be observed, care must be taken that petitions to the King contain nothing which may be interpreted to reflect on the administration; for if they do, it may come under the denomination of a libel: and 'tis remarkable, that the petition of the city of London, for the sitting of a parliament was deemed libellous; because it suggested that the King's dissolving a late parliament was an obstruction of justice. Read. Stat. Vol. 4, 353. Also the petition of the seven bishops, sent to the Tower by James II. was called a libel, &c. 3 Mod. 212. To subscribe a petition to the King, to frighten him into a change of his measures, intimating that if it be denied, many thousands of his subjects will be discontented, &c. is included among the contempts against the King's person and government, tending to weaken the same, and punishable by fine and imprisonment. 1 Harok. P. C. 60.

Petition in Chancery, Is a request in writing, directed to the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls, shewing some matter whereupon he prays somewhat to be granted him. P. R. C. 269.

Most things which may be moved for of course, may be petitioned for.

Sometimes it is upon a collateral matter only, as it has relation to some precedent suit, or to an officer of the court; as to have a clerk or solicitor's bill taxed, or to oblige him to deliver up papers. P. R. C. 270.

The Master of the Rolls is not to be petitioned for rehearings, but the Chancellor; also the Chancellor only is to be petitioned touching pleas, demurrers or exceptions, or touching decrees or special orders made before the Chancellor. In most cases of petition, the Master of the Rolls may be applied to. P. R. C. 270. See 16 Vin. Abr. 337, 338.

Petition of Right. In the reign of Charles I. there was a famous petition of right: that none should be compelled to make or yield any gift, loan, benevolence, tax, and such like charge, without consent by act of parliament; nor upon refusal so to do, be called to make answer, take any oath not warranted by law, give attendance, or be confined, or otherwise molested concerning the same, &c. And that the subject should not be burdened by the quartering of soldiers or mariners; and all commissions for proceeding by martial law, to be annulled, and none of like nature to be issued, lest the subject (by colour thereof) be destroyed or put to death, contrary to the laws of the land, &c. See Stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 1. See Black. Com. 1 V. 128. 4 V. 430.

As to what petitions are declared lawful by statute, see 1 W. & M. sess. 2. c. 2. And as to the right of petitioning, see Black. Com. 1 V. 143. 4 V. 147.

Petit Serjeanty, Parva Serjeantia. To hold by petit serjeanty, is to hold lands or tenements of the King, yielding him a knife, a buckler, an arrow, a bow without a string, or other like service, at the will of the first feoffor; and there belongs not ward, marriage or relief. None can hold by grand or petit serjeanty, but of the King. But see 12 Car. 2. c. 24. and Black. Com. 2 V. 81.

Petit Session. In both corporations and counties at large, there is sometimes kept a special or petty sessions, by a few justices, for dispatching smaller business in the neighbourhood between the times of the general sessions; as, for licensing alehouses, passing the accounts of parish officers, and the like. Black. Com. 4 V. 269.

Petit Treason, (Parva Proditio) In French petit trahison, i. e. proditio minor, treason of a lesser kind, for as high treason is an offence against the security of the commonwealth, so is petit treason, tho' not so expressly: petit treason is, if a servant kills his master, a wife her husband, a secular or religious man his prelate. 25 Ed. 3. c. 2. whereof see more in *Staundf. Physicians. No person within London, or seven miles thereof, shall practise as a physician or surgeon, without licence from the bishop of London, or dean of St. Paul's; who are to call to their assistance four doctors of physick, on examination of the persons, before granted: and in the country, without licence from the bishop of the diocese, on pain of forfeiting 5*l.* a month. 3 Hen. 8. c. 11.

By 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 5. The charter for incorporating the college of physicians is confirmed; they have power to choose a president, and have perpetual succession, a common seal, ability to purchase lands, &c. Eight of the chiefs of the college are to be called elects, who from among themselves shall choose a president yearly: and if any practise physick in the said city, or within seven miles of it, without licence of the college under their seal, he shall forfeit 5*l.* Also persons practising physick in other parts of England, are to have letters testimonial from the president and three elects, unless they be graduate physicians of Oxford or Cambridge, &c.

The 32 H. 8. c. 10. ordains, that four physicians (called censors) shall be yearly chosen by the college, to search apothecaries wares, and have an oath given them for that purpose by the president; apothecaries denying them entrance into their houses, &c. incur a forfeiture of 5*l.* And physicians refusing to make the search are liable to a penalty of 40*s.* And every member of the college of physicians is authorized to practise surgery. Popish recusants are disabled to practise physick, or to use the trade of an apothecary, &c. under penalties. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. The four persons called censors, annually chosen by the president and college of physicians, calling to their assistance the wardens of the apothecaries company, or one of them, are empowered to enter into the houses, shops, or warehouses of apothecaries, &c. and examine medicines, and to destroy those that are not fit for use; but subject to appeal to the college of physicians, &c. 10 Geo. 1. c. 20.

In the case of Dr. Bonham, 7. Jac. 1. is shewn the power of the college of physicians, in punishing persons for practising physick without licence: they imprisoned the doctor for practising without a licence; but it was adjudged that they could not lawfully do it, for in such case they had no power by the statute to commit, but they ought to sue for the penalty of 5*l.* per month, quædam, &c. But in case of male practice, the censors have power to commit, for they may in such case fine and imprison by their charter, and they are judges of record, and not liable to an action for what they do by virtue of their judicial power. 8 Rep. 107. Carth. 494.

Apothecaries taking upon them to administer physick, without advice of a doctor, has been adjudged practising physick within the statutes; the proper business of an apothecary being to præpare the prescriptions of the doctor: the practice of physick was said to consist in judging of the disease and constitution of the patient; and of the proper remedy remedy for the distemper; and in directing the application of the remedy. And so it was resolved, that no fee was given the apothecary. 2 Salk. 451. But this judgment was afterwards reversed in the House of Lords. Mod. Caf. 44.

It has been holden, that if a person not duly authorised to be a physician or surgeon, undertakes a cure, and the patient dies under his hands, he is guilty of felony; but 'tis said not to be excluded the benefit of clergy. 1 Hawk. P. C. 87.

One who has taken his degree of doctor of physick in either of the universities, may not practise in London, and within seven miles of the same, without licence from the college of physicians; by reason of the charter of incorporation, confirmed by 14 & 15 Hen. 8. c. 5. penn'd in very strong and negative words. As to the testimonials granted by the universities on a person's taking the doctor's degree, these may have the nature of a recommendation, and give a man a fair reputation, but confer no right; consequently those statutes which have confirmed the privileges of the universities would revive or confirm nothing but the reputation that this testimonial might give such graduates. And as to the last clause of this statute, that "none shall practise in the country without licence from the president and three elects, unless he be a graduate of one of the universities;" all the inference from that would be, that possibly two licences may be necessary where a person is not a graduate. In the case of Dr. Lewet, Lord Ch. J. Holt did not think this question worth being found specially. The college of physicians, without doubt, are more competent judges of the qualifications of a physician than the universities; and there may be many reasons for taking particular care of those who practise physick in London. 10 Mod. 353, 354.

Philosopher's Stone. Henry VI. granted letters patent to certain persons, who undertook to find out the philosopher's stone, and to change other metals into gold, &c. to be free from the penalty of the Stat. 5 Hen. 4. made against the attempts of chymists of this nature. Put. 34 Hen. 6. 3 Inst. 74. Picards, A sort of boats of 15 tuns or upwards, used on the river Severn, mentioned 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 3. Also a fisher-boat, 13 Eliz. 11.

Picage, (picagium, from the Fr. piquer, i. e. effodere) A consideration, paid for the breaking up ground to set up booths, stalls or standings, in fairs; payable to the Lord of the soil.

Picte, (picellum) A small parcel of land inclosed with a hedge; a little close: this word seems to come from the Italian picciola, i. e. parvus; and in some parts of England it is called pigbel.

Pie-powder Court, (curia pedis pulverisati) from the French pie, i. pes, and poudreux i. pulverulentus; Is a court held (de hora in horam) in fairs, to administer justice to buyers and sellers, and for redress of disorders committed in them; so called from the dusty feet of the suitors; or according to Sir Edward Coke (4 Inst. 272.) because justice there is done as speedily as dust can fall from the foot. Upon the same principle that justice among the Jews was administered in the gate of the city, that the proceedings might be the more speedy, as well as publick. Ruth. c. 4. But the etymology given us by a learned modern writer is much more ingenious and satisfactory; it being derived, according to him, from pie puldreaux, a pedlar, in old French, and therefore signifying the court of such petty chapmen as resort to fairs or markets. Barring. Observ. on Stat. 337. Black. Com. 3 V. 32. So, Skene de verbor. signif. verbo Pede-pulverosus says, the word signifies a vagabond; especially a pedlar, who hath no dwelling, therefore must have justice summarily administered to him, viz. within three ebbings and three flowings of the sea. Brass. lib. 5. tract. 1. c. 6. num. 6. calleth it Justitiam pedpoudreus. Of this court, read the statute 17 Ed. 3. c. 2. 4 Inst. 272. and Crompt. Jur. 221. See Justices of the Pavilion. This among our old Saxons was called ceapung-gemot, i. e. a court for merchandize, or handling matters of buying and selling. 'Tis mentioned in Doct. and Student, c. 5. who tells us, 'tis a court incident to fairs and markets, to be held only during the time that the fairs are kept. Corwell.

The fair of St. Giles, held on the hills of that name, near the city of Winchester, by virtue of letters patent of K. Edw. 4. hath a court of piepowder of a transcendent jurisdiction; the judges whereon are called justices of the pavilion, and have their power from the bishop of Winchester. *Prin. Pigeons. Every person who shall shoot at and kill a Pigeon, may be committed to the common gaol for three months, by two or more justices of the peace, or he shall pay 20s. to the Poor of the Parish. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. And to steal Pigeons in a Pigeon-house, shut up so that the owner may take them, is felony. 1 Hawk. P. C. 94.

Pigeon-house, Is a place for safe keeping Pigeons. A lord of a manor may build a Pigeon-house or Dovecote upon his land, parcel of the manor; but a tenant of the manor cannot, without the lord's licence. 3 Salk. 248. Formerly none but the lord of the manor, or the parson, might erect a Pigeon-house; tho' it has been since held, that any freeholder may build a Pigeon-house, on his own ground. 5 Rep. 104. Cro. Eliz. 548. Cro. Jac. 382, 440. A person may have a Pigeon-house, or Dovecote, by prescription. Game-Law, 2 Pa. 133. See Nu-jance.

Pila, Is that side of money which is called pile, because it is the side on which there was an impression of a church built on piles; and he who brings an appeal of robbery against another, must shew the certain quantity, quality, price, weight, &c. valorem & pilum, where pilum signifies figuram monetæ. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 39.

Pilettus, Was antiently used for an arrow, as had a round knob, a little above the head, to hinder it from going far into a mark; from the Lat. pila, which signifies generally any round thing like a ball.—Et quod forestarii non portabunt sagittas barbata, sed piletos. Chart. 31 H. 3. Persons might shoot without the bounds of a forest with sharp or pointed arrows; but within the forest, for the preservation of the deer, they were to shoot only with blunts, bolts, or Piles: and sagitta pileta was opposed to sagitta barbata; as blunts to sharps, in rapiers. Matt. Paris.

Pileus suppositationis, A cap of maintenance. Pope Julius sent such a cap, with a sword, to Hen. 8. anno 1514. Holling. 827. but there is mention made of such a cap by Hovedon, pag. 656. at the coronation of Richard the First. Corwell.

Pillory, (collistrigium, collum stringens; pilloria from the Fr. pilleur, i. e. defeculator, or felori derived from the Greek Πῆλν, janua, a door, because one standing on the pillory, puts his head, as it were, thro' a door, and Opᾶν, video) Is an engine made of wood to punish offenders, by exposing them to publick view, and rendering them infamous. There is a statute of the pillory, 5 H. 3. And by statute, it is appointed for bakers, forcellers, and those who use false weights, perjury, forgery, &c. 3 Inst. 219. Lords of leets are to have a pillory and tumbrel, or it will be cause of forfeiture of the leet; and a vill may be bound by prescription to provide a pillory, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 73.

Pilot, Is he who hath the government of a ship, under the master. Pilots of ships, taking on them to conduct any ship from Dover, &c. to any place up the river Thames, are to be first examined and approved by the master and wardens of the society of Trinity House, &c. or shall forfeit 10*l.* for the first offence, 20*l.* for the second, and 40*l.* for every other offence; one moiety to the informer, the other to the master and wardens; but any master or mate of a ship, may pilot his own vessel up the river: and if any ship be lost, thro' the negligence of any pilot, he shall be for ever after disabled to act as a pilot. 3 Geo. 1. c. 13. Also the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports may make rules for government of pilots, and order a sufficient number to ply at sea to conduct ships up the Thames. 7 Geo. 1. c. 21. No person shall act as a pilot on the Thames, &c. (except in collier ships) without licence from the master and wardens of Trinity House at Deptford, on pain of forfeiting 20*l.* And pilots are to be subject to the government of that corporation; and pay antient dues not exceeding 1*s.* in the pound out of wages, for the use of the poor thereof. Stat. 5 G. 2. c. 20.

By the laws of France, no person shall be received as a pilot, till he has made several voyages, and passed a strict examination; and after that, on his return in long voyages, he is to lodge a copy of his journal in the Admiralty: and if a pilot occasion the loss of a ship, he is to pay 100 livres fine, and be for ever deprived of the exercise of pilotage; and if he doth it designedly, be punished with death. Lex Mercat. 70, 71.

The laws of Oleron ordain, That if any pilot designedly misguide a ship, that it may be cast away, he shall be put to a rigorous death, and hung in chains: And if the lord of the place where a ship be thus lost, abet such villains in order to have a share in the wreck, he shall be apprehended, and all his goods forfeited for the satisfaction of the persons suffering; and his person shall be fastened to a stake in the midst of his own mansion, which being fired on the four corners, shall be burnt to the ground, and he with it. Leg. Ol. c. 25. And if the fault of a pilot be so notorious, that the ship's crew see an apparent wreck, they may lead him to the hatches, and strike off his head; but the Common law denies this hasty execution: An ignorant pilot is sentenced to pass thrice under the ship's keel, by the laws of Denmark. Lex Mercat. 70.

Masters of ships shall not oblige pilots to pass thro' dangerous places, or to steer courses against their wills; but if there be a difference in opinions, the matter may in such case be governed by the advice of the most expert mariners. Ibid. Before the ship arrives at her place or bed, while she is under the charge of the pilot, if she or her goods perish, or be spoiled, the pilot shall make good the same: But after the ship is brought to the harbour, then the master is to take charge of her, and answer all damages, except that of the act of God, &c. Leg. Ol. cap. 23.

In charter parties of affreightment, the master generally covenants to find a pilot, and the merchant to pay him: And in case the ship shall miscarry thro' the insufficiency of the pilot, the merchant may charge either the master or the pilot; and if he charges the master, such master must have his remedy against the pilot. Lex Mercat. 70. See Lodmanage. And Strange 249. for the construction of the statute relating to the piloting of ships. 3 Geo. 1. c. 13. See also 7 Geo. 1. c. 21. 5 Geo. 2. c. 20. And 4 Geo. 3. c. 12.

Pinnas bibere, Or Ad pinnas bibere. The old custom of drinking brought in by the Danes, was to fix a pin in the side of the wassal bowl, and to drink exactly to the pin; as now is practised in a sealed glass, &c. This kind of drunkenness was forbid the clergy, in the council at London, Anno 1102. Presbyteri non eant ad potationes, nec ad pinnas bibant. Cowell.

Pipe, (Pipa,) Is a roll in the Exchequer, otherwise called The Great Roll, anno 37 E. 3. c. 4. See Clark of the pipe. It is also a measure of wine, containing two hogheads, or half a ton, that is, one hundred and twenty six gallons; mentioned in 1 R. 3. c. 3.

Piquant, A French word for sharp, made use of to express malice or rancour against any one. Law Fr. Di.

Pirates, (Pirate) Are common sea rovers, without any fixed place of residence, who acknowledge no sovereign and no law, and support themselves by pillage and depredations at sea: But there are instances wherein the word pirata has been formerly taken for a sea captain. Spelm.

The crime of piarcy, or robbery and depredation upon the HIGH SEAS, is an offence against the universal law of society; a pirate being, according to Sir Edward Coke, (3 Inst. 113.) hostis humani generis. As therefore he has renounced all the benefits of society and government, and has reduced himself afresh to the savage state of nature, by declaring war against all mankind, all mankind must declare war against him: So that every community hath a right, by the rule of self-defence, to inflict that punishment upon him, which every individual would in a state of nature have been otherwise entitled to do for any invasion of his person or personal property. Black. Com. 4 V. 71.

Pirates are enemies to all: They are denied succour by the law of nations; and by the Civil law, a ransom promised to a pirate, if not complied with, creates no wrong; for the law of arms is not communicated to such, neither are they capable of enjoying that privilege, which lawful enemies are intitled to in the caption of another. Lex Mercat. 183. If a pirate enters a port or haven, and assaults and robs a merchant ship at anchor there; this is not piracy, because it is not done upon the high sea; but it is a robbery at the Common law, the act being infra corpus comitatus: And if the crime be committed either super altum mare, or in great rivers within the realm, which are looked upon as common highways, there it is piracy. Moor 756.

It has been held, that piracy being an offence by the Civil law only, shall not be included in a statute speaking generally of felonies, as to benefit of clergy, &c. which shall be construed only of those felonies which are such by our law; as those piracies are which are committed in a port or creek, within the body of a county. 2 Hawk. P. C. 345.

If a ship be riding at anchor at sea, and the mariners part in their ship boat, and the rest on shore, so that none are left in the ship; and a pirate attack her, and commits a robbery, it is piracy. 14 Ed. 3. And where a pirate assaults a ship, and only takes away some of the men, in order to sell them for slaves; this is piracy: And if a pirate make an attack on a ship, and the master for the redemption is compelled to give his oath to pay a certain sum of money, tho' there be no taking, the same is piracy by the Marine law; but by the Common law there must be an actual taking, as in case of robbery on the highway. Lex Mercat. 185. But the taking by a ship at sea, in great necessity, of victuals, cables, ropes, &c. out of another ship, is no piracy; if that other ship can spare them, and paying or giving security therefore. Ibid. 183.

A pirate takes goods upon the sea, and sells them, the property is not altered, no more than if a thief on land had stolen and sold them. 27 Ed. 3. cap. 13. Godb. 193. Yet by the laws of England, if a man commit piracy upon the subjects of any other prince, and brings the goods into England and sells them in a market-over, the same shall be binding, and the owners be concluded. Hob. 79.

When goods are taken by a pirate, and afterwards the pirate making an attack upon another ship, is conquered and taken by the other, by the law marine the admiral may make restitution of the goods to the owners, if they are fellow subjects of the captor's, or belong to any state in amity with his sovereign, on paying the costs and charges, and making the captor an equitable consideration for his service. Lex Mercat. 184. If a pirate at sea assault a ship, and in the engagement kills a person in the other ship, by the Common law all the persons on board board the pirate ship are principals in the murder, altho' none enter the other ship; but by the Marine law, they who give the wound only shall be principals, and the rest accessories, if the parties can be known. Telv. 135. It has been holden, that there cannot be an accessory upon the sea, such accessory may be punished by the Civil law before the Lord Admiral: And it was made a doubt, whether an accessory at land to a felony at sea, was triable by the admiral, within the purview of 28 Hen. 8. Tho' this is settled by 11 & 12 W. 3. which provides that accessories to piracy, before or after, shall be inquired of, tried and adjudged according to the said statute. 2 Hawk. 222.

In case the subjects of a prince in enmity with the crown of England, enter themselves sailors on board an English pirate, and a robbery is committed by them, who are afterwards taken; it is felony in the English, but not in the strangers: But in ancient times it was petit treason in the English, and felony in the strangers: And if any Englishman commits piracy upon the subjects of any prince or state in amity with England, they are within the stat. 28 H. 8. If the subjects of any nation or kingdom in amity with England shall commit a piracy on the ships or goods of the English, the same is felony, and punishable by this statute: And piracy committed by the subjects of France, or any other country in friendship with us, upon the British seas, is properly punishable by the crown of England only. Lex Mercat. 186, 187.

A piracy is attempted on the ocean, if the pirates are overcome, the takers may immediately inflict a punishment, by hanging them up at the main-yard end; tho' this is understood where no legal judgment may be obtained; hence if a ship on a voyage to any part of America, or the plantations there, on a discovery of those parts; is attacked by a pirate, but in the attempt the pirate is overcome; the pirates may be forthwith executed, without any solemnity of condemnation, by the Marine law. Ibid. 184.

By the antient Common law, piracy, if committed by a subject, was held to be a species of treason, being contrary to his natural allegiance; and by an alien to be felony only: But now, since the statute of treasons, 25 Ed. 3. c. 2. it is held to be only felony in a subject. 3 Inst. 113.

Formerly it was only cognizable by the admiralty courts, which proceed by the rules of the Civil law. But, it being inconsistent with the liberties of the nation, that any man's life should be taken away, unless by the judgment of his peers, or the Common law of the land, the statute 28 Hen. 8. c. 15. established a new jurisdiction for this purpose; which proceeds according to the course of the Common law. Black. Com. 4 V. 71.

By stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 15. all robberies committed by pirates, shall be inquired of, heard and determined in any county of England, by the King's commission, as if the offences had been committed on land; and such commission shall be directed to the Lord Admiral, and other persons, as shall be named by the Lord Chancellor, who shall determine such offences after the common course of the laws of the kingdom used for felonies and robberies, &c. and award judgment and execution as against felons for any felony done on the land; and the offenders shall suffer death, loss of lands and goods, as if they had been attainted of such offence committed on land, &c.

This statute doth not alter the offence of piracy, but leaves it as it was before, viz. Felony only by the Civil law; but giveth a trial according to the Common law, and inflicts death, &c. as if the offenders had been convicted of any felony done upon the land. 3 Inst. 112. H. P. C. 77. And no attainer for this offence corrupts the blood, the statute mentioning only that the offender shall suffer death, loss of lands, &c. as if he were attainted of a felony at Common law; but says not, that the blood shall be corrupted. 3 Inst. 112. Likewise the offender is to be tried on the statute, to forfeit his lands, &c. which are not forfeited by the Civil law. 1 Lill. Abr.

11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7. enacts, That all piracies, committed on the sea, or in any haven, &c. where the admiral hath jurisdiction, may be tried at sea, or on the land, in any of his Majesty's islands, &c. abroad, appointed for that purpose, by commission, under the Great Seal, or seal of the admiralty, directed to such commissioners as the King shall think fit; who may commit the offenders, and call a court of admiralty, consisting of seven persons at least, or for want of seven, any three of the commissioners may call others; and the persons so assembled may proceed according to the course of the admiralty, pass sentence of death, and order execution, &c. And commissions for trial of offences within the Cinque Ports, shall be directed to the warden of the Cinque Ports, and the trial to be by the inhabitants of the ports. And if any natural born subjects or denizens, shall commit piracy against any of his Majesty's subjects at sea under colour of any commission from any foreign prince, they shall be adjudged pirates: If any master of a ship, or seamen give up his ship to pirates, or combine to yield up, or run away with, any ship; or any seaman lay violent hands on his commander, or endeavour a revolt in the ship, he shall be adjudged a pirate, and suffer accordingly; also if any person discover a combination for running away with a ship, he shall be intitled to a reward of 10 l. for every vessel of 100 tons, and 15 l. if above: And all persons who set forth any pirate, or be assisting to those committing piracy; or that conceal such pirates, or receive any vessel or goods piratically taken, shall be deemed accessory to the piracy, and suffer as principals. The 6 Geo. 1. makes the stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7. perpetual.

And by 8 Geo. 1. c. 24. Masters of ships trading with pirates, or furnishing them with stores, &c. and persons corresponding with pirates, are declared guilty of piracy; and shall be tried according to 28 Hen. 8. and 11 & 12 W. 3. and suffer death, forfeit lands, &c. Ships fitted out with design to trade with pirates, and the goods shall be forfeited: And masters of ships, and seamen of ships carrying guns, being attacked by pirates, if they do not defend their ships, shall forfeit their wages, and be imprisoned six months; but seamen wounded in defence of ships against pirates, shall be admitted into Greenwich hospital, &c.

When an English ship shall have been defended by fight against pirates, and any of the officers or seamen be killed or wounded, the judge of the admiralty, or mayor or chief officer of any port, assisted by four merchants, may by process levy a sum not exceeding 2 per cent. of the value of the ship and goods defended, to be distributed among the officers and seamen, or the widows and children of the persons killed. Lex Mercat. 186. Pirates are always excepted in general pardons: And indictment for piracy must alledge the fact to be done UPON THE SEA: and have both the words felonice and piratice, &c.

By 18 Geo. 2. c. 30. All subjects who during any war, shall commit hostilities on the sea against any of his Majesty's subjects by colour of any commission from the enemy, or adhere, or give aid to the enemy upon the sea, may be tried as pirates, in the court of Admiralty, on ship-board or on land, and being convicted shall suffer death, &c. as other pirates, &c. by the stat. 11 W. 3. But persons convicted on this act, shall not be tried for the same crime as for high-treason; but if not tried on this act, may be tried for high-treason on the stat. 28 H. 8. c. 15. Vide Staunf. P. C. 10. 3 Inst. 112. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 369, 370: 1 Hawk. P. C. 98.

In the construction of 28 H. 8. c. 15. the following opinions have been holden:

That it does not alter the nature of the offence, so as to make that, which was before a felony only by the Civil law, now become a felony by the Common law; for the offence must still be alleged as DONE UPON THE SEA, and in no way cognizable by the Common law, but only by virtue of this statute; which, by ordaining that in some respects it shall have the like trial and punishments as are used for felony at Common law, shall not be carried so far as to make it also agree with it in other particulars which are not mentioned; from hence it follows that this offence remains, as before, of a special nature, and that that it shall not be included in a general pardon of all felonies. 3 Inst. 112. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 370. Moor, 756. 3 Inst. 112. Co. Lit. 391.

From the same ground it follows, that no person in respect of this statute be construed to be, or punished as accessaries to piracy before or after, as they might have been, if it had been made felony by the statute, whereby all those would incidentally have been accessaries in the like cases in which they would have been accessaries to a felony at Common law; therefore accessaries to piracy, being neither expressly named in the statute, nor by construction included, remain as they were before, and were triable by the Civil law, if their offences were committed on the sea; but on the land, by no law, until 11 Ed. 12 W. 3. c. 7. for 2 Ed. 6. c. 24. which provides against accessaries in one county to a felony in another, extends not to accessaries to an offence committed in no county, but on the sea; but by 11 Ed. 12 W. 3. they are triable in like manner as the principals are by 28 H. 8. 3 Inst. 112. 1 Hawk. P. C. 99.

From the same ground it follows that an attainder for this offence corrupts not the blood, for tho' the statute says, that the offender shall suffer such pains of death, &c. as if he were attainted of a felony at Common law, yet it says not, that the blood shall be corrupted. 3 Inst. 112. 1 Hawk. P. C. 99.

Yet it has been resolved, that an offender standing mute on an arraignment, by force of this statute, shall have judgment of paine fort & dure; for the words of the statute are, that a commission shall be directed, &c. to hear and determine such offences after the common course of the laws of the land. 3 Inst. 114. Dyer 241. pl. 49. 308. pl. 73.

It hath been holden, that the indictment for this offence must allege the fact to be done at sea, and must have the words felonice and piratice; and that no offence is punishable by virtue of this act as piracy, which would not have been felony if done on the land, consequently taking an enemy's ship, by an enemy is not within the statute. 3 Inst. 112. 1 Roll. Rep. 175. 1 Hawk. P. C. 100.

It is agreed, that this statute extends not to offences done in creeks or ports within the body of a county, because they are and always were, cognizable by the Common law. Moor 756. 1 Roll. Rep. 175. 1 Hawk. P. C. 100.

And place is considerable in pleadings, in some cases: Where the law requires a thing to be set down in a certain place, the party must in his pleadings say, it was done there. Co. Litt. 282. When one thing comes in the place of another, it shall be said to be of the same nature; as in case of an exchange, &c. Shep. Epit. 700. See Local.

Placita, Pleas, or pleadings, or debates and trials at law. Placita is a word often mentioned in our histories, and law books: At first it signified the publick assemblies of all degrees of men where the King presided, and they usually consulted upon the great affairs of the kingdom, and these were called generalia placita, because generalitas universorum majorum tam clericorum quam laicorum ibidem conveniebat: This was the custom in France, as well as here, as we are told by Bertinian, in his Annals of France, in the year 767. Some of our historians, as Simeon of Durham, and others, who wrote above 300 years afterwards, tells us, that those assemblies were held in the open fields: and that the placita generalia, and curia regis, were what we now call a parliament: It is true, the lords courts were so called, viz. Placita generalia, but often curiæ generales, because all their tenants and vassals were bound to appear there.

We also meet with placitum nominatum, i. e. the day appointed for a criminal to appear and plead, and make his defence. Leg. H. 1. cap. 29. 46, 50. Placitum fractum, i. e. when the day is past. Leg. H. 1. cap. 59. Lord Coke tells us, that the word is derived from placendo, quia bene placitare super omnia placet: this seems to be a very fanciful derivation of the word: it seems rather to be derived from the German plats, or from the Latin plateis, i. e. fields or streets where these assemblies or courts were first held. But this word placita did sometimes signify penalties, fines, mulcts, or emendations, according to Gervase of Tilbury, or the Black Book in the Exchequer, lib. 2. tit. 13. Placita autem dicimus pœnas pecuniarias in quas incidunt delinquentes. So in the laws of Hen. 1. cap. 12, 13. Hence the old rule of custom, Comes, habet tertium denarium placitorum, is to be thus understood; the Earl of the county shall have the third part of the money due upon mulcts, fines, and amerçements imposed in the assises and county courts. Corwell.

Placitare, i. e. Litigare & causas agere, to plead: And the manner of pleading before the Conquest was, Coram aldermannis & proceribus, & coram hundredariis, &c. MS. in B. bl. Cotton.

Placitator, A pleader: Ralf Flambard is recorded to be totius regni placitor. Temp. W. 2. See supra, the last clause of placita.

Plaint, (Fr. plainte, Lat. querela) Is the exhibiting any action, in writing; and the party making his plaint is called the plaintiff. Kitch. 231. A plaint in an inferior court is the entry of an action, after this manner: A. B. complains, of C. D. of a plea of trespass, &c. and there are pledges of prosecuting, that is to say, John Doe and Richard Roe.

The first process in an inferior court is a plaint, which is in the nature of an original writ, because therein is briefly set forth the plaintiff's cause of action; and on this plaint there may issue a poena, till the return of a nihil, upon which a capias will lie against the body of the defendant. 2 Lill. Abr. 294.

Where a plaint is levied in an inferior court, the defendant must be first distrained for non-appearance, by something of small value; then if he doth not appear, a farther distress is to be taken to a greater value, and so on; if all his goods are distrained on the first distress, attachment may be issued out of B. R. against the officers, &c. Ibid. A plaintiff in an assise may abridge his plaint of any part whereupon a bar is pleaded. 21 Hen. 8. c. 3. See County Courts. And Black. Com. 3 V. 273.

Plaint

Plaint in a superior court, is said to be the cause for which the plaintiff complains against the defendant; and for which he obtains the King's writ: For as the King denies his writ to none, if there be cause to grant it; so he grants not his writ to any, without there be cause alleged for it. 2 Litt. 294.

Planchia, A plank of wood. Corwell.

Plasterers, Not to exercise the art of a painter in London. 1 Jac. 1. c. 20.

Plantation, (Plantatio, Colonia) Is a place where people are sent to dwell; or a company of people transplanted from one place to another, with an allowance of land for their tillage. Litt. Dict.

All wastes, which the natives in any country make no use of, nor can receive any damage by their being in the hands of others, may lawfully be possessed by planters: If a nation or people be expelled out of their own land, they may seek void places in some other country, and there may justly plant; and the immediate possessing such plantations creates a right against all persons but he who hath empire there. Lex Mercat. 156. And where persons having arrived in any territories and planted there, if before they can reap the fruits of their labour, the necessities of human life are wanting, by the laws of nature they may force a subsistence from a neighbour planter; because a subsistence belongs to every man unless he has merited to lose the life he seeks to preserve. Ibid.

Our plantations abroad are chiefly islands in America, over which there are particular governors; and the islands of J. maica and Barbadoes, with some others, are very populous, and much frequented by unfortunate persons, who have so great advantages in trade, that by their industry, their present misfortune is often attended with a future happiness, by accumulating wealth from the product of these foreign colonies. Geograph. Epitom. 228.

The English Plantations contain Jamaica, Barbadoes, Virginia, Maryland, New England, New-York, Carolina, Bermudas, and the Leeward Islands, &c. And there is lately a settlement in America much encouraged, called Georgia, under the management of trustees, &c. The plantation Islands being got by conquest, or by the King's subjects going in search of some prize, and planting themselves there, the King is not restrained by the laws of England to govern them by any particular laws, but may govern them by what law he will: but it has been adjudged, That the laws and customs by which the people of any island or plantation were governed before the conquest thereof, bind them until new laws are given; for there is a necessity that the former shall be in force till the new are obtained, and even then some of their old customs may remain, as they do in Barbadoes, &c. If an uninhabited country be newly found out by English subjects, all the laws of the kingdom of England are immediately in force there. 2 Salk. 411. 3 Mod. 159. 4 Mod. 225, 226. See Black. Com. 1 V. 106. 4 V. 245.

Plate, Hoy, or small water vessel. 13 Eliz. cap. 15. A tax laid on persons possessed of silver plate. 29 Geo. 2. c. 14.

Also vessels, &c. of gold and silver are called plate, as well in law, as in trade.

By 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 19. f. 3. Publick houses were prohibited to use plate. After this part of the act had lain dormant many years, a set of informers suddenly arose, and brought a number of actions for the penalties, forfeited by virtue of the act, whereupon many publicans raised a sum of money to pay the expence of a bill to repeal this clause, and obtained an act for the repeal, which is the 9 Geo. 3. c. 21. f. 1. See Table to the Statutes tit. Gold.

Playhouse, Playhouses were originally instituted with a design of recommending virtue and exposing vice and folly; therefore are not in their own nature nuisances: but it hath been holden, that a common playhouse may be a nuisance, if it draw together great numbers of coaches, &c. as prove generally inconvenient to the places adjacent. 5 Mod. 142.

If any persons in plays, &c. jestingly or profanely use the name of God, they forfeit 10 l. 1 Jac. 1. c. 21.

And players speaking any thing in derogation of religion, &c. are liable to forfeitures and imprisonment. 1 Eliz. Also acting plays or interludes on a Sunday, is subject to penalties, by 1 Car. 1. cap. 1.

No person shall act any new play, or addition to an old one, &c. unless a true copy thereof, signed by the master of the playhouse, be sent to the Lord Chamberlain fourteen days before acted; who may prohibit the representing any stage play: And persons acting contrary to such prohibition, forfeit 50 l. and their licences, &c. Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 28. And by this statute, no licence is to be given to act plays, but in the city and liberties of Westminster, or places of his Majesty's residence. Ibid. See Nuisance.

Plea, (Placitum) Is that which either party alleges for himself in court, in a cause there depending to be tried:

Pleading in a large sense, contains all the matters which come after the declaration, till issue is joined; but is commonly taken for the defendant's answer to the declaration.

Pleas are divided into pleas of the crown, and common pleas; pleas of the crown are all suits in the King's name, for offences committed against his crown and dignity, and also against the peace. Common pleas are those that are agitated between common persons, in civil cases: And pleas may be further divided into as many branches as action; for they signify all one. S. P. C. cap. 1. 4 Inst. 10.

A plea to the action is that which goes to the merits of the cause or action; and is general to the declaration, or a special plea: A general plea in debt or contract, is He owes nothing: In debt on bond, 'Tis not his deed, or He paid it at the day; in action of the case upon a promise, He did not promise; in trespass upon the case, Not guilty; in covenant, performance of covenants, &c.

A special plea contains the matter at large, concluding to the declaration or action; and special pleas are many, as by duress and per minas, and in justification, that in assault and battery, the plaintiff struck the first blow, &c. In waste, on nul waste pleaded, the defendant cannot plead justifiable waste; but he may give in evidence, lightning, enemies, &c. to prove it to be no waste: He is to confess the fact, and plead specially in these cases. Finch 362, 378. 1 Inst. 282, 372.

Special pleas in answer to the declaration, are pleas in bar, or in abatement; and every plea must be pleaded either in bar to the action, or in abatement of the writ upon which the action is framed, or it is but a discourse, and not a plea.

Special pleas are drawn up in form, setting forth the matter pleaded, &c. and must be signed by counsel, or they will not be received: A foreign plea is to be ingrossed in parchment, and signed by counsel, and be put in, on the oath of defendant, that the plea is true. Practif. Attorn. Edit. 1. pag. 80. And when a defendant hath pleaded, the plaintiff answers the defendant's plea, which is called a replication; and the defendant answers the replication, by rejoinder; which the plaintiff may answer by surrejoinder; and sometimes, (tho' seldom,) pleadings come to rebutter; in answer to surrejoinder; and surrebutter. 1 Inst. 303.

The order of pleading.

In good order of pleading, a person ought to plead,

- 1st, To the jurisdiction of the court.
- 2dly, To the person of the plaintiff, and next of the defendant.
- 3dly, To the writ.
- 4thly, To the action of the writ.
- 5thly, To the count or declaration.
- 6thly, To the action itself, in bar thereof:

A plea to the jurisdiction is called a foreign plea, because it alleges that the matter ought to be tried in another court, &c.

Pleas to the person, have been formerly six, viz. villeinage, outlawry, excommunication, the party an alien, 8 O out out of protection, and professed in religion; but the last is now no plea.

The plea to the writ, &c. is for variance between the writ and record, death of parties, misnomer, jointenancy, &c. and may be to the writ and bill, or count together.

Pleas to the count or declaration, are variance between the writ and count, specialty or record, incertainty, &c. and all these are properly pleas in abatement.

Plea to the action of the writ is where one pleadeth such matter which sheweth the plaintiff had no cause to have the writ brought. And a plea in bar to the action itself, is when defendant pleadeth a plea which is sufficient to overthrow the action. Kitch. 95. Litt. 196. Pleas in bar, such as a release, the statute of limitations, agreement with satisfaction, &c. destroy the plaintiff's action for ever: but pleas in abatement are temporary and dilatory, and do not destroy the action, only stop the cause for a while, till the defect is removed; as where there is some fault in the writ or declaration, misnomer of the defendant, where the plaintiff is excommunicate, &c. A plea to the jurisdiction, of misnomer, or any other plea in abatement, cannot be pleaded after an imparlance; tho' a plea in bar may, because that goes to destroy the action. 2 Lutw. 1174.

Pleas in bar may come after a continuance, or general imparlance; but if such plea be first pleaded, the defendant shall not be admitted afterwards to plead in abatement of the writ, which is allowed to be good by pleading in bar to the action: yet matter of record may be shewn in arrest of judgment, and thereby the writ be abated. Hob. 280, 281.

By imparlance a writ or bill is admitted to be good, so that after it, plea in abatement ought not to be received; but if it be accepted, and the plaintiff doth demur to it, the demurrer is good: After defendant hath pleaded in abatement, and before he pleads directly in bar, he may demur to the declaration, as he may where he is advised that the declaration is insufficient, &c. Pract. Solic. 235, 236.

It has been resolv'd, That where a plea is in abatement, if it be of necessity that the defendant must disclose matter of bar, he shall have his election to take it either by way of bar, or abatement. 2 Mod. 65. If defendant can have no advantage by pleading in abatement, or by demurring, he may afterwards plead in bar; and before he pleads any special matter in bar, he may plead in general, viz. A release or discharge; acceptance of other things; tender of amends; concord or accord; arbitrament; auterfoits bar by former judgment; the statute of limitation; disability of plaintiff; privilege of defendant, or other matter; for several matters pleadable in abatement, may be pleaded in bar. Pract. Attorn. 1 Edit. 82. Also he may plead another action depending of the same nature, for the same thing, &c. and if a person mistaking his first action, bring another action without discontinuing the first, this plea may be pleaded. 1 Salk. 392.

There is likewise a plea puis darrein continuance, where defendant hath pleaded a plea, and before trial there happens some new matter, which will avoid the action: It may be pleaded after issue joined, at any time before verdict; but after verdict, and before day in bank, there is no day to plead it; so that the remedy is by audita querela. Cro. Jac. 646.

A defendant with leave, may plead several matters; but if any such matter be excepted to, and found insufficient, costs shall be given: And no dilatory plea shall be allowed in any court of record, unless the truth of it be proved by affidavit; or some probable matter be shewn. 4 Ed. 5 Ann. cap. 16.

When a declaration, or bar, are defective in circumstances of time, place, &c. this may be helped by the pleading of the adverse party to it; but not if it be insufficient in matter. 2 Ventr. 222. 1 Danv. Abr. 156. If defendant pleads a dilatory and frivolous plea, to hinder plaintiff from going to trial; the court, on motion, will order defendant to plead such a plea as he will stand to, or accept of a demurrer to his plea, on arguing whereof, if the plea be not good, the court will not after permit him to amend it; and when a dilatory plea in abatement is over-ruled, there shall be a respondeas ouster, except an issue be joined on it. 6 Mod. 102. And if a plea in bar, is over-ruled, judgment shall be given against defendant. Lutw. 42.

Where it is doubtful between the parties, whether a plea be good or not, it cannot be determined by the court on motion, but there ought to be a demurrer to the plea; and on arguing thereof, the court will judge of the plea, whether good or bad: And no advantage can be had of double pleading, without special demurrer. 2 Lill. Abr. 310. Lutw. 422. But tho' the court is to judge of pleading, they will not direct any person how to plead, notwithstanding the matter be difficult; for the parties must plead at their peril, and counsel are to advise, &c.

If plaintiff's attorney will consent, defendant may waive his plea pleaded, without moving the court; and if he will not consent, it cannot be done without moving the court. Trin. 1651. A defendant may waive his special plea, and plead the general issue, if there be no joinder in demurrer. 2 Salk. The defendant, before joinder in demurrer, may amend his plea; and so after joinder in demurrer, before argued: And where defendant has demurred, and the plaintiff joined; the court will often allow him to withdraw his demurrer, and plead to the action, if plaintiff hath not been put by a trial. Practif. Solic. 303.

Defendant had leave to plead de novo in four days, within which time he ought to have pleaded in chief; but instead of that, he pleaded an outlawry of the plaintiff, &c. and thereupon plaintiff signed judgment for want of a good plea; but on payment of costs, &c. and pleading to issue immediately, judgment was set aside. Mod. Ca. in L. and E. 289.

A plea may be amended, if it be but in paper, and not entered, paying costs: If after the defendant hath pleaded, the plaintiff alters his declaration, the defendant may alter his plea. 2 Lill. 322. Pleas, &c. in English, may be amended in paper, or on record, and even after judgment, on payment of costs, &c. by Stat. 4 Geo. 2. Falshood in a plea, if not hurtful to plaintiff, nor beneficial to defendant, doth no injury; as it doth where detrimental to plaintiff, &c. Ibid. 297. Tho' if an attorney pleads a false plea by deceit, it is against his oath, and he may be fined. 1 Salk. 515.

Concerning pleas in general.

All pleas are to be succinct, without unnecessary repetitions, and be direct and pertinent to the case, not by way of argument or rehearsal; and the plea of every man shall be taken most strongly against himself. 2 Lill. 304. The plea must directly answer the charge in the declaration, or it will not be good. 1 Danv. Abr. 235. If it doth not answer all the matter contained in the declaration, the plaintiff shall have judgment, as for want of a plea. 1 Lew. 16.

Defendant pleads that he did not receive 80 l. but doth not say or any part thereof; and the plea was adjudged ill, for he might receive 79 l. and yet not the whole, &c. 2 Mod. 146.

In pleading a tender, at the putting in of the plea, the money is to be brought into court, or the plea will not be accepted, but the plaintiff shall sign judgment. 2 Lill. Abr. 308. But when judgment in ejectment is signed for want of a plea, if possession be not delivered, a judge before the assizes may compel plaintiff to accept a plea. 2 Salk. 516.

If a thing is shewed in pleading, and it is not afterwards traversed or averred specially to the contrary, it will be taken to be confessed: Tho' the confession of one defendant in his plea, shall not prejudice another. Plowd. 48. Hob. 64. A release pleaded to an action of trespass, without shewing when it was made, shall be taken before the trespass done: And a plea of discharge or giving notice, &c. must shew how given. 10 Rep. 40. Plowd. 128. Dyer 41.

Every man must plead such plea as is proper; but that need not be pleaded on one side, which will come properly on the other. Hob. 3, 78, 162.

Pleadings which amount to no more than the general issue, are not to be allowed, but the general issue shall be entered; and where defendant pleads the general issue, he he ought to plead, so that the whole matter in question may be tried. 2 Lill. 302. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1246. 1 Salk. 394.

If defendant is not constrained to plead a special plea, he may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence: And in many cases general pleadings are permitted, to avoid tediousness and multiplicity, and the particular shall come on the other side; as in case of a condition to perform covenants; but where a thing rests in a man's own notice, he must plead it particularly. 1 Inst. 303. 8 Rep. 133. 2 Danv. Abr. 249. 2 Nelf. 1249.

If a party pleading derives an estate to another, under which he doth not claim any thing, there general pleading is sufficient, because he hath no means to know another man's title; but 'tis otherwise where he himself claims under it. Cartb. 209.

General estates in fee-simple may be generally alledged: Estates in tail, and particular estates, must be shewed. A plea of conveyance of lands, &c. inter alia, where the conveyance contains more than relates to the matter of the plea, is good. 1 Roll. Rep. 72.

Bonds and deeds are to be pleaded with a proferet hic in curia, &c. Ibid. 1261.

If one comes in by act of law, the general allegation will suffice; and things spiritual, or where the plea consists of matter infinite, may be generally pleaded: All necessary circumstances implied by law, need not be expressed in the plea; but when any special or substantial matter is alledged, it shall be specially answered; so matters of record, where they are the foundation of the suit, or substance of the plea. 10 Rep. 94. 3 Cro. 749. Plowd. 65.

That which is alledged by way of inducement to the substance of the matter, need not be certainly alledged, as the substance itself. Plowd. 81. He who pleads in the negative, is not bound to plead so exactly as he who pleads in the affirmative: And that which a man cannot have certain knowledge of, he is not bound certainly to plead. Plowd. 33, 80, 126, 129.

Every affirmative in pleading, ought to be answered with an express negative; and if a person be named to be dwelling at A. 'tis no plea to say, that he is an inhabitant at some other place; unless it conclude in the negative, and not at A. 1 Inst. 126. 19 H. 6. 1.

It is a rule in pleading, That when a man pleads special matter, and concludes generally, he thereby waives the special matter. Farrell. Rep. 53. Pleas that are too general are not good. 1 Lutw. 239. 2 Salk. 521. And every plea ought to be single and certain; and not double, or contain a multitude of distinct matter to one and the same thing, whereto several answers are required, which will not be allowed; nor where defendant pleads two matters, each being a sufficient bar to the action, unless one depends on the other, or defendant cannot come at the one, without shewing the other, when it is good. 11 Rep. 52. 1 Vent. 48, 272. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1254.

A double plea will not be good; for where there is double matter, no certain issue can be taken: But a plea is not double which contains divers matters, if it would not have answered the whole declaration without alledging all those matters in it, and which are necessary in defendant's just defence. 2 Lill. Abr. 300.

Where the matter is indifferent to be well or ill, and the party pleads over, the court will intend it well, Mod. Caf. 136. If there be a repugnancy in pleading, it is error. 2 And. 182. Jenk. Cent. 21. And a man shall not take advantage of his own wrong, by pleading, &c. Cro. Jac. 588. A man cannot plead any thing afterwards which he might have pleaded at first. Ibid. 318. Tho' surplusage shall never make the plea vicious, but where it is contrary to the matter before. Raym. 8.

When a matter is expressly pleaded by one party in the affirmative, which is expressly denied by the other party, the next thing is to be an issue in order to trial, that they may not plead in infinitum. Raym. 199.

If a plea to the writ on issue joined, be found for defendant, the writ shall abate: And if to the person, action, or jurisdiction, it be found for plaintiff, he shall recover the thing in demand. Jenk. Cent. 306.

The law requires in every plea two things, viz. matter sufficient; and that it be express'd according to the form of the law. Hob. 164. But it is said a man is not bound to one form of pleading, so he plead the substance of the matter. Plowd. 435.

The old way of pleading a record was to begin at the original, and not omit any continuance, &c. And there is a diversity where a judgment is several, and when 'tis entire; for if forty acres of land are recovered, here a plea of recovery of twenty acres is ill; but it should be pleaded of the forty acres, whercof twenty are parcel. Comber. 253.

All pleas are to be in English, and not in Latin: Each plea is to have its proper conclusion; and regularly all pleas that are affirmative conclude, And this he is ready to verify, &c. A plea in abatement begins, That the defendant ought not to answer the bill, &c. and concludes to the declaration thus: Whereupon he prays judgment of the bill, or declaration aforesaid; and that the bill be quashed, &c. In a plea in bar, the defendant in the beginning says, That the plaintiff ought not to have or maintain his action against him; and concludes to the action, viz. He prays judgment if the plaintiff ought to have or maintain his action against him, &c. A plea of a record ought to conclude, And this he is ready to verify by the record, &c. Pract. Solic. 236. 2 Nelf. 1269. 'Tis said that the conclusion makes the plea; for if it begins in bar, and concludes in abatement, it is a plea in abatement. Ld. Raym. 337.

The practice of the courts, respecting pleading.

The court never orders a defendant to plead peremptorily, till all the rules are out: And where the plaintiff amends and give an imparlance, there shall be new rules given to plead, but not if there is no imparlance. 2 Salk. 517.

In the court of C. B. if defendant doth not plead on rule to answer, before the rule is expired, the plaintiff's attorney may afterwards enter up judgment by nil dicit. Pract. Solic. 303.

If a copy of the declaration be delivered to defendant's attorney before the essoyn day of the term, he may be compelled to plead that term, or judgment shall be entered against him.

By the usual course, defendant is to answer the same term in which he appears, if it be an issuable term, and the writ is returnable at the beginning thereof; but generally defendant hath time to plead till the next term. Pract. Attorn. Edit. 1.

By an order of court, reciting that by the former practice, defendants had usually been allowed eight days time to plead; it was ordered, that four days only should be allowed such defendants from the time of giving any rules. Ord. Trin. 1727. And on process returnable the first or second returns of terms; defendant is to plead in four days, if he lives within twenty miles of London, and eight days if farther off; after delivery of the declaration, with notice to plead, &c. or on default, plaintiff may sign judgment. Ord. Trin. 5 Geo. 1.

On there being special pleadings in any action, the secondary will give rules to reply; and if defendant come to issue, or there be a demurrer, the pleas are to be given to the clerk of the papers, who gives rule for the defendant to rejoin, &c.

Special pleas are left with one of the clerks of the papers, and the plaintiff's attorney is to take a copy thereof from him, for which he pays 6 d. per sheet, and put in his replication; and then he carries the declaration to him, who will make up the paper-book, and write a rule on the side: this paper-book is to be delivered to defendant's attorney, and he must pay for entering his warrant of attorney, and 10 d. a folio for his pleading, &c. And if defendant doth not receive the paper-book, and return it to the attorney for the plaintiff, on his calling for it to be entered in four days; then a non prof. may be entered for want of a plea. See 6 Mod. 22.

Pleas in criminal cases. One indicted of felony, &c. ought not to be allowed to plead to the indictment, till he he holds up his hand at the bar; which is in nature of an appearance, &c. A prisoner on his arraignment may plead the general issue, or in abatement, &c. or demur to the indictment; and he may plead in bar, auterfoits acquit, auterfoits convict before judgment, auterfoits attain, &c. viz. That he was heretofore acquitted, convicted, or attainted of the same felony. H. P. C. 228. 3 Inst. 213, 214. A criminal may also plead a pardon, or benefit of clergy; tho' this last is not usually pleaded until he has otherwise pleaded before. Pleadings. Are all the sayings of the parties to the suit after the count or declaration, to wit, whatever is contained in the bar, replication and rejoinder, and not in the count itself; therefore defaults in the matter of the count are not comprized within mis-pleading, or insufficient pleading, nor are remedied by the statute of jeofails, 32 H. 8. but only the mis-pleading, or insufficient pleading committed in the bar, replication and rejoinder; but those are now remedied also by 18 Eliz. cap. 13. Cowell.

Pleading in general, signifies the allegations of parties to suits when they are put into a proper and legal form; and are distinguished, in respect to the parties who plead them, by the names of bars, replications, rejoinders, sur-rejoinders, rebutters, surrebutters, &c. and tho' the matter in the declaration or count does not properly come under the name of pleading, yet being often comprehended in the extended sense of the word, it is generally considered under this head. 4 New Abr. 1.

Pleading, in strictness, is no more than setting forth that fact, which in law shews the justice of the demand made by the plaintiff, or the discharge and defence made by defendant; and herein no greater certainty is required than is sufficient to bring on a trial without inveigling judge or jury; and it seems, that originally pleadings were so formed, and were very plain and concise; but in progress of time pleaders and judges became too curious in them, so that the art of pleading, which in its use and design was only to render the fact intelligible, and to bring the matter to judgment with convenient certainty, began to degenerate from its primitive simplicity and true use, and end in nicety and curiosity, which how it hath improved therein in latter times, the length of the pleadings, the many unnecessary repetitions, and the many miscarriages of causes upon small and trivial objections, sufficiently testify. 4 New Abr. 1.

Pleas were anciently ore tenus, and afterwards minuted down by the prothonotaries, and entred of record in the Latin tongue, that being a dead language, and least subject to variation, to remain as monuments and precedents of the law; that the pleading should be in Latin is expressly enacted by the 36 Ed. 3. c. 15. which statute was made to abolish a law introduced by William the Conqueror, which ordained, that the pleadings in the courts of justice should be in French. 4 New Abr. 1. 10 Co. 132.

But now by 4 Geo. 2. c. 26. it is enacted, "That all proceedings in courts of justice shall be in English, and be written in such common hand as acts of parliament are usually ingrossed in, the lines and words to be written at least as close as the said acts usually are, and not abbreviated; and all persons offending against this act forfeit 50*l.* to any person who will sue."

But by 6 Geo. 2. c. 14. it is provided, "That the above penalty shall not be extended to the expressing the names of writs, or technical words in the same language, as hath been used, nor to abbreviations used in the English language."

In pleading there are several general rules laid down in our books; as, that good matter must be pleaded in right form, apt time and due order, but that which is only inducement or conveyance to the substance, need not be so certainly alledged, as that which is the git of the plea. Co. Lit. 303. Plow. 65, 81. Cro. Jac. 362.

That which is apparent, and appears from a necessary implication in the record, need not be averred. Co. Litt. 303. 7 Co. 40.

That every man's plea shall be taken most strongly against himself, as every body is presumed to make the most of his own case. Dyer 16. Co. Litt. 303. Hob. 234. Latch 186.

That what the parties have agreed in pleading shall be admitted, tho' the jury find otherwise. 2 Mod. 5.

That when a man will recover a thing from another, it is not enough for him to destroy such person's title, but he must prove his own a better, according to the rule, melior est conditio possidentis. Vaugh. 58, 60.

That every man shall plead such pleas as are proper, according to the quality of his case, estate or interest. Co. Lit. 285, 303.

That the law requires in every plea, that it be in matter sufficient, and that it be deduced and expressed according to the forms of law; and if either be wanting, it is cause of demurrer. Hob. 164.

That every plea in bar, being a confession and avoidance of the plaintiff's action, must be substantive and certain, with an avoidance of plaintiff's demand, which he may traverse, and thereon go to issue, because the declaration stands confessed, as far as it is not avoided by defendant. Dyer 66. Godb. 253. 1 Leon. 78.

That if a count, avowry (which is in nature of a count) replication, &c. want form, or omit circumstance of time, place, &c. they may be made good by the replication, and the replication by the rejoinder, &c. 7 Co. 25. a. 8 Co. 120. b. Co. Lit. 303.

That all pleas must be alledged directly, and not by way of rehearsal; nor is it sufficient, that what ought to be expressly pleaded, may be deduced by argument from what is pleaded. Co. Lit. 303.

That in matters triable by law, all things shewable ought to be specially alledged in order to have a convenient trial; but in matters spiritual, the law is otherwise, because there is no peril in the trial, therefore if certain enough to ground a certificate, it is sufficient. 3 Leon. 300.

That where one is authorized to do a thing by Common law, statute, custom, grant or commission, he ought to shew, that he hath pursued the substance of it accordingly. Co. Lit. 303.

That general estates in fee-simple may be generally alledged; as that J. S. was seised in fee; but the commencement of particular estates must be shewed, because they could not originally commence without a conveyance, which must be shewed, unless they be alledged by way of inducement only. Co. Lit. 121. a. 303.

Pleas of the sword, Placita ad gladium. Ranulph the third Earl of Chester, in the second year of Henry the Third, granted to his barons of Chester an ample charter of liberties, Exceptis placitis ad gladium meum pertinentibus. Rot. Pat. in archiepis Regis infra castellum Cestrie. 3 E. 4. m. 9. The reason was, because William the Conqueror gave the earldom of Chester to his kinsman Hugh, commonly called Lupus, ancestor to this Earl Ranulph, Tenera ita libere per gladium, sicut ipse Rex Willielmus tenuit Angliam per coronam. And consonant thereto in all indictments for felony, murder, &c. in that county palatine, the form was anciently, Contra pacem Domini comitis, gladium & dignitates suas, or Contra dignitatem gladii Cestrie. These were the pleas of the dignity of the Earl of Chester. Sir Peter Leicester's Hist. Antiq. 164. Cowell.

Plebana, Plebanalis ecclesia, A mother church, which has one or more subordinate chapels. Cowell.

Plebanus, A rural dean, because the deaneries were commonly affixed to the plebania, or chief mother church within such a district, at first commonly of ten parishes: but it is inferred from divers authorities, that plebanus was not the usual title of every rural dean; but only of such a parish priest in a large mother church, exempt from the jurisdiction of the ordinary, who had the authority of a rural dean committed to him by the archbishop, to whom the church was immediately subject. Whartoni Angl. Sacr. Pa. 1. 569. Reg. Eccl. Christi. Cantuar. MS.

Plebiscitum, A law or statute made by the joint consent of the people or commons without the senate. Litt. Dist. See Black. Com. 1 V. 80.

Pledge, (plegius, may be derived from the Fr. pleige, fulgur) As pleiger auctum, i. side jure pro aliquo, to be surety for a person; in the same signification is plegius used by Glanvil, lib. 10. ca. 5. and plegiatio for the act of suretiship in the interpreter of the Grand Customary of Normandy, c. 60. Plegii dicuntur personae, quae se obligant ad hoc, ad quod qui eos mittit, tenebatur; and in the same book, c. 89, 90. plegiatio is used in the same sense with Glanville; so alvi plegii are used for plegii. Pupil. Oculi, part 5. c. 22. Charta de Foresta. This word plegius is used also for frankpledge sometimes, as in the end of William the Conqueror's laws, set out by Lanbard, in his Archaeologia. 175. in these words: Omnis homo qui voluerit se teneri pro libero, sit in plegio ut plegius cum habeat ad justitiam, si quid offenderit, &c. and these are called capital pledges. Kitchin, 10. See 4 Inst. 180.

When writs were delivered to the sheriff to be by him returned into C. B. he was obliged, before the return, to take pledges of prosecution, which when the fines and amercements were considerable, were real and responsible persons, and answerable for those amercements. But they being now so inconsiderable, there are only formal pledges entered, viz. John Doe and Richard Roe. But there is a difference in debt and in trespass; for in trespass the attachment of the goods is the first process, and because the defendant is thereby hurt, therefore the writ commands the sheriff to take pledges before he executes the process. But in debt they begin with a summons, and so the defendant is not hurt in the first instance, therefore there is no command in the writ to the sheriff to take pledges, but unless he does, there is not a sufficient authority from the return to warrant further process, unless pledges are put in above, as in B. R. they always do on the bill. The reason why pledges were not taken in Chancery, but committed to the sheriff, was, that he living in the county was supposed to know who were sufficient security, and being to levy the amercement afterward, they were to take ample security for them. G. Hist. of C. B. 6, 7.

The plaintiff's pledges that he shall prosecute his suit may be entered at any time pending the action; and the putting in of pledges is now a meer formal thing; yet if the pledges be not entered, it is error, because the law directs plaintiff to find pledges. Trin. 22 Car. B. R. In the return of a venire facias, the omission of returning the pledges is but matter of form, and not like to where pledges are omitted on an original writ; wherefore it has been adjudged to be helped by the statute of Joefails. 2 Nel. Abr. 944.

Want of pledges hath been held to be substance; but it is aided by the statute 4 & 5 Ann. unless particularly set forth for cause, on a demurrer. 2 Lill. 39. 2 Lill. Abr. 329. The pledges, John Doe, &c. are entered by defendants on his being arrested, and giving common bail for his appearance, &c. See 16 Vin. Abr. tit. Pledge.

Pledgers of Goods for money, &c. See Parvns, and there is a pledge in law; where the law without any special agreement between parties doth enable a man to keep goods in nature of a distress, &c. 2 Shep. Abr. 442. See Black. Com. 2 V. 452.

Pledgery or Pleggery, (French pleigerie, Latin plegiagium) Suretiship, an undertaking or answering for. Also the appellant shall require the constable and mareschal to deliver his pledges, and to discharge them of their pledgery; and the constable and mareschal shall ask leave of the King to acquit his pledges, after the appellant is come into his lists, &c. Cowell.

Pledging, Is where goods and chattels are delivered in security for money lent, and by such pledging the pawnbroker hath more than the naked possession in the nature of a bailment; for he hath the property and interest in the thing itself; and by the better opinions, shall have a reasonable use of it, so that it be without damage to the thing pledged. Doct. and Stud. 130. 1 Rel. Abr. 338, 673. Owen 124. 2 Salk. 522.

See the case of Coggs and Barnard. 2 L. Raym.

If a man pledge goods to B. and they are stolen, B. shall not answer for them, because he hath a property in them; and his custody is but a consequent of that property; therefore he undertakes to keep them as his own; for a man who undertakes to secure what is another's, is bound to keep them at all adventures, since the right owner might possibly defend them with his life; but where a man is only obliged to keep them as his own, no unavoidable accident is to be imputed to him. Co. Lit. 89. a. 3 Inst. 108. 4 Co. 83. Palm. 551. Owen 123. Yelv. 178. Cro. Jac. 244. 1 Bullst. 29, 30. 1 Rel. Rep. 181.

But if a man pledge goods, and tenders the money to the pawnbroker, and he refuses, this determines the qualified property, therefore if after such tender the goods are stolen, &c. the bailor shall have satisfaction in an action of trover; for a tender and a refusal must in those cases amount to a payment; because otherwise no man could again come to his own, since pawns are over the value lent. Cro. Jac. 243. Yelv. 179. 1 Bullst. 29. Br. Bailment 7. 1 Rel. Rep. 129. Co. Lit. 89.

And tho' the borrower tender the money, and recover the goods in an action of trover, yet the pawnbroker may have an action of debt for his money; because tho' the security ceases, yet the duty remains, inasmuch as the money lent is not paid back to the party from whence it came. Cro. Jac. 243. Yelv. 179. 1 Bullst. 29, 31.

So if a man lend perishable goods as a pledge, and they decay, yet the person to whom they are pledged, may have an action of debt for his money, because the duty continues. Yelv. 179. Co. Lit. 209.

Goods thus taken to pledge, cannot be forfeited by the pawnbroker for his offence, nor can they be taken in execution, nor attached for his debt; for the absolute property is in another; therefore they are not alienable, nor by consequence forfeitable; because they cannot be forfeited without loss and danger to the absolute owner; and all qualified possessors do take the property under the restriction to preserve the property of the right owner. Br. Attachment in Assise 20.

If a man pledge goods, and after is attainted of felony, the King shall not have the goods without paying the sum for which they were pledged; for the alteration of the general property doth not alter the special property in the pawnbroker. 2 H. 7. 1. 1 Bullst. 29.

If a man pledge goods, and then is outlawed, he cannot redeem them, because then the absolute property is in the King; but if the outlawry is reversed, then the person is reinstated in his property as if there had been no outlawry, therefore may redeem them. 1 Bullst. 29.

If the money be not paid at the day, the property is absolute at law, but still the right owner has his redemption in equity, as in case of a mortgage. Co. Lit. 205. Shep. 106.

See farther 2 Vern. 177, 691, 698. Abr. Ca. in Eq. 324. 2 Leon. 30. Yelv. 164. As to estates in pledge, see Black. Com. 2 V. 117.

Plegius Acquistandis, Is a writ that lies for a surety, against him for whom he has surety, if he pay not the money at the day. F. N. B. 137. If the party who becomes surety be compelled to pay the money, &c. he shall have his writ against the person who ought to have paid the same: And if a man be surety for another, to pay a sum of money, so long as the principal debtor hath any thing, and is sufficient, his sureties shall not be distrained by the statute of Magna Charta; if they are distrained, they shall have a special writ on the statute to discharge them. Magna Charta. 9 H. 3. c. 8. But if the plaintiff sue the sureties in C. B. where the principal is sufficient to pay the debt, whether the sureties may plead that, and aver that the principal debtor is sufficient to pay it; or whether they shall have a writ to the sheriff not to distrain in such a case, hath been made a question. New Nat. Br. 306. It was adjudged, (Pasch. 43 Ed. 3.) that the writ de plegijs acquistandis lieth without any specialty shewed thereof: As it has been held, that a man shall have an action of debt against him who cometh pledge for another upon his promise to pay the money, without any writing made of it. New Nat. Br. 270, 304.

Plena forfeitura, A forfeiture of all that one hath, &c. See Forfeiture.

Plenary, Is an abstract of the adjective plenus, and is used in the Common law in matters of benefices, and where a church is full of an incumbent: plenary and vacation are direct contraries. Staudf. Prærog. cap. 8. fol. 32. Westm. 2. cap. 5. A clerk inducted may plead his patron's title; and being inducted by the space of six months, his patron may plead plenary against all common persons. Plowd. 501. Institution by six months, before a writ of quare impedit brought, is a good plenary against a common person; but plenary is no plea against the King, till six months after induction. 1 Inst. 119, 344. Plenary for six months is not generally pleadable against the King, because he may bring quare impedit at any time, and nullum tempus occurrat regi: Tho' if a title devolves to the King by lapse, and the patron presents his clerk by usurpation, who is instituted and inducted, and enjoys the benefice for six months, this is such a plenary as deprives the King of his presentation. 2 Inst. 361. And plenary by six months after institution is a good plea against the Queen Consort; altho' she claims the benefice of the King's endowment. Wood's Inst. 160. Upon collation of a bishop by lapse, plenary is not pleadable; for the collation doth not make a plenary, by reason the bishop would be judge in his own cause: The bishop must certify whether the church is full, or not; and his collation is interpreted to be no more than to supply the cure till the patron doth present; and 'tis for this cause a plenary by collation cannot be pleaded against the right patron: But by collation, plenary may be a bar to any lapse of the archbishop, and to the King, tho' 'tis no bar to the right patron. 6 Rep. 50. 1 Inst. 344. 2 Cro. 207. Plenary or not shall be tried by the bishop's certificate, being acquired by institution, which is a spiritual act; but in a quare impedit, the plenary must be tried by a jury. 6 Rep. 49.

By the Common law, where a person is presented, instituted and inducted to a church, the church is full, tho' the person presented be a layman; and shall not be void, but from the time of the deprivation of the incumbent for his incapacity. Count. Parf. Compan. 99. Avoidance is contrary to plenary; as where there is a want of a lawful incumbent, &c. See Adwovson, Presentation. And Black. Com. 3 V. 243.

Plene administrabit, Is a plea pleaded by an executor or administrator, where they have administered the deceased's estate faithfully and justly before the action brought against them.

On plene administravit pleaded by an executor, if it be proved that he hath goods in his hands which were the testator's, he may give in evidence that he hath paid to the value of his own money, and need not plead it specially; for when executor before the action, hath paid the money in equal degree with that demanded by plaintiff, he may plead fully administered generally, and give the special matter in evidence. 2 Lill Abr. 330. And where a testator, or intestate, was indebted to the executor or administrator, upon bond, they may plead plene administravit, and give their own bonds in evidence against any other bond; so likewise upon an indebitatus, having the privilege of paying themselves first. Ibid. Plene administravit is no plea where an executor, &c. is sued in the debt and detinet, because he is charged for his own occupation. 1 Mod. 185. And if plene administravit be pleaded, omitting the words, And that he hath not any goods or chattels of the testator, nor had on the day of exhibiting the bill aforesaid, or at any time after, &c. it is bad on a demurrer, and not helped by verdict. Cro. Jac. 132. 3 Lev. 28. Where the executor, &c. is to shew specially, how he hath administered the goods, vide Alegn 48. See Executors.

Plight, Is an old English word, signifying sometimes the estate with the habit and quality of the land, and extends to rent-charge, and to a possibility of dower. 1 Inst. 221. b.

Plowbets, A kind of coarse woollen cloth. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 8.

Plow-lands, (Elemosyna aratralis) Was anciently 1 d. paid to the church for every plowland. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 256.

Plow-bote, A right of tenants to take wood to repair ploughs, carts and harrows; and for making rakes, forks, &c. See Black. Com. 2 V. 35.

Plow-land, Is the same with a bide of land; and a bide or plow-land, it is said, do not contain any certain quantity of acres: But a plough-land, in respect of repairing the highway is settled at 50 l. a year, by the stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 29.

Plow-Silver, In former times, was money paid by some tenants, in lieu of service to plough the lord's lands. W. Jones Rep. 280. See Socage.

Plurality, (Pluralitas) Signifies the plural number; mostly applied to such clergymen who have more benefices than one: And Selden mentions trialities and quadralities, where one person hath three or four livings. Seld. tit. Hon. 687.

Plurality of livings is where the same person claims two or more spiritual preferments, with cure of souls; in which case the first is void ipso facto, and the patron may present to it, if the clerk be not qualified by dispensation, &c. for the law enjoineth residence, and it is impossible that the same person can reside in two places at the same time. Count. Parf. Compan. 94.

By the Canon law, no ecclesiastical person can hold two benefices with cure simul & semel, but that upon taking the second benefice, the first is void: But the Pope by usurpation did dispense with that law; and at first every bishop had power to grant dispensations for pluralities, till it was abrogated by a general council, held anno 1273, and this constitution was received till the statute 21 H. 8. c. 13. Moor 119. 2 Nels. Abr. 1271.

The stat. 21 H. 8. ordains, that if any parson having one benefice with cure, of the yearly value of 8 l. or above in the King's books, accepts of another benefice with cure, and is instituted and inducted, then the first shall be void: So that there may be a plurality within the statute; and a plurality by the Canon law. 2 Lutw. 1306.

The power of granting dispensations to hold two benefices with cure, &c. is vested in the King by the aforesaid statute: And it has been adjudged, that a dispensation is not necessary for a plurality, where the King presents his chaplain to a second benefice; for such a presentation imports a dispensation, which the King hath power to grant as supreme ordinary; but if such a chaplain be presented to a second benefice by a subject, he must have a dispensation before he is instituted to it. 1 Salt. 161.

The archbishop's dispensation, and King's confirmation, regularly are necessary to hold pluralities: And the statute 21 H. 8. ought to be construed strictly, because it introduces non-residence, and plurality of benefices against the Common law. Jenk. Cent. 272.

A man by dispensation may hold as many benefices, without cure, as he can get; and likewise so many with cure as he can get; all of them, or all but the last being under the value of 8 l. per annum in the King's books; if the person to be dispensed withal be not incapable thereof. Yet if a dispensation is made to hold three benefices with cure, whereof the first is of the yearly value of 8 l. the dispensation is void, unless it be in case of the King's chaplains, &c. who may hold three benefices with cure, above the value of 8 l. a year, where one of them is in the King's gift. Hob. 148.

If there be two parsons of one church, and each parson hath the intire cure of the parish, and their benefices be severally of the value of 8 l. per ann. if one dies and the other succeeds, this is a plurality within the statute. Cro. Car. 456. And tho' the act mentions instituted and inducted, when one is instituted into the second church, the dispensation to hold two benefices comes too late, tho' he be afterwards inducted; for by institution, the church is full of the incumbent. 4 Rep. 79.

By the statute, if the first benefice be of the value of 8 l. a year, or more, by the acceptance of a second, it is actually void, to all intents: But benefices under that value, being not within the statute, are only avoidable by accepting a second, second, and not void on such plurality, without a declaratory sentence, &c. Maller. 2. Imped. 104. In these cases it hath been held, that the value of livings to make pluralities shall be determined by the King's books in the first-fruits office: Tho' the court hath been divided, whether the value should be taken as it was in the King's books, or according to the true value of the living. 2 Lutw. 1301. 2 Nels. 1271.

No deanery shall be taken by our law, to be a benefice with cure, to need dispensation on having another benefice, &c. 21 H. 8. 1 Leon. 316. And a parsonage and vicarage make not a plurality, but are only one cure; the vicarage being endowed out of the parsonage. 2 Cro. 691.

Parsons may purchase a licence or dispensation, to take and keep two or more benefices with cure, according to the directions and qualifications in the said statute 21 H. 8. c. 13. And in some cases, parsons may hold pluralities, without being retained as Chaplains, &c. pursuant to that statute, viz. by birth, as being the son or brother of a lord; by university degree, where a man is doctor of divinity, law, &c. or by office or employment, as a bishop, stat. 26 H. 8. But when a parson is made a bishop, his former qualification to hold plurality of livings is void. Heb. 158. See Chaplain.

Pluries, Is a writ that issues in the third place, after two former writs have been disobeyed; for first goes out the original writ or capias, which if it has not effect, then issues the alias; and if that also fails, then the pluries. Old Nat. Br. 33. It is used in proceedings to outlawry; and in many cases. See Black. Com. 3 V. 283. 4 V. 314.

Pocket of Wool, Is a quantity of wool containing half a sack. 3 Inst. 96.

Poison, The killing a person by poisoning, has been held more criminal than any other murder, because of its secrecy, which prevents all defence against it; whereas most open murders give the party killed, some opportunity of resistance: For this reason offenders guilty of poisoning any person, were anciently judged to a severer punishment than other offenders. See 3 Nels. Abr. 363.

Richard Cole was attainted of high treason, for putting poison into a pot of pottage boiling in the bishop of Roche's kitchen, by which two persons were poisoned; and there was a particular statute made for his punishment, viz. by the statute 22 H. 8. cap. 9. it was enacted, That he should be boiled to death. Anno 22 H. 8. Richard Cole's case.

At this day, to poison any one wilfully, is murder and felony, if the party die in a year; and the aiders and abettors, &c. shall suffer death. Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12.

Persons poisoned in one country dying in another, the indictment found where the death happens, shall be good. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 24.

If a man persuade another to drink a poisonous liquor, under the notion of a medicine, who afterwards drinks it in his absence; or if A. intending to poison B. put poison into a thing, and deliver it to C. who knows nothing of the matter, to be by him delivered to B. and C. innocently delivers it accordingly, in the absence of A. In this case the procurer of the felony is as much a principal as if he had been present when it was done. 2 Hawk. P. C. 313. And so likewise all those seem to be, who are present when the poison was infused, and privity and consenting to the design: But persons who only abet their crime by command, counsel, &c. and are absent when the poison was infused, are accessories only. Ibid.

Policy of Insurance, or Insurance, (from the Ital. Polizza, i. e. sebedula & assicuratio) Is an instrument entered into by insurers of ships and merchandise, &c. to merchants obligatory for the payment of the sum insured, in case of loss. Merch. D. 2.

It is a course taken by those who adventure goods to sea, that they, unwilling to hazard the whole, give unto some other, called an Insurer, a certain rate or proportionable sum of so much percent. to secure the safe arrival of the ship and goods, &c. at the place agreed on; so that if the ship and merchandise miscarry, the insurer maketh good to the adventurer so much as he promised to secure; but if the ship arrive safely, he gains that clearly, which the merchant compoundeth to pay him: And for the more equal dealing between the insurer and insured in this case, there was an officer ordained by statute to set down in writing the sum of their agreement, which is subscribed or underwritten by the insurer; and this was called Policy, to prevent any difference that might after happen between them. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 12. and 14 Car. 2. c. 23. See Insurance, And Black. Com. 2 V. 460. 4 V. 434. And as to the Court of Policies of insurance, erected in pursuance of 43 Eliz. c. 12. See Black. Com. 3 V. 74.

Pollards, or pollengers, are such trees as have been usually cropped, therefore distinguished from timber-trees; Plowd. 469.

Poll (vered) A deed made by one party only, is not indented, but polled or shaved quite even; and is therefore called a deed-poll, or a single deed. Black. Com. 2 V. 296.

Polls, Where one or more jurors are excepted against it is called a challenge to the Polls. 1 Inst. 156. See Black. Com. 3 V. 361. 4 V. 346.

Polygamy, (Polygamia) Is where a man marries two or more wives together, or a woman has two or more husbands at the same time; when the body of the first wife or husband may be said to be injured by the second marriage, while either are living. 3 Inst. 88. Wood's Inst. 363.

Such second marriage, living the former husband or wife, is simply void, and a mere nullity, by the Ecclesiastical law of England: And yet the legislature has thought it just to make it felony, by reason of its being so great a violation of the publick œconomy and decency of a well ordered state. For polygamy can never be endured under any rational civil establishment, whatever specious reasons may be urged for it by the Eastern nations, the fallaciousness of which has been fully proved by many sensible writers: But in Northern countries the very nature of the climate seems to reclaim against it; it never having obtained in this part of the world, even from the time of our German ancestors, who, as Tacitus informs us, "Prope soli barbarorum singulis uxoribus contenti sunt." It is therefore purchased by the laws both of antient and modern Sweden with death. And with us in England it is enacted by statute 1 Jac. 1. c. 11. that if any person, being married, do afterwards marry again, the former husband or wife being alive, it is felony; but within the benefit of clergy. The first wife in this case shall not be admitted as an evidence against her husband, because she is the true wife; but the second may, for she is indeed no wife at all; and so, vice versa, of a second husband.

This act makes an exception to five cases, in which such second marriage, tho' in the three first it is void, is yet no felony.

1. Where either party hath been continually abroad for seven years, whether the party in England hath notice of the others being living or no.

2. Where either of the parties hath been absent from the other seven years, within this kingdom, and the remaining party hath had no notice of the other's being alive within that time.

3. Where there is a divorce or separation a mensa et thoro, by sentence in the Ecclesiastical court.

4. Where the first marriage is declared absolutely void by any such sentence, and the parties loosed a vinculo. Or,

5. Where either of the parties was under the age of consent at the time of the first marriage; for in such case the

the first marriage was voidable by the disagreement of either party, which this second marriage very clearly amounts to. But, if at the age of consent the parties had agreed to the marriage, which completes the contract, and is indeed the real marriage; and afterwards one of them should marry again; it is apprehended, that such second marriage would be within the reason and penalties of the act. Black. Com. 4 V. 163, 4.

Pondus, Pound-ge, which duty with that of tonnage, was anciently paid to the King according to the weight and measure of merchants goods. Cowell.

Pondus Regis, Is the standard weight appointed by our ancient Kings. 35 Ed. 1. And what we now call Troy Weight, was this pondus regis, or Le Roy Weight, with the scales in equilibrio: Whereas the aver de pois was the fuller weight, with a declining scale. Cowell. See tit. Measure.

Pone, Is a writ whereby a cause depending in the county, or other inferior court is removed into the Common Pleas; and sometimes into the King's Bench: As when a replevin is sued by writ out of Chancery, &c. then if the plaintiff or defendant will remove that plea out of the county-court into C. B. it was done by pone. F. N. B. 69. 2 Inst. 339. And the writ pone lies to remove actions of debt, and of detinue, writ of right, of nuisance, &c. New Nat. Br. Also pone is a writ willing the sheriff to summon the defendant to appear and answer the plaintiff's suit, on his putting in sureties to prosecute, &c. Wood's Inst. 570. And the writ to the sheriff to take surety of one for his appearing is called Pone per Vadium.

A pone to remove causes, is of this form: Put at the petition of A. B. before our justices at Westminster, the day, &c. The plea which is in your court by our writ, between the said A. B. and C. D. of, &c. and summon the said C. that he be then there to answer the said A. &c. See Black. Com. 3 V. 34, 195, 280. ii. xiii.

Ponendis in Jussis, A writ granted by the statute of Westm. 2. c. 38. which statute shews what persons sheriffs ought to impanel upon assise and juries. Reg. Orig. 175. F. N. B. 165.

Ponendum in Ballium, A writ commanding that a prisoner be bailed in cases bailable. Reg. Orig. 133.

Ponendum Agillum ad Exceptionem, A writ by which justices are required to put their seals to exceptions, exhibited by defendant against the plaintiff's evidence, verdict, or other proceedings before them, according to the statute West. 2.

Pone per vadium, Is a writ commanding the sheriff to take surety of one for his appearance at a day assigned. Of this see five sorts in the table of the Register Judicial, verbo Pone per vadium.

Pontage, (Pontagium.) Is a contribution towards the maintenance, or re-edifying bridges. West. 2. cap. 25. It may also signify toll taken to this purpose of those who pass over bridges. Stat. 1 Hen. 8. cap. 9. 22 Hen. 8. cap. 5. and 39 Eliz. cap. 25. Per pontagium clamat esse quiet. de operibus pontium. Plac. in Itin. apud Cestrium. 14 Hen. 7.

This was accounted one of the three public charges from which no person of what degree soever was exempted. viz. from the charge of an expedition to the wars, from building of castles, and from building and repairing bridges: And this was called Trinoda necessitas; from which Ingulpbus tells us, Nulli possunt laxari. And Selden in his Notes upon Eadmerus writes, that Ne quidem episcopi, abbates & monachi immunes erant. And Matt. Paris. anno 1244. tells us, that in all the grants of privileges to monasteries, these three things were always excepted, propter publicam regni utilitatem, that the people might the better resist the enemy. Cowell.

Pontibus reparandis, Is a writ directed to the sheriff, &c. requiring him to charge one or more, to repair a bridge, to whom it belongeth. Reg. Orig. 153.

Poor (Pauper) A poor person is such as is a burden to and charge upon a parish. The poor our law takes notice of, are,

1st, Poor by impotency and defect; as the aged or decrepit, fatherless and motherless, poor under sickness, and persons who are idiots, lunatics, lame, blind, &c. these the overseers of the poor are to provide for.

2^{dly}, Poor by casualty; such as housekeepers decayed or ruined by unavoidable misfortunes; poor persons overcharged with children, labourers who are disabled, and these, having ability, are to be set to work, but if not able to work, they are to be relieved with money.

3^{dly}, Poor by prodigality and debauchery, also called Tristeleji Poor; as idle slothful persons, pilferers, vagabonds, strumpets, &c. who are to be sent to the house of correction, and be put to hard labour, to maintain themselves; or work is to be provided for them, that they do not perish for want; and if they become impotent by sickness, or if their work will not maintain them, there must be an allowance by the overseers of the poor, for their support. Dalt. c. 73. f. 35.

The law not only regards life and member, and protects every man in the enjoyment of them, but also furnishes him with every thing necessary for their support. For there is no man so indigent or wretched, but he may DEMAND a supply sufficient for all the necessities of life, from the more opulent part of the community, by means of the several statutes enacted for relief of the poor. A humane provision; yet, tho' dictated by the principles of society, discountenanced by the Roman laws. For the edicts of the Emperor Constantine commanding the public to maintain the children of those who were unable to provide for them, in order to prevent the murder and exposure of infants, an institution founded on the same principle as our Foundling Hospitals, tho' comprized in the Theodosian code, were rejected in Justinian's collection. Black. Com. 1 V. 121.

It is not true, what some people imagined, that the Common law of England made no provision for the poor: The Mirror shews the contrary; but how it was done does not appear. Bur. 450.

None shall give alms to a beggar able to work, 23 Ed. 3. c. 7. Poor persons who are impotent, shall abide in the same town, or in the next within the hundred that is able to maintain them, 12 Ric. 2. c. 7. Improprizors shall be obliged to distribute a yearly sum to the poor parishioners, 15 Ric. 2. c. 6. 4 Hen. 4. c. 12. Provision to be made for the impotent poor, 19 H. 7. c. 12. 22 H. 8. c. 12. 27 H. 8. c. 25. 1 Ed. 6. c. 3. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 16. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 2. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 5. 5 El. c. 3. 14 El. c. 4. 18 El. c. 3. 35 El. c. 7. f. 25. 39 El. c. 3.

1. Statutes concerning the poor.
2. Of appointing overseers; their duty; and of compelling them to account.
3. Of the poor rate, who, and what shall be liable thereto; and of taxing others in aid.
4. Of the remedies for recovering rates; and of setting aside rates.
5. Of relieving, and ordering maintenance for the poor.
6. Of parents and children being obliged to maintain each other.
7. Of the settlements of poor people.

1. Statutes concerning the poor.

By stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. The churchwardens of every parish, and four, three, or two substantial householders there, as shall be thought meet, to be nominated yearly, shall be called overseers of the poor of the same parish: And shall take order from time to time, with consent of two or more justices for setting to work the children of such whose parents shall not by the said churchwardens and overseers, be thought able to maintain their children; and also for setting to work all such persons, having no means to maintain them, and use no ordinary trade to get their living by: And also raise weekly, or otherwise, a convenient stock of flax, &c. to set the poor on work: And also competent sums of money for the necessary relief of the lame, impotent, old, blind, and such other among them, being poor, and not able to work, and also for the putting out such children apprentices, to be gathered out of the parish, according to the ability of the parish; parish; and to do all other things, as well for disposing of the said stock, or otherwise, as to them shall seem convenient.

Which churchwardens and overseers shall meet together at the least once every month, in the church after Divine service, there to consider of some good course to be taken, and for some meet order to set down in the premisses.

If the justices perceive, that the inhabitants of any parish, are not able to levy among themselves sufficient money for the purposes aforesaid, then two justices may tax any other, of other parishes, or out of any parish within the hundred wherethe said parish is, to pay such money to the churchwardens and overseers of the said parish for the said purposes, as the justices shall think fit, according to the intent of this law. And if the hundred shall not be thought able to relieve the several parishes not able to provide for themselves, then the justices at their general quarter-sessions, or the greater number of them, shall rate any other, of other parishes, or out of any parish within the county for the purposes aforesaid, in their discretion.

And it shall be lawful, for the churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, by warrant from any two justices of the peace, to levy as well the sums of money, and all arrears, of every one who shall refuse to contribute according as they shall be assessed, by distress and sale of the offender's goods, as the money or stock which shall be behind on any account to be made, as aforesaid, rendering to the parties the overplus: And in default of such distress, it shall be lawful for any two justices to commit him or them to the common gaol of the county, there to remain without bail until payment of the sum, arrears and stock.

Churchwardens and overseers may bind poor children apprentices, and may by leave of the lord of the manor build houses on the waste for the poor to inhabit, but not to be afterwards used for the habitation of any other, on the pains contained in the 31 Elizabeth.

Provided, That if any person is grieved with any act done by the churchwardens or other persons, or by the justices; then it shall be lawful for the justices at their general quarter-sessions, or the greater number of them, to take such order therein, as to them shall be thought convenient; the same to bind all parties.

The father and grandfather, and the mother and grandmother, and the children of every poor, old, blind, lame and impotent person, or other poor person not able to work, being of sufficient ability, shall at their charges relieve and maintain every such poor person in that manner, and according to that rate, as by the justices, or the greater number of them, at their general quarter-sessions shall be assessed; on pain that every one of them shall forfeit 20 s. for every month they shall fail therein.

Mayors, &c. of corporations being justices, have the same authority within their limits, as justices of the county. And every alderman of London shall do so much, as is appointed to be done by one or two justices.

If any parish extend into more counties than one, or part lie within the liberties of any city, town or place corporate, and part without, then as well the justices of every county, as also the head officers of such city, town or place corporate, shall intermeddle only in so much of the parish as lieth within their liberties, and not any farther. And every of them respectively within their several jurisdictions, to execute the ordinances concerning the nomination of overseers, the consent of binding apprentices, the giving warrant to levy taxations unpaid, the taking account of churchwardens and overseers, and the committing to prison such as refuse to account, or deny to pay the arrears due on their accounts; yet the churchwardens and overseers, or the most part of them, of the parishes that extend into such several limits and jurisdictions, shall without dividing themselves duly execute their office within the parish, in all things to them belonging, and duly exhibit and make one account before the head officer of the town or place corporate, and one other, before the justices of peace, or any two of them.

For not appointing overseers yearly, every justice, &c. of the division forfeit 5 l. The justices, or the more part of them, in their general sessions to be holden next after the feast of Easter next, and so yearly as often as they shall think meet, shall rate every parish to such a weekly sum of money as they think convenient, so as no parish be rated above the sum of 6 d. nor under the sum of one halfpenny, weekly to be paid, and so as the total sum of such taxation of the parishes in every county amount not above the rate of 2 d. for every parish within the county. Which sums so taxed, shall be yearly assessed by the agreement of the parishioners within themselves, or in default thereof, by the churchwardens and petty constables of the parish, or the more part of them, or in default of their agreement, by order of such justice or justices as shall dwell in the same parish, or (if none be there dwelling) in the parishes next adjoining.

And if any person refuse or neglect to pay any portion of money so taxed, it shall be lawful for the churchwardens and constables, or any of them, or in default thereof, for any justice of the liberty, to levy the same by distress and sale, rendering to the party the overplus. And in default of such distress, it shall be lawful to any justice of that limit to commit such person to prison, there to abide without bail till he have paid the same.

There is a provision by the act, (c. 18.) for the inhabitants of the island of Foulness in the county of Essex.

Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 11. sect. 11. There shall be kept in every parish, a book wherein the names of all persons who receive collection shall be registered, with the day and year when they were first admitted to have relief, and the occasion: and yearly in Easter week, or as often as shall be thought convenient, the parishioners shall meet, before whom the book shall be produced, and all persons receiving collection to be called over, and the reasons of their taking relief examined, and a new list made of such persons as they think fit and allow to receive collection; and no other person shall be allowed to receive collection at the charge of the parish, but by authority under the hand of one justice residing within such parish, or (if none be there dwelling) in the parts next adjoining, or by order of the justices in sessions, except in cases of pestilential diseases, plague or small pox, for such families as shall be therewith infected.

Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30. sect. 2. Every person who shall be on the collection, and receive relief of any place, and the wife and children of any such person cohabiting in the same house, such child only excepted, as shall be by the churchwardens and overseers permitted to live at home, in order to attend an helpless parent, shall upon the shoulder of the sleeve of the uppermost garment, in a visible manner, wear a large Roman P. together with the first letter of the name of the parish or place, whereof such poor person is an inhabitant, cut either in red or blue cloth, as by the churchwardens and overseers shall be directed: and if any such poor person shall neglect or refuse to wear such mark, it shall be lawful for one justice to punish such offender, either by ordering his allowance to be abridged, suspended or withdrawn, or otherwise by committing him to the house of correction, to be whipt, and kept to hard labour, not exceeding 21 days; and if any churchwarden or overseer shall relive any such poor person, not wearing such badge, and be thereof convicted on oath of one witness before one justice, he shall forfeit 20 s. by distress, half to the informer, and half to the poor.

Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 8. sect. 1. Whereas sometimes men run away, leaving their wives and children, and sometimes women run away leaving their children on the charge of the parish, altho' such persons have estates which should ease the parish of their charge; it shall be lawful for the churchwardens or overseers, where any such wife, child or children shall be so left, on application to, and by warrant or order of two justices, to seize so much of the goods, and receive so much of the annual profits of the lands and tenements of such husband, father or mother, as such two justices shall direct, towards the discharge of the place where such wife, child or children children are left, for bringing up and providing for such wife, child or children; which warrant or order being confirmed at the next quarter-sessions, it shall be lawful for the justices there, to make an order for the churchwardens or overseers, to dispose of such goods by sale or otherwise, or so much of them, for the purposes aforesaid, as the court shall think fit, and to receive the profits, or so much of them as shall be ordered by the said sessions, of his or her lands and tenements for the purposes aforesaid.

And the churchwardens and overseers shall be accountable to the justices at the quarter-sessions for all money they shall so receive.

9 Geo. 1. c. 7. s. 1. enacts, That no justice of peace shall order relief to any poor person dwelling in any Parish till oath made of some reasonable cause for it, and that he had applied to the Parishioners, or to two overseers of the Poor, and was refused, and till summons of two overseers of the Poor to shew cause.

And any person ordered to be relieved shall be entred in the Parish books, to be relieved so long as the cause for such relief continues, and no longer. And if any parish officer (except upon emergent occasions) shall charge to the Parish account any monies given to any person not registred, he shall forfeit 5*l.* to be levied by distress and sale, by warrant of two justices, to be applied to the use of the Poor of the Parish by direction of such justices.

It shall be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers, with consent of the major part of the parishioners, to purchase or hire any house in the same parish, township or place, and to contract with any for the lodging, keeping, maintaining and employing such Poor as desire relief, and there to keep, maintain and employ such poor persons, and take the benefit of their labour. And if any poor person refuse to be lodged, &c. in such house, he shall be put out of the Parish book, and shall not be intitled to receive relief: and where any parish or township shall be too small to purchase or hire such house, it shall be lawful for two or more such parishes, townships or places, with consent of the major part of the Parishioners, and with the approbation of any justice of the peace, &c. to unite in purchasing or taking such house for lodging, &c. the Poor, and there to keep, maintain and employ the Poor, and to take and have the benefit of their labour, for the better relief of the Poor there kept, &c. And if any Poor in the respective Parishes, &c. so uniting shall refuse to be lodged, &c. in the house so hired, &c. he shall be put out of the collection book, and not intitled to ask relief: and it shall be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers, &c. to contract with the churchwardens and overseers of any other parish, &c. for the lodging, &c. of any poor person of such other Parish, &c. as to them shall seem meet. And if any poor person of such other parish, &c. shall refuse to be lodged, &c. in such house, he shall be put out of the collection book, and not be intitled to relief.

Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 3. Persons authorized to take care of the Poor, shall give publick notice in the church, of every rate for relief of the Poor, allowed by the justices of peace, the next Sunday after the same shall have been so allowed; and that no rate shall be valid so as to collect the same, unless such notice shall have been given.

And that persons authorized as aforesaid, shall permit every inhabitant to inspect every such rate, at seasonable times, paying one shilling for the same, and on demand, forthwith give copies of the same, or any part thereof, to any inhabitant, paying at the rate of sixpence for every twenty-four names, on pain of forfeiting to the party grieved twenty pounds.

By Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 37. Where there shall be any dispute or uncertainty in what parish or place, lands improved, or drained, lie, and ought to be rated; every occupier of such lands, or houses built thereon, tenements, tythes arising therefrom, mines therein, and saleable underwoods therein growing, shall be rated to the relief of the Poor, and to all other parochial rates within such parish and place which lies nearest to such lands, in like manner, and subject to the same regulations, as other lands within such parish and place are by law liable to be rated thereunto; if any difference arise touching what parish or place such lands ought to be rated in, it shall be lawful for the justices, at their next general quarter-sessions, to determine the same on the appeal of any person interested, and at such sessions to cause such lands, &c. to be allotted to, and fairly assessed in such parish or place as they see just. But not to affect or determine the boundaries of any parish or place, to any intent other than for the purpose of rating such lands, &c. to relief of the Poor, and to all other parochial rates within such Parish or Place to which they shall be so allotted.

Vide the Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. which regulates the mode and time of accounting by churchwardens and overseers to their successors, as also the delivery over of the money, goods and chattels in their hands, &c.

Also see Post, Division 3.

The same statute, sect. 4. gives an appeal to the sessions to any party aggrieved by any assessment, or having any material objection to any person being put on, or left out of such rate, or to the sum charged on any person, or shall have any material objection to such account, or any part therein, or who shall find him, her or themselves aggrieved by any thing done.

And by sect. 6. it is enacted, That on all appeals from rates, the justices (where they shall see just to give relief) are required to amend the same in such manner only, as shall be necessary for giving relief, without altering such rates, with respect to other persons mentioned in the same; but if on an appeal from the whole rate it be found necessary to quash the same; then the justices are required to direct the churchwardens and overseers of the poor to make a new equal rate.

And by sect. 7. The goods of any person assessed and refusing to pay, may be levied by warrant of distress, not only in the place for which such assessment was made, but in any other place within the county or precinct; and if sufficient distress cannot be found within the county or precinct, on oath made thereof before some justice of any other county or precinct, (which oath shall be certified under the hand of such justice on the warrant) such goods may be levied in such other county or precinct by virtue of such other warrant and certificate; and if any person be aggrieved by such distress, it shall be lawful for such person to appeal to the next general or quarter-sessions of the peace for the county or precinct where such assessment was made, and the justices there are required to finally determine the same.

In case any person refuse to pay to overseers, any sum they shall be legally rated or assessed to, it shall be lawful for the succeeding overseers to levy such arrears, and out of the money levied to reimburse their predecessors all sums of money which they have expended for the use of the poor, and which are allowed to be due to them in their accounts.

And where any person shall occupy any house, &c. from which any other person assessed shall be removed, or which at the time of making such rate was unoccupied, then every person removing from, and every person coming into or occupying the same, shall be liable to pay to such rate in proportion to the time that such person occupied the same respectively, in the same manner, and under the like penalty of distress, as if such person so removing had not removed, or such person so coming in or occupying had been originally rated in such rate; which proportion in case of dispute shall be ascertained by any two or more justices.

And it is further enacted, That true copies of all rates for relief of the poor be fairly entered in a book, to be provided for that purpose, by the churchwardens and overseers, who shall take care that such copies be entred accordingly, within fourteen days after all appeals from such rates are determined, and shall attest the same by putting their names thereto; and every such book shall be carefully preserved by the churchwardens and overseers, or one of them, in some place whereto all persons assessed or liable to be assessed may freely resort; and shall be delivered over from time to time to the succeeding churchwardens and overseers, as soon as they enter into into their office, and shall be produced by them at their general or quarter-sessions, when any appeal is to be determined.

And overseers of the poor within every township or place, where there are no churchwardens, shall execute every act, concerning the poor, as churchwardens and overseers of the poor may execute by this act, or any former statute concerning the poor, and shall suffer such pains and penalties for neglect, as churchwardens and overseers are liable to.

2. Of appointing overseers; their duty; and of compelling them to account.

Churchwardens of every parish] See the Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. sect. 1. The justices of peace, by the general words of this statute, have power to name overseers in all Parishes; and it must extend as well to extraparochial places as to all Parishes in general, and no subsequent words shall controul the general words in the enacting part; and certainly all the poor acts shall be construed to extend to such places, as well as to other Parishes, when they are within the same mischief, and shall be subject to the controul of the justices of peace. Most of the forests in England are extraparochial, and so is Christ-church in Oxford, but they ought to maintain their own poor; therefore a peremptory mandamus was granted to the justices of peace to choose overseers in the town of Rufford, being an extraparochial place. - 8 Mod. 39. But such extraparochial place must be a township or village. See Stran. 1004, 1071, 1143.

Four, three, or two] On motion to quash an indictment against B. for that he, with four others, being appointed overseers of the poor, refused to take upon him that office, &c. It was objected, that the statute directs the nomination but of four, three, or two, with the churchwardens. And per Parker Ch. J. That is very true, tho' in many places more are appointed than four; for the act says four, three, or two shall be nominated of the inhabitants, at the discretion of the justices (scil.) they may nominate four, three, or two; it is not a limitation of the justices power, but it is in the very authoritative part thereof. Where more than four are added, they are not punishable by the act, and they can be only added as assistants. Per Powell, the question will be whether the words of the act will be any more than directory, or a limitation of their authority. In most of the parishes about London there are more than four, therefore we need not determine this point; but the indictment was quashed for another fault. 16 Vin. Abr. 415.

But no greater number than four can be appointed. Burrow 445, 453.

Substantial householders there] The appointment of overseers must stile them substantial householders. Stran. 1261.

It was moved for a mandamus to J. H. and J. T. justices of peace in the county of Dorset, &c. to nominate two substantial householders to be overseers of the poor upon this statute; and there was an affidavit, that at a meeting of the parish after Easter, one John B. and Mary F. were elected overseers, and at a meeting of the justices they approved of Mr. B. and refused the woman, as being an unfit person to serve as overseer; and the old overseers refusing to nominate any other, the justices approved B. only. Per Powell, A woman is not to be an overseer of the poor; and there can be no custom in a Parish to put her in, because of her being a housekeeper; because this is an officer created by act of parliament. Per Parker Ch. J. The nomination is to be by the justices, and it seems the overseers are to continue but one year. The Parish here was obstinate in not having another instead of the woman, and the justices should have nominated one of the old ones, since they were so stiff; but (because the justices had done well in refusing the woman) he directed that they should apply to the justices to have another nominated; and if they refused, then to apply to the court for a mandamus the next term. 16 Vin. Abr. 415.

A citizen of London who lived in the country in the summer, was chose overseer of the poor, the court seemed to discountenance such choice of one who was resident there only some part of the summer, and was actually an inhabitant of another Parish in London. Cath. 161.

Early in Easter week, or within one month after Easter] The court seemed to think an appointment of overseers on a Sunday, to be a good appointment: for it may be in Easter week, and this is the first day of the week. Foley 4.

An appointment of overseers is good, tho' not made within one month after Easter. Stran. 1123.

And many other counties in England and Wales.] See stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. sect. 21. — In trespass a special verdict found this statute, and that the Parish of Kenilworth in the county of Warwick (not being any of the counties named in this statute) is a large Parish, having two townships, but it is not found that it is so large that parochial distribution cannot be made; and the question was, if the county of Warwick, not being named in the statute, shall be taken within the general words, (and divers other counties;) and Hopkins serjeant cited a case to be adjudged in C. B. that the statute did not extend to other counties than those which are expressly named; and to this Hale inclined; but the court would see the precedent before they gave judgment; by which adjournatur. 2 Lev. 142. But afterwards it was adjudged, that this statute did not extend to any other counties, but only to those that are named therein. Ibid. Freem. 401. Hale Ch. J. said, by the words it seems to be intended for all counties in England, because the words are (or other counties;) but serjeant Hopkins cited the judgment in C. B. in case of Wilson and Bonner, between Chipping-Campden and Broad-Campden in Gloucestershire, where the judges held, that this act extended to no counties but those named. Ibid. 412. The court gave judgment for the defendant because tho' it was found to be a large Parish, yet it was not found to be so big that by reason of the largeness they could not reap the benefit of the act of 43 Eliz. according to the statute, and for that reason the court gave judgment, and so did not positively rule, that no other counties were within the act but those named; but Hale strongly inclined that no other counties were within the act, and said the inconvenience would be very great; for by that means the poor boroughs would be charged with poor, and the vills where men of good estates lived, but perhaps no poor, would be at no charge at all. But 2 Salk. 486. pl. 44. in marg. there is a note, That in the case of the inhabitants of Stokelane and Dolting, Hill. 11 Ann. it was adjudged, That by virtue of this act the justices may exercise the powers given by 43 Eliz. and this act in all extraparochial places containing more houses than one, so as to come under the denomination of a vill or township. And in the case of Hinam and Churcham Parishes in Gloucestershire, Hill. 1738. Lee Ch. J. cited the said case of Stokelane and Dolting, in which he said it was held, that this statute extended by equity to all the counties in England, and that it was so held upon great deliberation. 16 Vin. Abr. 421.

Every poor, needy, impotent and lame person] This statute relates only to the maintenance of poor and impotent persons, and not to bachelors, who are provided for by other statutes. 1 Salk. 123.

Two or three overseers of the poor] The court held, that this clause plainly extends to towns and villages in extraparochial places as well as within Parishes; for the law makers had in view the inconvenience, that some towns and villages would have the benefit of 43 Eliz. This statute is of (towns, &c. in counties) and not (in Parishes); and towns and villages in extraparochial places are plainly within the words, tho' not directly within the view of the act; and tho' there be not officers appointed in extraparochial places, yet the justices ought to do it upon complaint. 16 Vin. Abr. 421.

When the Parish is not large, and consisting of several townships, so as the 43 Eliz. may be of benefit to them, the justices ought not to appoint particular overseers

Overseers according to this statute. 16 Vin. Abr. 421.

As to the duty of the overseers of the poor, see Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. sect. 2, 6, 11. and Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. sect. 1, 11, 13, 14.

Make and yield up to such justices of peace a true and perfect account] See Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. s. 2.—The justices authority in stating this account, cannot be delegated to any other. 16 Vin. Abr. 415.

Shall pay and deliver over] Mandamus to the justices, to grant a warrant for levying 30*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.* being the balance of the last overseers account in their hands. They return, that there was such a balance, but that the vestry had ordered them to return it, and employ an attorney to sue for charity money, and get it laid out for the benefit of the poor; that one Young was so employed, and the balance exhausted in fees, and that the overseers had engaged to pay Young; & ca de causa they had refused to grant the warrant: and per curiam, There must go a peremptory mandamus, for the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2. says, the balance shall be paid over to the new overseers, under a penalty: and it is not in the power of the vestry to dispense with the statute. Stran. 992.

Negligent in their office] If an overseer does not provide for the poor, he is indictable; and if he relieves the poor when there is no necessity, it is a misdemeanor. MS. Cases. Pasch. 3 Ann. B. R. Farney's case.

For every such default of absence or negligence 20 shillings] This penalty for not meeting in the church shall never be inflicted on the overseers of extraparochial places, because they have no church to meet in. 8 Mod. 40.

If any of these officers be convicted of any of the penalties in this act; the other must levy it. 16 Vin. Abr. 415.

To commit every one of the said churchwardens and overseers] See Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. sect. 4. If accounts be adjusted, and the overseers refuse to pay the balance, they cannot be committed immediately, but a warrant must issue to distrain them, and upon a return thereof there may be a commitment. 16 Vin. Abr. 416.

The justices cannot commit an overseer for bringing in an account to which they object, but they ought to hear it, strike out what is amiss, and balance the account. 16 Vin. Abr. 416.

The defendant being an overseer, was committed by two justices of peace by a warrant, which recited, that he had appeared before them, and being demanded to give a just account of all monies he had received and paid, he had only produced an account in gross of his receipts and payments, and refused to give a particular account, or produce his books, &c. and they believing this to be no account according to this statute, and defendant refusing to give any other, therefore they commit him to be detained till he shall make a true account. And upon a habeas corpus he was discharged. Per tot. cur. Because the justices had no authority to commit in this manner by this statute, for that an account was confessed to have been rendered. &c. Shaw. 395.

An order made at the sessions relating to accounts of overseers of the poor was moved to be quashed, because it did not appear the accounts had been before two justices quorum unus, and they cannot come per saltum to the sessions; and Salk. 533. was cited. On the other side it was said, that it appeared there was an allowance, for the appeal is said to be against the disbursements and allowance thereof, which the court will presume was regular; and being in general, is not like the case in Salk. Which was said to be by two justices without quorum unus. Sed per curiam, It does not follow, that this was an allowance by two justices, for the Parish might do it; therefore for want of jurisdiction this order must be quashed. Stran. 983.

3. Of the poor rate, who, and what shall be liable thereto; and of taxing other parishes in aid.

By taxation of every inhabitant] See Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. sect. 1, 3. & 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. sect. 12. Assessments for the poor ought to be made according to the visible estate of the inhabitants there, both real and personal, and no inhabitant there is to be taxed to contribute to the relief of the poor in regard of any estate he hath elsewhere in any other town or place, but only in regard of the visible estate he hath in the town where he dwells, not for any other land he hath in any other place or town. 2 Bulf. 354.

Rent is no standing rule for making a poor rate; for circumstances may differ, and there ought to be a regard ad statum ad facultates. Comb. 478.

The sessions, upon setting aside a rate, may make a new one themselves, or order the churchwardens and overseers to make a new one, they having it in their discretion to make a new rate at sessions, or remand it to the churchwardens, &c. to make a new one. 2 Salk. 483.

The churchwardens and overseers may make a rate of themselves. 2 Salk. 531.

H. took part of a house in the Parish of D. on the third of December; he was rated as an inhabitant, and was distrained for a quarter's rate the Christmas following; but the distress was taken before Christmas on a general warrant made for the whole year: and in replevin it was ruled upon evidence by Holt, 1st, That if two several houses are inhabited by several families, who make and have but one common entrance for both; yet in respect of their original, both houses are rateable severally; for they were at first several houses; and if one family goes, one house is vacant: but if one tenement be divided by a partition and inhabited by different families, viz. the owner in one, and a stranger in another, these are several tenements, severally rateable while they are thus severally inhabited, but if the stranger and his family go away it becomes one tenement. 2dly, That H. could not be rated for the whole quarter, for poor rates are to be assessed MONTHLY by the statute, and by this means a man cannot move in the middle of a quarter, but he must be twice charged. 2 Salk. 532.

When goods are rated, it ought to be according to the value of lands, viz. goods of the value of 100*l.* shall be rated 5*l.* per annum, as lands are, and the person must be charged only in the place where the goods are at the time of the assessment; for if he has no goods where assessed, if distrained he may have an action of trespass, &c. Dalt. Just. 2, 3, cap. 73.

By the words and meaning of the statute 43 Eliz. 2. the occupiers of the land are to be assessed, and not the lessor who receives the rents; the occupier of the land being by law only to pay the assessment, unless it be specially provided for as to this payment between him and his lessor. 2 Bulf. 354.

Parsons ought to contribute to the poor. 3 Keb. 252.

A mandamus was prayed to the mayor of Chichester, to sign a tax made on the palace, &c. of the bishop of Chichester, being within the parish of Subdeanry, and per cur. it was granted; because against this there can be no prescription, and all the prebendaries who live in the same close, which is a fourth part of the town, pay it. 3 Keb. 573.

A parson who lets his tithes to the parishioners may be taxed upon the poor rate; for the letting is but an agreement with the parishioners to retain the tithes, and the parson has a modus for his tithes; tho' it was objected that the parishioners were occupiers, and so the parson not taxable. MS. cases Pasch. 7 Ann. The Queen v. Bartlet.

Those ought only to be contributory who were livers there the year before, and none else. Settlements 48. pl. 71.

A. seised of lands, demised the same to B. reserving the yearly rent of 10*l.* A. covenanted with B. that he should quietly enjoy the land, and to indemnify him against all charges and taxes whatsoever to be imposed upon the lands, except tithes. B. entered, and was possessed, and the churchwardens and overseers of the Parish where the land lay, and of which A. was an inhabitant, made a poor rate, and B. by reason of the lands was charged with such a sum of the rate which he paid, and he brought covenant against A. and assigned the breach, in that A. did not indemnify against the poor rate, &c. And after argument gument on both sides the court unanimously agreed that the poor rate was not within the covenant, and therefore have judgment for defendant. Gibb. 297.

The Doctor agreed with several of the parishioners to take so much for his tithes, and made a lease to F. The Doctor was rated for the tithes to the parish levies, who appeal'd; and the matter being found specially, the question was, who should be said to be the occupier, the Doctor's lessee, or the inhabitants; and per cur. The lessee must be said to be the occupier, in regard there is no certain time limited for how long, but only from year to year; and per Eyre J. The letting of them is in nature of a sale, and the party looked upon as a vendee; no manner of advantage is given to the inhabitants; for they give the full value for their tithes; otherwise had it been a contract for years. Poor's Settlements 104. pl. 140.

Defendant being assailed towards the poor rate for his tithes as vicar, appealed to the sessions, where he is absolutely discharged. But by the court; As vicar he is chargeable by 43 Eliz. and the sessions hath only power to moderate, not discharge: And the order of sessions was quashed. Stran. 77.

Where the parson agrees that the tenant shall retain the tithes, yet the rate for them must be upon the parson. Stran. 525.

All things which are real and bring in a yearly revenue may be rated and taxed to the poor. Shaw's Parish Law 221.

On a motion to confirm a tax laid by the justices of peace on a toll of the corporation of W. for a rate to the poor, Hale Ch. J. said, that he was of opinion that this toll was chargeable, tho' part of it were to maintain the mayor; and per cur. A mandamus was granted to the mayor and justices to execute the order, nisi. 3 Keb. 540.

Note; It hath been resolved by the court, that ground rents are liable to pay the poor's rate. Comb. 62.

Hospital lands are chargeable to the poor, as well as others; for no man by appropriating his lands to an hospital, can exempt them from taxes to which they were subject before, and throw a greater burden upon their neighbours. 2 Salk. 527.

The question was, whether a house converted into a conventicle, and used for no other purposes, was rateable to the poor's tax; the court said, they never knew it, and order'd them to shew cause; and afterward the order was quashed. Poor's Settlements 124. pl. 109.

A farmer is not to be taxed to the poor for his necessary stock according to the lands he holds; but if he has a super-abundant stock, i. e. more than the land requires, he shall be taxed for that. Just. Cas. Law 233.

Yet it is a quære still if a farmer is to pay a rate or tax for stock upon land. Ibid.

A shopkeeper shall be charged to the poor's rates for the goods, &c. in his shop. Just. Cas. Law 233.

On a motion to quash a poor's rate made at the quarter-sessions in Marlborough, because it was assessed for trade, and the corporation would not assess the toll of their market, or their own lands, and they would not hear the matter at their sessions. Per cur. It will be inconvenient to quash poor rates; but you may take a mandamus to assess you according to law, as in the case of The town of Cambridge MS. cases. 16 Vin. Abr. 426.

In the case of the governor and company for smelting lead against Richardson and others, it was determined by the court of King's Bench in Michelmass term 3 Geo. 3. That a lessee of lead mines, whereon no rent is reserved other than a certain proportion of the ore to be raised, is not rateable to the poor, under the stat. 43 Eliz.

As to taxing other parishes in aid, see 43 Eliz. c. 2. sect. 3.

If several inhabitants of A. have lands in the parish of B. and their tenants are so poor that they are not able to pay to the relief of the poor of A. the landlord's inhabiting in the parish of A. shall be no discharge to them, but they shall pay for their lands, which they have in the parish of B. 2 Bulstr. 352.

Sir James Macnaghten attorney general moved to quash an order of two justices made upon this statute; his exception was, that it does not appear that the parishes taxed are within the hundred; for it is only said that they are within the county of the city of Norwich; and two justices by the act have not power to tax the county but only the hundred, or the parishes within the hundred. To which it was answered, that if two justices cannot relieve in this case, there can be no relief given; for it is well known there are no hundreds within cities, and the city, and the county of the city are the same, and the power given to the justices must arise upon a defect in the hundred, and where there is no hundred there can be no such defect, and the sessions could have made no order in this case. But per Powell; This is not casus emissus out of the statute; and tho' the two justices have no power, here being no hundred, yet the sessions have a jurisdiction, and may tax the county of the city in part or at large, to which the rest agreed, and quashed the order, being made by two justices only. 11 Mod. 269.

There are two ways by this statute to make one parish contributory to the poor of another, viz. either the justices may tax particular persons in aid to that parish which cannot relieve its own poor; or they may assess the whole parish in a certain sum, and leave it to the churchwardens and overseers to levy the same on particular persons. 2 Salk. 481. Shaw's Parish Law 219.

Mandamus to the justices to make a rate for support of the poor which was opposed, because the parish officers ought to make the rate, and the justices are only to sign it; to which it was answered, that this motion was grounded on this clause of the statute, and thereupon a mandamus was granted, directed to the justices; and as this is a matter of right, they ought to make a return. 2 Shaw's Pract. Just. 47. Shaw's Parish Law 219.

An order of sessions was returned upon stat. 43 Eliz. for rating the adjacent parishes, &c. for relief of a poor parish. Exception was taken, that by the statute this ought to have been done by the two next justices, whereas this order was made at sessions. And by the solicitor general, If it be made by all the justices, &c. then it is by two, and they shall be supposed to be at the general sessions. And per Wythens, You have not pursued the stat. and do hereby prevent the appeal. Adjournatur; and it was afterwards at another day quashed for that reason, Comb. 25.

A parish in Colchester being surcharged with poor, the justices made an order that two other parishes in Colchester should pay to the relief of the poor within this parish, viz. the one 5 s. and the other 8 s. per week, and that the overseers should collect it; and the order being removed by certiorari, Alibone moved to quash it, because not pursuant to the direction of 43 Eliz. which says, others, of other parishes; so that it ought to be assessed by the justices upon particular persons, and not generally: But the court seemed to be of opinion, that it was right; and that the justices are only to assess the quantum, and then the rate is to be made by the overseers of the poor of the parish, and such was the opinion of the court. Skin. 258.

It was moved to quash an order made by two justices, that the inhabitants of L. G. should pay a yearly sum to Whetstone, 1 s. Because it was not said quorum unus, but that exception was disallowed, zdly. For that it was only said, that Whetstone was at great charge in maintaining the poor, but not that they were unable. Note; Upon an appeal the justices made an order at the sessions, wherein it is said they were oppressed, which implies inability. Comb. 241.

Upon an order for contribution to the relief of a poor parish it was ruled, that the justices may either charge particular persons or the whole parish, and they to levy it; but here a sum in gross was laid for a whole year, which (it was objected) was unreasonable; for their ability may change; nevertheless the order was confirmed, Comb. 309.

Holt Ch. J. said, that possibly a place extraparochial may be taxed in aid of a parish; but a parish shall not be taxed in aid of that. 2 Salk. 486.

In a city where one parish is not able to relieve their poor, the next parish, being able, is to aid them by a weekly weekly allowance, but when the cause ceases, such allowance is to cease also. Just. Case Law 234.

In case a parish is not able to maintain its poor, two justices may tax any other parish within the hundred towards their relief, and if the hundred be not of ability to relieve their parishes, the justices in their sessions may tax any other parish or parishes within the county. 2 Show's Pr. Ct. Just. 42.

An order was made by the justices of the borough, for the parish of St. Peter's to pay to the officers of St. Mary's the sum of 20s. weekly, until the justices should see fit to order the contrary. It was objected, 1st, That it does not appear that the parish of St. Mary's is over-burthened with poor, but over-ruled; for the order follows the words of the statute. 2dly, It is said, that they are justices of the town and borough, and it appears upon the order, that the parish of St. Mary's is within the borough, but not within the town and borough. But per cur. they are justices of both. 3dly, The order is, until we shall see fit to order the contrary, where the act never gave the justices such an authority, and it is in effect making a perpetual order; for if one of the justices die or be removed, no other justice can alter it till the said justices shall see fit to alter. And it was quashed for the last objection. Poor's Settlements 121. 11. 165.

The parish of H. and a vill called S. was time out of mind within the rectory of H. But there is a church in S. which from the time of H. 6. hath been used and reputed as a parish, and had all parochial rights, and churchwardens, and S. distant two miles from H. Richardson Ch. J. held clearly, that this is a parish within 43 Eliz. and that the overseers, &c. might assess it to the relief of the poor; and the finding that from Henry the VIth's time till now it hath been used as a parish, does not exclude, that it was not used so before. And this statute being made for relief of the poor, to prevent their wandering, the intent of it was to confine the relief to parishes then in esse, and so used. Judgment for plaintiff. Hutt. 93. Litt. Rep. 73.

Cro. Car. 92. S. C. adjudged, that this is such a parish as is chargeable for relief of Stoke-Godlingham, and not for the poor of Linkley; and tho' by the finding it should not be intended to be a parish before Henry the VIth's time, yet being found that it was a church then, and that there were churchwardens there, it is a parish within the statute, altho' it be but a reputative parish; for being in use so long before, and at the time of the statute, the statute appoints that the churchwardens and three or four overseers joined with them shall, &c. Now no churchwardens of H. are churchwardens of S. and so have nothing to do there; and the churchwardens of S. are only to meddle with the church there, and consequently with the poor of the parish.—S. P. As to Tateridge and Hatfield, where for 60 years then past, and at the time of making the statute, and ever since, T. was commonly reputed a parish of itself, and the inhabitants there chose constables, churchwardens and overseers of the poor, and made and levied their own rates to the poor, and repaired their church, without contributing to that of H. and tho' it was also found that anciently the vill of T. was parcel of the parish of H. and never severed by any legal act, and that the tithes of T. have been time out of mind paid to the parson of H. who always used to find a curate at T. and that there is no parson at T. yet T. shall be charged by itself, and for their own poor only. Cro. Car. 394. 395.

Parishes in reputation only are within the statute, as other parishes are, if the usage of such parish to choose overseers has been constant without interruption; but otherwise the overseers and collectors of the mother church are only within the statute. 2 Roll. Rep. 160.

There were two vills in one parish, which had used severally to maintain their own poor, and now there being overseers made of the whole parish, they were rated together. The question was, whether having been used time out of mind to pay severally, they might now by the statute of 43 Eliz. cap. 2. be rated together? Per Hale Ch. J. If there be no chapel within the vill, where the church does not stand, it is not sufficient to make it a reputed parish within the statute of 43 Eliz. Freem. 401.

The parish of St. Botolph without Algate lies in two counties, viz. London and Middlesex, and hath one churchwarden and several overseers, and the parish rates are several. And in regard that it was made to appear that each part of the parish had distinct officers, and made distinct rates, and had used time out of mind to make distinct accounts to the justices of each county, the court looked upon each division as a several parish, and ordered it accordingly. Raym. 476, 477.

Upon a dispute whether A. was a vill in the parish of B. or a parish of itself, to prove it a vill the evidence was, that there were but two churchwardens, two overseers of the poor, and that all parochial rites were done at B. and that the inhabitants of A. contributed to the repair of the church at B. And to prove that A. was a parish of itself, the evidence was, that in the reign of Edward 3. there was a publick chapel there, and divine service read in it at the time of making this statute, that they had formerly distinct constables, and repaired their own highways in 1634, and then the difference between A. and B. was settled by a judge of assize, that a rate was made in A. in 1654. But this was held not sufficient to make A. a parish in reputation at the time of the statute, without all other parochial rites, and therefore held to be a vill in the parish of B. 4 Mod. 158.

To make A. a reputed parish within the 43 Eliz. it must have a parochial chapel and chapel wardens, and sacraments, at the time the statute was made; and because A. had but one chapel warden, whose office was to collect the rates taxed upon A. and pay them to B. they were held part of the parish of B. and not a reputed parish within the 43 Eliz. and their having a distinct overseer, and maintaining their own poor, was not sufficient to make them a distinct parish. 2 Salk. 501.

A chapel's having sacraments only, makes it not independent of the parish, but it must have other badges, as sepulchres, &c. 12 Mod. 504.

4. Of the remedies for recovering rates; and of setting aside rates.

See stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. sect. 4, 13, 19.

Holt Ch. J. said, that a man could not be distrained by virtue of a general warrant made before the rate, but there ought to be a special warrant on purpose; and he said that a distress could not be taken for a quarter's rate before the quarter ended; but the jury said, the custom was otherwise. Holt answered, If he remove into another parish in the same county, they might distrain by warrant from the justices as well as in the same parish; but if he removed out of the county, he agreed the remedy failed. So he gave way to the usage in that point. 2 Salk. 532. 6 Mod. 214. S. C.

A warrant to distrain for a poor's rate ought not to be granted before demand made; for the first ought to be only a confirmation of the assessment for the poor, and afterwards upon refusal, &c. a new warrant is to be made for distress, &c. and Holt said, that strictly it was so, but the practice having been in the case of taxes to grant such a conditional warrant to distrain, communis error facit jus. Comb. 341.

If the poor rates are unreceived, and the overseers lay out a sum of their own, they are remediless if they do not raise it before they are put out of their office. Just. Cas. Law. 235.

The churchwardens and overseers, by warrant from an two justices of the peace (quor. 1.) may levy the tax by distress and sale, where any person refuses payment of the sum assessed; and if there be no distress whereby the same may be levied, he shall be committed to the common gaol, there to remain till payment. 2 Shaw Praes. Just. 42.

A mandamus was moved for, and a rule obtained for an alderman to shew cause why he refused to grant his warrant to distrain for a tax for relief of the poor; who shewed that the churchwardens had made a tax for the whole year, when they should have made only a quarterly tax, and thereupon a rule was made that he should grant his warrant to quarterly. 8 Mod. 10.

Working tools in a shop may be distrained for a poor rate. 2 Show. 126. Before this act, the justices of peace nor constables had no power concerning poor. Sid. 282.

It was affirmed on error in B. R. on this statute, that tho' the statute expresses by name only sale and distress of goods, yet if the plaintiff voluntarily delivers any goods for what he is assessed to the poor, and after brings trespass thereof against the overseers, this is within the statute; for these words sale and distress, are put in the act only for examples; and the statute shall be construed largely, because it tends ad opus charitatis; and trespass brought after such voluntary delivery of money is a vexation which the statute extends to suppress. Telv. 176.

B. brought trespass against certain persons who pleaded Not guilty, and at Nisi prius the defendants justified as overseers of the poor, and shewed this special matter in evidence by this statute; and after the jury was charged, and returned again, plaintiff was nonsuited. And now the court was moved to grant a writ of inquiry, for the treble damages which they ought to recover against the plaintiff by this statute; and on oyer of the statute, which was, that the damages shall be assessed, &c. Dod. said, This is to be intended that it shall be tried by writ of inquiry of damages in such cases as it ought to be by law, viz. upon discontinuance or demurrer; for the words, "as the case requires", imply as much; and by the law, when a jury ought to have found a thing, and do not find it, this shall not be supplied by a writ of inquiry of damages; and this was so ruled that such defect shall not be supplied by writ of inquiry of damages, because then the party shall not be ousted of his attain. But in the case at bar, the writ of inquiry of damages was granted inasmuch as the plaintiff was nonsuited, so that the jury could not assess the damages; and damages were found accordingly. Roll. Rep. 272.

As to setting aside rates, see stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. s. 6. — Upon an appeal from a poor rate, the justices refused to hear the appeal, because it was not made at the next quarter-sessions. But per cur. The party grieved may appeal at any sessions; the justices may not have power to alter the rate at discretion, but they ought not to refuse to hear the appeal. MS. Cases, Mich. 8 Ann. B. R. The Queen v. The inhabitants of St. Giles.

T. P. and S. being overseers of the poor, got their account allowed by the justices. The parish appealed against it, and the sessions set aside this account, and then directed a re-examination of the matter to the same two justices. This order being removed, it was objected, that here was a matter delegated by the court, who were finally to determine the matter in question. Per Parker Ch. J. The overseers have four days time to pass their accounts, and they may go before any two justices for the doing it; till the time is past there is no compulsion used, but if this time is spent, the parish may go before any two justices, and when these have entered upon the examination, no other justice is afterwards to intermeddle; and when this matter comes to the sessions, they are to take such order therein as to them shall seem convenient, but need not finally determine. MS. Cases, Hill. 10 Ann. B. R. Townsend, Parsons and Smith's case (overseers of Whitechapel.)

There are four adjacent towns within the parish of Bury, and there is an overseer within each town, and also an overseer within the borough; they all join in one account, and there is but one rate made for all the parish, but the overseers of each particular town collect and pay the money within such town; one who is tenant of lands in one of these towns lives in the borough, and is assessed by the overseer of the borough for the lands within the town, and paid to the overseer of the borough; and the like is done in the other towns; so that the overseer of the borough had a surplussage for the poor within the borough, and the overseers of the towns wanted money for relief of the poor within the towns, tho' the poor within the towns were less than those within the borough; and upon this the justices ordered, that there should be a distribution made; and this order with others being removed, it was moved to be quashed, but confirmed; and tho' the statute of 14 Car. 2. was cited, and this case urged to be within that statute, it was not agreed to be within that statute. Skin. 258.

Altho' a poor's rate be really made at the sessions on an appeal, yet if it does not appear by the order itself, as by recital of the former order, &c. the latter order shall be quashed, and the court refused to supply this defect in the order by affidavits. Comb. 133, 134.

The churchwardens and overseers, and some of the inhabitants made a poor's rate, which was confirmed by two justices, in which several were not taxed for their personal estates, (which was erroneous) but the whole lay on the real estates of the parish; on which several of the inhabitants appealed to the sessions, and they ordered that the rate should be annulled, and a new one made; accordingly the churchwardens made a new rate both on the real and personal estates, which rate was confirmed by two justices. But in the new rate there was a great inequality, the real estates being rated in proportion ten times more than the personal; for which several of the inhabitants appealed again to the sessions, where another order was made to discharge the rate. And these two orders of sessions being removed by certiorari into B. R. it was moved to quash them; because the sessions can only relieve particular persons grieved by the rate, and cannot set aside the whole rate. Sed per tot. cur. The justices at sessions on an appeal by particular persons grieved, may, if they see reason, set aside the whole rate. The justices have a large power, and in both these cases, either on the first rate where the personal estates were not charged, or upon the second where they are unequally charged, it is impossible for them to give relief without setting aside the whole rate; which therefore they may legally do, being impowered by the act to take order herein according to their discretion; by virtue of which, as they may set aside the whole rate, so they may make a new rate themselves, or order the overseers, &c. and churchwardens to make a new one, as was done in this case; wherefore those two orders were confirmed. 12 Mod. 212.

If a poor rate be made for a whole year, it cannot be confirmed in part, but must be for the whole year or no part. 8 Mod. 10.

If the rate be illegal, the justices may refuse to sign it, but as to the sums, or parties assessed they have nothing to do with it, the remedy is by appeal; and tho' the aldermen of Dorchester refused to sign a rate, because of inequality; yet the court granted a mandamus, and after a return a peremptory mandamus, and then an attachment, in order that the parties grieved might appeal, cited per cur. MS. Cases, Mich. 8 Geo. B. R. in case of The King v. Beecher.

A rate that is of itself good, may be quashed, where it says it shall be a standing rate. Poor's Settlements 23. pl. 33.

To quash a poor's rate the parties aggrieved appealed to the sessions, the sessions made an order to levy the money on account of the rate according to the land tax; it was moved to quash it, because persons who do not pay to the land tax, yet contribute to the poor's rate, as persons who have a considerable sum of money. Quashed, per cur. Poor's Settlements 73. pl. 96.

5. Of relieving, and ordering maintenance for the poor.

See stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. sect. 1, 13. 3 Will. & M. c. 11. 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 30.

Exception was taken to an order of the justices made against the parish of Stretton, because the justices ordered them to keep a woman, being poor, the cottage wherein she lived, being uncertain whether in this vill or another; but the court refused to quash it, tho' it was not averred that that she was impotent, because in these cases the courts use a discretion. 2 Keb. 37.

An order of justices for the maintenance of a poor woman was confirmed, tho' it appeared that she was able of body to work; but the justices of the peace are judges of th. t. Vent. 69.

A poor child was left in Christ-Church hospital; upon complaint of the wardens of the hospital two justices made an order on the overseers of the poor of the parish to receive and maintain the child; but this order was quashed, because it was not said, that the parents were unknown, or likely to become chargeable to the parish: For tho' a child of three months old be helpless, yet the parents are bound to provide for it. As to the principal matter which was hinted, viz. that the hospital was bound to provide for poor children there exposed, the court thought there was nothing in that. 2 Salk. 485.

An order of justices was made for relieving a woman and four poor children, until further order, but did not set forth she was indigent; it was quashed for the last matter, and bad for the other, which should have been during her poverty. 10 Mod. 220.

It was moved to quash an order of sessions, which ordered that the overseers should pay to one R. D. 2 s. per week for his maintenance. It was objected 1st, That it is not said that they had any money in their hands; 2^{dly}, That it is not said that R. D. is a parishioner there. Quashed nisi. Poor's Settlements 12. pl. 17.

Two justices made an order for the overseers of the poor to pay 2 s. per week to Elizabeth Reddish. It was objected, That it is not said that she is poor and impotent; otherwise the statute gives them no such power. Per cur. The 43 Eliz. does not give them power, unless they are upon the poor rate; let them shew cause. Poor's Settlements 21. pl. 30.

An order to continue the weekly payment of 2 s. to R. G. and all the arrears, till they find him a house; quashed, because the overseers have no power to find him a house; that must be done by the lord of the manor, or by the justices. Shaw's Parish Law 200.

An order of justices, requiring the churchwardens to pay a scrivener 5 l. due to him for drawing indentures for setting out children to trades, was quashed, as being a thing out of their power; but the way had been to order a parish rate for levying so much a week till a convenient sum were raised; and in that case as soon money was raised, an action would lie for the scrivener against the churchwardens. 12 Mod. 417.

6. Of parents and children being obliged to maintain each other.

See Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. sec. 7. and 5 Geo. 1. c. 8.

If a man marries a grandmother, and has an estate with her in marriage; for this estate he shall be charged towards the maintenance of the grandchild within the meaning of this statute, but otherwise, if he has not any estate of advancement by marriage with her. But he shall be charged with keeping the grandchild during the life of his wife; and if she dies, he shall not be charged after death. 2 Bulst. 346. But if the grandmother has no means, and she marries with one who has, he shall not be charged with keeping the child. 2 Bulst. 346. So if the husband becomes of ability after marriage, the grandmother having no means at the time of the marriage, he shall not be bound to provide for the child. Ibid. Contra per Holt Ch. J. That if the wife dies he must maintain the grandchildren, tho' the relation be determined. Comb. 321, 495.

[But in the case in Bulst. 346. it does not appear that the grandmother was dead, nor is there any resolution, the justices differing in their opinions.]

A son-in-law was obliged by an order to maintain his wife's mother, having an estate with her at the intermarriage. Per cur. He is not within the words of the statute, nor within the meaning of it; the statute extends to those persons who ought by the law of nature to relieve their parents; and some persons were so hard-hearted as to refuse; therefore this law was made to enforce them to do that which by the law of nature they were obliged to before. Poor's Settlements, 91. pl. 123.

It was moved to discharge an order made against a feme covert to keep a grandchild of hers; because a feme covert was not bound by such an order. Roll Ch. J. answered, That the husband is to keep his wife's grandchild by the statute; but in regard that the husband is not charged by the order, but the wife who is covert is only charged; therefore let the order be quashed. Sty. 283.

An order of sessions was made, That defendant should pay 2 s. a week towards the support of his father till the court should order the contrary, which was held good, because it was indefinite, and no set time limited, and if an estate happened to fall to him they might apply to the justices; otherwise if a time was limited. 2 Salk. 534.

An order that the grandfather should keep the grandchild, the father being living, but unable to do it, and also to pay so much money for the time past, while he was chargeable as well as for the time to come, was allowed good per cur. MS. Cases, Mich. 6 Ann. B. R. The Queen v. Joyce.

An order of two justices to compel Darvison to allow so much a week for the maintenance of his wife and family. It was moved to quash the order, for that the justices have not jurisdiction in this case, it being properly alimony, and belonging to the spiritual court. Penzell said, that the justices have no jurisdiction in this case, but this is not alimony. If a man runs away from his family, he may be punished as a rogue and a sturdy beggar; but whilst he continues resident, they cannot charge him in this manner; and quashed the order. 11 Mod. 268.

An order of justices was made, that the father-in-law should maintain his son's widow. But it not being set forth in the order, that the father was of sufficient ability, in which case only the act enables the justices, it was quashed. 10 Mod. 221.

An order of sessions for the father to pay so much a week for maintenance of his daughter was quashed, because it was not set forth that she was unable to work, without which the justices have no jurisdiction. 10 Mod. 307.

Justices at their quarter-sessions, upon complaint of the overseers, that Nicholas Tripping had left his wife, and that she was become poor and impotent, and become chargeable to the parish, and that Richard Tripping, her father-in-law was of sufficient ability, did (upon its being proved that Richard was of ability to relieve her) order him to pay 2 s. 6 d. per week. The order was quashed for want of an adjudication that she was chargeable; and it was held, that an adjudication that the person is become chargeable, is as necessary in an order of the quarter-sessions, as in an order of two justices. MS. Cases, Trin. 4 Geo. B. R. The King v. Tripping.

Upon complaint made to the quarter-sessions, that Valentine Rush, his wife and family, were impotent and unable to maintain themselves, the court does order Emery Rush to pay them 4 s. per week. It was objected, that it does not appear that he was resiant, and lived in the county; that the charge is personal, and the justices had no power over him unless he lived in the county. They were ordered to shew cause. Note, An affidavit was made that he lived in another county, but not read. Poor's Settlements 99. pl. 134.

Order, reciting, that Munden had a good fortune with his wife, and that her mother was poor, therefore he is ordered to provide for her. Affid in maintenance of the order 1 Bulst. and 2 Bulst. 345. Sty. 283. were cited. Et per Pratt Ch. J. On consideration, we are all of opinion, that the son-in-law is not bound, either within the words or intent of the statute, which provides only for natural parents. By the law of nature a man was bound to take care of his own father and mother; but there being no temporal obligation to enforce that law of nature, it was found necessary to establish it by act of parliament, and that can be extended no farther than the law of nature went before, and the law of nature doth not reach to this case in 1 Bulst. it is plain the word not was left out only by mistake, for the sense of the clause leads you to read it not obliged, and besides the judges were divided.

The case indeed in 2 Bulst. is an authority in point as far as it will go, but that is no judicial authority, only a case at a judge's chamber. The same was also said obiter in the case of The Queen v. Fane, Pasch. 10 Ann. but it never came judicially before the whole court. And therefore as it is res integra, we are of opinion the order must be quashed. Stran. 190.

If justices of peace in sessions, &c. make orders for maintenance of persons who are not impotent, but able to work, or having any thing to live upon; those orders are against law. Dalt. 166. A father has been ordered to make an allowance to his son's wife, while his son was beyond sea: and if the father of children leaves the Parish, and there is a grandfather to be found, this grandfather, if he be of ability, is chargeable with keeping the children, and not the Parish. 2 Bulst. 2 Lill. 333. A father-in-law, or a grandfather-in-law, married to the mother or grandmother of children, of ability to keep them, is within 43 Eliz. Style 283. A person was ordered by justices in sessions to pay so much a week towards the support and maintenance of his father, till that court should order the contrary; and it was held good; and if an estate happen to fall to the father, the justices might be applied to: otherwise if a time was limited. 2 Salk. 534.

7. Of the settlements of poor people.

Settlements of poor are gained,

By inheritance; as when a child claims a settlement in a parish, because his father was there settled.

By being born in a Parish; and

By commorancy.

As to the first, if the father has a legal settlement, the child is settled where the father is: and if the father has no legal settlement, the child regularly gains a settlement in the Parish where born. 2 Bulst. 351. But this settlement by birth may be defeated several ways;

1st, If the parent is removed by an illegal order; and from the order an appeal is duly made, pending which the child is born; in this case, on quashing the order, the child shall be sent back with the mother.

2. By practice; if a woman near her time is clandestinely sent to another Parish, and there delivered.

3. If a woman with child be sent to the house of correction, and is there delivered, the child shall not gain a settlement by its birth in the Parish where the house of correction is; but in the Parish where the mother dwelt when sent to the house of correction, as the place where she had otherwise probably been delivered. 2 Bulst. 358, 381. 1 Salk. 121.

If a travelling woman, having a small sucking child, shall be apprehended for felony, and be sent to gaol, and afterwards arraigned and hanged, this child is to be sent to the place of its birth, there to be settled and maintained, if the same be known; but otherwise it must be sent to the town where the mother was apprehended: and children born in common gaols, their parents being prisoners, are to be maintained at the charge of the county. Dalt. 157.

If a man and his family be illegally thrust out of a Parish, and during that time he have a child born; he must be returned to the place where he was legally settled, and the child with him: and persons, whose interest in houses or lands is determined, cannot be put out of the town where they were legally settled, nor can they be sent to the place of their birth, or last habitation, but according as they are able or impotent shall be set to work, or relieved in the town where so settled; tho' if they wander and beg, then they may be taken up and sent to the place of their birth. Dalt. 58, 166.

Bastard children gain a settlement by their birth; but it has been usual for preventing any charge to the Parish, if a single woman with child come into a Parish, by a justice's warrant to remove her to the place of her last legal settlement: bastards of vagrants must be with the mother while nurse children until seven years of age; and then be sent to the Parish where born. Ibid. Till seven years of age, children are accounted nurse children; yet afterwards they must have maintenance from the Parishes where they themselves were settled.

If a poor man settled at A. marries a poor woman who is settled at B. and has children by a former husband, the wife shall be removed with him to A. and the children under seven years old shall be removed, but only for nurture; so that they shall be kept at the charge of the Parish from whence they are removed: but the children above seven years of age are not removeable. 2 Salk. 470, 482.

Generally a wife is to be sent to, and settled with the husband, tho' he be an inmate or servant; as all children are generally to be sent to, and settled with the parents: but if a man hireth a house in A. and being there with his wife and children, afterwards bind himself a servant to one in B. his wife and children are not to be sent to B: but are to remain still at A. where they were once settled. Dalt. 166. Tho' it hath been adjudged, where a man served and had board wages, and lay out of his master's house in another Parish, he gained a settlement in the Parish where he lived and served, and not in the Parish where he lay. Mod. Caf. in L. & E. 370.

A man and his wife settled at one parish, came privately into another parish, and there a child was born; the father died in the King's service; the question was, Who should keep the child? Per Holt Ch. J. The death of the father doth not alter the child's settlement; which must be settled where the father was last settled as well as the mother. Comberb. 380.

Settlement gained by commorancy, is where a person continues in some other place than that in which he was before legally settled; and such continuation makes a settlement: formerly, every one who was settled as a native, householder, apprentice, or servant, for a month, without a just complaint made to remove them, were lawfully settled. Dalt. But since, this month has been enlarged to forty days, where a person shall come into a parish, and rent a tenement under 10 l. per annum, by the statutes 13 & 14 Car. 2. 3 W. & M. And by statute renting 10 l. a year; executing a publick office in the parish on a man's own account; paying a share to the parish taxes, as church or poor rates, &c. Living as a hired servant for a year in the parish, being unmarried, &c. and serving or being bound as an apprentice in a parish, all make a legal settlement: so that a person being settled by any such means, and not having acquired a settlement elsewhere, if he falls into poverty, shall be intitled to relief from the parish where he last gained such settlement; and where he is settled his family must follow him. Wood's Inst. 94.

It has been held, in respect to a settlement within the statute 13 & 14 Car. 2. That coming into a parish publickly, taking a house, and being rated to the poor on the parish book, is sufficient notice; the statute being made against private and clandestine removals, and not publick ones, which the parish can take notice of itself. Shorro. 12.

A person rented a house of 3 l. per annum in a town, and his landlord paid the taxes; and whilst he lived in the parish, he took his freedom of the corporation, and voted as a freeman at the election of bailiffs, &c. And it was adjudged that since the explanatory act of 3 & 4 W. 3. nothing makes a settlement that is not within the words of the statute, which implies a negative to any thing else not contained in it; and that as to his voting, it doth not imply a settlement, for 'tis an act which relates to the corporate body, and not to the parish. 2 Salk. 534.

A man rents two tenements of 5 l. per annum each, he thereby gains a settlement; but if he rent a piece of land of 10 l. a year, and there is no house belonging to it, it is otherwise. If one rents a house of 10 l. per annum by continuing therein 40 days, he gains a settlement within the meaning of 13 & 14 Car. 2. By Parker C. J. Renting a water-mill of 10 l. per annum, &c. makes a settlement; for a mill is a tenement. 2 Salk. 536.

But no settlement can be legal in any parish, when the residence of the party is uncertain, as coming now and then, and lying in barns, outhouses, &c. or where the party is under disturbance by officers. A poor man appointed to be a parish clerk, and executing the office a year, has been adjudged to make a good settlement; and 'tis not material whether he come in by the appointment of the parson, or by the election of the parishioners, for he is in for life; and this is executing a publick annual office and charge within the meaning of the statute. 2 Salk. 536.

A servant was hired first from Lady-Day to Michaelmas, and from thence to Lady-Day following; and this was resolved to be a good settlement, for there was a hiring for a year: but it must be one intire biring, and one intire service (tho' different times are mentioned) for one whole year, that must make a settlement according to the statute. A servant being hired at A. for a year, his master lives there half a year, and then at B. another half year; adjudged the servant is settled in the last place, for the statute doth not tie the servant down to one place. 'Tho' if a poor man be hired for a year, to serve in a boat which plies between one place and another; by this service, he gains no settlement. Fitzgib. 255.

An unmarried person, hired as a servant for a year, married before the year was expired; and it was held, that he could not be removed, and that on performing his service he would gain a settlement. 3 Salk. 527.

A man hired a maid servant for a year; but she falling sick, her master turned her out of his service: The servant in her passage to the place of her nativity, begged for relief, and she was sent as a vagrant to the parish where she was born; whereupon she was sent back by that parish, to the parish where she was an hired servant; but by order of sessions she was settled at the place of her birth: This was removed by certiorari into B. R. and the court determined the settlement to be at the parish where she was an hired servant, and not where she was born. Style 168.

A person is a lodger in any parish, his servant acquires a settlement: if a servant continues in the service of a visitor in a parish, he gains a settlement there; and is not removeable, unless the parish shew that he was brought or came thither on purpose that he might have such settlement: and tho' a master or mistress are only visitors, and no lodgers, yet their servants may be said to be hired in every parish where they serve. Mod. Caf. in L. & Eq. 50, 51. If an apprentice be bound to one who is a lodger only in a parish, and hath no settlement; resolved that the apprentice is well settled there, altho' the master is not, nor doth his settlement depend upon his master, as that of a wife on her husband. Where an apprentice continues forty days in the service of his master, there it is said he will have a settlement: and wherever any person serves the last forty days of his apprenticeship, that is the place of his last legal settlement. An apprentice bound to a master living in one parish, and serving some part of his apprenticeship there, was by agreement turned over to another master in another parish; and this was held a good settlement in that parish where he last served; for it shall be intended it was but a continuance of his apprenticeship upon that agreement. M. C. in L. & E. 169.

A person served an apprenticeship in a parish, where he married and had several children; his wife dying, he married another woman, who had a term for years in another parish, to which place he removed, and resided there for a year; afterwards he returned to the first parish, was rated to the poor, lived there two years, and then he died: in a short space after his death, his widow and children were removed by order of two justices to the other parish where he had lived a year, but on appeal to this order at the sessions, the sessions adjudged them to be inhabitants settled in the first parish. Where a man lives in a parish, and hath lands of his own there, or in right of his wife, this will make a settlement; but if he hath lands in one parish, and lives in another, the land will not make a settlement of him in that parish where it lies and he doth not live. 2 Salk. 524.

If a man be settled where he will, he cannot, tho' likely to become chargeable to the parish where he goes to reside in, be removed from thence, if he have any estate there. 5 Mod. 416. But see Stat. 9 Geo. 1. supra.

A man who was not legally settled in a parish, but had lived there some time, procured a certificate, by virtue of which he went into another parish; afterwards being poor, the parish from whence he came took him again; and on enquiry found, that he was never lawfully settled with them, but had gained a settlement in another place, before they gave this certificate; and thither they removed him by order: the parish to which he was removed appealed, because the person who had given the certificate, had owned him to be lawfully settled with them; but the certificate was held to be an evidence of a settlement, and thereupon the first order was confirmed. 2 Salk. 530. It has been since adjudged, that a certificate concludes the parish giving it, not only against the parish to which it is given, but as to all other parishes. Ibid.

The law unsettles none who are lawfully settled, nor permits it to be done. If one had but hired a house, the law unsettles not such person; and if any by indirect means hinder a poor man from hiring a house, he may be indicted; also it is finable to remove any out of the parish who ought not to be put out, and the persons removed may be sent back. Dalt. 98. And if a parish will have a man born in A. but settled with them, to go and wander and beg in B. that he may be sent to A. and he doth so, he shall be sent back to the parish from whence he came. Ibid. But when two justices of peace of one county, send a poor person to a parish in another county, two justices of the county whither such person is sent, cannot make an order to remove him back again, or to send him to any other place; the town to which such person was sent, hath no other remedy than by appeal to the sessions of that county from whence the party was sent. 2 Salk. 488.

A settlement by order of sessions on an appeal is good and binding; but if it doth not appear that the cause came before the justices in sessions by way of appeal, it may be quashed; for without that they have no jurisdiction: if a poor family, after order of sessions for their removal on appeal, return to the parish from whence they were removed, the sessions must see their order of settlement obeyed; tho' if such poor family go into another parish not concerned in the appeal, two justices of peace ought by an original order to remove them to the parish where they were settled by the sessions order. 2 Salk. 481, 482, 489.

The sessions having made an original order for removal of a poor person to a third parish, after an order of two justices, it was quashed upon motion: and adjudged, that the sessions could only confirm, or reverse the order of settlement of the two justices; and thereupon a new order might be made by two justices for removal to the third parish, &c. 2 Salk. 475. A general order to remove a man and his family is not good; it must be particular, for some of the family may be chargeable, and others not: And where justices make such orders of settlement, it must appear, that the parties are likely to become chargeable; and that the person removed is removeable; and contain an adjudication of the last legal settlement of the party, &c. 2 Salk. 485, 491. 5 Mod. 149, 321. And according to the opinion of Holt, the most regular way to proceed on the statute 14 Car. 2. in removing a poor person, is for the justices to make a record of the adjudication of the last settlement, and the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers, and upon that to make a warrant or order under their hands and seals to the churchwardens, &c. to convey the persons to the parish to which they ought to be sent, and to deliver in the record at the next sessions, to be kept among the records; and this record may be removed by certiorari. 1 Salk. 406. But on a motion in B. R. to set aside an order for the settling a poor person in a parish, sent thither by warrant of two justices, and confirmed in the sessions, upon an appeal: the court refused to enter into the merits of the cause; the order of sessions being in this case final, unless it be made to appear that there is error in the form of proceeding. Ventr. 310. And it is a standing rule in the court of King's Bench, That if on an appeal, the order of two justices is either affirmed or quashed, upon the merits of the case, in relation to settlements, it shall be conclusive between the two parishes. Pasch. 10 Ann.

The order of two justices not appealed from, binds the parish upon which it is made, till a new settlement is gained: an order reversed is final only between the parties; ties; but an order confirmed, &c. is final to all the world. 2 Salk. 472, 492.

A poor person himself, as well as the parish, may appeal from an order of removal, tho' it has been objected that appeal is only given to the parish aggrieved. Carib. 223. And where a poor person is visited with sickness, he ought not to be removed from the parish where he is, farther to endanger his health; and if two justices grant an order to remove him, it is a misdemeanor in the justices. Mod. Caf. in L. and E. 326.

On appeals to justices in sessions, they are to cause defects in form in orders to be rectified without charge, and then to proceed, &c. 5 Geo. 2. c. 19. By law, the place that the poor were last legally settled at, is the place that is to provide for them. Trin. 5 Ann. B. R.

By the Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. If a woman wandering and begging, be delivered of a child in a parish to which she does not belong, she may be committed to the house of correction till the next sessions, where the justices may order her to be whipp'd, and detained in the house of correction not exceeding six months. The churchwardens of the place where she shall be delivered to be repaid all by the treasurer of the county, and the settlement of the mother shall be deemed the settlement of the child tho' it be a bastard.

By the Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. The churchwardens and overseers of the poor shall yearly, within 14 days after other overseers be nominated, deliver to such succeeding overseers an account of all sums received, or rated and not received by them, and of all goods in their hands, and monies paid by them, and of all other things concerning their office, which account shall be verified by oath. Any person assented may inspect such account paying 6d. and have copies paying 6d. for every 300 words. Person not accounting, &c. as aforesaid, may be committed until he shall. If an overseer dies, removes, or becomes insolvent before the expiration of his office, two justices may appoint another in his room. If any overseer removes, he shall before his removal account as aforesaid, under the same penalty. And if any overseer dies, his executors shall within forty days deliver over all things belonging to his office, and pay what due, previous to other debts. No distress for money justly due for relief of the poor shall be deemed unlawful, or the party a trespasser, on account of any defect or want of form in the warrant, for appointment of such overseer, or in the rate or warrant of distress; nor shall the party be deemed a trespasser ab initio, on account of any irregularity afterwards done by the party. And no plaintiff shall recover for any such irregularity, if tender of amends be made before the action brought. Succeeding overseers may levy arrears to reimburse former overseers. If any person remove out of a parish, and another comes to occupy the house, &c. he left, the person removing, and the person coming in, shall be liable to pay to the rate assented, in proportion to the time he occupied the same. Fair copies of all rates for the poor, shall be entered in a book within 14 days after all appeals determined, and all persons assented shall have access to them. See Vagrants.

Pope, (Papa) Was antiently applied to some clergymen in the Greek church; but by usage is particularly appropriated in the Latin church to the bishop of Rome, who is called the Pope; and formerly had great authority here. As to the incroachments of the see of Rome, it is said to be the general opinion, that Christianity was first planted in this island by some of the Eastern church; which is very probable from the antient Britains observing Easter always on the fourteenth day of the month, according to the custom of the East: But the Saxons being converted about the year 600, by persons sent from Rome, and wholly devoted to the interest thereof, it could not be expected that such an opportunity of enlarging the jurisdiction of that see, should be wholly neglected; and yet there are few instances of the Papal power in England before the Norman conquest, tho' four or five persons were made bishops by the Pope at the first conversion, and there was an instance or two of appeals to Rome, &c. But Pope Alexander II. having favoured and supported William the First, in his invasion of this kingdom, made that a handle for enlarging his incroachments; and in this King's reign, began to send his legates hither. He sent hither Ermenroy, bishop of Sion, as his legate; and this prelate was the first who had ever appeared with that character in any of the British islands. And afterwards Pascal II. prevailed with King Hen. I. to give up the donation of bishopricks. In the reign of King Stephen the pontifical authority was permitted to make farther encroachments: Appeals to the Pope, which had been always strictly prohibited, became now common in every ecclesiastical controversy. And in the reign of Hen. II. Pope Alexander III. exempted all clerks from the secular power: Indeed this King at first strenuously withstood those innovations; but on the death of Becket, who for having violently opposed the King, was slain by some of his servants, the Pope got such an advantage over him, that he was never able to execute the constitutions of Clarendon. And not long after this, by a general excommunication of the King and people, for several years, because they would not suffer an archbishop to be imposed on them, King John was reduced to such straits, that he surrendered his kingdoms to Pope Innocent III. to receive them again, and hold them of him under the rent of a thousand marks: And in the reign of Hen. III. partly from the profits of our best church benefices, which were generally given to Italians, and others residing at the court of Rome, and partly from the taxes imposed by the Pope, there went yearly out of the kingdom seventy thousand pounds sterling, a great sum in those days: The nation being thus burdened and under a necessity, was obliged to provide for the prerogative of the prince, and the liberties of the people, by many strict laws. And hence in the reign of Edw. I. it was declared in parliament, that the Pope's taking upon him to dispose of English benefices to aliens, was an encroachment not to be endured; and this was followed with the Stat. 25 Ed. 3. called the statute of provisors, against popish bulls, and disturbing any patron to present to a benefice, &c. The 12, 13 and 16 R. 2. the Stat. 2 H. 4. and 6, 7 & 9 ejusdem; the 3 H. 5. 23 & 28 Hen. 8. &c. And maintaining by writing, preaching, &c. the Pope's power here in England, is made a præmunire upon the first conviction; and high treason on the second. 5 Eliz. In the construction of which statute, it has been held, that he who knowing the contents of a popish book, written beyond sea, brings it over, and secretly sells, or conveys it to a friend; or having read the book, or heard of its contents, doth after in discourse allow it to be good, &c. is in danger of the statute; but not he who having heard thereof, buys and reads the same. Selden's Janus Anglor. Davis 90, &c. Dyer 282. 2 Inst. 580. See Bull and Præmunire.

Popery. There are several statutes made against persons perverting or withdrawing others to popery, and being perverted to the Romish religion, which was made treason by 23 Eliz. and 3 Jac. 1. But if any one reconciled to the see of Rome beyond the seas, return into the realm, and submit himself, &c. and take the oaths within six days, he is to be excused. 3 Jac. 1. c. 4.

Popular Action, Is an action given in general, to any one who will sue for a penalty on the breach of some penal law. Actions popular, which may be brought before justices of assize, &c. are to be generally prosecuted in the counties where the offences were done. And popular actions, where the King only hath the penalty or forfeiture, are to be commenced in two years; and where an inferior hath a part, in one year, &c. 31 Eliz. cap. 5. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 4. Black. Com. 2 V. 437. 3 V. 160. Vide Information.

Port, (Portus) A harbour or place of shelter, where ships arrive with their freight, and customs for goods are taken. The ports in England are London, Ipſwich, Yarmouth, Lynn, Boston, Hull, Newcastle, Berwick, Carlisle, Chester, Milford, Cardiff, Gloucester, Bristol, Bridgwater, Plymouth, Exeter, Poole, Southampton, Chichester and Sandwich; utich; all which are declared lawful ports, & infra corpus comitatus: To these ports there are certain members belonging, and a number of creeks, where commonly officers are placed, by way of prevention of frauds in the customs; but they are not lawful places of exportation or importation, without particular licence from the port, or member under which they are placed. Lex Mercat. 132. See 1 Eliz. c. 11.

The King has the prerogative of appointing ports and havens, or such places only, for persons and merchandize to pass into and out of the realm, as he in his wisdom sees proper. By the feudal law all navigable rivers and havens were computed among the regalia, and were subject to the sovereign of the state. And in England it hath always been held, that the King is lord of the whole shore, and particularly is the guardian of the ports and havens, which are the inlets and gates of the realm: And therefore, so early as the reign of King John, we find ships seized by the King's officers for putting in at a place that was not a legal port. Madox Hist. Exch. 530. These legal ports were undoubtedly at first assigned by the crown; since to each of them a court of portmote is incident, the jurisdiction of which must flow from the royal authority: The great ports of the sea are also referred to, as well known and established, by Stat. 4 Hen. 4. c. 20. which prohibits the landing elsewhere under pain of confiscation: And 1 Eliz. c. 11. recites that the franchise of lading and discharging had been frequently granted by the crown.

But tho' the King had a power of granting the franchise of havens and ports, yet he had not the power of resumption, or of narrowing and confining their limits when once established; but any person had a right to load or discharge his merchandize in any part of the haven: Whereby the revenue of the customs was much impaired and diminished, by fraudulent landing in obscure and private corners. This occasioned the statutes of 1 Eliz. c. 11. and 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. s. 14. which enable the crown by commission to ascertain the limits of all ports, and to assign proper wharfs and quays in each port, for the exclusive landing and loading of merchandize. Black. Com. 1 V. 264.

Porter, In the circuit of justices, is an officer who carries a white rod before the justices in eyre, so called a portando virgam. Stat. 13 Edw. 1. c. 41. See Vergers. There is also a porter bearing a verge before the justices of either bench. Cowell. But a porter, in the general signification, is a carrier of things from place to place, &c.

Porter of the door in the parliament house, Is an officer belonging to that high and honourable court, and enjoys privileges accordingly. Crompt. Juris. 11.

Porterage, A kind of duty paid at the Custom-house to those who attend the water-side, and belong to the package-office, and these porters have tables set up ascertaining their dues for landing of strangers goods, and for shipping out the same. Merch. Dict.
